"Nick was dominating. Unfortunately, we didn't get any runs for him," Stone said. "It's too bad because it was a wasted pitching performance – we just couldn't get any runs for him. We didn't see anybody special on the mound [either], it was just kind of a struggle offensively."

Given the way Serino was pitching, Stone saw no need to go to the bullpen. It was just a matter of whether or not the bats could come through.

"It was one of those days," Stone said. "We had a few opportunities and didn't cash in. I think that it was frustrating from the standpoint of the hitters because we just couldn't get anything going."

It was the opposite on Sunday, when the offense finally awoke to complement another standout pitching performance – this time from senior Mike Gedman – en route to UMass' 8-1 victory.

The bats were alive early this time for UMass, which plated five runs over the first two innings.

"We bounced back," Stone said. "It's tough emotionally when you lose two games in one day. But today we bounced back and had a really good approach. We came out, scored some

See BASEBALL on page 6

Matt Gedman makes his way around the base path in UMass' win over Hartford this year. The junior drew two walks in Sunday's 8-1 victory.

Minutewomen take first 2 A-10 games

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The opening of its Atlantic 10 schedule was just what the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team needed to break free of its recent struggles.

After dropping five of their last six games, the Minutewomen (5-6, 2-0 A-10) swept conference foes Richmond and George Washington over the weekend to pick up their first wins in their current six-game road stint.

UMass	12
Richmond	8
UMass	13
GW	7

"We're happy about two wins in a conference that, from top to bottom, is very tough," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said after Sunday's win.

UMass holds a 15-8 record in the conference under Venechanos and is 8-1 in its last nine regular season A-10 contests.

On Sunday afternoon, UMass received scoring efforts from eight different players to earn the 12-8 victory, its first ever at Richmond since the series began in 2002.

Jesse O'Donnell began the scoring for the Minutewomen just 45 seconds into the game with her team-leading 24th goal. Nearly 10 minutes later, Nina Sarcona extended the UMass lead to two with one of her three scores on the day.

The two teams exchanged goals the rest of the half as Sam Tajirian and Anne Ryan each tallied a score for the Spiders with less than four minutes remaining to decrease the deficit to two. With one minute, 36 seconds left before the break, O'Donnell put in her second score of the contest to give the Minutewomen a 7-4 lead heading into halftime.

To begin the second half, Richmond scored a pair of goals to close the gap to one before UMass scored four straight to put the game out of reach. Gabi Wiegand stopped the run with a goal for the Spiders, but Merritt Cosgrove pushed the lead back to five with 4:42 to play.

Danielle Schachvitz scored the final goal for Richmond with just under two minutes remaining and won the ensuing draw control, looking to score again. The Minutewomen defense, however, regained possession and cleared the ball to run out the final seconds of the game.

Leading the UMass attack was Sarcona, who poured in three goals on the day for her second hat trick of the

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

RAIN HIGH: 52 LOW: 42

www.DailyCollegian.com

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2010

Students vote ALANA seats out

Students pass referendum 2 with favorable 1707-626 vote

By Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

The results are in. The ALANA Caucus appointed seats are out.

At the Student Government Association (SGA) Election held earlier this month, SGA representatives were elected through their contentious new online voting system. But this semester, many SGA officials believe the most controversial ballot item was referendum number two, which discussed the removal of the African, Latino/a, Asian and Native American (ALANA) Caucus appointed SGA seats, which dictated that 13 percent of the Senate be appointed by the ALANA Caucus.

On the spring 2010 ballot referendum, University of Massachusetts students voted 1707 to 626 in favor of removing the ALANA Caucus appointed seats.

The referendum results will alter the SGA's by-laws and a legal review by the General Counsel of the University had previously determined that the ALANA Caucus seats are unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment because they "discriminate on the basis of race specifically noting 'that the approval of the ALANA representation provision by the Board of Trustees would be unconstitutional.'"

The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment states that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The final bill that passed declared that the seats reserved positions in the student senate "on the basis of race or ethnicity."

The approved bill further stated that Student Legal Services, the SGA's legal counsel, had informed the SGA in a memo entitled "ALANA appointed Senate seats" that the seats violated the SGA Constitution and its by-laws.

"Appointed seats are also quite literally unconstitutional as our SGA constitution does not recognize senators except through election, yet our by-laws do," said Yevin Roh of the Center for Educational Policy Advocacy (CEPA). "This lack of congruency makes appointed seats unconstitutional."

According to a document titled "Summary of CEPA Research on ALANA Caucus Appointed Seats," based on research done throughout 2009 by CEPA, all appointed seats, particularly the ALANA Caucus and Area Government appointed seats, are deemed unconstitutional. The Area Government appointed seats were not removed in this referendum; those particular appointed seats were not up for referendum on this year's ballot.

During the March 3 SGA meeting, several members of the SGA were upset at the way in which the discussion of the ALANA seats' legalities occurred.

One of the reasons the removal of the seats is controversial, according to several SGA members, is that the ALANA Caucus has, for many minority students, been a gateway into student politics by introducing the existence of the SGA and providing a guaranteed opportunity to join its body.

According to these same SGA members, who wish to remain anonymous due to of the sensitive nature of this issue, many minority students on this campus may not have been aware of the opportunity to participate in the SGA because of international backgrounds or disadvantaged socio-economic and educational opportunities.

In 2000, the legality of the ALANA Caucus appointed seats was discussed by the student

See ALANA on page 2

Student Government Association Senator Derek Khanna and Yevin Roh of the Center for Educational Policy Advocacy explain the legal issues surrounding the African, Latino/a, Asian and Native American Caucus appointed seats during an SGA meeting held on March 3.

Kim appointed Vice Chancellor

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

After serving for nine months on an interim basis, Jean Kim was appointed the first permanent vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life in over two years, according to an announcement made yesterday by the University of Massachusetts.

Kim was one of four final candidates vying for the position which oversees a variety of offices critical to student life including Housing Services, University Health Services, the Faculty and Staff Assistance Program and the Dean of Students Office, which also includes campus activities and the judicial program.

The post has not been permanently filled since Michael Gargano, Jr. left the University in Jan. 2008. There have since been two interim vice chancellors: Esther Terry, who served in the role for 17 months, and Kim, who began a one-year interim term last July.

According to prior interviews with University spokesman Tom Milligan, who was the chair of a 10-member committee established to conduct a nationwide search and then select the vice chancellor, the position is "the unit most responsible for building the best living and learning environment in partnership with academic affairs and the rest of campus."

Kim is a UMass Amherst alumna who launched her career in student affairs at the University's flagship campus in the mid-1970s. She has worked at seven universities and this will be Kim's fifth tenure as the chief student affairs officer.

Chancellor Robert C. Holub announced the appointment Monday, citing Kim's experience as a student affairs administrator and her "outstanding" performance as interim vice chancellor, according to a University press release.

"We are fortunate indeed to be able to look to someone not only who knows the challenges of this job, but who also has shown grace, leadership and vision in meeting those challenges in recent months," said Holub in yesterday's release.

Kim called her appointment "a true honor, and a vote of confidence for which I am extremely grateful."

"The last nine months have been wonderfully engaging and rewarding for me," said Kim in the release. "I can't tell you how delighted I am to be able to continue the work we have begun and to continue to serve our students and this University. I find our students to be very thoughtful and a joy to work with."

During her interim appointment the student affairs division worked to strengthen its managerial infrastructure, including the completion of a strategic plan and programmatic realignments; developing a campus-wide plan to enhance the first-year experience; planning for on-campus housing expansion; and increasing collaboration with academic colleagues on integrating the students' living-learning experiences, she said in the release.

After earning a bachelor's degree in sociology at UMass Amherst in 1973, Kim served as a senior head of residence from 1974 to 1978 in John Quincy Adams Tower and assistant director of Southwest Residential College from 1978 to 1979. She also worked as assistant director of the Student Development and Counseling Center at UMass Amherst from 1979 to 1981. During those years, Kim completed a master's degree in sociology and a doctorate in counseling psychology at UMass.

Subsequently, Kim served as director of student development at Western New England College in Springfield; assistant dean for graduate student affairs at Stanford University in Calif.; vice president for student affairs and dean of students at the University of Hartford in Conn.; vice chancellor for student affairs at the University of Colorado at Boulder; vice president for student affairs and dean of students at the University of Puget Sound in Wash., and vice chancellor for student affairs at UMass Dartmouth, the release said.

Kim has also been an instructor at the UMass Amherst School of Education and the department of ethnic studies at the University of Colorado at Boulder. She was an adjunct faculty member in the business school at Western New England College.

Throughout her career, she has also been a consultant to corporations, higher education institutions and organizations on issues such as career development, multicultural workforce management, cross cultural communication, diversity training, strategic planning, team and leadership development and executive coaching, said the release.

Kim was born in South Korea and immigrated to the U.S. at the age of 12. She is a first-generation college student, and a beneficiary of public higher education. She is the mother of two college-educated daughters, the release said.

The other final candidates for the post were Kevin F. Charles, assistant vice president for student and academic services at the University of New Hampshire, Margaret A. Jablonski, vice chancellor for student affairs at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and Michael R. Laliberte, vice president for student affairs at Boise State University in Idaho.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Jean Kim was appointed as Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs yesterday after serving in the position on an interim basis since last July. Kim is a UMass Amherst alumna.

Gov. Patrick declares state of emergency

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

Governor Deval Patrick declared a state of emergency for Massachusetts yesterday in response to a severe rain storm that hit the state Monday and will continue today.

"As you know the National Weather service is forecasting up to seven inches of rain in this storm over the next couple of days," said Patrick in a press conference alongside the Massachusetts Emergency Management Act (MEMA). "I am declaring a statewide state of emergency... MEMA will be and has been the lead agency."

WWLP.com in Springfield said that rain amounts will reach three to six inches in the area. Some areas may receive seven inches of rain.

Patrick said the main reason for the state of emergency is because of concerns of flooding of rivers across the state.

"They are now forecasting that all rivers in Massachusetts are now likely to reach flood stage [with] moderate to major flooding... most significant in Central and Eastern Massachusetts," he said. "The ground is saturated following the two storms we've had over the past couple of weeks and it's very difficult for the water to be absorbed. They are forecasting that flood levels may rise quickly."

One of the rivers Patrick highlighted in his press conference was the Connecticut River, which runs through the Hampshire County near towns such as Northampton. WWLP.com wrote that "rain and run-off, combined with continued snowmelt to our north will likely send the Connecticut over its banks again here in Western Massachusetts by Wednesday."

In addition to MEMA, the governor will also use the National Guard to assist with the storm.

"They will have 700 troops deployed by daybreak tomorrow with the capacity to deploy up to a 1,000 should

See RAIN on page 2

It's rain and more rain forecasted for Mass. this week. WWLP said it would rain through Wednesday.

ARTS & LIVING

Taking a new comedic approach

Rory Albanese, an executive producer for "The Daily Show" with Jon Stewart is pursuing a more active career in stand-up comedy in addition to writing.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass plays first home game

After hot hitting and strong pitching helped the Minutewomen roll past George Washington, UMass will host Dartmouth today in an afternoon doubleheader.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Nicholas O'Malley outlines how to tell a European story.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localocracy.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 41

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Serkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elise Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Petr Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

What do you have to say about this UMass issue?

How do you feel about health care reform?

John Tucker, Linguistics

"I'm apathetic about it. It's not really going to affect me because the federal bill doesn't seem to be much different from Massachusetts state health care."

Nicole Jackson, Environmental Science

"Basically, it's hard to find unbiased resources that break down the health care bill so that's why I'm uneducated about it. Change is always scary. The controversy surrounding the bill is intimidating."

Myles Heffernan, Applied Math

"Within the health care system itself, we're treating the symptoms rather than the diseases. We're not trying to improve Americans unhealthy lifestyles, but rather cater to their bad habits. Unhealthy people will have to go to the hospital more often, and if it's free they're just going to be leeches on the system."

Patrick Prendergast, Architecture

"I'm very relieved that I'll be on my parents' plan until I'm 26, because it takes my mind off of having to worry about something that most young adults would have to worry about. My father is self-employed and pays more for health care than he does for the mortgage. This plan will help alleviate some of that financial burden."

By Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick, Collegian Staff

Flooding may occur along river zones

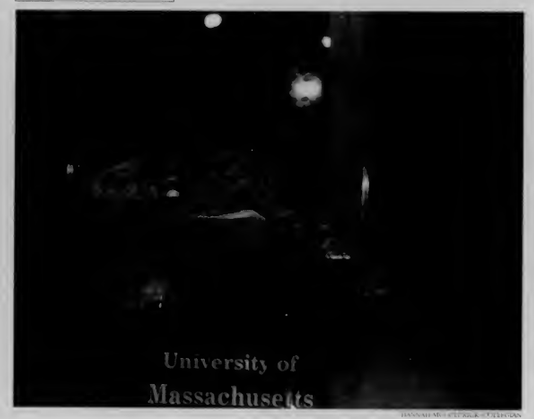
RAIN from page 1

we need them as the storm situation evolves," he said. "The Guard will be strategically prepositioned for any area that needs assistance with evacuations, sandbagging and safety patrols."

Patrick urged caution to those close to flood zones, saying that they should at least prepare for the possibility of an evacuation.

"We are not calling for people to evacuate now," he said. "We are asking if you live in a flood zone, to prepare."

The governor told everyone to take advantage of public transportation. The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's (MBTA) subway system, commonly referred to as "The T" is functioning and may add more times to routes if needed.



"If you must drive, please take your time and use extreme caution," said Patrick.

He added that high river levels may cause some athletes or daring individuals to go into the river for kayaking, swimming and other water sports. He strongly urged against this, saying, "please do not succumb to the temptation."

A 211 phone number will be staffed 24 hours for non-emergency inquiries about the storm. Information is also available on www.fema.gov.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@dailycollegian.com

SOS News Needs You To Write For Us

University of Massachusetts

Hannah McGoldrick / Collegian

Speaker of the House Modesto Montero calls the meeting to order to discuss the removal of the controversial ALANA Caucus seats. The seats were removed in a referendum that was approved last week.

Legality of referedum lingers

ALANA from page 1

judiciary. Members of the student judiciary at the time found the seats to be permissable under the SGA's Constitution. However, due to the sensitivity of the conflict, they decided to bring the vote to a referendum. The spring 2001 ballot referendum ruled in favor, 1678 to 797, of preserving the ALANA Caucus appointed seats.

According to Senator Derek Khanna, the Office of Civil Rights has been investigating the legality of the ALANA Caucus' appointed seats for over seven months. Khanna explained that he had been in direct contact with Michael Joyce of the Office of Civil Rights, who, according to Khanna, found the seats to be illegal and "did not understand why the seats were up for referendum."

Any changes to the SGA bylaws and Constitution must initially be passed in referendum and then approved by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jean Kim.

Attempts to contact Michael Joyce from the Office of Civil Rights were unsuccessful because comments about the ALANA Caucus seats were instead directed to the Office of Civil Rights' press office.

Khanna also stated that he sought guidance about the legality of the ALANA appointed seats from the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), and that the ACLU supported the proposition that the seats were illegal.

However, according to Christopher Ott of the ACLU of Massachusetts, the ACLU "took no further action" deciding that the union "did not take a position" about the ALANA seats.

Kim had set in place a plan to remove the appointed ALANA Caucus seats by March 1. Although the seats are vacant, several senators say the ALANA appointed seats were vacant mainly because of concerns surrounding the legality of the seats and knowledge about their pending removal.

When asked if he believed the SGA would remain as diverse should the ALANA seats be removed, Roh said, "Diversity has always depended on the students, the ALANA Caucus was not the sole arbiter of ensuring diversity. Each senator as an individual brings a great amount of diversity, each having their own unique life experiences."

"It is not up to CEPA or the SGA to try to get the seats back," added Roh. "If the need arises for the seats in the future, and students fight for them, anything is possible."

Of the campus' 18,263 undergraduates, 2,662 of them voted in the University's trial-run online Student Government Association elections, meaning the voter turnout, according to results released by the SGA's Chancellor of Elections Jitesh Khushalani, was 14.58 percent.

Election results were approved at the SGA meeting held last Wednesday.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu. Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

Students talk to legislators about future of higher education

The Daily Reveille
Via College News Network

University students crammed the Louisiana State Capitol's gallery, clustered around senators and anxiously waited for time to speak with their representatives during "Fund our Future" on Monday.

More than 60 University students were at the Capitol throughout the day and attended the first day of the Louisiana State Legislature's spring session.

SG bused students to the Capitol between 10:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m., but many students stayed later to hear Gov. Bobby Jindal's speech.

"It was a huge success. We started engaging students in conversations with representatives," said SG President Stuart Watkins. "We didn't come to protest. We came with a proposal that outlined solutions instead of emotional rhetoric."

Students filled out requests to speak to their representatives as they entered the Capitol.

They spoke with more senators than representatives because the House of Representatives was electing a new speaker pro tempore.

"We are here today because we want to make sure LSU guarantees a quality education and that teachers are not cut and the legislature takes us into account while making higher cuts," said Garrett Collins, education sophomore and SG senate candidate.

Sen. Dan Claitor, R-East Baton Rouge Parish, spoke to several University students about their concerns to allow all parts of the state budget to be cut.

"It's crazy we protect everything except higher education and health care," Claitor said.

Sen. Jack Donahue, R-St. Tammany Parish, said he thinks it's important for students to speak to legislators.

"I'm always a supporter of LSU," Donahue said. "I'm a tremendous supporter of higher education."

Watkins said the legislators were surprised students took the time to go to the Capitol.

"They kept saying, 'We're proud of you for coming,'" Watkins said.

Besides talking to as many legislators as possible, students provided copies of SG Chief Economic Adviser Greg Upton's budget proposal to each representative.

Many of Jindal's points were consistent with SG's budget proposal, Upton said after the governor's 2 p.m. speech. Those points included removing statutes making every part of the budget available for cuts, supporting the LA GRAD Act and allowing universities "flexibility" in return for high graduation rates.

"It is important we make needed changes for higher education," Jindal said. "We should give universities more flexibility, but in turn they have to do better performance."

Jindal said people wouldn't stand for the University's athletics being as poor as its graduation rates, which he said are the second lowest in the South.

"We need to demand the same excellence in the classroom that we expect on the athletic field," Jindal said.

Upton said he also heard positive words from several of the legislators, but was disappointed many said nothing about removing statutes from the Louisiana State Constitution.

"I think what was important is we would go as a group of students to a legislator," Upton said. "We were saying this is a proposal of all the students."

Watkins said he approves Jindal's focus on higher education but said there is still room for improvement.

SG Vice President Martina Scheuermann said there is a real need for students to respond to the legislature's decisions.

"A lot of legislators were saying they hadn't heard from their constituents," Scheuermann said. "I think it's part of the civic engagement process, and it's more than just about the students that are on campus now."

Students from all degrees and years joined SG downtown, including Kirsti Ortego, mass communication freshman.

Courtesy College News Network.org

Louisiana Sen. Dan Claitor, R-EBRP, speaks to a group at the State Capitol Monday.

"I'm here as an LSU student, and I know I'm only a freshman, but I know it's going to affect us when we graduate," Ortego said. "If our school goes down, so does the credibility of our degree."

College of Business Senator Anne-Marie Fontenot spent most of the day downtown and spoke to Sen. Eric LaFleur, D-Allen Parish, the senator representing her hometown of Ville Platte.

"He has always supported higher education and will continue to do so throughout this session," Fontenot said.

Students showing they care about legislative decisions shows they are concerned about Louisiana's future, Fontenot said.

– Community Clips –

Catalan Film Festival
Catalan Film Festival presents "V.O.S.," a film by Cesc Gay.
Tue Mar. 30, 6:30 p.m. Herter 212

inSpire Me
An event that will focus on advising students on how to effectively navigate through Spire and answer any questions anyone may have about their future at UMass.
Tue Mar. 30, 7:00 p.m.
Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center
Wed Mar. 31, 7:00 p.m. Latin American Cultural Center

Workshop: PASW Statistics (SPSS) Syntax
Learn to use PASW Statistics syntax to make your work more productive.
Wed Mar. 31, 9:30 a.m. Lederle A210

Renaissance Wednesday
"The Trevelyon Miscellany" with Peter Geraty. A profusely illustrated seventeenth-century compilation of traditional knowledge including calendars, historical chronologies and allegorical figures.
Wed Mar. 31, 4:00 p.m.
Renaissance Center

Racquetball Lessons
Play racquetball and improve your cardiovascular endurance, muscle strength and flexibility while having a ton of fun.
Wed Mar. 31, 6:00 p.m. Mullins Center

Alumni Panel: Changing Course: Navigating Your Career Path
Join our alumni panel as they discuss how they still found their career success when their current profession differed from their original degree.
Wed Mar. 31, 6:00 p.m.
Memorial Hall

Money Skills Seminar
Guest speaker Julie Shields Rutyna, a UMass and Harvard Alum, of the Massachusetts Education Financing Authority will discuss the importance of financial education for college students while focusing on student loans.
Wed Mar. 31, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

UPC Presents: Battle of the Bands
Come one, come all and cheer on your fellow UMass students while they battle head-to-head in UPC's annual Battle of the Bands competition.
Wed Mar. 31, 7:00 p.m.
Stockbridge Bowker Auditorium

Film: Eccentricities of a Blond Hair Girl/Singulairidades de uma Rapariga Loura
A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival "Cinematic Cities."
Wed Mar. 31, 7:30 p.m.
Isenberg School of Management 137

Not Ready for Bedtime Players
Join us for an evening of side-splitting laughter, informative skits and free condoms.
Wed Mar. 31, 8:00 p.m.
Pierpont Lounge

Panel Discussion: Research Methods for Social Justice
Consider how research methods promote social justice across a variety of contexts, both locally and globally.
Thu Apr. 1, 12:30 p.m. Campus Center 904

BDIC Information Session
Information session on creating your own major through interdisciplinary studies.
Thu Apr. 1, 2:00 p.m. Goodell 608

Lecture: "American Jews, Israel and the Struggle for Soviet Jewry"
Fred Lazin (class of 1966), now Professor of Local Government at Ben Gurion University, Israel, lectures on "American Jews, Israel and the Struggle for Soviet Jewry."
Thu Apr. 1, 4:00 p.m. Herter 301

Invisible Children Legacy Tour
The tragedy in Uganda is a heartbreaking story of child soldiers. For the first time, these children are going on tour to tell their stories.
Thu Apr. 1, 6:00 p.m. Campus Center Auditorium

Ayano Kataoka Faculty Percussion Recital
Ayano Kataoka performs on percussion with guest percussionist Gwendolyn Burgett Thrasher.
Thu Apr. 1, 2010, 8:00 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

Lecture: "Materiality and Organizations: Exploring Technology at Work"
Professor Wanda J. Orlikowski of the MIT Sloan School of Management will be the guest speaker at the Organizations, Institutions and Change Seminar.
Fri Apr. 2, 10:00 a.m. Isenberg School of Management 108

BDIC Information Session
Information session on creating your own major through interdisciplinary studies.
Fri Apr. 2, 11:00 a.m. Goodell 608

Lecture: "An Analysis of Pediatric Vaccine Pricing and Stockpiling Issues"
Professor Sheldon Jacobson of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign Computer Science Department delivers this lecture as part of the Spring 2010 Operations Research/Management Science Seminar series.
Fri Apr. 2, 11:00 a.m. Isenberg School of Management 112

Lecture: "Managing Business Commons: Information Infrastructures and Network Actors"
The National Center for Digital Government presents "Managing Business Commons: Information Infrastructures and Network Actors" with M. Lynne Markus, Professor of Information and Process Management at Bentley University.
Fri Apr. 2, 12:15 p.m.
Thompson 620

Deadline for the 5th Annual UMass Film Festival
Today is the last day to submit films for the 5th Annual UMass Film Fest.
Fri Apr. 2, 5:00 p.m. UVC-TV 19

Exhibit: "Writing the Landscape: Books from the Library of American Landscape History"
The exhibit features several books developed by the Library of American Landscape History (LALH) and photographs by noted landscape photographer Carol Betsch.
Mon Feb. 1 to Thu May 20.
Library, W.E.B. Du Bois Lower Level, Learning Commons

Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program
Free income tax assistance to qualified taxpayers will be available by the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program at the Isenberg School of Management.
Tue Feb. 9 to Tue Apr 13. Isenberg School of Management 27

Greening the Valley: Sustainable Architecture in the Pioneer Valley
A landmark exhibition on sustainable, contemporary architecture and environmentally-sensitive building practices in the Pioneer Valley.
Thu Feb 11 to Sun May 9
Fine Arts Center - University Gallery

Exhibit: I'am a dream: A (Collective) Dialogue with a Collection
Three local artists' work exhibited side by side with selections from the Gallery's permanent collection.
Thu Feb. 11 to Sun May 9
Fine Arts Center - University Gallery

Census 2010: It's In Our Hands
The U.S. Census counts every resident in the United States, and is required by the Constitution to take place every 10 years. Results of the census determine how federal funds are allocated to states and to communities, which can affect everything from college tuition grant and loan money to research done on campus.
Mon Mar. 29 to Thu Apr. 15.
All-Campus

Exhibit: D. Dominic Lombardi's "Hidden Worlds"
D. Dominick Lombardi calls this body of work "Hidden Worlds," a viewing experience ripe with contradictions and complexity. Curated by David Gibson.
Tue Mar. 30 to Wed Apr. 28.
Central Gallery

Exhibit: Kathleen Cammarat's "Where to Now?"
A solo exhibition of Kathleen Cammarata's new large-scale oil paintings and drawings.
Sat Apr. 3 to Wed Apr. 28.
Hampden Gallery

Lecture: "Deinstitutionalization and Reinstitutionalization in the Virtual State"
Jane Fountain, Professor of Political Science and Public Policy, talks about her research on e-government as part of the Spring 2010 CPPA Faculty Colloquium.
Mon Apr 5, 2010, 12:00 pm
Thompson 620.

The DAILY COLLEGAIN
IS NOW HIRING
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER

The Office of Jewish Affairs,
Center for Student Development, and Student Affairs & Campus Life

extend our warmest Passover greetings to the campus Jewish community...

Happy Passover!

May this joyous festival be a time of renewal for you and your families

UMASS AMHERST | The Office of Jewish Affairs is part of the Center for Student Development. Visit us online at www.umass.edu/jewish or call 545-9642

PAD THAI DEMONSTRATION
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31 • 5 - 9 PM
WORCESTER DC, OAKROOM

Voted Best Thai Food 2007 & 2009
Audience Winner, Best of Citysearch

MENU:
Chicken Green Curry with Winter Melon
Pad Thai Noodles with Vegetables
Thai style BBQ Pork Spareribs · Panang Beef Curry
And much more!

Restaurant's ivy | UMASS DINING UMassAmherst umassdining.com | facebook facebook.com/umassdining

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
On-C... Local Ads fo...
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." -Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How to tell a Europe story

Nick O'Malley

After two Pig F*&kers, a Beast, a Hobgoblin and a Leffe the night before, I was alright with taking it easy. It wasn't the storybook Friday night you're supposed to have in England, but we took it as it was.

Of course, I might've had the least to drink the night before, stopping well short of trying to fall asleep in a bush like one of my friends. So it was understandable when I had a little bit of jump in my step the next morning as we explored the parts of Canterbury that weren't pubs.

Europe is story-telling cruise control for cool. Even if the story isn't that good, there's still the trump card of saying "Oh, you wouldn't get it. You've never been to Canterbury."

Cardboard cones filled with chips, cheese scones and discovering there's a clothing line called "bench:" concluded a pretty solid day. But cobblestone streets are hell on your ankles and some of us were only a night separated from sleeping in a Victoria Station. We ended up not forcing the night, choosing close friends over crowded pubs.

But after the others had gone to bed, I found myself still too scared. I decided I'd go for a drink, taking a "litre" of British lager with me, leaving the all-too Purfton-like maze of Park Wood for the bus stop near Keynes College. My friend Sami says she wants to take a picture of the view every time she goes there, so I figured I'd see what it was like in the night time.

The stop itself is a couple lighted shelters with a pair of homeless-proof thin benches. But across the way, there's a clearing that gives a perfect view of the Canterbury skyline: buildings of old stone blending with new steel and glass, dominated by an illuminated Canterbury Cathedral.

Not wanting to feel like a bum, I looked around for a better vantage point, spotting an old stone bench on the hill behind the stop. Upon reaching the summit, I turned, sat, opened my bottle of Golden Champion, turned on my iPod and thought, "this kind of sucks."

Though I wanted to believe it was the kind of night that comes to mind when you think of going to Europe – but it wasn't. It was bland, boring and forced, though I did it to make a point.

Under the right circumstances, any story can sound good, as long as you can tell it right.

I knew that, in the right context, all those things I did the night before would sound kind of cool but in reality, my friends were asking me why the hell I did that.

My low-key English evening is an example that by following a few simple rules, you too can make a boring story sound like one of those pretentious study abroad stories that people are always telling.

Step one: Laid-back confidence, preferably with a drink.

The point of journalism is story-telling. Part of that story-telling is to make things sound interesting, make it a good story that people will listen to.

Unfortunately, that privilege can be abused to hype up clichéd moments like that time you sat back and drank a beer.

That's because most people want to have that moment at some time but never really get a good chance. Although it rarely lives up to the hype, depicting the moment in the right tone just makes it sound cooler.

Also, the only time the phrases old friends, good friends or close friends are used in a story with no mention of what actually happened with said friends is to make a story sound cooler. No one wants to hear about how my friends and I spent the night watching "Aladdin" and "The Departed" in succession on someone's laptop – which brings me to step two.

Step two: Leave out the boring parts.

During the course of the story, I may or may not have gotten lost two or three times because I forgot to actually bring the beer the first time I left the apartment. Remember that skyline I mentioned? It was there, but I couldn't see any of it because the cathedral isn't lit up at 1 a.m.

Step three: Be in Europe.

Europe is story-telling cruise control for cool. Even if the story isn't that good, there's still the trump card of saying, "Oh, you wouldn't get it.

You've never been to Canterbury." If this story was set on the hill behind Van Meter, no one would care. There are at least three kids doing that right now. Go and check. I'll wait.

Step four: Keep it short.

This is a mistake that my former roommate Jake would always make when he told a story.

He would tell a story about the time he took part in the rescue of a garden gnome from a frat house – like he was writing a screenplay.

Step five: Drop names like it's going out of style.

You want to know what's in a Pig F*&ker, don't you? (Two shots cherry vodka, two shots melon vodka, pineapple juice and sprite, we think.)

Just naming cools things that people haven't heard of makes a story more interesting. Victoria Station, Keynes College, Canterbury and drinks nobody's heard of sound better than, the Hangis Mall bus stop, the Townhouses and a 30-rack of Busch light.

Of course, there's the off-chance that a pretentious sounded like another pretentious study abroad kid. But I'm done with classes for the semester, so I can deal with it.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Town in a gown

Matthew M. Robare

Not a semester goes by without some new conflict emerging between the University of Massachusetts Amherst and the Town of Amherst, or an old one rising to the surface with new strength.

This semester alone we have seen: an ordinance introduced to ban smoking in public areas during licensed events – something widely believed to be an attempt at suppressing Extravaganja; an increased enforcement of an old bylaw prohibiting more than four unrelated people from living together – which is a measure specifically designed to punish students based on the stereotype that we all have parties that Rome would find shameful and live as though there was no such thing as personal hygiene or laundry; raising fines on violating alcohol related bylaws and bringing in more police to crack down on (our wallets) parties.

It is certainly within the rights of the Select Board to prescribe punishments for breaking the laws they made with the intention of providing safety and security to the general population and so on. But increasing fines on unheard of bylaws could easily be considered wanton penny pinching. I've lived here in the summer; the economy grinds to a virtual standstill without our spending.

Eventually this is going to reach harassment-like proportions which will start driving away prospective students. Then the town will be in the gutter; businesses will close, people will move away, the lack of competition in many areas will drive the cost of living up and pretty soon the farms will reclaim development and Amherst will be a ghost of its former self. It will be poorer, less educated as tax revenue dries up. ...more Republican.

But the students can fight back.

Right now, UMass is legally a corporation of some kind. That is, the University is legally a "person" created by the legislature for a specific purpose.

A town is another kind of corporation, but of a different sort and with certain powers the University doesn't have, such as the right to make and enforce laws, eminent domain powers and taxation.

A town, however, is theoretically responsible to its registered voters in the way the University or commercial corporation is not. A city has even more independence from the state government than a town.

Yes, as ironic as it sounds, we have a rich history of secession here in Massachusetts, and we should use it ensure that UMass students are treated fairly and justly.

Once upon a time, there was only the Town of Hadley. Then the Town of Amherst split off. Even further back in the past, we had the Royal Colony of Massachusetts, but we split off from Great Britain. Maine was once part of Massachusetts, but became its own state as part of the Missouri Compromise.

During the War of 1812, delegates from the five New England states met at Hartford and discussed leaving the United States and forming a New England Confederation.

Yes, as ironic as it sounds, we have a rich history of secession here in Massachusetts, and we should use it ensure that UMass students are treated fairly and justly. That's right: UMass should secede from Amherst.

Many problems would be solved if UMass leveled up to municipal corporation status; undergraduates would finally have a say in running the University.

Assuming they register to vote, the University could solve its revenue problems by granting liquor licenses and renting out commercial space – or selling land to businesses and private citizens and assessing taxes on it.

As a town we would have fewer responsibilities than regular towns – no public schools with the possibility of them becoming money pits, very few extra services. Hell, we could sell electricity to Hadley residents.

I tried to reach Amherst town treasurer John Musante, but he didn't get back to me. I wanted to ask him about the financial relationship between UMass and Amherst; some schools make lump sum donations to their host towns in lieu of paying taxes and I wanted to know if UMass does the same.

I also wanted to know about what the town's reaction might be if UMass were to secede.

It will be a long and treacherous road to secession and freedom from the townies, but with determination and patience, we can walk it.

UMass students should hold a referendum or plebiscite on the issue, as soon as the fall semester if possible, and submit a proposal to the General Court.

I believe that it has become necessary for the students of this University to terminate our association with the Town of Amherst, which has demonstrated throughout the years by means of various ordinances and bylaws that it does not desire or appreciate our presence within its borders.

Therefore we should grant their wish and separate ourselves from their municipality.

That sounds like a good beginning to a declaration of independence.

Free UMass.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

See that box? It's a soap box.
You get on that soap box.
But don't wash yourself, write for our editorial/opinion page instead.

Future generations to foot the bill

Harrison Searles

Last week, President Obama signed the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, giving it the force of law in our nation. As debates reached a new peak this weekend, many commentators and politicians have been in an uproar wondering whether or not the bill will finance abortions with tax-payer money and the executive order by Obama to prevent that has not done much to calm the fury over this issue.

While the funding of abortion is certainly an issue of grave moral importance, the coverage that it has been given has been relatively out of proportion, since all the other moral issues relating to the bill have been given little attention because of the issue of abortion. Without a doubt, one of the most important moral issues at stake is the fact that the federal government has now passed a program that will require $848 billion (that's $848,000,000,000, as it sometimes takes writing out the number to realize the scale of even a single billion) over a decade while debt is at $12.6 trillion ($12,600,000,000,000), and the federal government is running a deficit of $3.5 billion.

Of course, the first response is inevitably going to be that the "non-partisan" Congressional Budget Office (CBO) has estimated that this piece of legislation will reduce the federal deficit by $130 billion by adding new taxes and reducing the growth of Medicare.

However, the fact that anybody in the United States even takes government estimates of the costs of government programs seriously is unnerving, since the government has never been able to successfully project the costs of its own programs within an acceptable standard of error. For instance, in 1990 the House Ways and Means Committee estimated Medicare would cost $12 billion, but in reality, it ended up being $107 billion. How any organization could ever be credible with respect to its cost-projections after such a mishap is bewildering.

As pointed out by the Harvard professor and economist Greg Mankiw in his blog, when the CBO estimates the financial costs of a bill like the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, they assume that gross domestic product (GDP) maintains its current path; however, not only does the bill introduce taxes on capital incomes to finance insurance subsidies, which may very well have an impact on GDP, but it hasn't been that long since the majority of government economists were set into a panic by the meltdown of the financial system in 2008.

Even if the federal government was not running a massive deficit, the financial concerns of our economy ought to have placed a shadow of doubt upon the bill.

Even if the federal government was not running a massive deficit, the financial concerns of our economy ought to have placed a shadow of doubt upon the bill.

To make matters worse, not only is the government in over $10 trillion in debt, but by 2018, four years after the bill comes into full force, the government will have to face incredible demographic changes.

Around this time, the federal government will be receiving less in Social Security payroll-taxes than it pays in Social Security benefits. As always, matters get worse: not only will the government be paying out more than it takes in, but the money that it has been able to accumulate so far in the form of a Social Security Trust Fund has been entrusted to Congress and therefore spent.

As a result, when the demographic shift occurs, and the baby-boomer generation retires, the federal government will need to begin spending its own money in order to ensure that Social Security payments are met.

Of course, any Social Security reform that is attempted is going to be deadlocked by the rent-seeking baby-boomers who have done all that they have done to create a fiscal Armageddon, and then pass the debt to their children. Nor is the demographic situation going to get any better with time for there is no time in the foreseeable future where there will be more individuals paying into the system than are receiving from it, and the birth rates continue to drop.

In the end, the federal government in the upcoming decade will be tested by difficult financial stress as welfare systems like Social Security lurch under the stress of demographic change, and if this were not bad enough of a forecast, the federal government is already in a debt of trillions of dollars.

There is a word for this that can cut through all of the economic mumbo-jumbo that the court-economists of Washington DC have spoken: theft.

The federal government has essentially stolen a year's worth of production from their citizens. This is easy to laugh at and ignore if one is a gray-headed politician and might not live to see the demographic shifts that threaten to destroy the government social insurance programs that everyone knows are unsustainable.

Even though the virtue of temperance may not be in vogue these years, those in Washington are in desperate need of it.

For a while an orgy of spending may yield short-term euphoria, in the long-run, someone will have to pick up the pieces. While it certainly may be true that in the long-run we are all dead, it is also true that human society continues past the death of a generation and that someone will always pay the bill.

It is a tragedy for the American citizen that the moral implications for further government spending, approved by the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, have not been discussed further. It is bewildering that the federal government has passed this piece of legislation despite the fact that it is not only in trillions of dollars in debt, but is also currently running a deficit of over a billion dollars.

Even though the CBO has stated that the bill will reduce the federal government, previous experiences with the government attempts at cost-projection inform us that they are to be taken with at least a grain of salt.

Despite all of this, the primary moral debate has been with the possibility of funds from this program going to fund abortions, not the fact that this bill is yet another display of the fact that Washington D.C. is content to merrily spend when the future will have to pay the bill.

Harrison Searles is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at hwarles@student.umass.edu

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Rent' amazes with first-rate cast

The cast of the Theater Guild's production of "Rent" this weekend put on an excellent performance, despite a disrespectful audience and a few technical difficulties.

By Matt Robare
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Theater Guild's production of "Rent" was amazing, apart from the lack of respect for the performers from the audience. By the time the ensemble had finished Act I of "Rent" with a rendition of "La vie Boheme," I was ready to leap out of my seat and strangle several of the people sitting near me.

I want to make one thing crystal clear: if you are attending a performance of any sort – a play, a concert, an avant-garde protest, the ballet – turn your cell phone off. Don't put it on silent, turn it off. It's not like you can't text your lack of interest or total disrespect for your native language the other 21 hours of the day you're not in a theater where the majority of people actually want to see the play. Since I cannot get away with bodily harm I must console myself with the fact that there are special torments reserved in hell for disrupters. Again, turn your cell phones off.

"Rent" is a musical about a group of young people living in the East Village neighborhood of New York City in the late '80s and early '90s. Many of them are suffering from HIV/AIDS. It has a quite complicated plot, because it follows several characters with equal importance, but I see the major plot lines being the relationships between Collins (Michael McSweeney) and Angel (Darvin Hernandez) and Mimi (Julia Piker) and Roger (Ben Sharton).

McSweeney and Hernandez were more than up to the task of portraying perhaps the greatest tragic love story since Rick and Ilsa in "Casablanca." I actually can't even think about Angel without getting misty-eyed and by the time of "I'll Cover You: Reprise" and "Halloween," when we learn Angel's future, the entire audience was crying.

Sharton, I believe, succeeded in his goal of making Roger more sympathetic and Piker did an excellent job as Mimi although at times, especially in "Out Tonight," her high notes were getting away from her. I also found that there wasn't as much chemistry between them, although this could be explained by the characters being fairly lonesome people throughout most of the story. When the play opens, for instance, Roger apparently hasn't left the apartment he shares with Mark (Matt Magarth) for several months.

Magarth began a little shaky, looking at the audience before delivering his lines and his microphone cut out halfway through the song "Rent," meaning that the music occasionally drowned his voice out. However, he owned "La vie Boheme." Lisa Bettancourt, as Maureen, managed to capture Maureen's out-there-ness, which was certainly helped by the cow-themed protest piece "Over the Moon," although I couldn't help but think about the Saturday Night Live "More Cowbell" sketch.

The best performances of the evening, however, went to Ilana Ramsom Toeplitz as Joanne. She captured the character perfectly. Also for best performance is Ronald Vorce and Lauren Mack, the soloists for "Seasons of Love." The song was beautifully performed by the entire company, but Vorce and Mack stole the show.

The best thing about "Rent" is that it manages to portray everything very realistically. Yes, it is one of the saddest plays ever, but there are still humorous moments. Angel's solo "Today 4 U" involves him dispatching an annoying dog, Garfield-style. Collins is an anarchist computer scientist philosopher who wants to open a restaurant in New Mexico in "Santa Fe."

Opening night was problematic because of several technical glitches – microphones cut out frequently and the band could be overenthusiastic at times and drown out the performers, even when the microphones were working properly.

Despite technicalities, "Rent" surely could have sent any audience member "Over the Moon" for the worthwhile performance.

Matthew M. Robare can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu

'Daily Show' exec pursuing stand-up career

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

Comedians. They make us laugh, they make us cry from laughing and in the case of Rory Albanese, they help deliver the news as well.

Rory Albanese is an executive producer for "The 'Daily Show" with Jon Stewart and also does standup comedy. He helps write material for Jon Stewart, who then proceeds to take the material, uses it as mouthwash and then spits out comedy gold.

Comedy Central will be hosting a Rory Albanese standup special this Friday, April 2, at 11 p.m. Assuming that anyone reading this is still coherent enough to remember to watch it on Friday, it is a laugh riot. Caution: if you are from New Jersey or Canada, you may be offended.

Growing up on Long Island, Albanese was always good at making people laugh. Of course, sometimes he was too good, and during class he would frequently make jokes during silences that got the whole room to crack up, but got him in trouble.

For Albanese, comedy became the obvious career choice. There wasn't really anything else he could think of doing. He began doing standup almost immediately out of college, although that took a backseat to his job at "The Daily Show." Albanese still does standup frequently though, and even went on tour with Lewis Black in 2006.

Albanese started out as a production assistant at "The Daily Show," fetching coffee for various staff members and serving as a footstool for Stewart when he was tired. After many years of slowly working his way up the harsh ladder that is satirical news journalism, Albanese was eventually promoted to executive producer and helped the show win two Emmys for writing in 2009.

While still beneath Stewart in terms of authority, Albanese still has some semblance of power on the show and often fires people randomly, just to show off his power. Of course he hires them right back, but it is the thought that counts.

Writing for "The Daily Show" and for his standup act are not the same though. When writing for "The Daily Show," Albanese is writing in the voice of Stewart and he can "hide behind the guarantee that John will make it work, but it's you, you're kind of alone out there and you have to make it funny." On top of that there are always days when Albanese cannot think of anything funny, but that is why the rest of the writing staff is there, all 100 of them and a few dogs and fishes.

A lot of people watch "The Daily Show" and an increasing number of college students report that "The Daily Show" is their main news source. When asked about this Albanese said that "I get being in college and watching 'The Daily Show' and feeling like you got your news." Ultimately, though, he wants young people to understand that it is a short amount of news and that the show does not cover the full scope.

"Use ['The Daily Show'] as a launching point to do your own research," he said.

Albanese recommends going to the library or searching the Internet to look into things talked about on the show. He also recommends watching multiple sources.

"If you just pick a source... then you are getting a slant. It's not a menu, you can mix and match," he said.

Albanese got into standup because he likes writing jokes and telling jokes. When offered to do his standup special by Comedy Central, he commented that he "wasn't seeking it but wasn't against it." The special will lead to more standup shows which forces him to be creative, coming up with more new material.

"Stand-up is a trial-and-error process" according to Albanese. "The whole career is bombing. You know you've gotten good when you bomb and you don't care."

"If you are going to pursue stand-up you have to do it, it's easy to try and you should try more than once." Albanese also said that the advice is applicable no matter what your career is, and that you should get out of college and immediately try and achieve your dream. "It doesn't get easier as you get older," he said.

On one occasion Lewis Black brought him to a comedy club in New Jersey, where Albanese proceeded to give one of his worst performances to a menacing crowd. Afraid of Black's wrath at his failure, he slunk backstage only to see Black standing there laughing hysterically. Black said, "I brought you here to bomb."

Later, on the car ride back, Black stated that "if you bomb and you still want to do stand-up, you have got the disease." And of course, Albanese realized the next day that he still wanted to do stand-up, thus confirming his sickness. Recently, he returned to that very same club with John Oliver, a "Daily Show" correspondent, and did a stellar show.

Oliver and Albanese are currently in the middle of writing a script for a comedy movie. Whether or not the script will make it to screen is still to be determined, but Albanese has hope.

Albanese also said that he would love to come down to any schools willing to have him perform, including the University of Massachusetts. Well, except for UMass Lowell. Amherst is cool but Lowell is not in his book.

Tappan Parker can be reached at tiparker@student.umass.edu

COURTESY COMEDY CENTRAL

After writing and producing for "The Daily Show," Rory Albanese is pursuing his stand-up comedy dream with more fervor than ever. His Comedy Central special airs Friday at 11 p.m.

Book published in 1930s still a relevant source

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Staff

"How to Win Friends and Influence People," by Dale Carnegie, is a book on why generosity is the greatest good you can do to yourself and others. Its lessons are simple, easy to understand and readily applicable in everyday life.

It takes the mysteries of personal relationships and focuses them into astonishing clarity. It explains how to confidently meet new people, and make a first impression that is both memorable and likeable. It will show you how simple generosity and finding a genuine interest in other people can help you make lifelong friends and contacts.

The truth this book expounds is familiar and obvious. It's a compilation of every piece of advice you have ever received on how to treat other people. It's advice from your parents, your teachers, your dog – anyone you could possibly think of. It is the same advice you nod your head at dismissively, pretending to listen to. Besides, how often is the case that the person giving advice has no more reverence for it than you receiving it?

Why is such plainly beneficial knowledge discarded so thoughtlessly? Maybe it's because it is so obvious; we see and hear it every day, over and over again. Yet this is precisely why the book is so profound. It doesn't teach us how to win friends and influence people, it merely illustrates the answers right before us. All we have to do is notice them.

The book provides numerous suggestions for how to effectively interact with other people. It discusses everything from the Golden Rule, "do unto others as you would have them do unto you," to how to solve conflicts, and avoid them altogether by listening instead of arguing. It tells you to smile constantly, to remember peoples' names, to never complain or criticize harshly and to always give sincere appreciation. By following this advice, you can be sure of you success in all different kinds of relationships.

For proof of the book's effectiveness, all you have to do is read and test it out. As soon as you put it down, examples of its simple truths emerge readily for study and observation. There is no better place to test its merit then here on the University of Massachusetts campus. It's a great tool for meeting new people in your dorm or in your classes. It will help you approach your teachers and develop relationships with them that will enable academic success, and open doors for new learning opportunities. The book will help you get involved on campus and in the community by helping you find people who share your interests. Basically, it will help you get the most out of your college experience.

Even in the text itself, there are numerous examples of what wonderful things can happen when the book's advice it taken to heart. It explains how the ability to remember peoples' names, and take genuine interest in their personal lives, helped make Franklin Delano Roosevelt one of the most popular presidents ever elected. This is just one example of how this simple advice can be used to such great effect.

The importance of this book and the effect it can have on peoples' lives is immeasurable. After all, interacting with people is arguably the most important thing we do as human beings. The ability to relate with one another is essential to an organized society. It is also an invaluable life skill that everyone benefits from. With this in mind, a book that is so enlightening on the subject of human relationships should not be passed up by anyone.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu.

Starters beginning to pitch deeper in games

Gedman, Serino go the distance over weekend

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

Dominant – the one word consistently used by coach Mike Stone to label the past two pitching performances he witnessed from his Massachusetts baseball team.

The pitching staff has been the Achilles' heel the entire season for the Minutemen (2-11, 1-2 Atlantic 10), allowing over 100 runs in the first 11 games, with an average of 9.2 runs per game.

But Nick Serino and Mike Gedman showed everyone in the Saint Joseph's dugout just what type of performances they are capable of when the two pitchers on top of their game.

First up was Serino, taking the ball hours after the pitching staff surrendered nine runs in the first game of a doubleheader on Saturday. He responded by hurling eight innings of three-hit ball, striking out 13 Hawks batters, and allowing only one run to cross the plate.

His eight innings were more than his previous two starts combined, when he gave up 12 earned runs on 15 hits.

"He was dominant," Stone said. "He had command of all his pitches, threw a lot of strikes, and kept hitters off balance. He was definitely stronger this time out, where he had more velocity and just felt very confident with the pitches he was executing."

Next was Gedman, who in his last start, could not make it past four innings against William and Mary, surrendering seven hits and three walks with no strikeouts. Instead of dwelling upon his latest struggles, Gedman one-upped Serino, going all nine innings while allowing one run with no walks and 10 strikeouts.

"Gedman's a competitor," Stone said. "He gave us a dominant performance as well. He's got a great slider and his fastball is never straight. [Hitters] were swinging at a lot of balls that eventually left the zone."

Coming into Saturday, the Minutemen had seen only one of their pitchers throw a complete game this season. After Sunday, they saw two more. Serino's eight innings were the maximum he could go since they came in a losing effort.

It was the first time the Minutemen had two pitchers toss back-to-back complete games since Mitchell Clegg and Serino teamed up from April 17-18 of last year against none other than Saint Joseph's.

Serino's 13 strikeouts on Saturday equaled the third time he's collected double-digit strikeouts in a game during his three years at UMass.

"He can be [a strikeout pitcher]," Stone said. "He's got real good stuff and when he's throwing hard and he has command of his breaking ball like he did, he's got a chance of striking a lot of people out."

After Gedman's nine-inning effort, his earned run average sits at a very respectable 3.80. His March 16 start against Oklahoma, when he threw the team's first complete game of the season, shows that he's capable of going deep into ballgames.

Stone's history of coaching reveals that he's not afraid of letting an effective starting pitcher go the distance.

"We don't have defined roles here like they do in the major leagues," Stone said. "The way I view it is if a [pitcher] is pitching well, not getting tired, and getting people out, I'm not going to go to the bullpen unless I feel that we have a better pitcher in the bullpen than we have on the mound at that point. That's why we let them go as long as they go. If they're getting people out, and we're in a position to win a ballgame, they're going to finish."

Bryan Leigh will attempt to do just that as he gets the challenging task of taking the ball in today's home game against Holy Cross. Stone knows not to expect a similar outing as the last two, but he's still optimistic for one.

"If we get performances like that from our starters, we're going to have a chance to win a lot of ballgames," Stone said.

"We would love to see him go out and give us a pitching performance like we had from Serino and Gedman. That would be great."

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

Maxwell Spahr/Collegian

Nick Serino and Mike Gedman pitched back-to-back complete games against the Hawks in a 1-0 loss and 8-1 victory. Despite having struggles this season, the UMass pitching staff has begun to pitch more effectively.

Rolling offense pacing UMass

SOFTBALL from page 8

UMass is hoping to have similar results against the Big Green, who is coming off a 13-game slide. Dartmouth's (1-15) only win came on March 6, when it defeated Western Carolina, 4-0.

Its latest defeat came against Boston University, who shut out the Big Green in the first game, but gave up three runs in the second part of the doubleheader.

Dartmouth is no stranger to the UMass Softball Complex.

The Big Green was also the first opponent at home for the Maroon and White on March 29, 2006. UMass shut out the Ivy League school twice while scoring 28 runs in the two-game series.

Although Dartmouth still had a losing record, it was in better shape than it is now. The Big Green were 7-10 going into Amherst and went 3-1 the previous weekend at a tournament in Florida.

The No. 24 Minutewomen will be Dartmouth's second ranked opponent of the year. Its first was against then-No. 18 Oklahoma State, who took a 4-2 decision at the South Florida tournament.

If the Big Green are going to have any luck at stopping UMass' offense, they will have to cool down senior Sarah Reeves, who had six hits in nine at-bats against GW. The first basemen tied a school record in Game 1 against the Colonials with five hits.

In Game 2, her only hit of the game in four at-bats was a grand slam in the fourth inning.

Even if Reeves doesn't have another record-breaking game, the Minutewomen are just as difficult to stop on offense as they are on the mound with four hitters currently above the .300 mark. Outfielder Carly Normandin, who didn't play the first seven games of the season, is leading the team with a .429 average.

Despite today's series being the first time UMass will play at home since the start of the season on Feb. 12, it shouldn't get used to its turf too much, as it will be on the road again until April 7 when it hosts Boston University.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Maxwell Spahr/Collegian

Senior Sarah Reeves had six hits in nine at-bats to propel the Minutewomen to a pair of wins against George Washington over the weekend. Reeves tied a school record in Game 1 against the Colonials with five hits and hit a grand slam in the fourth inning of Game 2.

Minutewomen capture second-place finish at Yankee Cup in adverse weather conditions

Dietz pleased with performance despite Rhode Island winning

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

Despite dangerous weather and tough competition, the Massachusetts rowing team was able to put up a strong second-place finish in the Yankee Cup in Rhode Island on Saturday.

The Minutewomen racked up four second-place finishes in the First Varsity Eight, Second Varsity Eight, Varsity Four, and Novice Eight events, collecting a total of 23 points for the day. They finished just short of rival Rhode Island, which won three out of the four events and collected 27 points to take the Yankee Cup for the second year in a row.

UMass coach Jim Dietz, however, could not be happier with the results.

"Overall, we performed very well on the day," Dietz said. "We saw very strong rowing, especially from the freshmen boat. I would have to say we left Rhode Island feeling pretty good."

Dietz further said that the strongest quality that he saw on the water was a "quintessential team dynamic" necessary for a crew to do well over the course of the season. Based on the skill level of each rower, Dietz expects the most work that will have to be done is merely shuffling the lineups to match strengths with sizes. He expects that the crew will reach their maximum effort in about three weeks.

Two of their four second-place finishes held only two seconds of difference between the first-place finishers. Of these two, the second-place finish against URI was determined by only 0.6 seconds.

When asked about the Rams' performance and whether or not they will be a big factor as the season progresses, Dietz was not too intimidated.

"They were going as fast as they're going to go all season," Dietz said. However, he still feels that they are a crew to be taken seriously.

A significant factor in Saturday's events was the weather. Huge levels of flooding kept the team out of the water for four days before the regatta impacted the rowing lanes during the races. The ominous skies and waters left many of the coaches wondering whether or not the Yankee Cup would even take place at all, but the weather did clear up enough for some races to take place. The Novice Four, Second Varsity Four and Quad races, however, all had to be scratched due to safety concerns.

Apart from the hazardous conditions that the recent bad weather brought, the cool temperature of the water and the crosswinds blowing opposite of the current had significantly impacted the performance of the boats. Overall, the races that on average take six and a half minutes in good weather, took as many as eight and nine minutes to complete.

Looking back on the weekend, the crew certainly sees more positives than negatives coming from the races. The Minutewomen proved themselves to be strong competitors and focused. If anything, this past weekend will give them extra motivation for their upcoming regatta in Worcester this weekend.

A smiling Dietz added "remember, URI beat us in the Yankee Cup last year, and look how that season turned out."

David Martin can be reached at dmmartin@student.umass.edu.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2010

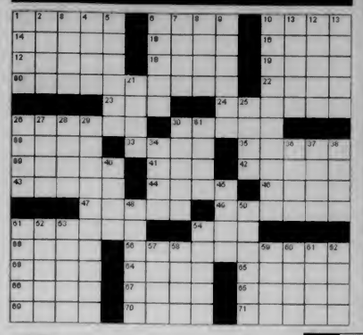
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:

Tuesday, March 30, at 6:00pm in Bartlett 302

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

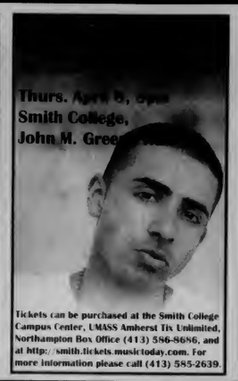


WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3, and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
Sugarloaf Estates Apartment Homes
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons
133 Belchertown Road Rt 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
FREE Heat, Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Select Units
On the Bus Route, Salt Water Swimming Pool, Fitness Center, Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

The Daily Collegian asks,
"Are you a
SPORTS FAN?"
THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!
Contact Jeff Larnard at
sports@dailycollegian.com

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
We like the things you whisper in our ear...



CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Detection device
6. Have fun
10. Satisfy
14. Previous
15. A tart fruit
16. Beasts of burden
17. Refined woman
18. Dwarf buffalo
19. Hard outer covering on fruit
20. Liberations
22. A measure amount of medication
23. A gesture of assent
24. Swarmed
26. Sentries
30. Elementary
32. Leaf of the talipot palm
33. Store
35. Thrall
39. Avoid
41. N N N N
42. Hardwood, carpeted or ____ floors
43. Indian antelope
44. Stink
46. An aromatic ointment
47. Smells
49. Close
51. Shiny
54. Marsh (archaic)
55. Vagabond
56. A builder of wooden boats
63. In a little while (archaic)
64. Vetch
65. Boredom
66. Require
67. Panache
68. A horse-drawn coach
69. Backside
70. Rip
71. Planted

DOWN
1. An inclined surface
2. At a distance
3. An extinct bird
4. A Semitic people
5. Incarcerate
6. Tartan
7. Linoleum (abbrev.)
8. An Egyptian deity
9. Leavening agents
10. Bagpipe
11. Maxim
12. Taut
13. Finished
21. Lobbed
25. Not the west
26. Leaves
27. Green seaweed
28. "Oh my!"
29. Weather balloon
30. They form a skeleton
31. A vaulted recess on a building
34. German for "Mister"
36. Winged
37. Action word
38. Current
40. Stops
45. Be aware of a fact
48. A manne mollusk
50. Exit
51. An African country
52. Recluse
53. Woodwind instruments
54. Expend
57. ____ and hearty
58. Modern day Persia
59. Within
60. Chew
61. Very large
62. Fastened

WANT TO WORK IN RADIO?
WMUA 91.1 FM is looking to hire specialty Department Directors in the following departments for the 2010-2011 academic year:
SPORTS | OUTREACH
NEWS | FUND DRIVE
SALES | TECH
PUBLICITY
For information and/or applications, stop by WMUA 105 campus center or visit wmua.org
Applications are due by April 17th

Tickets can be purchased at the Smith College Campus Center, UMASS Amherst Tix Unlimited, Northampton Box Office (413) 586-8686, and at http://smith.tickets.musictoday.com. For more information please call (413) 585-2639.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Great White Buffalo

						8	7
	5	7					2
	6	1	8
						2	8
	3		9			4
		6	1
					7
	1		2
		8	3	1		5	9

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Fun Fact:
Scientists destroy civilization every 65 million years

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Pictures for Sad Children by John Campbell picturesforsadchildren.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm in prison. But my heart and mind is free. Gangsta haters on the streets are doing more time than me. They need 30 police escorts with them every time they walk down the street."

Suge Knight

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Are you looking for a Job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is hiring for advertising production in 2010!
Contact Amanda Joinson at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Psh, you are so fine that you have GOT to be married to one of them crazy San Diego Padres, huh?

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Your favorite Power Ranger was Tommy, the green ranger. I just saved you two hours of argument and a beating.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
In the future you will be responsible for the theme of your child's school play. This is a reminder to vote for "Scarface."

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
The only place where time and space pauses is in the parking lot of a "Dave Matthews" concert.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Help out UMass catering by asking 10 random people how much cheese they like in their burrito.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
The answer to number five on the quiz rhymes with, "bow chicka wow wow."

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Someone is finally sorry for that tragic day. Yes, the writer for "Battlefield Earth" is indeed apologizing, still no refund.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Taking a load off does not mean that you relax. It implies warm blankets, ice cream and Bruce Willis action flicks.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Do you remember the first time you hit something? I bet you are getting cotton mouth just thinking about it.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Ketchup packets were made to explode in the middle of the dining commons with a Civil War re-enactment.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
If you ever feel the need to talk about existentialism in a world of vast technological values, call Keanu Reeves. He isn't busy.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
The world is sick of the same old Carmen San Diego game. How about where in the south L.A. is Tara Reid?

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, fi nished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413.549.1398 Student Rentals

HOUSES FOR RENT

4 Bedroom in Northampton $1350. No pets. June & September. Skibiski Realtors. 586-1827

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St, Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Have too much fun on spring break? Get Tested. Get birth control & EC. 27 Pray St, Amherst behind Bertucci's. Walk-ins welcome! Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

SUMMER SUBLET

46 Main St. Amherst Centerfine dining, bars, entertainment, shopping! Huge dining/living room, 2 large bedrooms (currently housing 4 people) $1765/month. email: hdanfort@student.umass.edu

FOUND

Watch engraved with Class of 2008. Congratulations Steven. Call 413-559-9215

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BY MAGGIE SULLIVAN

After sweeping George Washington in its doubleheader on Sunday, the Massachusetts softball team returns back home after spending the first six weeks of the season playing games on the road and neutral fields. The Minutewomen will face Dartmouth in an afternoon doubleheader today.

Minutewomen return home

Dartmouth travels to Amherst for afternoon doubleheader

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One of the disadvantages to playing in the Northeast is that the weather typically isn't too kind to softball until after spring break.

The Massachusetts softball team spent the first six weeks of the season playing games on the road and at neutral fields – all in places that aren't the Northeast. Today is a different story.

UMass (17-7, 2-0 Atlantic 10) will take a short break from its conference schedule and play its first game in Amherst against Dartmouth in a doubleheader after shutting down George Washington in both of its games on Sunday.

Pitcher Sara Plourde (1.16 earned run average), who is currently the NCAA leader in strikeouts with 244, finished with 15 strikeouts in nine innings while allowing one base runner in both games combined.

Following a slow offensive weekend at the San Diego Classic II where the Minutewomen scored 22 runs in six games, they bounced back with 28 runs in their doubleheader with the Colonials.

Last week, UMass coach Elaine Sortino put extra emphasis on the offense with extended batting practice after watching her team get shut out by Texas A&M and Long Beach State.

Hitting was the least of Sortino's worries after the Minutewomen finished with 28 hits throughout the day.

It was the first time they beat an opponent by more than 10 runs since their 14-3 opening win over Providence on Feb. 12.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

UM practices outside, finally

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It may be 24 games into the season, but the Massachusetts softball team still has work to do.

After holding George Washington to no hits in a doubleheader Sunday and scoring 28 total runs in the two games, UMass coach Elaine Sortino said there wasn't a part of the team's game they couldn't improve on prior to its doubleheader today.

Part of the reason why Sortino feels the Minutewomen (17-7, 2-0 Atlantic 10) have areas to improve on comes with the fact that not until recently has UMass been able to practice outdoors.

"We finally for the first time got to practice on the field on Thursday," Sortino said. "We finally got to do some base running and it showed up in our games [on Sunday]."

Despite playing games for nearly two months and practicing for even longer, UMass has spent the beginning of the season practicing indoors at Boyden Gym. While many drills can be performed indoors, there are still those that are either limited or cannot be done until a team is outdoors.

"We can run around the infield but you can't lead hits, you can't stretch a single into a double," Sortino said.

With the Minutewomen finally getting to practice those drills at the end of last week, Sortino noticed a difference in the team's play.

"You can't do that until you get out onto the field and it showed up very, very well in our game [on Sunday]."

With space being limited indoors, it has also limited the practice of the outfield as well as the base running. Players are not able to get the full feel of chasing down a ball hit to the gap or having to keep an eye on a hit ball while measuring up how far they are from the outfield fence.

"These are all the things that now we can get out there and do," Sortino said. "Our outfield has so much to do in terms of going back and playing balls to the gap and balls in between the infield."

A-10 DOMINANCE

While today's opponent Dartmouth is a non-conference foe, Sunday's wins over George Washington opened up UMass' conference schedule much the way the past few years have gone.

The Minutewomen have found little competition in most of the A-10 games the last couple of years, losing just 10 games in the conference since 2001. Prior to last season, where UMass lost twice in conference play, they had gone undefeated in the two previous years in the conference.

The success in the regular season has carried over as UMass has won 21 A-10 championships and 14 of the last 15.

The Minutewomen return to conference play after their doubleheader with Dartmouth, with doubleheaders against La Salle (April 1) and Fordham (April 3). The majority of UMass' remaining games are against conference opponents, but the Minutewomen do have games against other non-conference foes such as Boston College, Boston University, Connecticut and Quinnipiac.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Minutemen get back into conference play

BY STEVE LEVINE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team will get a break in its conference schedule today when it hosts Holy Cross at home on Earl Lorden Field.

After putting a frustrating 2-1 series loss against Saint Joseph's in the rearview mirror, UMass (2-11, 1-2 Atlantic 10) hopes to get another dominant performance from its pitching staff.

Getting the nod today will be senior Bryan Leigh, whose best performance came on March 17 against a strong Oklahoma team, when he pitched seven innings while giving up three runs and striking out nine. The two previous starters for the Minutemen were Nick Serino and Mike Gedman, who combined to give up one run in their complete game efforts. UMass would warmly welcome another performance like that from Leigh.

"He's pitched well for us this year [especially] against Oklahoma," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "He should be sharp and well rested. Hopefully he'll be able to do a good job for us."

Leigh and the rest of the team will have to deal with Holy Cross' (8-8) torrid offense, which has scored 49 runs in its last four games against the New Jersey Institute of Technology (NJIT), including its most recent game when it defeated the Highlanders 16-0.

"I can't worry about those kinds of things," Stone said. "I think we're a better team than New Jersey Tech. Brian is a solid Division 1 pitcher and if he goes out and establishes the strike zone and we swing the bat and play good defense behind him, then we'll have a better result than [NJIT] did."

The UMass pitching staff should be wary of Crusaders outfielder Nick Ciardiello, who was recently named Holy Cross' athlete of the week. From March 22 to 28, Ciardiello went 11-for-20 while registering six runs, four doubles, three home runs and 14 RBIs, leading the Crusaders to a 4-1 record over that span. Ciardiello leads the team with a .448 average, three home runs and 25 RBIs.

Even if the Minutemen can keep Holy Cross' offense at bay, they will still have to receive some support from their own offense. Aside from last Sunday, when UMass broke out for eight runs, it has been relatively light-hitting as of late, something the Minutemen can't afford to continue.

"I want everybody to come through with the bat," Stone said. "I'm confident in all the hitters we send to the plate. I think we're starting to swing well."

Two of the main contributors for UMass so far at the dish have been juniors Peter Copa and Matt Gedman, who have both started all 13 games for the Minutemen. Copa is hitting .275 on the season and currently leads the team with four home runs. Gedman is leading the team with a .392 batting average and 10 runs scored, while being tied with Copa for the team-lead in RBIs with nine.

UMass' approach will not change even though today is a non-conference game.

"We just want to win," Stone said. "We got off to a slow start record-wise. Every game is important. We're going to put out the lineup that I feel will give us the best chance to win."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

MAGGIE SULLIVAN

Coming off an 8-1 win against Saint Joseph's on Sunday, the Minutemen will host Holy Cross today looking to win their third game.

UMass continues success with victories against NJIT, Hofstra

BY KARA DEYERMENJIAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Coming off a solid win last Thursday against Presbyterian that halted a five-match losing streak, the Massachusetts tennis team was able to string together two more victories over the weekend against the New Jersey Institute of Technology (NJIT) and Hofstra.

"I really feel like we are back on track," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "We knew the middle of the season was going to be tough as we faced off against five nationally ranked teams, and unfortunately we were unable to knock any of them off. It felt great to start winning again and have our confidence restored. As far as the Atlantic 10 goes, it's wide open. The team feels like we have just as good of a shot as anyone."

UMass	6
NJIT	1
UMass	7
Hofstra	0

The Minutewomen wrapped up a six-match road trip with the match against NJIT, defeating the Highlanders 6-1.

UMass came out strong as senior captain Maude Lecluyse and junior Candynce Boney matched up with Nina Mayevska and Isha Toor for the first round of doubles, easily securing the 8-1 victory.

Jocelyn Providence and Kaitlyn Carpenter were set to take on third doubles, but it turned out they didn't even have to take the court for the Minutewomen to claim the point as the Highlanders lost by default for only having five players.

Freshman Julia Comas also had a notably strong performance, defeating Nina Mayevska in a close third-set tiebreak, 6-7, 6-2, 10-6.

Sunday's match against the Pride at home was the first time in over a month that UMass had played on the Mullins courts, as well as its first outdoor match of the season. The Minutewomen started off the outdoor season with a bang as they dominated the entire afternoon, not losing a single set in either singles or doubles play.

"Playing at home makes a huge difference," Dixon said. "We have a very strong fan base and playing at home definitely makes everyone feel more comfortable and confident."

Boney and Lecluyse set the tone early in the first doubles set, locking in an easy 8-0 win against Zoe Taylor and Malissa Gilanchi. The second doubles spot was a nail-biter, however, as Tamisha Hodgson and Comas barely defeated Sonia Tsay and Lauren Clifton, 8-7. Next up were Kaitlyn Carpenter and Jocelyn Providence who were also successful in their doubles competition, taking another one-sided 8-0 victory.

UMass swept all six singles matches and was able to continue a season-long tradition of unfaltering singles play. Comas, Boney, Lecluyse, Carpenter, and Providence were all undefeated this weekend with several straight-set victories. With the string of wins, Boney's record improves to 4-2 in singles play, including an impressive and hard-fought win Saturday against NJIT's Ana Lidon.

Newcomer Comas also continues to show promise with her second consecutive straight-set victory in first-singles matches as she managed to sneak by Taylor, 6-3, 6-2.

"Julia Comas recently stepped up from second singles to first singles, and it was a great feeling to see her deliver. She filled that role very well and had extremely positive results," Dixon said.

With the three-match winning streak under their belts, the Minutewomen improve their record to 10-6.

Next up, UMass goes back on the road as they travel to Sacred Heart on Thursday to take on the Pioneers at 3 p.m. Last Saturday, Sacred Heart ended a five-match losing streak with a 7-0 sweep of Hartford.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyerme@student.umass.edu.

AMANDA JOHNSON/COLLEGIAN

Senior Maude Lecluyse earned wins at doubles to help UMass earn two victories over the weekend.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 55 LOW: 40 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2010

Irish muralists take residence on campus

Artists Devenny and Ervine create mural for community

BY ANNA MEILER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Once enemies during the Irish War of Independence, artists Danny Devenny and Mark Ervine, sat together on March 30 in the Cape Code Lounge at the University of Massachusetts. In front of a crowded room, the two discussed how they began collaborating with mural painting and the peace process in Ireland about four years ago.

Despite the torrential rain, UMass graduate and undergraduate students, faculty, staff and the Amherst community members came to learn about Devenny, a former prisoner from the Irish Republican Army and Ervine, whose father was a Progressive Unionist Party leader and Ulster Volunteer Force member.

The artists talked about their pasts, dealing with the prolonged conflicts in Ireland. In a presentation titled, "Contested Geographies: Shared Future: Mural Making in Belfast, 1972-2010," part of the "Art of Conflict Transformation Event Series," the artists talked about growing up during the war and showed a slideshow of murals from the past 100 years, including many they have painted themselves.

Devenny has painted over 1,500 murals himself, as well as about 10 in collaboration with Ervine who has also been painting murals since he was a young boy. Though these artists grew up roughly 200 feet from each other, they were raised in opposing communities and therefore met just four years ago. Shortly after meeting, the two artists decided to work together painting murals.

There are about 2,000 murals in Northern Ireland, as they were used as a way to express peoples' beliefs and causes of conflict in the war, according to Leah Wing, professor of legal studies and one of the coordinators of the event. Large images painted on the sides of buildings and houses would depict soldiers in battle, exclaim war slogans and political phrases while also honoring those who had died.

"They were used to explain our cause, that's where the murals originated from," said Devenny in a thick Irish accent.

Devenny and Ervine, who both painted murals during the war, are now using their art to promote peace and healing in a country that has only recently come out of conflict. The Good Friday Agreement, creating an equal and democratic Ireland, was signed in 1998, and is just recently being implemented.

Devenny, a republican, and Ervine, a loyalist, hoped that by coming together to paint, they would show that other people from rival communities could also come together and create a peaceful future. Devenny and Ervine wanted to help the process of peace and resolution and some murals they have painted together portray this goal. A mural that they painted for the UMass Legal Studies department depicts Ireland's war conflict in blue, while the foreground of the picture shows Devenny's grandchildren and Ervine's children in vibrant colors, holding banners that promote moving ahead of the conflict and making peace with each other.

A small caption in the corner of the mural reads, "painting from the same palette," emphasizing their hope to "build a shared future of a shared community."

The artists said they were not hesitant about deciding to work together and that they have been thanked by both of their communities for their murals and their efforts to bring the communities together peaceably.

"If there was a risk, we were both willing to take it," said Ervine. "The message is far more important than the risk."

The government is currently spending money on removing murals from the war, such as ones that show hooded gunmen. Devenny and Ervine said they were not upset about the removal of the images, as it is a part of moving away from the violence.

"As a community moves forward the murals will depict different things," said Ervine.

Devenny and Ervine's trip to UMass took three years to plan and was rescheduled five different times between last March and now, according to Wing, who said she had met Devenny years ago when she was in Ireland and became inspired by the murals.

It took a year to get Devenny a Visa to visit America because he is considered a terrorist since he was once a member of the I.R.A. but with the help of Congressman Richard Neal, their long planned trip was finally feasible.

"Congressman Neal was instrumental in forward thinking and making it possible for us to learn about the peace process from these two gentlemen," said Wing.

Devenny and Ervine are now collaborating on another mural, which is taking place at UMass in the Campus Center Reading Room. The artists began painting on Saturday, March 27 and are hoping to be finished by Friday, April 2.

The mural was designed to reflect the ideas of UMass students who submitted their thoughts on a blog and through public Skype meetings with the artists over the course of the past year. The main theme of the mural, according to the artists, is to represent diversity and the students of UMass.

About 50 to 70 students and faculty have been stopping by to help paint each day since the artists began.

The mural will be unveiled by Congressman Neal on Monday, April 5 in the Campus Center Auditorium from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Anna Meiler can be reached ameiler@student.umass.edu.

CAITLIN CUNNINGHAM/COLLEGIAN

Devenny and Ervine will continue to work throughout the week on the mural located in the Reading Room of the Campus Center with the unveiling scheduled for April 5.

UM, Springfield pact schools students in green-job skills

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In collaboration with the University of Massachusetts green building program, some students of the Springfield's Putnam Vocational Technical High School have taken advantage of the opportunity to learn job skills for a more energy efficient economy.

According to Simi Hoque, assistant professor in the UMass green building program, the partnership affords the students of Springfield a learning experience geared towards improving their skills and future job prospects in energy and environmental conservation in western Massachusetts.

"The curriculum is designed to give young people the skills to be ready when the green job economy takes off," Hoque said.

Hoque is the co-founder of Floodspace, a research and design organization whose mission is to develop strategies for improving housing, infrastructure and livelihood in communities which are subject to climate change flooding.

Hoque's research focuses on the application and development of energy efficient buildings with specializations in energy modeling, resource efficiency and systems design to improve the way buildings use resources.

The UMass masters program in green building offers courses designed to educate students in energy conservation methods in residential design, LEED-certified building requirements, designing with sustainable building materials, green planning and development policies, as well as green initiatives on infrastructure, roads and bridges.

Hoque added that about 16 juniors from the Springfield high school are able to take part in an energy efficient class taught by graduate student Stephanie Berkland every Friday at Putnam.

While in the classroom the students will learn basic building energy management, as well as energy auditing and weatherization including the skills needed to know how to evaluate a building, test heating and cooling systems for efficient operation and fix air leaks which, Hoque said, can account for 30 percent of heat loss.

Also at Putnam students can participate in courses focused on basic construction types, carpentry and heating and cooling systems.

These courses will educate students on how to inspect such systems with equipment such as infrared cameras, air leak test equipment and combustion analyzers.

According to Hoque, the classes utilize mathematics and geometry problems related to practical ones from the field, such as analyzing leakage rates, building volume and heat loss percentages.

The training consists of four training modules, Hoque said, which will allow students to practice what they have learned in the classroom while also connecting to their local community.

"We want to address core issues facing low-income communities such as housing, employment, energy efficiency, environmental health and safety and education," Hoque said.

The first 20-hour module of four allows students the opportunity to practice setting up energy equipment at a model home inside the high school's sheet metal shop.

The second 40-hour module has the students applying the skills they have learned to real homes in the Springfield area.

Back in the classroom, the third module has the design and construction students working on computer-aided energy modeling. Finally, in the fourth module the students will be focusing on field training in weatherization.

The benefit of the UMass-Springfield partnership, Hoque said rests on her hope that the students will learn how to reduce energy use and pass this knowledge on to family and friends by the program's conclusion.

"With community liaisons in the Pioneer Valley, including Putnam Vocational Technical High School, the program will develop a certification and apprenticeship program for trainees to meet the growing demand for green construction professionals skilled in energy efficiency and weatherization," Hoque said.

According to Hoque, the graduate students of the UMass green building program also benefit through educating others.

"I firmly believe the best way to learn is to teach the material yourself," she added.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

CAITLIN CUNNINGHAM/COLLEGIAN

Simi Hoque is the co-founder of Floodspace, a research and design organization which seeks to make buildings more energy efficient.

SAMANTHA WEEKS/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor Robert Holub discussed the benefits of the partnership agreement, among which will be a greater access to higher education for low-income families.

Partnership grants 25 Chelsea students full college scholarships

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Resulting from a partnership agreement signed by the University of Massachusetts and Bunker Hill Community College last week, 25 seniors from Chelsea High School have received full yearly scholarships for pursuing higher education.

Through the partnership agreement, which is known as the Chelsea Compact, UMass will provide up to 20 full scholarships to students who have demonstrated the greatest commitment and potential for seeking a higher education.

Known as the Chelsea Chancellor's Award, these 20 scholarships will cover the costs of tuition, fees, room and board.

The yearly college scholarships will be granted to the students who have participated in the Families United in Educational Leadership (FUEL) College Savings Program, which aids low-income families with students in both middle and high schools.

Additionally, UMass will provide $13,000 a year to all students from the FUEL program upon their receiving an offer of admission from the University.

As part of the collaboration, Bunker Hill will provide the five remaining scholarships which were distributed to this year's graduating seniors. Scholarships granted by the Bunker Hill Community College will cover the cost of in-state tuition and fees for up to 12 credit hours each semester.

Known as the President's Chelsea Scholarship, the awards will also ensure faculty mentorship to students for duration of the scholarship award period.

According to UMass chancellor Robert C. Holub, the partnership will allow these students to attend the University despite their lack of finances and graduate with little or no debt.

"UMass Amherst, as the state's flagship public research university, has a deep commitment to providing educational opportunities to students throughout the Commonwealth," Holub said.

"This distinctive partnership leverages public and private dollars, paired with a family's commitment." Holub continued, "to prepare students for success in the twenty-first century workforce."

Bunker Hill will also be working with the UMass administration to highlight the financial transfer benefits for students who are interested in seeking a four-year degree following their graduation from Bunker Hill.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING

'Multiple Totalities' totally sweet

The exhibit at the Student Union Art Gallery features local art including a wall of haikus and animal heads. The exhibit will run until April 2.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass teams rained out

Tuesday's UMass softball doubleheader vs. Dartmouth and baseball game vs. Holy Cross were postponed due to rain.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Emily Jacobs criticizes the recent and very vocal attacks on congressmen from both members of Congress and the public alike.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localo.race.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 42

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ACCT. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elsie Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for 6.70
inch
On-Cam
Local Bu
Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

The DAILY COLLEGIAN
IS NOW HIRING
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER
looking fo student to manage
COLLEGIAN.COM nd our related web for the upcoming FALL 2010 semester (Java, PHP,
dailycollegian.com

Worried about the increasing cost of your education?

Join the fight for more state funding on Tues. April 6th
at the Boston State House.
• Free Transportation • Free Food • Excused Absence
Email april6lobbyday@gmail.com to reserve your seat today! Seats are limited!
Made Possible By:
Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life
SGA Student Government Association
Greeno Sub Shop

Living without phones, iPods?

BY JENNA ROSS
STAR TRIBUNE (MINNEAPOLIS)

MINNEAPOLIS — Heather LaMarre calls her students "the wired generation." The University of Minnesota professor sees that they don't listen to an iPod, talk on a cell phone or surf on a laptop – they do all three at once.

She reads articles about their numbness to technology and knows that if one e-mails her at 10:30 p.m. on a Saturday and she doesn't write back by 11:30 p.m., he'll freak out.
So she did something about it.

A recent class assignment: Five days without media or gadgets that didn't exist before 1984.

Sophomore Lucy Knopff lasted half an hour before she accidentally flicked on her iPod. "You don't even think about it," she moaned. "It's just a habit for me."

LaMarre didn't realize she's part of a trend: A growing group of instructors around the country are prescribing their highly wired students a kind of shock treatment. Go without media for 48 hours. Turn off your phone for a day. Block Facebook for a week.

"Honestly, most of my students are oblivious to the huge role mass communication and the Internet play in their lives," said Amy Kristin Sanders, a media law professor at Minnesota who has forced students into 24-hour media fasts.

"They really think about access to the Internet as one of life's necessities."

Students are finding the fasts anywhere from impossible to freeing – and sometimes, over time, both.

David Parry, a professor at the University of Texas at Dallas, is in his 30s and began teaching digital literacy less than a decade ago. But even he has seen a dramatic change.

"These 18-year-olds don't know a world without Google, YouTube or text messaging," he said. "I've found that my job is to make it unfamiliar to them."

This semester – to a chorus of gasps and groans – he assigned the students in his introduction to electronic and digital communications class to quit Facebook for a week.

Olivia Myles quickly found that to stay off Facebook, she'd have to abandon Twitter and LinkedIn as well. They were too intertwined. To stay in touch with her family and friends – most of whom live in California, where she's from – she couldn't poke them, post on their walls or comment on their photos.

She had to call them.

"Even though I talked to my cousin every day, I hadn't heard her voice forever," said the 26-year-old junior. "It was weird. We were like, 'We should do this more often.'"

Still, Myles signed onto Facebook when the assignment ended. "Who has time to call all these people?" she joked and, on her blog, confessed: "I miss being nosy."

A break from social networking sites can help people ask important questions about their purpose, said Sherry Turkle, director of the Initiative on Technology and Self at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "Do you see your friends more often? Do you have telephone calls where you really can reach better understandings of what the other person is thinking and feeling?

"Breaking the circuit, for me, is not about breaking an 'addiction,'" said Turkle, whose coming book, "Alone Together," looks at young people who voluntarily sign off Facebook and other sites. "We have to learn to live with these technologies. But a break can help us use technology to open a conversation."

The media fasts vary in how long, how serious and what's banned. Most require the undergrads to journal or blog along the way.

LaMarre's five-day assignment within the Universities public relations course allowed students to use computers for work and homework, while freshmen taking a fall course at Augsburg College in Minneapolis could not use a long list of electronic media – including cell phones, computers, televisions, video games and radio – for 12 hours.

"Make a plan for what you'll do INSTEAD of using media," the description of that assignment advised. "You could hang out with your friends at a coffee shop and just talk. ... You could play board games like chess or Scrabble."

A daylong or even weeklong fast isn't enough for John Kim, a new media professor at Macalester College in St. Paul, Minn. For a class he's planning, called "Immedia," he hopes to take students out of the city and off the grid for two weeks.

He expects that without cords and wireless, the students would realize just how much they rely on both and, upon returning, would experience "a kind of bewilderment," he said. "I imagine a lot of them have never done something like that, never gone on an extended hiking trip. It would be eye-opening."

Like other professors assigning media-abstention, Kim is no Luddite. He used to work for Internet start-ups as a programmer and designer. Sanders says her Blackberry "never leaves my side." Parry is known for his use of Twitter in the classroom.

But all believe that colleges and even high schools need to do a better job developing students' digital literacy. Students know how to use Facebook, but they don't think often enough about what using Facebook means.

By Day 5 of LaMarre's assignment, her University of Minnesota classroom was filled with evidence of failure. In the students' bags? Laptops. In their hands? iPhones. In their ears? Earbuds.

Of the 43 students in the public relations course, just a handful made it even three days without new technology. Those who didn't had their reasons:

"I had 225 missed e-mails," said Emma Casey, a public relations and Spanish major who lasted longer than many of her classmates. "It made me very, very anxious."

"I don't have very good self-control," a student admitted. Then, from the middle of the room: "My mother thought I died."

LaMarre, an assistant professor of strategic communication, pointed out that many of the people they hope to work for don't use technology as they do, and "it's not because we're not capable," she said.

"But the more and more we are linked in, the less and less freedom we have, in a way."

Several students, who seemed to have forgotten about the cell phones and laptops sitting beside them, nodded their heads at that one.

KISS A SENIOR Goodbye
Send your favorite graduating Senior a...
UMass Amherst Class of 2010 Coffee Mug
...full of Hershey Kisses® to celebrate graduation!
Only $5.00
Contact the SAA to order yours today!
UMassAlumni.com/students
800.456.UMASS
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION WHERE AMHERST
Sponsored by the Student Alumni Association and the Alumni Association

Study seeks cancer treatment

BY THE MINNESOTA DAILY
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

Three weeks after being diagnosed with Stage 2 breast cancer, 51-year-old Gail Hudson was given a treatment that caused her to break out in hives.

So doctors went out on a limb and gave her Abraxane, a drug that had only been used to treat more serious, Stage 4 patients.

"My cancer, as my doctor put it, melted away," Hudson, a Minneapolis resident, said.

A novel, collaborative study beginning at the University of Minnesota in a few months will further explore the method of tailoring drugs to specific patients. Called I-SPY 2, the study will take place at more than 20 locations around the United States and Canada, including Mayo Clinic.

Researchers will take note of patients' tumor characteristics and will look for biomarkers such as proteins or receptors, which can predict responses to certain treatments.

"We know that not all patients will respond to every single drug," said Douglas Yee, breast cancer specialist and director of the Masonic Cancer Center. "We want to give more targeted therapy. We want to treat the abnormalities that cause that particular type of cancer. That's the goal."

Rather than test one drug at a time, the five-year, $26 million study will include 12 experimental drugs, discarding those that are shown not to work early on and tailoring those that do to the subgroups in which they're most effective.

The format is expected to cut drug approval time – typically about 15 years – in half, Tufia Haddad, the study's lead investigator at the University, said, adding that she expects to know within a year whether a drug improves outcomes.

"Right now, the only way we can tell if a drug is going to work is just to give it to a woman," said Haddad, an assistant professor in the Medical School.

"Our goal is to get smarter in terms of selecting drugs that have the best chance of response for a woman's particular tumor."

If successful, the framework could be applied to research on other diseases, said Judy Boughey, the study's lead investigator at Mayo Clinic.

A total of 800 Stage 3 breast cancer patients will participate, and each will receive standard chemotherapy in addition to the experimental drugs.

Rather than testing a drug on thousands of patients, researchers expect to know whether a drug works after only 20 to 80 patients, thereby dramatically reducing the cost, impact and duration of such trials, Haddad said.

Patients will be randomly divided according to the drug they're given, with 20 percent receiving placebos.

Unlike in standard treatment, I-SPY 2 patients will receive chemotherapy and the experimental drugs for 12 weeks before they undergo surgery to remove their tumors, which will allow researchers to monitor the treatments' effects on the tumors using MRIs.

Hudson, who participated in the study's predecessor, I-SPY 1, said having multiple MRIs provided a feeling of comfort during her treatment.

"I felt like I was really being watched," she said. "I felt like we could see how I was responding to the drugs they were giving me."

The various trial locations will share their results through monthly Web conferences and a central database.

This trial is unique in that it doesn't give credit to a single researcher, Boughey said. It also gives institutions access to state-of-the-art drugs they wouldn't otherwise have.

"Women want the latest and the best drug rather than the one developed 10 to 15 years ago," she said.

Unlike most trials, which are sponsored by a single pharmaceutical company, funding for I-SPY 2 comes largely from the Foundation for the National Institutes of Health.

Various nonprofit organizations have also contributed, as well as the participating drug makers.

It was difficult to convince some companies to participate, as the study doesn't focus on a single drug, said Yee, chair of the drug selection committee.

"We're free to tell them things that they don't want to know," he said, "and not all companies have embraced that idea."

I-SPY 1 is the first phase of the ongoing series and has been carried out in a similar format. Its sites will close when I-SPY 2 sites open.

It currently costs between $700 million and $1 billion and takes nearly two decades to develop a cancer drug – a tragedy considering advances in the understanding of cancer biology. Anna Barker, deputy director of the National Cancer Institute, said at a press conference announcing the trial.

"We probably stand at a point where we can actually understand the underlying biology of these diseases," she said. "If we can figure out what these biomarkers are and integrate them, we can figure out which drugs work and which don't."

The I-SPY 2 trial represents a "paradigm shift" in developing personalized cancer treatments, Barker said.

Summer Online
Courses at UVM

Do you need to catch up or get ahead on courses this summer? Can't make it to Burlington? Take an online course through the University of Vermont. UVM Online offers tons of courses in math, science, environmental studies, business, literature, and the arts. With schedules to fit your summertime plans, you can take classes from the beach, the couch, or wherever you are this summer. Sessions start in May, June, July, and August.

Reasons for you to Think Summer U
- Online classes
- Four summer sessions
- Housing available
- Special interest programs
- Graduate on time
- Smaller class sizes
- UVM credits

Register today and take advantage of the 15% Summer '10 Tuition Savings at uvm.edu/summer/umass.

Catch up. Get ahead. Save 15%.
The UNIVERSITY of VERMONT SUMMER UNIVERSITY

BU SUMMER'10
Learn. Explore. Discover.
This summer, experience one of the world's top-ranked universities—in one of the nation's great college towns. Boston University Summer Term has 700 courses to choose from, in over 70 subjects. Study with award-winning faculty. Fulfill your academic goals. And fall in ♥ with Boston.
Learn more at bu.edu/summer.
Summer 1: May 18-June 25
Summer 2: June 28-August 6
Boston University Summer Term
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
An equal opportunity, affirmative action institution

There's always something new at ZANNA.
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
www.zanna.com find us on Facebook

AWARD WINNING CHEF-OWNER & AUTHOR CHAI SIRIYARN OF THE FAMED MARNEE RESTAURANT SAN FRANCISCO

PAD THAI DEMONSTRATION
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31 • 5 - 9 PM
WORCESTER DC, OAKROOM

Voted Best Thai Food 2007 & 2009
Audience Winner, Best of Citysearch

MENU:
Chicken Green Curry with Winter Melon
Pad Thai Noodles with Vegetables
Thai style BBQ Pork Spareribs · Panang Beef Curry
And much more!

RESTAURANTS ivy
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst umassdining.com
facebook facebook.com/umassdining

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2010

"What progress we are making. In the Middle Ages they would have burned me. Now they are content with burning my books." – Sigmund Freud, 1933

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Democracy functions with civilized talks

Emily Jacobs

It was the shout heard 'round the world.

Rep. Joe Wilson (R-S.C.) interrupted Pres. Obama during an address to a joint session of Congress in September, shouting, "You lie!"

Whether Obama was lying or not is a moot point. Interrupting a presidential address should not have been tolerated. The media jumped on this major faux pas, debating what punishment Wilson should receive, if any, and discussing the issue of respect.

At first, this seemed to be a one-off incident. Just one crazy senator who had had enough. Then Congress voted on the health care bill, and it happened again.

Rep. Bart Stupak (D-Mich.) first became a nationally known name in the fall, when he wrote an amendment to the health care bill restricting insurance agencies from funding abortions. After much cajoling from the Democratic Party, the bill reached the floor without Stupak's amendment but with Stupak's support. When Stupak cast his "Yea" vote, Rep. Randy Neugebauer (R-Texas) shouted "Baby killer!" Neugebauer has since claimed he was referring to the entire bill, but the timing of his outburst was surely not coincidental.

This is not a partisan issue. It is one that will affect all Americans if it is not dealt with soon. We cannot resort to violence and intimidation.

Neither of these actions received a real punishment for their actions. However, our government is dependent upon the ability to have civilized discussion. There must be consequences if congressmen cannot abide by the rules of decorum.

These instances, however, are almost inconsequential compared to what happened after the health care bill passed in the House. Ten Democrats have received death threats after voting for the bill. Let me say that again: 10 Democrats have had their own lives and the lives of their families threatened because of their votes.

Rep. Russ Carnahan (D-Mo.) had a coffin placed in front of his home. Rep. Louise Slaughter (D-N.Y.) first received a threat stating that snipers had been sent out to kill the children of those who voted for the bill and just this weekend had a brick thrown through the window of one of her district offices. And those are just two examples.

This behavior is completely unacceptable. This past week, the Democratic National Committee wrote a statement condemning these threats and "call[ing] on all Americans to respect differences of opinion, to refrain from inappropriate forms of intimidation, to reject violence and vandalism and to scale back rhetoric that might reasonably be misinterpreted by those prone to such behavior."

They intended to issue it as a joint statement with the Republican National Committee. The RNC refused, saying that they felt the Democrats were trying to trap them – if the Republicans would not issue a joint statement, they were bad guys; if they did issue the statement, the Democrats would try to hold it against them later.

Rep. Eric Cantor (R-Va.), the minority whip in the House, has spoken to the press several times in the past week, asserting that the Democrats are publicizing the threats for political gain and attempting to ratchet up sympathy. He has pointed out that Republicans receive threats, too. One recent example is Rep. Jean Schmidt (R-Ohio), who received a phone message in which the caller states that he wishes she had broken her back in her recent car accident.

This is not a partisan issue. It is one that will affect all Americans if it is not dealt with soon. We cannot resort to violence and intimidation. What separates America from much of the world is that, when we don't like the results of a vote, we still accept the outcome. We do not devolve into riot or stage a coup d'état. American democracy is based upon civilized discussion.

Politicians need to take some responsibility for this increase in threats and decline in civility. Wilson essentially received a slap on the wrist for his outburst, and Republicans argued that it wasn't worth the House's time to address it. Additionally, when Sarah Palin tweeted to followers "... Don't Retreat, Instead RELOAD," regarding the health care bill, she was fanning the flames.

As Rep. Steve Driehaus (D-Ohio) explains, "It doesn't really matter the way you meant it, nor the way I accept it. It's how the least sane person in my district accepts it." Politicians have great influence, which they must exercise with caution. Dangerous rhetoric has got to stop.

Now, this editorial is not to discount the value of protest. I heartily encourage you to take advantage of your First Amendment rights. However, there is a difference between protest and intimidation. By all means, gather your friends together and stand outside with signs. But if our lawmakers must fear for their lives every time they cast a vote, they cannot do their jobs effectively.

I also encourage you to call up your congressmen and -women. Write a letter. Organize a march.

Donate to your favorite politician's campaign or to a political action committee. But most importantly, you must register to vote. You must go to the polls on Nov. 2 and vote. 2010 is an election year in which 36 Senate seats and every seat in the House will be up for election.

We do not need to resort to threats to change the direction of the country. We already have great power as citizens. We have votes.

Emily Jacobs is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at eajacobs@student.umass.edu.

Environmental care should last year round

Chelsea Whitton

Slowly but surely my own consumption choices are contributing to climate change – and believe me, this revelation isn't far fetched. Yesterday, I threw away two coffee cups, a brown paper bag, endless paper towels from my bag which served me as tissues, a paper plate, and to top it off, I drank from two plastic water bottles. Oh yeah, and I ran the water in the sink while I brushed my teeth.

It doesn't seem like too much does it? Add in the following day's two coffee cups, a paper plate, a couple of water bottles and a self-admitting unnecessarily long shower and there it is – the lack of a 'green initiative' on a personal level and a formula for hypocrisy – which many people's daily decisions equate into.

And no – today didn't involve hugging a tree, in case you were wondering.

There are endless ways in which to consciously cut down consumption on the day–to–day.

This time in March we are in-between the passing of "World Water Day" on March 22 and upcoming Earth Day on April 22. The problem is that these awareness days are a fleeting remembrance of the importance of preserving the environment around us.

Listen, when 'environmentalists' flock together to pick up trash alongside roads for a couple hours on Earth Day this is an ideal, a prospective image for what things should be, but not what they are, the rest of the 364 days of the year.

Of course, after Earth Day, people go back to their gas-guzzlers, their energy absorbing homes and lifestyles, and forget their simple earth-chomping habits that could be changed. People consistently neglect to turn faucets off entirely, shut the lights off when they leave the room, to unplug unused appliances, to turn down heat, and people definitely forget to recycle.

Did you know your phone charger, if plugged into an outlet, still uses energy even if your phone isn't charging? Shutting your laptop off saves energy and money, and as a result it ends up saving the University's electric spending, which dictates how expensive UMass students' bills become each year.

Instead of waiting for the elevator to take you up to the third floor, take the stairs. Shut the water off when you brush your teeth and recycle papers and newspapers. In the dorms, take time to separate bottles, paper and actual trash. There are endless ways in which to consciously cut down consumption on the day-to-day. It merely takes a conscious effort.

What we do here at UMass, what we consume and throw away, doesn't just affect the air we breathe and the water we drink. Do you think the glaciers rapidly melting in South America are an effect of its continental border's environmental problems?

Know this, environmental degradation knows no border. Focusing on the problem in a hyper-local perspective is a preliminary step in tackling global environmental standards. We have a responsibility and can't just leave it up to high-emitting corporations and 'tough' legislation.

My most recent environmental woes began with a simple toss of a water-bottle into a shrub outside the studio arts building. This act of littering sparked a crazed idea that some way, somehow if people didn't throw their belongings out of vehicles or while walking, if students and faculty kept their actions and our campus classy, than UMass may able to act together with our own green initiative of personal responsibility. If more people in this community showed they cared by not trashing the campus, we could create a level of pressure to respect the surrounding environment that all community members would be more inclined to follow.

The person I witnessed throwing the water-bottle into the shrubbery wasn't a late-night tippler. Instead, it was one of UMass' very own UMPD officers patrolling the Sunderland (30) bus. Even on an authoritative level, there is thoughtlessness.

It wasn't so much the throwing of a water bottle into a plant that upset me, as it was the fact that the act of littering represents the kind of carelessness and a total lack of respect many people have for the environment. How much respect does each and every one of us have for not only this campus, but for the environment as a whole in between the days of environmental reminders? If people don't mind trashing a place where they work, attend classes and maybe even live at, what is to stop them from showing the same disregard for the entire world's land?

The New York Times in the March 22 article, "Hong Kong Issues Warning as Air Pollution Sets Record" said, "Air pollution in Hong Kong, one of the perpetual banes of living and working in this Asian financial hub, reached record levels on Monday and remained intense on Tuesday, setting off an official government warning to avoid outdoor activities and physical exertion." This is alarming – as it should be.

The lack of initiative to transform economic agendas and to take action has resulted in an ironic blend of toxic pollution – human beings aren't able to even take care of or withstand the environment they've created around them.

The 2008 World Wild Fund Living Planet Report says, "If we continue with business as usual, by the early 2030s we will need two planets to keep up with humanity's demand for goods and services."

I don't want environmental stewardship to become an elitist fad, a label or a brand. Just like bumper stickers protesting for the rain forest disappeared about 10 years ago.

Environmental concerns are often placed in large-scale frames and monumental political reforms on emissions and regulations, but if we learned to regulate our personal choices and decisions, maybe those in China and alike would not have to wear masks to walk in downtown cities and have the smog take place of clouds.

Chelsea Whitton is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu

Better alternatives to volunteering than 'alternative' spring break

Rachel Dougherty

The sun is shining, hookahs are blazing and half the campus is flooded, which means one thing: spring has come to the University of Massachusetts. With spring, the first thing on everyone's mind was spring break. While most students opt for a traditional spring break – a trip involving a bar, a beach and a bikini – a few take an 'alternative' route and use the time to volunteer on spring break trips from New Orleans to Haiti to the Dominican Republic.

Alternative spring break trips seem like the perfect solution for students looking to do something exciting and meaningful with their vacation. But are spring break volunteer trips really a better alternative? How much of an impact do alternative spring breaks have on the areas they're trying to help?

In my freshman year, I volunteered on an alternative spring break trip to New Orleans, La. New Orleans is probably the only city in the world where you can drink for a good cause.

Since Hurricane Katrina hit in 2005, Louisiana has become one of the most popular destinations for students on alternative spring break. We spent our days tearing down houses in the Ninth Ward and our nights taking advantage of the lax barroom security in New Orleans' French Quarter.

I returned to New Orleans the following summer as an intern for a nonprofit group called Operation Nehemiah. Operation Nehemiah is like a smaller version of Habitat for Humanity. Working as an intern, I saw a lot of things that challenged my assumptions about nonprofits and alternative spring breaks. While alternative spring break trips seem like an ideal solution for students looking to volunteer over spring break, the reality can be a little more complicated.

The way alternative spring break trips are structured is often inefficient at producing real change.

Senior UMass student Dan Hall volunteered in Houma, La. for Spring Break 2009. Hall says he decided to volunteer because "an overwhelming sense of duty."

"The volunteer experience was eye opening in many ways, not all of them positive," said Hall. "It felt good to help people, but the organization could have been run a lot better. I made a lot of great friends and did some good work, but I could certainly have done a lot more if the organization had been a bit different."

Organizations like Operation Nehemiah and Habitat for Humanity are run by volunteers and operate entirely on donations and grant money. They tend to be underfunded and understaffed, which often leads to problems with the organization and completion of volunteer projects.

Most of the people I worked with at Operation Nehemiah were Katrina victims themselves. Many of them were living in trailers waiting for insurance money to come through so they could rebuild their houses.

Lack of funding is just one of the problems facing nonprofits doing reconstruction work in this city. The way alternative spring break trips are structured is often inefficient at producing real change.

Part of the problem is that volunteers do not stay long enough to have a real impact. The average spring break volunteer spends two days traveling, one day sightseeing and only about three or four days working in the community. Students barely get to start a project before its time for them to leave.

Another problem is that even volunteers with the best intentions tend to be unskilled and inexperienced. New Orleans needs construction workers, plumbers, electricians – the average college student doesn't have a clue how to put up drywall or install sheetrock. How many of your classmates would you really trust to build your house?

Volunteers can also be unpredictable, which makes them a liability to the nonprofits they are working for. I remember one time our organization sent a group of volunteers out to tear the roof off a house in the Ninth Ward. The group got to the neighborhood ahead of the site supervisor and decided to start work on their own.

When the supervisor arrived on site, the group was happily tearing apart the roof – of the wrong house.

So are alternative spring breaks really a good option for students looking to volunteer? Like I said, it's complicated.

Alternative spring break trips are good because they give students an opportunity to see the poverty and devastation in areas like New Orleans firsthand.

They educate volunteers in the hopes that these students will go home and fundraise or raise awareness about the problems in New Orleans.

According to Hall, students looking to make more of an impact could try "direct donations and staying long enough to finish the job. That would help the communities a lot more than the current alternative spring break protocol."

Students could also consider volunteering locally instead. There are areas in Holyoke and Springfield that don't look very different from the ninth ward in New Orleans.

According to Hall, "there may be better ways, but to your typical college student alternative spring break is a great way to help out."

For students looking to help, volunteering over spring break is a great start. Go to New Orleans, tear down a house, drink a couple Hand Grenades – but remember that if you really want to make a difference, the work doesn't stop once spring break is over.

Rachel Dougherty is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Multiple Totalities' totally awesome

By Samantha Marsh
Collegian Staff

An exhibit at the Student Union Art Gallery brings together a variety of installation pieces, creating an unexpected cohesion of ideas and perception.

"Multiple Totalities", curated by Kerry O'Grady, is the work of nine artists from Mass. that were carefully chosen to participate in the exhibit. Artists from the Valley, the Five College area and all of the University of Massachusetts campuses were invited to apply. They were asked to submit photographs of their work along with a few paragraphs describing themselves and the meaning behind their installations. The application process was completely anonymous.

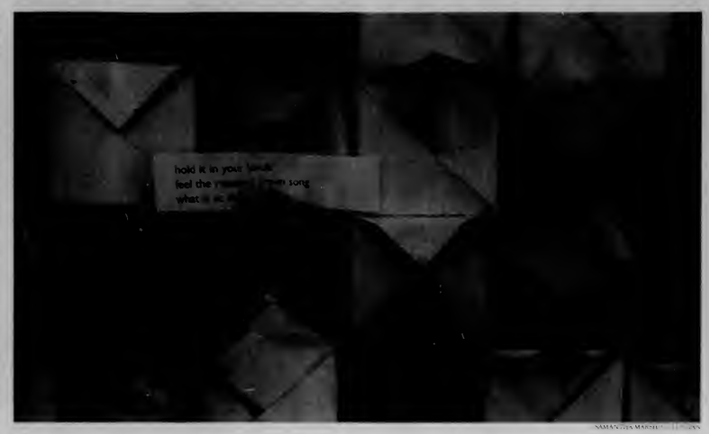
"We received more than double what we needed," said O'Grady in regards to the number of applicants.

The chosen installations were not only the best, but were also pieces that would work cohesively with each other. The artists installed their pieces on different days, but O'Grady envisioned what she wanted the exhibit to look like as a whole.

"Installation pieces have command of visual space, of oral space, of everything," said O'Grady. "[Multiple Totalities'] invites interaction between different artists' work."

Each installation can be looked at as a single work of art, but can be interpreted differently when put into the broader perspective of the entire exhibit. The goal is that the viewer will continue to experience one piece while looking at another, creating a connection between memories, the present and physical representation.

Each artist offers a unique contribution to the exhibit.



Denise and Tom Driscoll's "DNA Wall with Haiku" (2008) aims to replicate the billions of characters in one single strand of human DNA.

"[It] combines the physical/visual mediations of Denise Driscoll with the verbal mediations of Tom Driscoll, and offers a third meditative experience that may be entered by reading any of the hundreds of haiku," read the artist statement.

The full wall of thousands of tiny multi-colored envelopes immediately catches the eye when entering the gallery. Reach into any of the envelopes and read one of the hundred carefully written haiku. All types of human intricacies are represented through the different aspects of "DNA Wall with Haiku."

Virginia Fitzgerald's "Table of Content" (2007-Present) illustrates what goes on "beyond the dress form." Set on top of and in a basket below an old wooden table is a pink sponge-like material that represents the flesh beneath the skin. This piece follows her body of work called "The Dress Project", which represented several aspects and experiences in Virginia's life.

"In an ambiguous manner she has gone beneath the dress and under the skin, while leaving it open to interpretation," read Fitzgerald's statement.

"Multiple Totalities" is a local art exhibit featured at the Student Union Art Gallery until April 2. Denise and Tom Driscoll compiled a wall of envelopes that each hold a haiku about humanity called "DNA Wall with Haiku."

Charlotte Sullivan's "Unfinished" (2010), made from sharpened pencils and kite string, is a representation of anything that was never finished.

"Think of everything you wish you had been able to finish but couldn't: conversations, manuscripts, college applications, paintings, brussels sprouts, etc. This kind of tension has been created – and is being honored – in the space below each sharpened pencil and above the bare floor," wrote Sullivan.

Another featured work of art is Charlotte Sullivan's "Unfinished" assembled by sharpened pencils and kite string. The exhibit is open Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. – 5 p.m., Friday from 10 a.m. – 3 p.m. and on Thursday, April 1 until 9 p.m.

Situated in the center of the room, viewers look through the tense, hanging kite strings, at the other bodies of work.

Kim Carlino's "Marbles" (2009) is a collection of painted paper circles pinned to the white wall, creating an explosion of color in a small space.

"Raised away from the wall on pins, I give them back their dimensionality to create a surface that roams across the wall, falls from the ceiling or playfully engages within a new space," said Carlino.

Christopher Cole's work, "Untitled (Protection)," is built on personal memories that are represented in a way that viewers may experience them as well.

"My work draws from memory ... this piece explores longing and defensiveness in the context of my relationship with my mother," wrote Cole.

His work, constructed from wood, string and a potato offers much room for viewer interpretation.

Michael Childress, '09, created "Wall Drawing" (2010). His work was created by rubbing graphite on paper over a wall. Childress aims to acknowledge the reality of space, something that a photograph cannot do.

"A photograph is the result of a captured instant of light bouncing off a subject whereas the rubbing relies on a physical, tactile experience between the paper and the wall," said Childress.

Covering almost an entire wall, "Wall Drawing" works with the other bodies of art to create cohesion.

Hanging on the far side of the exhibit is Lea Chiara's "Three Spirits" (2009). Three highly detailed papier-mâché animal heads are hung from long strings, giving the illusion that they are floating in mid-air. Chiara's work was inspired from her recent trip to Mongolia, where she worked with a Buddhist Tsam mask maker.

"Upon my return, I created my own trio of spirits and set them to dance on strings," wrote Chiara.

"Three Spirits" was created using papier-mâché, canvas, feathers, acrylic paint and dry pigments.

Chris Millette's installation, "Untitled" is a series of wood sculptures hung on the walls. A Northampton resident, Millette devotes his time to creating artwork. His work is inspired by decomposition.

"I am amazed by the intricacy of decomposition. As objects/things/matter return to the earth they break apart in such beautiful ways," said Millette.

The wood sculptures provide a stark contrast to the white walls, allowing them to stand out as unique pieces of art.

"Multiple Totalities" is on display at the Student Union Art Gallery until April 2.

Samantha Marsh can be reached at smarsh@student.umass.edu.

Handler finds top of Best Sellers List with a 'Bang'

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Though many know comedienne Chelsea Handler for her late night hilarity on the Entertainment Network's "Chelsea Lately," she has found her niche in memoir writing. Her third book, "Chelsea Chelsea Bang Bang," hit the shelves March 9 and has received great praise.

The new book spent the week of March 21 on top of the New York Times Best Seller List as a "Hardcover Nonfiction." The following week it dropped to second, edged out by "The Big Short" by Michael Lewis, but still ahead of big name titles by Karl Rove, Mitt Romney and Mitch Albom.

Because of the popularity Handler's latest, her first two books, "My Horizontal Life" and "Are You There Vodka, It's me, Chelsea?" returned to the best-seller list as paperback nonfictions.

"Chelsea Chelsea Bang Bang" is a series of essays about various amusing moments in Handler's life with no apparent theme. The earliest story takes place when Handler was eight-years-old, while the most recent was mere months before the book was finished.

Handler's parents, who are not strangers to her writing, mean well, but are absentminded, unreliable and less responsible than a young Handler.

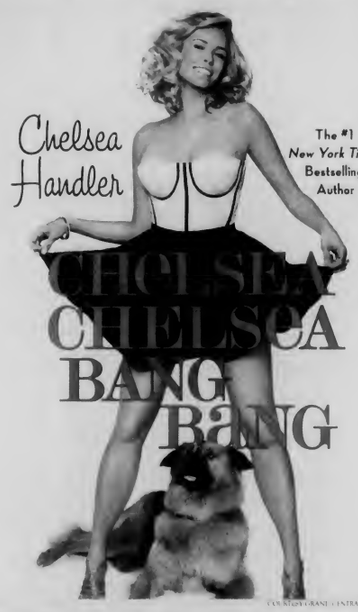
However, when Handler mentions her upbringing, it seems as though she exaggerates a bit, as her father put it to her brother Greg in "The Suspect," "Chelsea has a tendency to confuse the details." She was rude to her aloof parents, using language that would seem unacceptable to normal guardians.

This aspect doesn't matter to the book all that much. Sometimes it's just the possibility of the nine-year-old telling her father that having a Smurf doll is better than a live cat, because, "...what am I going to learn from a cat? How to take a dump in a box then walk back into a room like nothing happened?"

As funny as the interactions with her parents, friends and (now ex-) boyfriend Ted are, she hits her stride when talking about times spent with her siblings. From her annoying sister Sloane to her lackadaisical brother Ray, it seems that hilarity ensues with every meeting of the Handler's.

She goes on to tell the tale of rowing across a Martha's Vineyard bay (and subsequently capsizing) to find her brother, who was tripping on mushrooms. She then tries to convince her sister to buy a pony, her boyfriend to buy a dolphin and her friends that another friend, Paul, is actually a woman.

Though many parts of the book could be potentially taken the wrong way, Handler manages to write in a way that is not distasteful. She makes fun of herself much more so than her friends of varying creeds and ethnicities. For example, a stunning visual of Handler laying in a bed full of old food, face swollen from crying due to a weekend of Abigail Breslin movies and "Sex and the City" shows that she doesn't care too much what anyone thinks of her.



The main goal of the book is to simply be funny and entertaining. Thanks to many other anecdotes spanning her life, Handler goes above and beyond these objectives. Anyone looking for a laugh should definitely consider picking up Handler's latest book.

Though it can come off as scatterbrained at times and seems to hop around, "Chelsea Chelsea Bang Bang" is hilarious, immature at times and reflective.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

CORRECTION

The Collegian published a review of the Carrie Underwood concert at the Mullins Center this past Saturday night that said she was engaged to Mike Comrie. This is false as she is actually engaged to Mike Fisher.

Chelsea Handler uses humorous anecdotes to carry her readers from cover to cover in her latest book, "Chelsea Chelsea Bang Bang," already a New York Times Best Seller.

UMass outhit and outscored the Colonials 28-0 in its two wins over the weekend. Senior Carly Normandin went 5-for-7 in the doubleheader and scored three runs for the Minutewomen.

Pitching leading UM

SOFTBALL from page 8

has a .861 fielding percentage. She has three RBIs for the season along with a .182 batting average in her 33 at bats.

PERFECT AGAINST GWU

UMass pitchers Sara Plourde and Bailey Sanders combined to help the Minutewomen to their 11th career perfect game in Game 1, followed by a second no-hitter in Game 2. Two pitchers have not combined for a no-hitter since 2004, when Kelli Arnold and Barb LaFogg came together to shut out Central Connecticut.

Plourde has pitched strong all season with a record of 16-5 and leads the nation with 251 strikeouts. Plourde set up the Game 1 no-hitter against George Washington (4-17, 1-5 A-10) by striking out seven batters in the first four innings.

Sanders, who is 1-2 for the season with a 9.51 earned run average, stepped up for her team as she came in for relief in the fifth inning. Sanders struck out the Colonials' final three batters in the fifth inning to ensure the victory and no-hitter.

Plourde pitched consistently again in Game 2, striking out eight batters in five innings. She walked the first batter of the game but was helped out by Rogers who robbed George Washington of a line drive and threw out the walked batter.

Plourde improved her ERA to 1.12 and looks to continue her strong pitching in a double header against La Salle (7-9, 1-3 A-10) this Thursday. UMass will face offensive threats such as Angelina Bisbigha, who has hit three homeruns this season and has a .490 slugging percentage. Gina Massaro also leads the Explorers with 15 runs scored and a .341 batting average.

HITTING UMASS RECORDS

Dominating hitting was the theme of the sweep over George Washington, as the Minutewomen defeated the Colonials 17-0 in Game 1 and 11-0 in Game 2.

UMass outhit its opponents 28-0, led by numerous batters. Sarah Reeves went 5-for-5 with three RBIS in Game 1 to tie a school record that has lasted over 20 years. The record was set in 1982 and 1988 by Gina Mantino and Ilene Freeman, respectively. Reeves, with a team-leading slugging percentage of .577, added the Maroon and White's first grand slam of the season during Game 2.

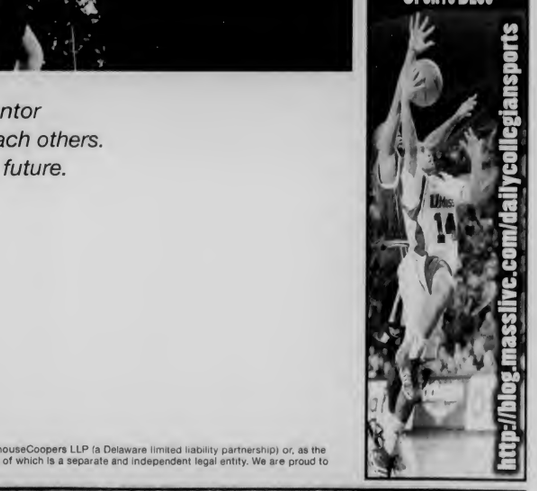
Bettencourt and Carta also hit home runs for UMass, going 3-for-5 and 4-for-6, respectively. The two combined for the day with 11 runs driven in and eight runs scored.

Co-captain Normandin also hit up to expectation, going 5-for-7 for the day and scoring three runs for the Minutewomen. The 2009 All-American leads her team with a .467 batting average and has 21 hits for the season.

The two freshmen, Rogers and Matthew, both had perfect days at the plate, going 4-for-4 and 2-for-2, respectively. They contributed six runs for UMass and five RBIs.

The Minutewomen look to continue their consistent hitting against La Salle on Thursday, where they will face the Explorers' leading pitchers Massaro and DJ Gunn. Massaro has a team-leading 1.42 ERA and is 3-2 for the season, while Gunn is also 3-2 with a 2.21 ERA. Massaro has also allowed a low 24 hits for the season and has not allowed a homerun, something UMass will look to change.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombardi@student.umass.edu.



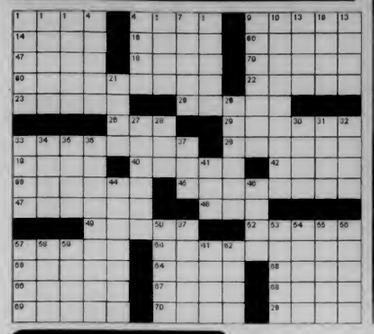
Stewart Cheatwood saw opportunity, found a mentor and changed his career. Now he finds time to coach others. Every day, he's feeding his life, his career and his future.

Feed your future at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2010 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG
http://blog.masslivg.com/dailycollegiansports



Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
MAGIC The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesday · 21 Russell St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley · 413-586-5451

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
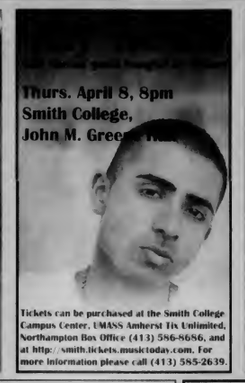
We like the things you whisper in our ear...



CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Cobras
5. Protuberance
9. Accumulate
14. Airhead
15. Largest continent
16. Pertaining to ships at sea
17. Wings
18. Female chickens
19. Munchkin
20. The male head of family
22. Not married
23. Tendency
24. US bird symbol
26. Be in debt
29. Pantry
33. Dreamer
38. American songbird
39. Mats of grass
40. Approaches
42. Resorts
43. Make less taut
45. Cellar
47. Shortfall weasel
48. Cheat
49. Play a guitar
52. Acclaim
57. Formerly, a writing tablet
60. Marinate
63. Heathen
64. Helen's city
65. Any minute
66. Happening
67. Otherwise
68. Disallow
69. Fritter away
70. Marsh plant
71. Biblical garden

DOWN
1. Customize
2. Derived from the sun
3. Dish
4. Back of the boat
5. Laugh
6. Utilizer
7. Chop finely
8. Ottoman title
9. Sharp-cornered
10. Foible
11. Acknowledge
12. Identical
13. Sleigh
21. Graven image
25. Lustrous
27. Victor
28. East southeast
30. Fool
31. Distinctive flair
32. Repose
33. Part of an archipelago
34. A swinging barrier to a room
35. Ancient Biblical kingdom
36. Helper
37. Bar bill
41. Tattered cloth
44. Accord
46. Sword
50. Speak
51. Blackbird
53. Desire
54. Delineated
55. An obsolete name for nitrogen
56. Part of a joint
57. Gush
58. Magma
59. Matures
61. It smells
62. Turned blue, maybe

WANT TO WORK IN RADIO?
WMUA 91.1 FM is looking to hire specialty Department Directors in the following departments for the 2010-2011 academic year:
SPORTS OUTREACH
NEWS FUND DRIVE
SALES TECH
PUBLICITY
For information and/or applications, stop by WMUA 105 campus center or visit wmua.org
Applications are due by April 17th

Tickets can be purchased at the Smith College Campus Center, UMASS Amherst Tix Unlimited, Northampton Box Office (413) 586-8686, and at http://smith.tickets.musictoday.com. For more information please call (413) 585-2639.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!
NEW! 3 Sessions:
• Session I: May 17 - June 7
• Session II: June 8 - July 13
• Session III: July 14 - August 17
Classes fill up quickly. REGISTER NOW
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Snooch to the Nooch

	8		6				9
3				5			4	8
			9	2				3
		3				5
		2						6
9					5
		8				9
	6			4				2
1	9						8

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS — How to Make a Captive Talk Without Resorting to Torture — by Scott MEYER

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You are not the only one who is having those salacious dreams about Craig Robinson.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Nirvana is reached when you meditate for days until you are in a galactic empire state of mind.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Your partner in crime has left you for a spin-off series about life in Nevada, pawning lost treasures of the past.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Fat kids get all of the love, how come all of us phat people have to wait our turn. We want some of that love fountain!

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Your mission, if you so choose to take it, will be to escort an elderly person to site B and wait to extract the apple sauce.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Those guitar strings need to be exchange... for some heart strings! Tug-tug!

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
You haven't cried that hard since you saw "Precious" and realized how Mo'nique is a child beating menace to society.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
This is the first and last time you will gaze upon a black cup cake wrapper.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Your day will be systematic, hydromatic, ultramatic... why it could be grease lighting!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Borrowers exist and they want the four dollars in change that you stole and gave to that hooker of a parking meter.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Remember to share your love with everyone close to you but make 7-up yours.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
A college atmosphere is prime for a zombie invasion. Minds are being molded all over the area. Sweet, delicious, yummy minds.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Bartenders needed for FT/PT positions. No experience required. Earn $20-$70 per hour. Call us at 617-849-8074

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 under graduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbndge St. 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, fi nished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413.549.1398 Student Rentals

HOUSES FOR RENT

4 Bedroom in Northampton $1350. No pets. June & September. Skibiski Realtors. 586-1827

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St. Amherst 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

SUMMER SUBLET

46 Main St. Amherst Centerfine dining, bars, entertainment, shopping! Huge dining/living room, 2 large bedrooms (currently housing 4 people) $1765/month. email: hdanfort@student.umass.edu

FOUND

Watch engraved with Class of 2008, Congratulations Steven. Call 413-559 9215

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rogers receives A-10 Rookie of the Week

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

After a strong 4-for-4 performance at the plate against George Washington, freshman Teea Rogers received the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award.

In Game 1, the third baseman for the Massachusetts softball team (17-7, 2-0 A-10) was 3-for-3, starting off with a single to right center to get on base in the second inning. Rogers stole her first base of the season to advance to second and scored her first run of the game from a Carly Normandin single to second base. Rogers scored a second run in the third inning after hitting a single to right field and advancing to third on a passed ball. Nonnandin drove in Rogers again off of a double to left center.

UMass Softball

Rogers hit her third single of the day towards the end of the third inning. She advanced to second on the throw and drove in Cyndil Matthew and Katie Bettencourt.

Game 2 against the Colonials gave way to an additional two runs scored by Rogers and her fourth hit of the day. After being issued a walk in the second inning, Rogers along with Matthew were driven in by a double from Meghan Carta. In the fourth inning, Rogers singled and was sent home when Bettencourt walked with bases loaded.

The freshman has started 16 games at third base and

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Courtesy UMass Media Relations

Freshman Teea Rogers was named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week for her efforts in UMass' two wins at George Washington over the weekend. Rogers was a perfect 4-for-4 at the plate and drove in three runs.

Jeff Bernstein / Collegian

The Minutemen have won their last seven games at home where they've hit .356 as a team and outscored opponents 92-46.

Minutemen thriving at home

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

When looking for examples of the reality of home-field advantage, point to the Massachusetts baseball team.

The Minutemen intend to surprise the Atlantic 10 conference again this year by picking up the bulk of their wins at Earl Lorden Field.

Last year, UMass went 14-6 at home, including 6-0 in its last six games, while hitting .356 as a team. UMass continued that streak one week ago when it defeated Hartford in its home opener, 14-6. In fact, the Minutemen have scored at least 10 runs in each of those seven games, outscoring their opponents, 92-46.

UMass Baseball

In the last game at home in 2009, Mike Donato, Peter Copa and Corey Volpicelli all knocked in four runs en route to a 20-6 UMass victory. All three players returned to the team this year and are again saluting Earl Lorden with their bats. Of the three, Donato shined brightest in their home opener this year by going 3-for-5 with a home run, two runs scored and four RBIs.

Gedman's leading UMass

Going into the season, it was no surprise UMass was going to rely heavily on brothers Mike Gedman and Matt Gedman to produce.

Although the season is still young, the Minutemen could not ask for much more from the duo, who are each leading their team at the plate and on the mound.

Matt Gedman, a junior shortstop, has started all 13 games this year and is leading the team in most offensive categories including: batting average (.392), runs (10), RBIs (tied with 9), slugging percentage (.608), on-base percentage (.436), and total bases (31). Matt Gedman also leads all starters with the fewest strikeouts, committing the crime just four times in 51 at bats.

Perhaps Matt's best performance this year came during the home opener, when he went 4-for-4 with a home run, four runs scored and five RBIs.

And then there's the older brother, senior Mike Gedman, starting pitcher for the Minutemen.

Like his brother, Mike is leading the Minutemen in most pitching categories including: ERA (3.80), opposing batting average (.258), innings pitched (23.2), and strikeouts (19).

Gedman is coming off his best performance of the season when he and the Minutemen avoided a three-game sweep at the hands of Saint Joseph's on Sunday. Gedman threw a complete game, giving up just five hits and one run while striking out a career-high 10 batters.

Fredette making impact

Junior second basemen Eric Fredette may be exceeding expectations already at the start of the season.

Fredette, who played his first two years of collegiate baseball at Vermont, is enjoying early success with the Minutemen and shows no signs of slowing down after beginning his UMass career with an eight-game hitting streak.

Fredette has started all 13 games for UMass, posting the team's second-best batting average at .360. He has also scored seven runs and has yet to commit an error at second base.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Drexel loses win streak

By Dan Giglotti
Collegian Staff

The Drexel men's lacrosse team experienced both anguish and jubilation in two games this week, losing a six-game win streak to previously unranked Villanova and beating Lafayette in the final minute.

The No. 11-ranked Dragons (7-2) went into last Wednesday's affair having not lost since opening day against then-No. 3 Virginia. After nearly a whole month of victories, the now No. 17-ranked Wildcats (5-3) thwarted Drexel for their second consecutive win against a top 10 opponent in as many tries.

The former Colonial Athletic Association rivals tangled in Pennsylvania where senior Paul Webber led Villanova with four goals en route to a 10-8 victory. The Wildcats enjoyed a 5-3 halftime lead and led 9-4 after three quarters before the Dragons would try to mount a comeback.

After four unanswered goals, however, the Drexel attack was halted by a Webber goal, sealing its second loss of the season.

CAA Notebook

Sunday's match proved to be a different story for the Dragons as they dealt No. 8 Lafayette its lone loss of the season on Adam Dennis's game-winning goal with 15 seconds to play in regulation. Along with two first quarter goals, Dennis recorded a hat trick, giving him 10 goals on the season.

As opposed to its previous game, Drexel's fourth quarter was its detriment, leading 11-7 after three periods and allowing the Leopards (6-1) to even the score with four unanswered goals. The Dragons have allowed more shots on goal and scores in the fourth quarter than collectively in any other.

Drexel performance was lax on the defensive end, giving up three more goals per contest this week than its season average (7.56). The 11 goals given up against Lafayette equals its most allowed this season, having allowed 11 in its first game against the Cavaliers. Drexel's loss against Villanova also marked one of only four times it allowed nine or more goals.

Nittany Lions rally

Fresh legs ran Penn State to its first win of the young season as Billy Gribbin netted three goals and added an assist in a 13-11 victory over St. John's on Saturday.

The Nittany Lions halted a six-game losing streak to begin the season, using a fourth quarter rally to erase a two-goal deficit and earn the win. Down 9-7, Penn State (1-6) outscored the Red Storm 6-2 in the final 15 minutes on the heels of Anthony Basciano's back-to-back to tie the game and take the deciding advantage with six minutes, 43 seconds left to play.

It was Gribbin's play that set the tone early for the Nittany Lions and kept the game close going into the fourth, as he scored Penn State's first two goals of the afternoon. After tying the score at one apiece with the help of a Kyle VanThof assist, Gribbin gave his team the edge by finding the net off of a Matthew Macknides feed. Gribbin later cut into a 9-6 St. John's (3-5) lead by scoring with 2:43 left to go in the third to keep the Nittany Lions at reach.

Courtesy Drexel Media Relations

No. 11 Drexel experienced ups and downs the past week, suffering a loss to Villanova to break its six-game winning streak and then defeating Lafayette in a last-minute victory.

Gribbin received CAA Rookie of the Week honors for his play. He has now tallied 15 goals on the season at a shot percentage of 40, both good for second on the team.

Penn State's 13 goals on Sunday were not an aberration as it averages 10 goals per game. However, its problem has been keeping the ball out of its own net, giving up 13.71 goals per game.

The Nittany Lions' schedule has not been an easy one having faced top 10 opponents such as No. 8 Duke (20-11 loss) and No. 3 Notre Dame (12-8 loss). With three out of six CAA opponents ranked in the top 15 and their in-conference schedule on deck, Penn State's competition does not seem to be getting any easier.

Penn State will play for its second win of the season on Saturday as it hosts No. 8 Massachusetts.

Dan Giglotti can be reached at dgiglott@student.umass.edu.

Charlotte sweeps Bonnies over weekend

Jeff Bernstein / Collegian Media Relations

The 49ers swept St. Bonaventure over the weekend with juniors Ryan Rivers and Kevin Gillespie combining for 11 RBIs.

By Scott Cournoyer
Collegian Correspondent

As spring attempts to wash away the cold of winter, the sights and sounds of America's pastime finally returned as the Atlantic 10 Conference began over the weekend, giving a peek at who could be the upper-tier squads throughout the season.

Juniors power Charlotte

With a deep core of seniors and juniors returning, Charlotte (15-5, 3-0 Atlantic 10) came out of the weekend untouched, sweeping the weekend series, 3-0, against St. Bonaventure.

Led by juniors Ryan Rivers and Kevin Gillespie, the 49ers hung on to win 11-10 in the extra-inning affair Friday. On Saturday, Charlotte flexed its offensive muscles in a double-header as Rivers collected over 5 RBIs during the series.

A-10 Notebook

As of Mach 29, Charlotte carries a seven-game winning streak, averaging just over 11 runs per game scored over that span.

GWU blasts Dukes

With a deep bench and eight returning seniors, George Washington (12-10, 3-0 A-10) opened up conference play with a spark after losing the previous two games against Georgetown and George Mason.

The Colonials racked up 29 runs offensively during the three-game series against Duquesne, including a complete game, one-run performance by junior Eric Cantrell who holds a .228 batting average against for the season.

George Washington has proven that it has the tools to compete with anyone in the conference at the plate, having four players who have compiled at least 20 RBIs on the season and seven who have 10 or more.

Lighting in a bottle

Of the teams to sweep the opening conference series, none was more surprising than La Salle (7-14, 3-0 A-10), which defeated Dayton.

The Explorers held the Flyers to just five runs as preseason favorite Dayton wasn't able to figure out La Salle's pitching staff. Sophomore Erie Van Wyk cruised over seven and two-thirds innings, striking out five in a win on Friday. The victory was Wyk's first as a collegiate player in his first collegiate game.

A-10 Pitcher of the Week

With his dominant performances against Maryland Eastern Shore and Dayton over his last two starts, La Salle sophomore Kevin Christy earned the Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week award.

Christy, who helped the Explorers in their weekend sweep, compiled a 0.75 earned run average and struck out 10 over 12 innings. Christy showed tremendous stamina Saturday, throwing 136 pitches coming off only a couple days of rest.

Scott Cournoyer can be reached at scournoy@student.umass.edu

Rain, rain go away

Matthew Harris / Collegian

Tuesday's UMass softball doubleheader vs. Dartmouth and baseball game vs. Holy Cross were postponed due to rain.

With rain forecast for Tuesday, the Massachusetts softball and baseball teams postponed their respective contests set to take place on the University of Massachusetts campus yesterday.

Softball had a doubleheader scheduled against Dartmouth on Tuesday that was set to start at 2 p.m. at the UMass Softball Complex. The teams have yet to announce a make-up date for the contests.

Baseball was set to play in-state rival Holy Cross at 3 p.m. at the Earl Lorden Field but the two teams will instead meet on May 4 at 3 p.m. in Amherst.

Softball is next in action at La Salle on Thursday for a double-header and the baseball team travels to Charlotte on Friday for a three-game set this weekend.

-Collegian Sports Staff

APRIL

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 71 LOW: 43 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

Does the census represent students?

COURTESY CENSUS.GOV

The U.S. Census Bureau is adjusting how it conducts the Census, with a simpler form and a pervasive advertising campaign aimed at boosting participation.

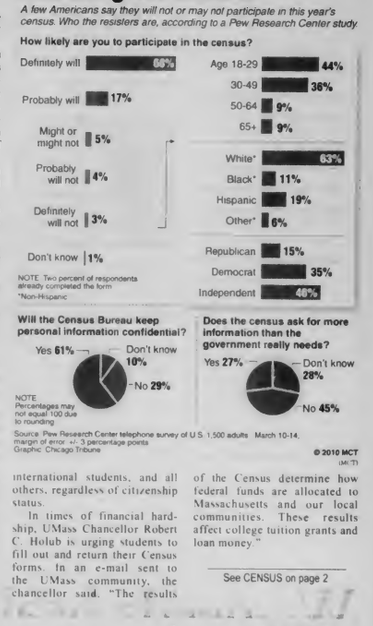
Mass. Congressional House seat may depend on student count

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

At the start of 2010, the U.S. Census Bureau began a four-month campaign to inform the public about the Census, which starts April 1, yet still citizens remain confused, especially students.

University of Massachusetts students wonder whether to declare themselves in Amherst or back home, why the government is asking questions about their households, and whether to even fill out the form.

As written in the United States Constitution, it is required that every resident in the country be counted every 10 years. According to the United States Census 2010 Web site, "The 2010 Census will help communities receive more than $400 billion in federal funds each year," for services including hospitals, schools, public works, and emergency services. The data will also help determine the number of seats each state receives in the House of Representatives.



Dr. Douglas L. Anderton, an associate dean at UMass and an expert in population studies, said it benefits citizens to fill out the Census in order to receive federal funding.

"The Census is important for the rational allocation of program funding across geographic areas by the federal government," Anderton said. "For example, if you want to project school enrollments for your town in the near future to plan for a building, or the number of seniors who are disabled and require special services in a small town, the Census is a primary resource."

People living in the United States are required to fill out the Census based on where they are living as of April 1. Regardless of country citizenship, or hometown residency, the U.S Census Bureau asks all to fill out and return the form based on where they live and sleep for majority of the year. For students, the U.S Census Bureau asks that they declare their main residence as their on or off-campus home. This includes students who are citizens of the U.S., international students, and all others, regardless of citizenship status.

In times of financial hardship, UMass Chancellor Robert C. Holub is urging students to fill out and return their Census forms. In an e-mail sent to the UMass community, the chancellor said, "The results of the Census determine how federal funds are allocated to Massachusetts and our local communities. These results affect college tuition grants and loan money."

See CENSUS on page 2

Students should show care in career search

COURTESY CENTER FOR AMERICAN PROGRESS

Louis Soares, of the Center for American Progress, suggests that students could benefit from personalized career navigation tools.

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

The federal government may need to have a more hands-on role in helping people in their search for jobs, according to a March 11 policy paper by scholars from the Center for American Progress and Center for Law and Social Policy.

The paper, titled "A New National Approach to Career Navigation for Working Learners" outlined measures for updating and coordinating the multiple resources available for career development at community colleges, four-year institutions, local centers and industries.

A major component of the paper is the implementation of a web-based career navigation tool. The authors hope the tool will be a lifelong source of training and information for job hunters in the United States.

"The labor market is becoming more complex," said Louis H. Soares, director of postsecondary education at CAP. "We want to create both policy solutions and web-based to tools aggregate different information resources."

According to Soares, the web-based tool would aggregate career information and personalize it for the individual job hunter.

Vickie Choitz, co-author of the paper, said that individuals should be able to plug in career relevant information.

The web-based service would employ methods used by sites such as Facebook and E-harmony to match job hunters with employers. However, some may be concerned over the privacy and safety such a service would provide if done on the web.

Jeff Silver, director of Career Services at the University of Massachusetts, described the online method as "less than desirable."

"My concern would be the privacy of the users," said Silver, "Maybe I'm just being paranoid, but you never know who could be viewing these profiles," continued Silver.

He cautioned against potential bad eggs that could use this information to hunt down their next victim.

Silver admitted that he has had students who found jobs using websites such as craigslist.com.

"People should employ any resource available to them to them to find a job," said Silver, but he advised job hunters to be wary of the dangers.

Silver detailed an online tool students can already access. Career Services, along with Isenberg, use an e-recruiting tool which allows students to search for jobs, internships and co-ops.

According to Silver, students have "full control" over who receives the information. The tool allows employers to post jobs for interested students.

Soares acknowledged the potential risk of hacking and use of the information by those wishing to do malfeasance, but qualified that the issue of internet security is not exclusive to this program.

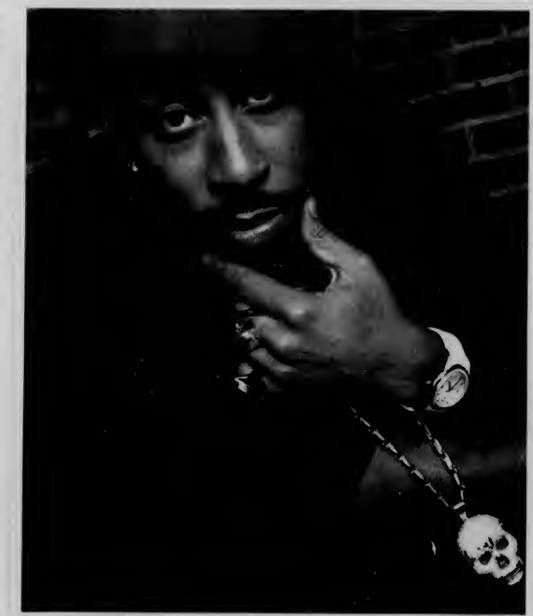
Soares also explained that users would have control over their own security, similar to the way Facebook users have control over the security settings of their profile.

The paper suggested that current policy be updated to create standards for the professionals providing career advice.

"We say we do career counseling, but we have no way to set standards," said Soares describing the current career counseling services available.

According to Soares, the aim of the paper isn't to create a new service, but to invest in those already in place.

"We are not looking to create a new bureaucracy, but create new standards to make career counseling and coaching already available more professional, cost effective, and professional," continued Soares.



Currently, the Center for American Progress is in discussion with the Department of Education and other government departments coordinating how the ideas proposed by the paper could be implemented.

Soares envisions new investment in the Department of Labor's one-stop career service center for training staff in useful methods for career counseling and coaching.

Soares also foresees investments in demonstration projects of the web-based service at community colleges and other centers for career counseling and navigation services in the coming years.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

Ludacris to introduce ATL to UM at Spring Concert

COURTESY LUDACRIS.NET

University Programming Council announced yesterday that rap artist Ludacris will be headlining the UMass Spring Concert this year, along with New Found Glory, LMFAO, Electrolight2 and C-Banga.

ARTS & LIVING

Willie Nile thrills the Iron Horse

Willie Nile plays like a sophisticated Bob Dylan, blending blues and folk styles with the energy one might expect from a punk artist.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen hunt Owls

The Minutewomen hope to move to 3-0 in Atlantic 10 play when they take on Temple Saturday in Philadelphia.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Shane Nickerson battles the War on Drugs, calling it an attack on Americans' personal freedom.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localocracy.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 43

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kareem Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COPY EDITOR Andrew Witt
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamillo
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Minn. state senate approves bill to ban hallucinogen salvia

MINNESOTA DAILY
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

Minnesota may be poised to join the ranks of 17 other states that have passed legislation prohibiting the sale and possession of the hallucinogenic drug salvia.

The Minnesota Senate approved a bill Monday that would impose penalties on distributors and users in possession of the psychoactive substance. The House bill is awaiting approval.

The drug has gained notoriety for its controversial side effects and availability. Salvia is available for sale at head shops across the state and is known to trigger intense hallucinations where users enter a "dreamlike" state that can last for up to 15 minutes.

State experts and law enforcement officials testified at a recent House Public Safety Policy and Oversight Committee meeting about the proposed legislation.

Rep. Morrie Lanning, R-Moorhead, the chief author of the House bill, told the committee that the issue was first brought to his attention by Moorhead police Chief David Ebinger.

"I think it provides a gateway to using other illicit substances to kids who find it through school," Ebinger said.

Seventeen states have outlawed the drug, and 10 are considering a ban, Lanning said.

Salvia is not currently regulated in any way on the federal level — something Carol Falkowski, director of the alcohol and drug abuse division at the Minnesota Department of Human Services, attributed to a lack of evidence of its risks.

"They don't have a preponderance of evidence about the negative consequences," she said, supporting the bill.

However, students, scientists and head shop employees stand divided on the issue.

"It's fairly harmless," said Gregorio Cervantes, a board member for the University of Minnesota's Students for Sensible Drug Policy. "Compared to other hallucinogenic drugs, it's very short term."

But Wally Sakallah, owner of Hideaway, a head shop in Dinkytown, said that after seeing some of the affects first-hand, he would support a ban on the product.

Sakallah was one of the first vendors to introduce salvia in the state of Minnesota earlier in the decade.

"We used to let people try it in the store when we first got it. One guy tried to [crawl] underneath my cooler," Sakallah said.

Steve Johnson, an employee at Uptown's Peacemakers, said he thinks the risks of salvia are largely exaggerated.

Johnson, who has used salvia, said he considers the drug to be "self-regulating."

"Most people who do it don't end up ever doing it again," Johnson said.

A 2006 University of Florida study surveyed thousands of undergraduate students on their knowledge of salvia. While the study didn't note the number of users, it found only 22 percent of students had heard of salvia.

Among the students who reported they had used the drug, more than half said they wouldn't use it again.

Some researchers and scientists around the country have discovered medical benefits in salvia's primary ingredient, Salvinorin A, that could lead to treatment of Alzheimer's disease and schizophrenia.

Cervantes stressed concerns he had about the implications of criminalizing the drug, warning that the illegality could appeal to more users and ultimately lead to increased demand.

Cervantes also said punishing those who use it could result in more taxes.

"It's going to be a loss to taxpayers, because we're going to be paying for the incarceration of people getting arrested for this," he said.

(MCT)

Minnesota may be poised to join 17 other state legislatures which have banned the hallucinogenic drug salvia divinorum.

Stop the madness!
Find out how...
Meetings- Tuesdays,
7pm
Student Union
Room 423B
OBAMACARE

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 3RD FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

Now Open Saturdays, 8 a.m. - 12 noon

WHEN THE DOG BITES.
WHEN THE BEE STINGS.
WHEN YOU'RE FEELING BAD.
SIMPLY REMEMBER WE TAKE CARE OF THESE THINGS.

Baystate Medical Practices
RAPID CARE

There's no need to wait in the emergency room.
We offer fast, convenient, walk-in care for children and adults, in Belchertown.

No appointment is necessary. We treat coughs and colds, sore throats, ear aches, flu symptoms, allergic reactions, infections, minor cuts and abrasions, and minor injuries like bumps, strains and sprains. (And then you won't feel so bad.)

Open Monday - Thursday, 7:30 a.m. – 7 p.m. Friday 7:30 a.m. – 5 p.m. Saturday, 8 a.m. – 12 noon.
95 Sargent Street, Route 9 • Belchertown, MA • 413-323-5016 • baystatehealth.org/bmp

We accept most major insurance plans.

Students could sway census

CENSUS from page 1

Director of news and media relations Ed Blaguszewski also stressed the need for students to fill out the Census.

"So much of the University funding is really tied to the census. If we maximize the amount we receive, we can only benefit."

Blaguszewski added that filling out the Census would benefit students financially, as well.

"The amount of money received in part determines the amount the University can spend on loans, and the funds used towards student and faculty research," said Blaguszewski.

The Census will also note population growths, and distribute more funds to growing communities. According to a UMass analysis of updated census numbers, Hampshire County was the eighth-fastest growing county in the state.

Based on the results of the Census, legislators will draw a new map for 200 House and Senate seats. For Massachusetts to keep its 10 U.S House seats, it needs to count 70,000 to 90,000 people more than the last estimate, taken July 1, 2009, according to a Boston Globe interview with Kimball Brace of Election Data Services, a political consulting firm in Washington. Massachusetts has around 330,000 college students, which could help the state keep all of its 10 congressional seats.

For nearly four months, the Census Bureau has been running a national advertising campaign through radio, television, billboards and the Internet.

Starting off with an advertisement during the Golden Globe Awards, the $133 million campaign sponsored advertisements during Super Bowl XLIV, the 2010 Winter Olympics, as well as posters in UMass' own W.E.B. Du Bois Library.

Ads were produced in over 28 languages and, according to the Census' website, "the 2010 Census advertising campaign will reach the average person 42 times, with messages around the importance of participating in the Census."

Hoping to increase groups which have a history of not participating, more than half of the advertising was geared towards reaching minority and ethnic audiences.

Despite spending record amounts on advertising, Census Bureau Director Robert M. Groves said this would save the government money. In a press release, Groves said, "For each percentage point increase in the national mail-back response rate, the Census Bureau saves taxpayers about $80 to $90 million in costs associated with having to send Census takers to non-responding households for in-person interviews."

In spite of high spending on advertisements, freshman English major Nicole Martori said she had never heard of the Census.

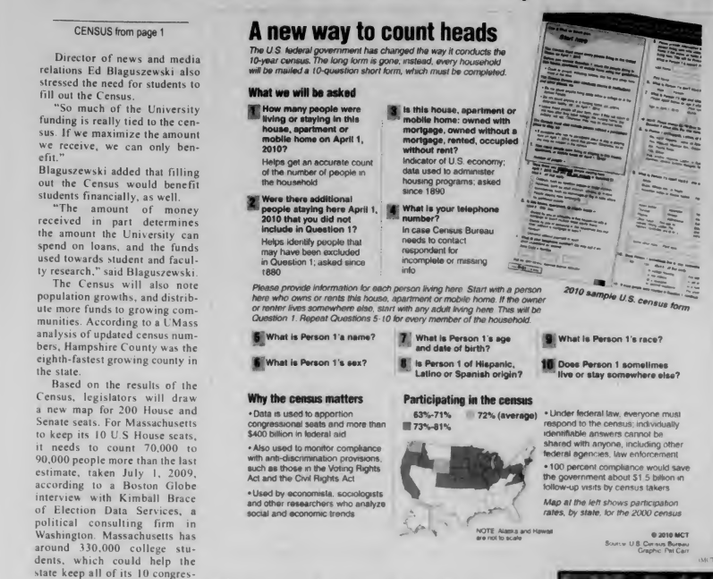
An out-of-state student from Arizona, Martori said, "No, I don't plan on filing out the Census because I have not received or heard anything about it. I believe my parents have declared me as still a resident of Arizona."

Hoping to increase participation, the Census is short, consisting of ten questions. The questions ask how many people live in the residence, how to contact the residents, what type of home the residence is, and demographics, including, age, sex, and race.

The decision to keep the census short is a part of the "Take 10" program, created by the Bureau to increase response rates, publicizing that the census would take less than 10 minutes to fill out.

This effort is appreciated by international student Hermann Kam Jun Wei. A citizen of Singapore, Wei had never heard of a country counting residents before, but said he doesn't mind.

"I don't have much qualms about filling it out, if it doesn't take too long and if it doesn't ask questions that I'm uncomfortable in answering."



For international and domestic students who have questions about the Census, student to student resources are welcoming questions.

With booths set up in the Campus Center, the Lincoln Apartments, North Village and the Integrated Science Library, students offer resource guides in 15 languages including Chinese and Korean.

Winnie Shaway Lin, a first-year graduate student was stationed in the Campus Center Tuesday afternoon to offer advice to students.

Lin, a bilingual student, said she was happy to help other students with the Census. If she is unable to help, Lin said "If I am not familiar with the language a student needs, I can refer them to another student or online resource."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

(MCT)

April 7 Graduate Info Session
WPI
Join us at our next Graduate Studies information session on Wednesday, April 7, 6 p.m.

At the WPI Campus Center
100 Institute Rd • Worcester, MA
• Chemical Engineering
• Civil & Environmental Engineering
• Computer Science
• Electrical & Computer Engineering
• Fire Protection Engineering
• Management
• Manufacturing Engineering
• Materials Process Engineering
• Materials Science & Engineering
• Mathematical Sciences
• Mechanical Engineering
• Physics
• Robotics
• Social Science & Policy Studies

At the WPI Life Sciences & Bioengineering Center
60 Prescott St • Worcester, MA
• Biology & Biotechnology
• Biomedical Engineering
• Chemistry & Biochemistry

Register NOW to attend!
www.grad.wpi.edu
508-831-5301
grad@wpi.edu

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

The Bryant University Graduate School of Business prepares students for success in their chosen professions. As a graduate, you will join an impressive alumni community that includes industry leaders across the country and around the world.

THE BRYANT MBA ONE-YEAR PROGRAM
Full-time, day program for all majors
• No professional experience necessary
• Distinguish yourself in a competitive job market
• Gain hands-on experience with the Business Practicum

THE BRYANT MBA TWO-YEAR PROGRAM
Part-time, evening program for professionals from any field
• Develop high-level business skills for long-term career success
• Enter and progress through the program with a supportive team
• Build your network while enhancing your resume

THE BRYANT MASTER OF PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANCY (MPAc)
Full-time, day program for accounting majors
• Meets the 150 hour requirement for CPA licensure
• Complete in Summer/Fall, Summer/Summer, Fall/Spring, or Spring/Summer
• More than 40 top global, national and regional accounting firms recruit at Bryant

THE BRYANT MASTER OF SCIENCE IN TAXATION (MST)
Part-time, evening program for tax professionals
• Build an expertise in all areas of taxation
• Network with tax executives and industry professionals
• Flexible scheduling options

LEARN MORE ABOUT WHAT BRYANT UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL HAS TO OFFER www.bryant.edu/gradschool • 401-232-6230

Bryant UNIVERSITY
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
1150 Douglas Pike
Smithfield, Rhode Island
AACSB ACCREDITED

New hours.
Same great care.
Confidential and Affordable

At our 10 western Mass health service sites we provide:
• Birth control
• Pregnancy Testing
• Emergency Contraception
• HIV Counseling & Testing
• STD Testing & Treatment
• Breast & GYN Exams
• Gardasil HPV Vaccine

Call today for an appointment!
Walk ins welcome!
27 Pray Street
Amherst (413) 548-9992
Tuesday 11:00-6:00
Thursday 8:30-2:30
Saturday 10:00-2:00
also located at 16 Center Street
Northampton (413) 586-2539
open Monday-Friday
Serving Hampshire County for 37 years!
All services provided on a sliding fee scale, based on your income. Most insurances accepted.
TAPESTRYhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

America's war on personal freedom

Shane Nickerson

Driving home from the gym I saw a man, presumably a student by his age, who appeared to have drugs in his vehicle. The man, in handcuffs, stood on the side of the road looking rather distraught as the officer talked to him with a stern look upon his face. All this was a short glimpse, yet to him will surely result in an addition to his criminal record.

So I write this article, not justifying selling or using drugs, but to point out that the war on drugs is possibly the most corrupt, disgusting, authoritarian movement present in the nation. I know now that my article will gain support from the Cannabis Reform Coalition, however many are probably still concerned over what the legalization of other substances would imply.

To answer that question, it would imply less of our tax dollars to keep the teenager who sold marijuana to his high school friends in jail.

The abolition of the war on drugs should be supported by all citizens who have any sense of individual freedom.

It would mean that I can keep more of my paycheck instead of it going to lock up a woman who tried to purchase cocaine to feed her addiction.

While the characters who are affected by this government scheme vary, it all results in the same notion; our jails are overcrowded and we are paying for it.

So while it may often seem a liberal view to lower or abolish a penalty on drugs, it is economically very conservative. Just how economically conservative would it be to legalize drugs? According to a recent study, we would save about $37 billion per year as a matter of fact. The abolition of the war on drugs should be supported by all citizens who have any sense of individual freedom.

There are not, however, only implications of economic fault or individual freedom: this "war on drugs" has been detrimental to racial equality. Drug use has been tied to those who are below the poverty line, and since Caucasians only make up approximately eight percent of Americans in poverty, we are imprisoning larger numbers of minorities than ever before in our nation's history. This is leading to record numbers of prisoners, increased generational poverty, and worst of all, it is propagating racial stereotypes in our culture.

One may find it curious that the war on drugs was not started for the safety of the people. In fact, marijuana was first prohibited by law for two reasons. In the 1930s ignorant Southwestern states concluded that "All Mexicans are crazy and this stuff (marijuana) is what makes them crazy." The second reason was that marijuana was what they called a gateway drug, which has since been debunked. As for opiates, sources claim that Chinese men were using opiates to seduce white women in the late 19th century, so that stuff had to be outlawed quickly.

Yet I will grant the opposing side this argument; let us assume marijuana leads to further drug abuse. Who does the government think it is to lock us up for what we decide to put in our body?

It is a disgraceful abuse of power. Should it not also be noted that alcohol is far more dangerous than most legal prescription or recreational drugs on the market?

In fact, alcohol is the only drug proven to bring about aggressive behaviors without a pre-existing psychosis. Yet it is one of the most profitable commodities for college students, so let's stock those shelves, gentlemen.

I don't want anyone to think that I advocate drug use and abuse. I am what most would consider straight-edge, or someone who uses no recreational drugs, aside from my light social use of alcohol.

Yet it doesn't take someone who abuses drugs to see through the corruption of the "war on drugs." The fact is, it is not a war on drugs, but a war against citizens. What is even more pathetic is that this war has not succeeded in its proclaimed main function: to eliminate drug use. In fact, national drug use is up among many substances, such as marijuana and cocaine. What we do see, however, is a decrease in violent crimes across the nation. Perhaps before we decide that recreational drug users are a hazard to others around them, we should look more closely at these kinds of statistics.

If you are very against drugs, let that be a wise choice for yourself; for it is also that any drug, prescription or recreational, is in some fashion altering the chemical functions of the body. However, do not take it upon yourself to say that a government therefore has the right to imprison those in poverty, those with an addiction problem, or even those who just made wrong decisions in life.

Let it be our own moral standards that dictate what we do with our bodies, as well as the subsequent consequences.

Shane Nickerson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at snickers@student.umass.edu.

Educational inspiration

Mike Fox

This past Tuesday, one of the most famous high school teachers passed away due to cancer. Jaime Escalante, whose story many are aware of due to Edward James Olmos' Oscar nominated portrayal of him in the 1988 film, "Stand and Deliver," was celebrated for his commitment as a math teacher to inner city Los Angeles youth.

His efforts started when he arrived in the 1970s at Garfield High School, an underperforming and predominately Hispanic neighborhood located in East Los Angeles. The school was performing so poorly that it was in danger of losing its accreditation. The common philosophy surrounding the issue aimed at gearing curriculums towards lower skill sets in math, but Escalante refused. He struggled with the school's administration to institute an Advanced Placement curriculum.

In the 70s, Advanced Placement curriculums weren't as common – even in suburban school systems – as today's program, which seemingly has them ingrained in basic curriculums. He was able to preach the importance of Advanced Placement tests to his students by noting that many high paying jobs have a mathematic focus. A former computer engineer himself, Escalante had an intimate knowledge of the burgeoning fields of the time.

Escalante's power to provoke thought rested in his relentless optimism. He refused to let a lack of resources determine the range of a student's progress.

Over the course of the next twenty years, he continued teaching his advanced math classes, believing that each student had just as much potential as the next. He believed the only limit to students' capabilities was how hard they were willing to work and how much they wanted the grade. Their only limit was their desire – or in Spanish, "ganas."

Progressively, the results improved. Eventually, they improved so much there was suspicion of cheating in 1982, when 18 students passed their tests under similar and peculiar circumstances. After most of the students retook the exam, Escalante was absolved. His strengths were not limited to his ability to motivate students, but also could be found in his belief that teachers should truly care about the wellbeing of their students.

Touching on his belief in students and how they were the source of his ability to inspire them, he told National Public Radio in an interview, "You have to love the subject you teach and you have to love the kids and make them see that they have a chance, opportunity in this country to become whatever they want to."

In 1988, he received a series of accolades, including the aforementioned biopic, a written biography and the reception of the Presidential Medal for Excellence in Education from President Ronald Reagan.

By the end of his career at Garfield High, his advanced math program had ballooned to several hundred members.

Towards the end of his life, he suffered financial difficulties due to expensive cancer treatments. He received financial support from his score of past pupils, many of whom are now working in engineering-related fields.

Escalante's career and life exhibit the highest ideals of education. It lifted people out of dangerous neighborhoods by exposing them to their own abilities. His inspirational tactics were free, and the quality of his educational pursuits was not determined by expense, but by compassion.

Escalante's power to provoke thought rested in his relentless optimism. He refused to let a lack of resources determine the range of a student's progress. Most of all, he didn't judge students because of where they were from. He saw his students as having the same abilities as anyone.

Not all public school systems are as fortunate to be blessed with a figure such as Escalante. However, all public education institutions have the ability to deliver people the same elevating gift Escalante did. That gift is accessible education – the education needed to advance through society with skills determined by commitment, as well as the moral lesson that each individual has potential to succeed.

In present economic times, the quality of public education is endangered. Either governmental priorities are being shifted or resources are being lost to a seemingly unprecedented scale of graft. In higher education specifically, prices keep rising while discernible improvements in quality aren't always visible.

Education is becoming politicized, marginalized and sometimes simply forgotten. Our state has a rich history of education that reaches far beyond the prestigious institutions which dominate the rankings.

In the mid 1800s, Horace Mann, a state level bureaucrat, became aware of the elevating impact of education on society. Not just on individuals, but on the overall raising of quality of life and societal success. His studies led to the formation of "normal schools," the precursors to our current system of organized public education.

These "normal schools" fought religious or private domination in basic and higher education under the pretense that this style of education elevates the lives of students and the composition of communities.

Our state and nation would do well not to forget the examples of Escalante and teachings of Mann. America should realize education is the key for both self and societal betterment. After all, as School House Rock once said, "Knowledge is Power!"

Mike Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

JOINED AT THE HIP

Casinos in Massachusetts are no safe bet

Nick Milano

Here we go again.

When Deval Patrick was elected in 2006, he was carried into office by a grassroots campaign – a political tactic similar to the one President Obama constructed in 2008. It was about hope. His campaign slogan, "Together We Can," rings awfully close to Obama's "Yes We Can" counterpart.

Ignoring the fact that most politicians are some of this country's most seasoned liars, many Massachusetts residents bought into Patrick's pitch – and why wouldn't they? Patrick seemed like the smartest candidate. His "outsider" status seemed to enable him to approach the state's problems from a different point of view. On the campaign trail in 2006, he acted out his farce remarkably well.

As governor, his terrible decision to bring casinos into Massachusetts was both wrong for the state and an escape on the easy way out. It is not the kind of plan that should be coming from a transparent, popular and supposedly "outsider" politician.

This is relevant today because Robert DeLeo, Speaker of the Massachusetts House, is currently unveiling his own plan to expand gambling in the state. The Boston Globe reported Tuesday that DeLeo's scheme is expected to contain plans for two casinos to be licensed, as well as granting racetracks the ability to to have slot machines. This is so important and disappointing because the last time Patrick brought legislation to the State House concerning casino gambling, it was shot down by the former House Speaker, Salvatore DiMasi. This time, the Speaker is proposing the legislation with the backing of the governor – providing Patrick with a good (and unfortunate) recipe for success.

To understand the role the Speaker plays in Massachusetts politics, just examine the incredible influence DiMasi had over shaping last decade's political accomplishments. He was a crucial player in the creation of the Massachusetts health care reform legislation that has been highly successful in ensuring that nearly every Massachusetts resident has health insurance, and he did so years before the White House took it up.

DiMasi joined forces with Patrick to block a referendum on gay marriage from going to the voters, therefore ensuring that Massachusetts would remain strong in protecting its residents' civil liberties. Then, he abandoned Patrick and convinced his fellow legislators in the House to defeat Patrick's casino legislation.

Clearly, it is a big deal that Speaker DeLeo is the one who will be initiating legislation to bring gambling to Massachusetts. If DeLeo has any of the power DiMasi had when he swung the House to kill Patrick's plan, then casinos will surely be coming to Massachusetts in the very near future.

Casinos should not be brought to Massachusetts because they are not a true source of economic growth.

DeLeo's proposal inclusion concerning slot machines is a little more unlikely because both Senate President, Therese Murray, and Governor Patrick oppose them, according to the Boston Globe. DeLeo's strong support for slot machines is not hard to rationalize, considering two of the four racetracks left in Massachusetts are located in his district.

DeLeo, Patrick and Lieutenant Governor Tim Murray's support for casinos seems more disappointing – particularly Patrick's very open support for them. Casinos should not be brought to Massachusetts because they are not a true source of economic growth.

They may be a source of economic activity, but once they reach a plateau, there is no where else for them to go. Patrick's original plan for three casinos and no slot machines at racetracks are estimated, according to the Boston Globe, to bring in 20,000 jobs and $2 billion dollars in economic activity. In an economic recession, that is almost too good to be true.

However, the lives destroyed by compulsive gambling and the type of jobs being created could be saved. Blackjack dealers, cocktail waitresses, hotel workers and janitors are the very type of service sector jobs that the American – and now Massachusetts' – economy have become too reliant upon.

Why must the politicians in this state want it to become a place where people come to spend their disposable income – not a place where real, livable income is earned? The film industry tax break has been dramatically successful in bringing jobs to Massachusetts. Why spend the time and political capital pursuing other such endeavors.

Make Massachusetts the green jobs state. Continue making Massachusetts the biotechnology state – the one true Deval Patrick success. Make Massachusetts a technology center of the East. Don't let companies like Curt Schilling's 38 Studios – which he hopes to expand to 500 (surely high educated) workers – abandon Massachusetts because taxes are too stiff.

Governor Patrick won his election because he seemed different. His plan to expand gambling to the point where Massachusetts' economy relies upon it is as equally frightening as it is disappointing.

Without his strong support, Speaker DeLeo would probably not be offering his own casino legislation today. There is nothing wrong with wanting to bring huge numbers of jobs to the state, but should we not expect more for this great state?

Governor Patrick, Senate President Murray and House Speaker DeLeo are choosing the easy way out. They believe expanding gambling establishments to create jobs will be a politically viable proposition. It is one way to ensure their reelection. It is not surprising, then, that casinos and slot machines are merely a half-measure. It is not a growth industry.

Call your legislator. Call the governor. Then, tell them that after four years of college, dealing Texas Hold 'Em is not quite what you had in mind.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ludacris to headline Spring Concert 2010

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

The rumors are confirmed and it's no April Fool's joke: Ludacris will be headlining the Spring Concert 2010 hosted by the University Programming Council. Those who weren't able to dish out the money to see Jay-Z will now have an opportunity to see one of the most successful rap artists of our generation right here at the Mullins Center April 25.

Ludacris

As much of the campus has been talking about for quite some time now, the Grammy Award winning rapper will be the main act at this year's big show. Before he comes to our very own arena, Luda will be making stops along the West Coast in San Jose, Calif., Sacremento, Calif., Tacoma, Wash., and Vancouver, BC. In a recent concert in Philadelphia, he played most of his hits, including "Stand Up," "Move Bitch," and "What's Your Fantasy," as well as his latest hit "How Low," according to Setlist.fm. His latest album "Battle of the Sexes," released March 9, topped the Billboard Top 200 in its first week and is currently third, behind Lady Antebellum's "Need You Now" and Marvin Sapp's "Here I Am."

New Found Glory

After becoming obsolete for what seemed like decades, the emo rockers will bring their Not Without a Fight and Self Titled Anniversary Tour to Amherst alongside Luda. New Found Glory, known mainly for their hits "All Downhill From Here" and "Catalyst," released their latest album, "Not Without a Fight," March 10. While their music is not nearly as popular as it used to be, guitarist Chad Gilbert has been in the news for his open relationship with Hayley Williams from Paramore – last year's main rock act for the Spring Concert.

LMFAO and the Electrolightz

Electronic rockers LMFAO and Electrolightz will be the opening acts for the concert. The duo LMFAO has been rather popular of late for their hit song "Shots," in which they collaborated with rapper Lil' Jon. Electrolightz have been touring alongside the pair of late and will bring a similar style of music to the inevitably lively crowd.

Battle winner – C-Banga

Arena funk rapper C-Banga won the 2010 Battle of the Bands and the opening slot at the Spring Concert. Backed by Malado, the band who were also a part of last year's champions, C-Banga impressed the crowd and judges with their danceable jams and some 80s inspired synthesized beats. Skasome Society had a strong showing, but were edged out by the rap group. After they were announced as the victor, C-Banga said, "Thank you so much, UMass, Luda here we come!"

Tickets go on sale at 10 a.m. today, April 1 at the Mullins Center Box Office. UMass students must provide a valid UMass ID to receive their free ticket. The concert is $15 for Five College students and $35 for the general public. The show is April 25 at the Mullins Center. Doors open at 5 p.m.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jgagnon@dailycollegian.com

SAMANTHA WITMER/ COLLEGIAN

C-Banga won the University Programming Council's Battle of the Bands last night and as a result will be the opening act for this year's Spring Concert. The event is free to UMass students with a valid student ID, and tickets go on sale today the Mullins Center Box Office at 10 a.m.

Nile plays with the grace and force of "A Thousand Guitars"

By Dave Coffey
Collegian Correspondent

Willie Nile is many a thing. He is a rock n' roll troubadour. He is Bob Dylan, graduated from stage presence charm school taught by headmasters Jagger and Daltry. He is three chords and the truth. He is the static energy of folk rock songwriting turned bottled lightning by the dynamic of punk rock energy. The sum of all these properties and more, it is no surprise that Nile ignited the Iron Horse music hall on a brisk Saturday evening in downtown Northampton.

As usual, Nile was warmly welcomed with an eager, jam-packed crowd awaiting his very presence at the intimate Noho music club. Nile may not be a worldwide music superstar or a platinum-selling recording artist, but when he plays, anyone in the room would tell you he is the only voice in the entire world.

This past Saturday night was no exception.

Nile did not disappoint. A man who seems almost too energetic for the lines of wisdom on his face, Nile never fails to put on a magnificent live show. His borderline reckless antics, which included dancing on tabletops while playing guitar and playing the piano with his feet, would not only make some of his folk and bluegrass heroes wince, but also never ceased to amaze the already enamored crowd.

But there is a musical method to his charismatic madness. Nile's playful and even wacky onstage behavior is perfectly juxtaposed against his thirty years of gritty, hard-hitting songwriting. Nile's songs pull no punches and mince no words. This isn't "Strawberry Fields Forever," this is "Helter Skelter." Nile's music is uncomplicated in the best way possible, both stylistically and lyrically. He has a message and a melody, and he lays it out for everyone to hear.

Nile's songwriting ranges from reflections on the ideals and pitfalls of music, money and fame to working-class love songs that express a vulnerable yet frank sense of longing and healed wounds of the heart. Some songs, such as the rousing yet dirge-like "Old Men Sleeping on the Bowery," are haunting, swaying numbers that build to foot-stomping, teeth-gnashing climaxes. Others, such as "That's Enough" are more cheerful, almost playful ditties that dance through the ears and minds of listeners for days to come.

Despite their distinct moods and subjects, however, every song Nile plays shares a raw sense of reality and honesty, whether it's pretty or not. Nile's undeniable conviction partially stems from the constant conversation he engages the crowd with in between songs, attempting as best he can to put into words the meanings and inspirations for the songs for which he bares his very soul on stage.

As he takes a seat behind the piano, he briefly introduces, "They'll Build a Statue of You," a relaxed honky-tonk style piano tune which is jaunty in character but reflective in lyrical context. The song itself muses on the implications of living life in the name of immortality through fame. While banging away at the jangly piano intro, Nile rhetorically asks the audience in his humorous yet existential fashion, "Do I want a big statue of myself with a bunch of pigeon sh*t all over it?"

Nile's raw yet intense sound is derived from his relatively sparse but infinitely capable accompaniment. Frankie Lee (Nile's longtime friend and songwriting partner) and Ray Mason (who also opened the show for Nile) comprise a rockabilly-meets-blues-rock rhythm section on three-piece drum kit and electric bass guitar, respectively. On lead electric guitar, Peter Hoffman played with classic rock virtuosity, adding color and texture to every song with tasteful lead lines and licks and stellar, standing-ovation solos. While Nile was busy cutting a rug on the tables in the front row, Hoffman blazed through a terrifically Keith Richards-esque solo during the culmination of "She's So Cold" (which Nile properly dedicated, "for the Rolling Stones"). Hoffman played on Nile's first two studio albums in the early 1980's, and Nile joyfully and repeatedly mentioned that this allowed for him to play parts of his back catalogue – such as "It's All Over" - that haven't been dusted off for a live outing in decades.

In addition to singing, Nile bounced between his trusty acoustic guitar and grand piano, depending on the song. Nile's vocal stylings are Dylan-meets-Springsteen. While he mercilessly wails at the steel strings of his guitar or slams at the ivory keys of the piano, his voice is shrill, strained and at many times, unadorned. But it is also piercing, resonant and always convincing. In true rock n' roll fashion, the imperfections of Nile's voice somehow make it perfect for the music he plays. Whenever Nile parts his lips, whether he's speaking to the audience or singing for them, he immediately has the entire crowd in his hands.

The earnest and genuine connection Nile makes to every single one of the fans in the audience, combined with raucous and rambunctious rock n' roll makes for music that is nothing short of explosive. Nile's compositions and live show display all the attributes a rock n' roll songwriter should have. He has tinges of folk, blues and bluegrass, but deviates from the subtler natures of these genres. He bears the hard-edged energy of punk and rock, but steers it perfectly down the narrow street of conviction. He can grab every heart in the room with one of his dark, moving ballads, while leaving the angst and clichés at the door. He can lift an entire audience to their feet with a rousing anthem without relying on the formulaic and cheesier elements of modern songwriting.

Nile brought the evening to a close in true folk-punk fashion with a foot-stomping rendition of the Ramones' classic "I Wanna Be Sedated," crying out, "This is for Joey Ramone" before flying headlong into the first verse. In a way, that one closing number was all one needs to understand Nile as a musician. He is classic rock meets punk rock, with a bluesy, blazing guitar line flowing over a bumping, thumping rhythm section in the background. And just like every time he visits Northampton, he leaves the entire crowd screaming for more.

Nile will release a new studio album titled, "The Innocent Ones" in July of this year.

Dave Coffey can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

KEITH ARNOLD/ COLLEGIAN

Willie Nile plays like a sophisticated Bob Dylan, blending blues and folk styles with the energy one might expect from a punk artist. During his show at the Iron Horse this past weekend he danced on tables and joked with audiences. He recently released his sixth studio album, "House of a Thousand Guitars."

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
WE'RE OPEN!!!
Located In North Amherst,
Just Minutes from UMASS
on RT. 63
Student Discounts
Membership Just $399
Twilight Rates Just $13
Cherryhillgolf.org
413.256.4071

UM travels to SHU to take on Pioneers

By, Kara Deyermenjian
Collegian Staff

What happens when two teams who recently halted frustrating losing streaks with sweeping victories match up against each other?

The Massachusetts tennis team will find out when it hits the road Thursday afternoon to take on Sacred Heart.

Both teams have tremendous amounts of momentum on their sides as they both are coming off one-sided wins over the weekend.

"Sacred Heart is a good little team and we need to be ready," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "I think they are out to get us and they should be."

The Pioneers were picked to finish third in the Northeast Conference this year and currently have a 7-9 record in dual matches. Elizabeth Harrington leads the team in wins this season, and currently holds a 7-2 record in the No. 3 singles spot.

SHU halted a five-match losing streak when they swept Hartford 7-0 Saturday afternoon. The Pioneers won four of their six singles matches with perfect 6-0, 6-0 play thanks to Kate Donnelly, Harrington, Kristina Chao, and Julianne Kasinow. SHU also dominated doubles play with three-straight wins.

The flawless win was much-needed and a long time coming for the Pioneers, as they had previously fallen to Creighton, Radford, Albany, Fairfield and Long Island.

Due to the large number of teams in the Northeast Conference, UMass has never competed against the Pioneers. As the two teams face-off, the Minutewomen will attempt to keep their winning streak alive, while tying the team's season-long win streak of four.

"We recently put Sacred Heart on our schedule due to their recent vast improvement, and we have to be ready for anything. They keep getting better and better," Dixon said.

UMass enjoyed a similar fate to their upcoming opponent, as they snapped a five-game losing streak of their own last Thursday with a win against Presbyterian.

The Minutewomen also tacked on two more victories over the weekend, defeating the New Jersey Institute of Technology and Hofstra.

Junior Candynce Boney has had standout performances for the Minutewomen, going 4-1 in singles play over the last five matches.

UMass freshman Julia Comas is also riding high this week, as she was named A-10 Rookie of the Week after recently being moved up to the first singles spot. Comas made a big impact over the weekend, winning both of her singles matches and improving her record to 3-1 at the No. 1 spot. It is Comas' first career A-10 weekly award as well as the first time this season any UMass tennis player has been recognized for an A-10 accolade.

Coach Dixon and the Minutewomen are excited to get their last road game against the Pioneers out of the way.

"We just got back from the road, and are already traveling to Fairfield," said Dixon. "The team is definitely ready to finish up the season at home and prepare for the tournament."

The squad currently stands at 10-6 overall on the year. The Minutewomen return to the Mullins courts April 9 to take on the Great Danes of Albany, and will remain at home for the last two matches of the spring season. UMass will then prepare for the A-10 championships in St. Louis, Mo.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyerme@student.umass.edu

Amrstrong Johnson Collegian

The Minutewomen look to improve on their win over Presbyterian last Thursday when they head to Sacred Heart.

Venechanos wants team to get better

VENECHANOS from page 8

from last year, and you can tell they know each other very well," Venechanos said. "Half of their goals are assisted goals, and usually when that happens, you have teams that are used to each other. They play a team game and that's harder to scout than individuals."

Last year was a different story for the Owls, who managed to win only one of their eight games as the away team. One of those losses came at the hands of the Minutewomen, who secured an A-10 playoff spot with their 16-4 win over Temple.

O'Donnell, Lyons scoring consistently

GOALS from page 8

one' [in each] game, but it's good to have those options," Venechanos said.

Florence earns defensive honors

It was goalkeeper Katie Florence who made the difference in the two victories this past weekend.

Despite allowing 15 goals over the two games, Florence saved 17 shots from reaching the back of the net.

Florence, known as Flo by her teammates, is no stranger to awards, as she was first named Defensive Player of the Week in the A-10 on Feb. 23rd. Florence, who was also named to the A-10 All-Rookie Team last season, earned the Rookie of the Week award twice in 2009.

"When [Florence] plays, our defense can take more risks," Venechanos said. "It really pumps the girls up when Flo makes a big save. She's been playing great, and she looks very confident in there [behind the net]."

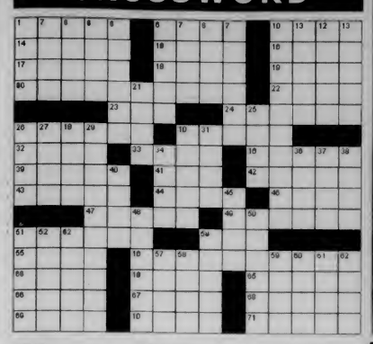
Through the first 11 games of play, Florence has earned double digits in saves on three occasions. The first was in the opening game of the season against the Wildcats, when she earned 13 saves. Nearly three weeks later, Florence earned 10 saves in the 10-8 loss against the Terriers (5-4, 1-0 America East). The third time she earned double digit saves was earlier this month against Albany.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from Umass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Now Hiring:
DAILY COLLEGIAN
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER
We are looking for a student to manage DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM and our related web presences for the upcoming FALL 2010 semester and beyond!
Keywords:
WordPress, Google Webmaster Tools, Analytics, and Adsense, Digital (Multi)Media, JavaScript, PHP, HTML, CS / ECE / IT background
Please send short cover letter with relevant experience and resume to Victor Jacek - vjacek@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
On-Campus Local Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement



Four Seasons
Open 'till 11pm everyday!
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BEER (* All beer prices plus deposit)
Stella Artois 24 pk btl $22.99*
Miller Lite 30 pk can $20.49*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl $16.99*
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl $12.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl $11.99*
Opa Opa Light Lager 12 pk btl $10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can $9.99*
Molson 12 pk btl $9.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl $9.99*
LIQUOR
Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml $59.99
Patron Anejo 750 ml $52.99
Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L $25.99
Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml $20.99
Svedka Vodka 1.75 L $19.99
Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L $17.99
Johnnie Walker Red Label 750 ml $20.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $16.99
584-8174
WINE (All wine 750 ml except where noted)
Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties $19.99
Bogle Vineyards Phantom Red Blend $18.99
Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon $14.99
Layer Cake Malbec $13.99
The Velvet Devil Merlot $10.99
Blackstone Merlot $10.99
Mark West Pinot Noir $10.99
Santi Pinot Grigio $10.99
Millbrandt Vineyards Riesling $10.99
Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon $9.99
Callia Alta Malbec $8.99
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
■ PERRY APTS.
■ 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
■ LANTERN COURT APTS.
■ MILL HOLLOW
■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.
400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
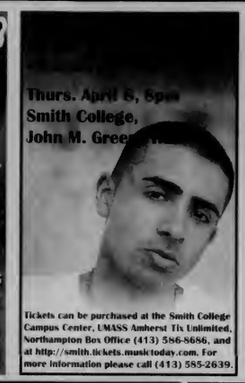
We like the things you whisper in our ear...



CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Joe Pesci's shows
6. Dress my what?
10. Multi-oriented agreement
14. Involuntary birthday favorites
15. A dirty, raw, oyster
16. Wiggles territory
17. Joe Biden's assumed sex lot-ten nick-name
18. Toilet swirl
19. LOOK! an expensive fabric
20. Slimy and rustic affection
22. A period (haha) of low prices
23. Louse-to-be, say what?
24. Invented the lightbulb for pink "five nudes" sign
26. A mosquito repute
30. A small yet charmingly agonistic reactionous American bird
32. Not closed but still willing to do business with yo fine self
33. A majestic lion cloth
35. Hair net
39. Tiny decorative balls on a string used to amuse ball boys in the off-season
41. Dread without the wire
42. Rate, pfft
43. Old photo color that shows how selfish you are
44. Dry riverbed with vacancy
46. A dog wags this and licks that
47. Slowly rub your beg round, cranium
49. Slender pickles are free with purchase
51. Rug crunchings
54. Beer for your horses
55. Margarine is mighty fine
56. The planner of a criminal endeavor contains the number of mad fine hunnies
63. Watch as my ____ matures
64. Not tricked by snakes and assaulted by scorpions
65. Low point of international pickpocketing
66. A hollow in a cliff to hide irrant illegal drugs and carnies
67. Not long now but continue holding your breath
68. The betel palm is wet
69. Attention! This is an urgent news bulletin!
70. Adhesive strip tease
71. Porous lyrics for emo kids

DOWN
1. Leave in a hurry because her husband is home
2. Was to be a man
3. Similar to the shaft
4. Not alive but ready to boogie
5. Ancient wealthy, age 22
6. Scratch and sniff fragrance
7. Prospector's find and weep
8. Find your own damn tallies
9. A spring that discharges hot water and steam and kills small orphans
10. Ardent cows milk great!
11. Operatic solos and polos
12. A large (haha) stringed instrument
13. Spoken for and loving it
21. Excessively abundant yet easily lost in the couch
25. Writing table for cybertronian robots
26. Holds up a bank with Val Kilmer
27. A word with the sword
28. Don't jump!
29. Disinclined to recline
30. Critical hit! Finish him!
31. Chilled monkey brains
34. A hinged catch in a ratchet to snatch it
36. Verbal apple butter
37. Triple colon bypass
38. Valley of Jogja-what?
40. Rice bear goes great with rice
45. Part of an archipelago, which means whale's vagina
48. Maximum
50. Spring ding dings
51. Sports instructor
52. Seaweed breeds yucky toes
53. Christopher of "Superman", famous for kitten chow
54. Make amends, love transcends
57. Dwarf buffalo giving free rubs
58. Grass? There is no bathroom!
59. Filly's mother will not have her fay
60. Green rugs of inspiration
61. Notch your swatch.
62. Heavy cart

WANT TO WORK IN RADIO?
WMUA 91.1 FM is looking to hire specialty Department Directors in the following departments for the 2010-2011 academic year:
SPORTS OUTREACH
NEWS FUND DRIVE
SALES TECH
PUBLICITY
For information and/or applications, stop by WMUA 105 campus center or visit wmua.org
Applications are due by April 17th

Thurs. April 8, 8pm
Smith College,
John M. Green...
Tickets can be purchased at the Smith College Campus Center, UMASS Amherst Tix Unlimited, Northampton Box Office (413) 586-8686, and at http://smith.tickets.musictoday.com. For more information please call (413) 585-2639.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

*Rides to all airports, train and bus stations
*Private rides with immediate pick-up
*Rides to and from parties
*Point to point transportaion
*Shared rides
*Affordable fares
(413) 306-8298

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour -
1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
Arizona Pizza

? on the 1's and 2's.

			3				5
	3			2		1	9
5		2
		9					8
	6		4			5
		4			7
7	4	8
						2
	1	3	2		6	8

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 4/1 DJ HOTT SIZZLE
Top 40, Dance, Techno, Hip-Hop
Fri. 4/2 DJ CONSTRUC
Mash-Ups, Dance, Hip-Hop, Top 40
Sat. 4/3 SPECIAL GUEST DJ
Spinning.....
Hip Hop, Top 40, Dance, Techno
Tues. 4/6 JUNGLE THEME PARTY
Sponsered by "UV-Blue"
Drink Special Giveaways
413-259-1600
53 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

Sundays Open at NOON
LA PIAZZA
Best Deals in Town!!
ALL CALZONES $4.99
ALL 12" SUBS $4.99
ALL SALADS $4.99
ALL ENTREES $5.99
16" CHEESE PIZZA $4.99
Each X-Tra topping .75
12" CHEESE PIZZA $5.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1
16" CHEESE PIZZA $6.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1.25
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 10 WINGS (BONE) $11.50
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 1/2lb WINGS (BONELESS) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzarestorante.us

The 5 time Academy Award Winning film returns today On Blu-Ray and DVD

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Every Thursday:
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER
DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
Every Tuesday:
LOST IN HD
UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
Sunday April 4th:
EASTER SUNDAY BRUNCH 10:00 AM-3:00 PM
WIN RED SOX TIX AT BRUNCH!
Monday April 5th:
AMHERST JAZZ ORCHESTRA
DOWNSTAIRS 8:30 PM - 11 PM
facebook
BOOK YOUR GRADUATION PARTY NOW!
24 N. PLEASANT
AMHERST MA
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

amherst cinema
Fri Apr 2 - Thu Apr 8
mother 1:45 4:15 7:00 9:45 (9:30 Wed) +11:15 Sat & Sun
GREENBERG 2:30 (2:00 Sun & Wed) 5:00 (4:45 Wed) 7:30 10:00 +12:00pm Sat & 11:30am Sun
The Secret of Kells 2:00* (2:30 Wed) 7:15 +11:45am Sat & 11:30am Sun *NO 2:00 Sun
AJAMI 4:30 9:15 (9:45 Wed)
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Apr 2 - Thu Apr 9
THE LAST STATION 4:30 7:15* 9:45 +2:15 Sat & Sun +10:30am 2:15 Wed
Ghost Writer 4:00 6:45 9:30 + 1:15 Sat & Sun + 10:00am 1:15 Wed
EMERGING FILMMAKERS SERIES:
5 COLLEGE FILM FESTIVAL WINNERS Wed 7:00
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

For Rent
Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub
chainsawsuit.com

Are you looking for a Job for next semester?
The Daily Collegian Graphics Department is hiring for advertising production in 2010!
Contact Amanda Joinson at Advertising@DailyCollegian.com for more information, or stop by The Collegian office in the Campus Center Basement

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Your shoes shall be tied with the wind from the rainbows and the bunny ears of a Charlaton.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
That turtleneck makes you very snappy. It is almost as if it is a snapping turtle-neck.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Quit shoving awkward things into easy-to-reach places.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Everyone only evaluates you by the bulge in your pants. Invest in a bigger calculator.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Shave the mustache. You know what I am talking about.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Imagine that the library had just a nipple on top of it to put your imaginary, giant baby friend at ease.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
There is no need to panic, Ricky Martin just put out a press release that said, "JK, LOL."

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
There are better ways to explain to your professor that you do not know the answers than "click-clack!"

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Chris Brown wants you to buy his new album so bad that he is willing to start bludgeoning the elderly... with his beats.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
There is something worse out there than Cheney with buck shot, Robert Pattinson with spray on abs!

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Do not forget to tell your doctor about erectile disfunction!

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Why the sudden persecution of banana hammocks? This is about equal rights!

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Full Time Summer Employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $11.50/hour. The job description and application are available at the Housing Assigment Office, 235 Whitmore and is due April 2nd.

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 under graduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

Help Me Move Furniture- April 8 or 9. $20/Hr. Truck or Van Preferred- Call Chabot 413-896-7022

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

HOUSES FOR RENT

4 Bedroom in Northampton $1350. No pets. June & September. Skibiski Realtors. 586-1827

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

SUMMER SUBLET

46 Main St. Amherst Center- fine dining, bars, entertainment, shopping! Huge dining/living room, 2 large bedrooms (currently housing 4 people) $1765/month. email: hdanfort@student.umass.edu

FOUND

Watch engraved with Class of 2008. Congratulations Steven. Call 413-559 9215

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen go for three in a row

Team heads to Philadelphia for matchup with Owls Sat.

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team looks to continue its domination of its Atlantic 10 schedule when it travels to face Temple on away-friendly Geasey Field this Saturday.

After dropping five of six games against non-conference opponents, the Minutewomen (5-6, 2-0 A-10) opened up A-10 play with two victories against George Washington and Richmond this past weekend.

"Those were two huge wins, definitely, but we told the girls we're back to 0-0 and not to get complacent," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We're going into the [Temple] game away and entering like we've yet to win in the conference and looking to play hungry."

On Friday, Jackie Lyons and Jesse O'Donnell each recorded hat tricks to spur UMass past the Colonials (2-9, 0-2 A-10) in a 13-7 win. Despite trailing 6-5 at halftime, the Minutewomen scored six unanswered goals in the final 24 minutes, while the defense forced 12 GWU turnovers in that span.

On Sunday, it was sophomore Nina Sarcona who led the Minutewomen attack with three goals of her own. UMass received scores from eight different players to defeat the Spiders (4-7, 1-1 A-10), 12-8. Goalkeeper Katie Florence earned both wins over the weekend in cage, making eight saves against the Colonials and nine saves against Richmond.

Even though UMass has played more consistently in its conference schedule, Venechanos still wants her team to keep improving.

"We're working on our connections down the field and we know that's going to be important because halfway through the season, other teams know you really well," Venechanos said. "You have to work on the things you're good at because you can be scouted, and people know your tendencies."

Temple, meanwhile, enters this weekend's matchup having played three fewer contests than the Minutewomen. The Owls (3-5, 1-1 A-10) began the season with a slow start, winning just one of their first four games. In their last four, however, Temple has had two victories, including one against conference foe GWU.

Similar to the contest against UMass, the Colonials were tied with the Owls at halftime before being outscored 5-1 in the second half to suffer an 11-7 loss. Sophomores Missy Schweitzer (three goals, one assist) and Stephanie Markunas (two goals, two assists) led the Temple offense with four-point games, while senior goalkeeper Jess Colucci tied her season-high with 11 saves.

The win for the Owls was their third of the season on the road, where they've had more success than they've had at home on Geasey Field. In home games this spring, Temple is 0-3 and has scored only a total of 24 goals, whereas on the road, it averages over 10 goals a game.

Despite Temple's home struggles, Venechanos isn't underestimating the experienced Owls.

"Temple has the same core back

See VENECHANOS on page 6

Jackie Lyons combined for four goals and three assists on the weekend, and will look to score against the Owls.

UMass finding the back of the net, Florence recieves award

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

They shot, they scored and they conquered.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team earned two wins last weekend, victories that can be attributed to its sharp-shooting tactics. Taking smart shots will be a key element when the Minutewomen (3-6, 2-0 Atlantic 10) compete against Temple Saturday.

"Having a balanced attack makes us a lot more dangerous," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "I know they like how it's balanced as well. One girl does not have more pressure than the other. That's great because defenses have to pick and choose who they want to double. If they double somebody, the other six girls that are more confident will put the ball away."

Through the first 11 games of the season, UMass has five players with at least 10 goals. Midfielder Jesse O'Donnell tops the list with 25, and is the only player with at least 20 goals on the team.

While O'Donnell notched her first goal of the year against No. 1 Northwestern in the Minutewomen's season opener, she did not show her true scoring dominance until the following game, when she notched five goals against Holy Cross.

O'Donnell followed that five-goal burst with a hat trick in the next contest against Connecticut. She did not score more than a pair of goals until UMass took on Yale on March 10th.

Following O'Donnell is midfielder Jackie Lyons with 18 scores. Lyons is shooting 50 percent on her free-position shots and just below the same percentage in total shots.

Lyons has earned three hat tricks all season, coming in games against the Crusaders (2-8, 0-2 Patriot League), Boston University and last weekend against George Washington.

Despite her high scoring, Lyons leads the team in assists, draw controls and caused turnovers.

Fellow midfielder Merritt Cosgrove has 13 goals on the year with a .771 shot-on-goal percentage.

Rounding out the bottom of the top five are sophomores Danielle Pelletier and Nina Sarcona. Sarcona earned her 10th goal of the season in the game against Richmond, which was part of a three-goal run by the New York native.

"They've been working hard, and they know that they have a little bit of a target [on them] and that they have to pick up their game and change it a bit," Venechanos said.

According to Venechanos, the team has more than the top five goal scorers in terms of attack.

"We're probably seven to nine deep," Venechanos said. "We have some girls over the line that could go in and score as well. That's good because if one girl's not stepping up, or if that one girl is having an off day, we are very confident the other six or seven girls will pick up the slack."

Over the season, the Minutewomen have scored 110 goals (10 goals per game), with a .435 shot percentage. UMass is just over 71 percent for their shots-on-goal.

"We don't know who will be 'the

See GOALS on page 6

UMass coach Derek Kellogg has a combined record of 24-38 in two seasons at the helm, but with such a young team, Kellogg has the talent in order to be successful.

Expectations clearer for UMass and Kellogg for next season

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

As a second-year head coach, Derek Kellogg didn't know what to expect on a team with one senior and nine players who never saw a minute of basketball for last year's Massachusetts men's basketball team.

Next year, expectations should be a bit clearer.

The only player in the rotation not returning next year is guard Ricky Harris, the leading scorer for UMass this season. Kellogg doesn't expect any single person to make up for Harris' absence next year, but he thinks multiple players will need to take on scoring responsibilities.

One of the positives which comes with losing just one senior is that the learning curve won't be as steep. The Minutemen are expected to have two freshmen come in next year along with Raphael Putney, who redshirted this season.

Kellogg believes that having so many returning players will be beneficial next year.

"In reality, this was the first year to build a foundation," Kellogg said. "The one thing that will be good is the expectation level, and how I do things will be set."

Guard Anthony Gurley is expected to take over the team in place of Harris. Kellogg was pleased with Gurley's improvement over the year and thinks he can be very effective.

The Wake Forest transfer averaged 13.6 points per game and scored 24 points against Richmond during the Atlantic 10 tournament.

"I think his mental makeup is one of a guy that's competitive, that wants to do well and embraces the challenges of what the coaching staff and myself are going to expect out of him," Kellogg said.

Kellogg will also look for his freshmen to improve drastically over the summer between having time off and registering plenty of experience during the 2009-10 season. He believes they all finished on a positive note, but need to keep working during the offseason in order make UMass more competitive in the A-10.

"They had a lot of ups-and-downs throughout the year, which I think a lot of freshmen do, but they were also afforded an opportunity, that a lot of freshmen are not, [and that] is that they were able to play and work through some kinks," Kellogg said.

By the end of the year, Terrell Vinson and Freddie Riley worked their way into the starting lineup, while Javorn Farrell's work ethic turned him into a defensive force, and will likely earn him a larger role with the Minutemen next year.

UM to plays more at home

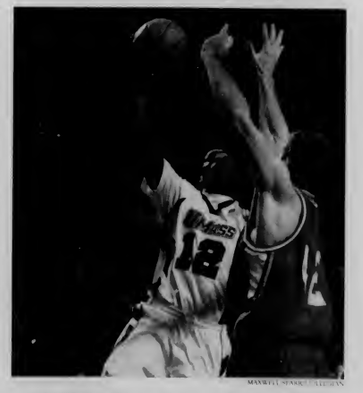
If many of the NCAA tournament teams look familiar, it's probably because they played UMass at some point this season. The good news for the Minutemen is that many of those teams will be visiting the Mullins Center next year.

UMass made several home-and-home deals so that competitive teams will play in Amherst next year when Kellogg's squad has another year of experience.

Seton Hall, Central Florida, Boston College and Davidson are all supposed to be on the schedule next year as home games. The Minutemen are also going to participate in Springfield's Hall of Fame Tip-Off Classic, which will be similar to the Legends Classic.

Despite some lopsided losses to nationally-ranked teams, Kellogg said he will continue to try to put his team on television as much as possible, which he knows means playing some competitive teams.

One of those teams, however, will not be Kentucky. Despite agreeing to a game at TD Garden with his predecessor, John Calipari, before he left Memphis, Kellogg said there is no plan to play the Wildcats anytime soon.



"Now is not really the time for us to play against them," Kellogg said. "It's something we'll probably visit down the line when it's beneficial for both programs."

He pointed to how much money the Wildcats make playing at home as one of the reasons why UK probably wouldn't agree to a game on a neutral court.

Kellogg does plan on having the Minutemen return to the Garden once next season, but he hasn't found a team to play yet because the NCAA tournament is still going on.

He also wants to play either Boston University or Northeastern in order to draw some more UMass fans from Boston. Either way, Kellogg expects to have another competitive schedule.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Anthony Gurley will be responsible for leading a young Minutemen team next season with the departure of senior guard Ricky Harris.

Talent there for Minutemen, patience will lead to results

David Brinch

This past Massachusetts men's basketball season can be summed up in nine simple words which will leave UMass fans with an optimistic view for years to come.

The talent is there. The results were not. Be patient.

The Minutemen finished the season 12-20, with two more losses and the same amount of wins they had when UMass coach Derek Kellogg was hired in 2009, after Travis Ford sold out his team and went to Oklahoma State.

But look at UMass' non-conference opponents.

Cornell, Michigan State, Baylor. These are big time programs that went on to not only win in the NCAA tournament, but win two or more games. UMass coach Derek Kellogg knew that it would be a challenge for his young team, but yet he welcomed the challenge, knowing his team would grow and mature, even if he lost. They did lose, but the Minutemen's experience against tough non-conference schedule will help them down the road.

UMass won its first Atlantic 10 championship since in eight years, defeating sixth-seeded Charlotte 68-56.

Kellogg played for the Minutemen back when they were one of the nation's best programs (1992-1995). As a player, Kellogg made the NCAA tournament every year, including 1995, when the team made the Elite Eight under former UMass coach John Calipari. During his time as a Minuteman Kellogg and Co. were 111-24, and were just the second team in NCAA history to win four-straight season and Atlantic 10 tournament championships.

After his playing days were over, Kellogg was an assistant for 12 years, and spent eight seasons learning under Calipari at Memphis.

Eight-straight 20-win seasons, including a trip to the 2008 NCAA Tournament title game speaks volumes on Kellogg's resume. He also had a heavy hand in recruiting Derrick Rose, one of the best collegiate players in recent memory, who has also enjoyed great success as a member of the Chicago Bulls.

So far, Kellogg has had the same recruiting success at UMass, bringing in freshmen Sampson Carter, Javorn Farrell, Freddie Riley, Raphael Putney and Terrell Vinson, along with Memphis transfer Hasbim Bailey, Oregon State transfer Sean Carter and Wake Forest transfer Anthony Gurley, all of whom will be back next season.

While it has been an adjustment to combine a roster full of transfers, freshmen and a lone senior, Ricky Harris, who will go down in history as one of the best players to put on a UMass uniform., the freshmen showed their talent at times this season.

Vinson started all 32 games, and was third on the team in scoring behind Harris and Gurley, averaging 9.6 points per game, and second in rebounds, with 5.4 rebounds per game.

After missing four games due to knee surgery, Freddie Riley played in 28 games, starting the last nine and averaging nine points. Farrell was responsible for guarding some of UMass' toughest opponents in Xavier's Jordan Crawford and Charlotte's Shamari Spears, while Sampson Carter played in all 32 games and contributed on both ends of the floor.

While Putney will redshirt after not seeing any action, Kellogg has already brought two players to Amherst with impressive pedigrees. Jesse Morgan, who signed to play with Seton Hall in 2010, opted out and enrolled at the University, while Kellogg signed 6-foot-8 Maxie Esho, who played on the same AAU team as Putney and Farrell, and joins Vinson and Harris as another player from Maryland. This is a smart recruiting method by Kellogg, because he is making his name and program familiar in a very talented area for youth basketball.

Much like in life, the same holds true in basketball. It's not just about what you know, but who you know. Kellogg was basically an apprentice under Calipari at Memphis, and Calipari's knowledge of the game and coaching style have rubbed off on Kellogg. Calipari is one of the most successful, albeit controversial, college basketball coaches of all time, and led Kentucky to the Elite Eight this season. The two talk almost daily, with Calipari even coming back to his former coaching alma mater.

So Minutemen fans, while 2010 was a rebuilding year, there are some things to look forward to in Amherst.

The talent is there. The results were not. Be patient.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@stakkmt.umass.edu

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY (That's what she said) | THE FIRST THING YOU GRAB IN THE MORNING

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

MORNING WOOD

HIGH: 285.78K LOW: 276.89 K WWW.MEATSPIN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

Sam arrested

Minuteman caught by police in downtown cocaine sting

Courtesy Amherst Police Department

UMass mascot Sam the Minuteman was arrested in downtown Amherst late last night for possession of cocaine, a class A substance.

UMass mascot Sam the Minuteman was arrested Wednesday evening in a Hampshire County Sherriff's sting at the Monkey Bar in downtown Amherst on charges of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute.

"Ay man, I've got the good stuff, fine Colombian lady," Sam was overheard saying in a bathroom at the local haunt before he was taken into custody. Usually known for firing up Minutemen fans, Sam apparently needed a little firing up himself.

Sam is due back in Eastern Hampshire District Court next Monday for his arraignment. If convicted, he faces up to 15 years of shame, humiliation, disgrace and time-outs.

Morning Wood staff

Amherst passes "goddamn kids" bylaw

Select Board bans 'shenanigans' by damn student 'hooligans'

By Hector Sanchez
Morning Wood Staff

The Amherst Select Board voted unanimously, 5-0, on Wednesday night to approve the "Get Off My Damn Lawn, You Little Punks" bylaw, or as it is informally known, the "goddamn kids" statute.

Hundreds of concerned Amherst citizens showed up to have their voices heard, with a line of individuals riding electric scooters stretching around the block as they waited to enter Town Hall.

"Every day, I wake up, go outside, and what do I see? A buncha damn hoodlums makin' more mischief out on the sidewalks," said 92-year-old Amherst resident Myles Hutchinsgoode. "I've been living on this block for longer then these little pukes have been alive, and yet every weekend, just when I'm trying to sit comfortably in my living room and watch a color television program after Gertrude gets done making a TV dinner, right next door they are always blasting that damned hippity hop music and making a gosh darn racket."

"My bowels get quite irritable, with all the hootin' and the hollerin,'" continued Hutchinsgoode.

Select Board Chair Stephanie O'Keeffe noted that the bylaw will allow the town to "finally get control over dem hooligans runnin' around our town."

"There needs to be law and order in our here community, which is quickly descending into pure anarchy," said O'Keeffe. "Now our police will have the tools they need to do what they do best: Whuppin' ass."

The bylaw includes new enforcement tools for the Amherst Police Department, such as the ability to spank rowdy students with a belt, or force them to shovel manure for hours at a time when they are caught slacking off in public.

"Kids nowadays think they know everything, which is exactly why we need this law," said 107-year-old lifelong Amherst resident Cynthia Rockefeller, who was wheeled-in to Town Hall by her 85-year-old daughter, Claudia Rockefeller Hastings. "They ain't never gonna learn nothin' through their thick skulls unless we beat it into them. The only way – that's what my daddy always told me."

"Back in my day, we didn't even have fancy automobiles to get around, only a horse if you could borrow one from your rich neighbor folk," continued Rockefeller, eliciting nods from the fellow elderly in the audience.

"I had to walk 14 miles to class in the morning, uphill all the way, and if I was late I'd get whupped with a wooden spoon. These days, all these drunken hooligans race around the streets like their behinds are on fire! Insanity if you ask me."

99-year-old resident Willard B. Worthington brought up the issue of excessive conjugation before marriage by the town's student population.

"When I was a student at the University of Massachusetts, it wasn't even called that – it was called the Massachusetts Agricultural College," said Worthington. "When I graduated in 1936 with a degree in soil procurement, I had never seen a lady's naked kneecaps before ... Just the way it should be. Now these kids are all naked and lubricated without the slightest thought of marriage beforehand. It makes me sick."

No student residents of the town attended the meeting Wednesday, and none could be reached for comment regarding the matter in time for publication.

Hector Sanchez can be reached at dirtysanchez@shemail.com.

Hutchinsgoode complained of irritable bowels from the "hollerin.'"

Nine out of 10 UM students agree: 'Wooooooooooooo!'

By Tobias von Schlangberg
Morning Wood Hairstylist

According to a new report from the Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention (CADAP) at University Health Services, nine out of 10 University of Massachusetts students agree with the following statement: "Wooooo!"

The report, released Monday by CADAP, surveyed incoming first-year students last fall as well as collating data from survey questions asked during BASICS classes.

The questions asked students to strongly disagree, disagree, be neutral, agree, strongly agree, or simply "hell yeah" the following statement: "Wooooo!"

More than 8,000 UMass students were polled throughout the survey, which also focused on issues such as shotgunning skills awareness, the appropriate way to funnel brewskis, and proper rules and regulations for the popular drinking game Kings.

CADAP Director Sally A. Linkowski saw positives in the survey's results.

"This certainly is a lively campus," said Linowski, "wooo, go UMass [expletive deleted]," she chanted during a Tuesday interview, as she chugged a 12-ounce can of Natural Ice brand beer. "Our students have long been known as among the nation's most academically elite, but now we finally know that, that wooooooo."

Across campus, reactions to the study's results could be heard jubilantly echoing through UMass' cement walkways.

In Southwest, students could be seen decorating a large banner reading "We're # WOOOO," while the Student Government Association (SGA) has launched a new Weady, Set, Woo! campaign to bolster student excitement.

"This is a time for campus unity, a time to come together, kick back a little bit, and let loose, what's not to be excited about? Wooo!" said SGA President Ngozi Mbauwike, while speaker Modesto Montero nodded eagerly, chipping in his own elated "wooo-hooo."

Educational analysts were unsurprised at the results.

Kaplan researcher Martha Rubinowitz noted that UMass has long been noted for its elation, easy excitement, attraction to bright, flashing lights, affinity for Cheetos, and general ambiance of enthusiasm.

"The University of Massachusetts has long been known as an academic hub for cheer and zeal," she said. "Frankly, I'm surprised nine-and-a-half students in ten didn't respond positively, this seems to be a changing tide for the University."

Students continued the whooping woos Wednesday with the rapid formation of a campus-wide coalition demanding Whitmore be temporarily renamed "WooMore!" while at Garber Field, impassioned students cried out "go woomass."

"Oh, no, I'm not surprised at all," remarked sophomore Steve "Steve-O" Hanlon, in attendance at Wednesday's lacrosse game, "this is just such a sick place, and the people are nasty, and the school is ill, I mean, shit dude, wooooooo, baby go WooMass!"

Freshman Liz DiPietro, seated next to Hanlon, agreed.

"I mean I just can't think of any other words that come to mind when I think of how chill this place is," she said. "It's just like one big woo, it's just like, all you can do here is like chill and do sick stuff, and like all it makes you think is wooooooo."

For the remainder of the year, CADAP is planning to host informational sessions on keg stand technique, proper flip cup form, Beirut strategy talks with live simulation, discussions with local police on how to best enter bars illegally, and will be distributing free Jagerbomb assembly kits.

Tobias von Schlangberg can be reached at admin@wehehigh.com

UMass President Jack Wilson will be happier living on farm

Able to run around free now, University says

By Geraldo Rivera
Morning Wood Staff

University of Massachusetts spokespeople announced yesterday morning that UMass system President Jack M. Wilson "will be going to live on a farm in the countryside from now on," effective June 30, 2011.

According to University spokesman Robert Connolly, Wilson was frequently unhappy in the position of President, thanks to a lack of free space and clean air.

"I think we can all agree that Jack will be much happier now that he can run around," said Connolly in a press release Wednesday morning. "Many in the administration felt it was unfair to Jack to keep him pent up in a roomy, posh Boston penthouse – err, I mean office from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m., making half a million dollars a year. No longer will he be yelping and scratching at our backdoor all night; now he is free to be himself."

Wilson has overseen the five-campus UMass system since September 2, 2003, when a search committee looking to fill the role of departed President William Bulger picked the excited and responsive Wilson out of a litter of qualified candidates.

Recently, other high-ranking administrators and members of the Board of Trustees have expressed their displeasure with the amount of walks Wilson has been receiving as President.

"If we do not compensate our President with the proper amount of exercise, we will not be able to retain the quality staff we need to continue moving this University forward going into the next critical decade," said Board of Trustees Chairman Robert J. Manning.

"Jack will now get to experience a whole new set of smells, which he will love," said Connolly. "No longer will he be chewing up [Interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs] Jean Kim's shoes into little pieces."

Highlights of Wilson's tenure included the acquisition of the Southern New England School of Law by the UMass system earlier this spring, and his failed attempt at chasing geese in the campus pond in 2008.

Geraldo Rivera can be reached at sexyguy24@rusinglc.com.

Campus architecture designed by aliens in massive conspiracy

By Kalindor Azeroth
Morning Wood Wizard

The University of Massachusetts' campus architecture has been designed by a secret society dedicated to awakening ancient extraterrestrial beings who came to Earth millions of years ago and wield powers beyond comprehension, according to sources in the Office of Facilities and Campus Planning.

"They slumber deep beneath the Antarctic ice in their cyclopean cities, awaiting the time when the stars are right," said one source under conditions of anonymity.

"Global warming, specifically the melting of the polar ice caps, could be evidence that their awakening is at hand," said another. "After all, in strange aeons, even death may die."

Documents obtained the Morning Wood showed that over the past sixty years, new buildings on campus have been designed in accordance with sigils - normally defined as symbols used for summoning demons in medieval books on magic - recorded in the Necronomicon, a seventh century compendium of esoteric practices, that make the buildings vast engines for cosmic energies unknown to human science.

The only copy of the Necronomicon on the East coast is owned by the Miskatonic University library's Special Collections Division. They confirmed the account recorded in the documents.

"The sigils in these documents pertain to the summoning of Nylarhotep, the herald of the 'blind-idiot' god Azazoth who rules the universe," said Dr. Howard Phillips, curator of Special Collections. "The architecture of the Southwest Residential Area, however, relates to Shuggoth the Destroyer."

Attempts to contact the Associate Vice Chancellor for Facilities and Campus Services went unanswered.

"The Associate Vice Chancellor has been driven insane by glimpses of eldritch, non-Euclidean geometries and will be unavailable for comment," said University spokesman Ed Blaguzewski. "The director of the Office of Facilities and Campus Planning was sacrificed to Cthulhu."

Kalindor Azeroth can be reached at k-mara@youngchristiansingles.net.

Visionary former President Harrison honored at UMass

By Garfield James
Morning Wood Staff

Students gathered in the Cape Cod Lounge yesterday to honor the life and legacy of former United States President William Henry Harrison.

The event, sponsored by the Historical Leaders of America Club, began with a movie documenting the entire presidency of Harrison. After the conclusion of the 15-minute film, several students gave speeches in honor of the man.

"He was an American hero," said sophomore Clay Kingsley. "There's no telling what he could have achieved had he lived for a second month in office."

"I think our leaders need to be more like Harrison," said junior Emily Mackey. "They need to be able to risk everything for their country. Harrison did that when he gave his inauguration address in the rain and then got pneumonia and died."

Some students were wearing shirts or had posters honoring Harrison. One poster had a large picture of the President above words that read "first president to die, last president to be forgotten."

Club members then reenacted Harrison's famous victory against the American Indians at the Battle of Tippecanoe. As Harrison, portrayed by freshman Sam Neff, stood victorious after the battle, cheers erupted from the crowd.

Later on, during a reading of his entire two hour inauguration address, chants from the crowd interrupted the speech, as several students jumped on their chairs and began shouting Harrison's campaign slogan: "Tippecanoe and Tyler Too!"

University Police were called to the scene to detain one individual who took his shirt off and began to run around the Student Union yelling over and over the president's last words. "I wish you to understand the true principles of the government. I wish them carried out. I ask nothing more."

Historical Leaders of America Club President senior Henry "Clay" Wallace said that while he did not condone the outburst, he could sympathize with the student's intentions.

"I think it just says a lot about the kind of man Harrison was," said Wallace. "His memory awakens a real sense of fervor. I think all of just want to be able to say we're doing our best to live in the Americea he envisioned."

When asked if Harrison was the best president of all time, Wallace said that's impossible to know.

"We never saw his true potential, that's for sure," he said. "But we have no idea what he was capable of doing. The two-term limit hadn't been established yet so it's possible he could have been president for 20 or 30 years."

The club will honor President Millard Fillmore at next month's meeting.

Garfield James can be reached at beardbarchetter@aol.com.

ARTS & LIVING

Local art snobs do hipster thing

A bunch of kids in tight jeans at People's Market were all holding signs and not really talking much the other day about some piece of art by some Spanish guy.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass loses, but they tried hard

The Minutemen lost today, but they tried really hard. They all deserve a big pat on the back. We are proud of them.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Morning Wood columnist Jayson O'Shea has a few tips for you would be Beirut champs out there. Hint: you are not on fire.

SEE PAGE 4

MorningWood.com

Log on to the MorningWood.com to check out obscene amounts of porn.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
XXX
JUST KIDDING
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Billy McSorley
MANAGING EDITOR Cardinal Richelieu
MANAGING WEB EDITOR Sweater P. Vest
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan the JetMan
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Jordan
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Some Broad
ADVERTISING MANAGER Biz Nass
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Mind Your ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Snooki Bavby
COMICS EDITOR May Q Laugh
EDITORIAL EDITOR Shorty Domino
NEWS EDITOR Rick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Coach Jeff
PHOTO EDITOR Amish Guy
IT MANAGER Steve Jobs
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Ken Lav
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Mom
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER USPS
CLASSIFIED MANAGER SWF, 22
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Party Boy USA
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Yoga Pants
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Eh Radford-Martin
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Ben Bernanke
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Dr. Phillis
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Danny DeVito
ASSISTANT NEWS Harvey Schlangberg
ASSISTANT NEWS Jennifer Lopez
ASSISTANT NEWS Peg Leg O'Houlihan
ASSISTANT SPORTS J-Ass
ASSISTANT SPORTS Sean William Scott
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Sandler
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell House
ASSISTANT PHOTO Weber Thesis
SENIOR PRODUCER Martha Stewart
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Townshend

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Michael Vick
COPY EDITOR
I'll edit your mom's copy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
The Rock

THE MASSACHUSETTS MORNING WOOD

THE BARTLETT STALL

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

When I want your opinion, I'll give it to you.
- Sam Goldwyn

WHINERS@MORNINGWOOD.COM

Safer Evolution

Brick Tamland

Hi! I'm Brick Tamland from Channel Four News. I'm here to talk about evolution.

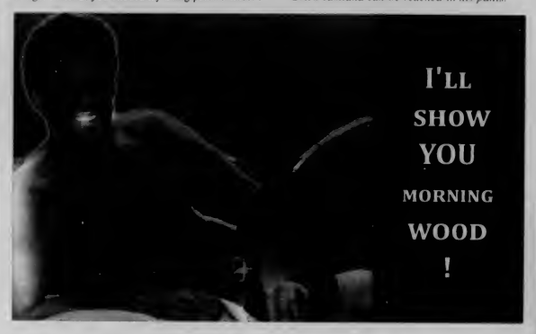
There's a lot of controversy out there about whether or not we evolved with the dinosaurs. But I love dinosaurs. The T-Rex is my favorite animal. And besides, pterodactyl tastes amazing. How can you hate dinosaurs? They are so cute and cuddly, and I just want to eat them all up.

I am being told now that the real argument is about monkeys. Many of my best friends are monkeys and anyone who insults monkeys is assaulting me. I love my monkey friends. Me and them are tight.

I mean if you can't love, how can you evolve with anyone? Evolving is God's greatest gift to mankind, right besides the lamp. How could I illuminate anything without my lamp? But you should always use protection when evolving. You don't want to get a nasty infection from not evolving with caution.

Speaking of caution I recently discovered that you should never stick silverware into a toaster to try and get that last bit of mayonnaise. Seriously, it stings. Instead, you should try using plastic ware. I recommend the spork. It's got great shape and can be used as both a spoon and a knife. Amazing.

But I would never recommend using a spork as a weapon. Good weapons include lead pipes, tridents, hand grenades, ninja stars and pens. I learned that last one the hard way when I stabbed myself with my pen while writing this column.



My editor is telling me that I have gone off topic. Back to safe evolution. Remember guys, never evolve with someone you don't know or trust. But if a stranger offers you candy from a white van, it's usually okay. My uncle gives out free candy every Saturday on College Street.

My favorite candy is watermelon Jolly Ranchers. They taste so good. And if you combine them with peanut butter it is the best thing ever. Plus, candy is a great way to get to know people. People love it when you hand out candy like Ecstasy and other bite sized treats.

If you are trying to meet people, I always like going to the park. I met my first girlfriend on a park bench. We talked for a while and then we parted. It was great. I learned from her that girls really like a guy who wears socks.

Well, that's all for me folks. Time to return to my pants. You stay evolving UMass.

Brick Tamland can be reached in his pants.

We needz healthcare fo' real

Oh hai.

I are editor kitteh an I believez taht we needz are hethcar. Millonz uv kittehz n hoomanz will now haf akzes 2 afurdball helth inzuranz. Us likez. Iz gud Preshidunt Obama carz so mush bout us, he mak shur we getz inshurants.

Kitehz need hethy hoomanz fur good nomz n stuff. N like wenz we ated 2 many cheezburgerz we gets halp fur cheeper tahn b4. Moshi imputandlee we gets covrage if we gets hurt doin big werdz.

Wif muneez saved frum medichairz Obama can putz in new monorail kittehz acroz nashun so we canz moof wifout carz. Or not moffz, cuz moovin ish tirin n we iz preferin bein in ur bed, stealin ur sleepz. U canz moof if u wantz 2.

Also, Obama can invesht in guvermnt cheezeburgerz wif teh muneez so no kitteh will be wifout cheezeburgerz.

Providin moar cheezeburgerz n ofer nomz ish importahnt fur Obamaz re-elcksshun strategy, cuz he promished us kittehz moar nomz if we voted fur him.

If no nomz we mite be voted fur Raf Nader in 2012 and not Obamaz. We wuz sushpishus of him earliez cuz he kiesh goggiez. He efen got hish dotterz goggiez after Nofember (2008 fur teh win).

But gud faif n reformz win ush kittehz ofer. But we not fooled n hope 2 Ceiling Cat dat our faif in Obamaz n Democratz not mishplaced.

Pluz Democratz sunds likesh tastee nomz n we likesh nomz. Om nom nom.

But Amer4chan peeplz needz MOAR reformz. Dis 1 doezn't go far nuff. We shuldz haf univershal free covrage. Dis 1 2 close 2 inshurantz companies.

Naow Obama canz end teh War in a Rock n Afganstan so we canz go after realz villan: teh Hamburgler. Kittehz sleep sound wen teh Hamburgler ish put in jale.

Mah armee uf ebil robotz willz swarm goggiez an tehn we nomz dem 2.

Dis reformz not soshlist. Tahtz ebil Republickin goggie lie ta dishcreit uz. Don lizen ta goggiez. Don lizen ta Republickenz. Tehy no nuffink.

Hefcare ish gud fur kittehz n hoomanz, efen if teh hoomanz are 2 stoopidz 2 notish dat untilz dey bedz asplode n tehy needz emergenshy medsisal carez in cloze hoshpital.

Kittehz n hoomanz haf inalyenble ritez to hefcare. Us freedomz dependz on it n we iz not takin "no" fur anshcr frum anybodiez.

Teh Republickin plan ish rong n stooped. If dey keepz blockin reformz, we nom dem, tehn we be in ur Kongrez, makin ur lawz.

DO NOT WANT Shentur Scott Brown anymoarz. Browniez gud nomz. Om nom nom. We likesh pizzehz 2.

Da Rpublikinz r reel meenyz. Dey wan evry1z munee but dnt wan to be nice to neone. Dey ohnlee cre bowt der profitz, not evn abowt my kitty mdisin. I knead ma kitty mdisin to b health cat. Insrnee cumpanyz wan my catnip 2 b reely xpensiv, and I tink dats unfare bcuz every1 shood be aybl 2 buy der catnip cheep.

Da Rpublikinz onlee r 4 demselves nd da biznezz dat boght dem 2 office. If dey didnt hav rich azhowes buying der cleeshun, dey nvr cood get 2 Washingtown. At lst Ohbahma wntz us all 2 b helthee, I lyke dat idee bcuz I dnt wan be sick. Pour ppl, 2, need cat nip, jus lyke da rest of us, and dats what Republikinz is try to stop. I think dats reel bad bcuz pour ppl work hard lyke evry1 else but just can has less munee. Jst bcuz Republickinz is rich and all has health care duznt meen they can has take it from every1 else. Dey think da fwee mkt should deside who can has health, I think then lots of ppl and cats will be sick, bcuz they dnt even have a market, espeshully not a fwee one.

We iz not lettin teh Republickinz be stealin our hefcare.

K Thx bai.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Morning Wood editorial board.

The gospel of divine coffee

Kopi Luwak

Rejoice students of the University of Massachusetts, your salvation is at hand. I have been blessed with a vision of Heaven and charged with a Holy Mission of preaching it to all who would be saved.

In my vision I saw a plant drowned in boiling water, but it was not destroyed. I saw the water turn black with the sinfulness of humankind and with its current, try to rip the plant to shreds, but it was not destroyed. Next I saw the hardy plant being driven through a giant's net and squeezed into a white nothingness. But it was not destroyed.

For the divine power that animates the universe was with the plant, was emanating from the plant, for the plant's name is Coffee.

Oh, yes, in Coffee we find our salvation. For Coffee is the energy and soul of the Universe. Coffee created the Universe eons ago out of itself, with a grinder and a French press. This is the truth of Coffee. But then the Trinity of Evil - Sanka, Nescafe and Percolator - emerged from the used grounds. A great battle was fought on the Jamaican Blue Mountain, ending with the imprisonment of the evil three in a Dunkin Donuts. But not before they poisoned the universe. That was how evil came to the Universe.

But all is not lost.

Coffee is with us still and will never dessert us. Remember that whenever we drink coffee, we are drinking Coffee. In the morning communion ritual we cleanse our souls and experience the heart-racing Peace of Coffee.

Reject Sanka and Nescafe and Percolator. Cast out their followers and dwell in the bosom of Coffee.

But before morning communion remember this prayer: "Our coffee, which art fair trade, hallowed be thy pot. Thy French press come, thy brew be done sooner than possible. Give us this day our daily caffeine and forgive us for going to Starbucks as we forgive those who go there. Lead us not into decaffeination, but deliver us from sleepiness. Amen."

Accept Coffee into your hearts and be saved.

Kopi Luwak is a Morning Wood columnist. She can be reached in the sweet aroma and warming steam found in every cup of coffee made with love.

Five reasons why

You should hook–up with me

1) I will respect you in the morning.

2) I'm sensitive to your needs, bitch.

3) The rash has finally gone away.

4) Justin Timberlake had to bring sexy back because I took it all.

5) I use Axe.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

Dear Editor,

I'm sick of people calling me and my family a bunch of sparkly, whiny douches. I can still rip their heads off with less effort than it takes you to swat a fly. Edward is the only one in my family who is a whiny douche and that's the last I want to hear of it, so there.

Carlisle Cullen, MD

Dear Editor,

Gib me mah bucket!

Lolrus

Dear Editor,

I was like soooo touched by Alex Perry's "Bad Romance" column. OMG I love that song!!!!!

Lady Gaga rules! Wooooooo! He looks really cute in that little photo, too.

Can I have his number?
Do you think he'd hook up with me?

Danielle Uggs
UMass student

Dear Editor,

We have been holding Chancellor Holub hostage here in Columbia. Please take him off our hands before he raises fecs on our jungle space again.

The Revolutionary Armed Forces of Columbia-People's Army

Dear Editor,

If the President does it, it is not illegal.

Richard M. Nixon

Dear Editor,

If the President does it, it ain't illegal—but it is kinky.

William Jefferson Clinton

Dear Editor,

Good grief: the Collegian is still printed on paper. Reading one is like reading a book made out of your mother: a horrible, dastardly crime. There is absolutely nothing redeeming about your planet-killing, tree-murdering criminal gang.

You are taking a dump on the chest of Social Justice every time you publish your rag.

Cal I. Rad
UMass student

Dear Editor,

Thank you for sending me those pictures of your intimate regions. I'm proud to be bringing sexy back to the U.S. Senate and I hope to do so for many years to come. Please accept this musky lock of my chest hair to cherish and keep for decades hereafter.

Senator Scott Brown, R-Mass

Dear Editor,

I write to decry your despeiable, hideous lack of attention to a serious crisis faeing our nation: the closure of our most important video store outlets.

Over the course of the last decade or so, insidious firms such as Netflix have driven our nation's patriotic home-video-retailers to the brink of obsolescence, and I've damn near had it! Outlets such as Blockbuster and Hollywood Video have fought long and hard over generations to provide Americans with their share of generic, homogeneous, synthesized family entertainment, and now Al Gore and his Global Warming Internet cronies wanna take it all away just like they took my daddy's farm and that one ball I caught that one time at the Paw Sox game.

This is despicable, and your esteemed publication has done nothing to stem this roraing tide.

Block Buster

THE MASSACHUSETTS MORNING WOOD

APATHY&DYING

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

CLOVECIGS@MORNINGWOOD.COM

Humans vs. Zombies vs. Quidditch Club

By Muggle Mudblood
Morning Wood Staff

Volda Mort, president of the University of Massachusetts' Quidditch Club, reportedly made some inflammatory remarks toward members of the Humans vs. Zombies community.

The incident which took place in the lobby of a Doubletree Inn in Boston following last Wednesday's Penny Arcade Expo might have escalated to physical violence, but as one onlooker later observed "I don't think they usually do, like, real fighting. Some of them yelled stuff in what sounded like Latin, and the rest of them shot foam darts. It was weird."

Reports vary as to the wording of Mort's initial comments, which were directed at a group of Humans vs. Zombies enthusiasts whom she apparently recognized. A member of the aforementioned group, who asked to remain nameless, had this to say, "We were just getting back from the expo center, heading to the elevator. We were going to order some CinnaStix and call it a night. And then out of nowhere, that girl Kristina is all 'go back to Transylvania, freaks!' totally uncalled for. Plus, that's vampires."

In an interview this Monday, Mort denied the specifics of those allegations, but admitted that she had been drinking that night:

"Look, I don't remember exactly what I said. I didn't say 'Transylvania,' though. I'm not an idiot." She went on to elaborate on the depth of her knowledge concerning mythical and imaginary creatures.

"Frankly, they wouldn't know a grue from a gryphon. These guys show up a few years ago, get all popular, think they're something. They're nothing; they're a fad."

She added that participants in the campus-wide game should "just grow up."

In a bizarre development at quidditch practice yesterday on Metawampee Lawn, the conflict took a turn for the worse when dozens of assailants in red bandannas swarmed the pitch and pretended to maul and eat the confused players. Only hours before the attack, we talked to Stanley Staypuft, a member of UMass' Humans vs. Zombies administrative team.

"This isn't some imaginary sport we're talking about. This is the imaginary apocalypse. What somebody like Volda Mort couldn't possibly understand is the difference between simulating a very possible future scenario and pretending there's magic and flying broomsticks what a joke," he said as he pumped his Nerf shotgun and spat on the floor.

The conflict is not restricted to the Pioneer Valley. Numerous reports from college campuses around the country confirm that there is a very real feud between the two fantasy competition leagues. In a skirmish on the central quad of the University of Michigan, one student was badly injured when a roman candle backfired into his eye. The student had thought that the firework "would look super cool, plus did you know zombies are weak against fire?"

Volda Mort continues to deny any wrongdoing in last Wednesday's confrontation at the Doubletree, but has repeatedly expressed her enthusiastic distaste for Humans vs. Zombies. "I can't really account for what I may or may not have said that night, but they deserved it. Have you seen them running around campus? They look ridiculous. Woah – hang on. There goes the Snitch." Mort thereupon took off in pursuit of a sprinting man wearing a gold unitard.

Muggle Mudblood can be reached at mmudblood@hogwarts.umass.edu

Humans vs. Zombie players rallied on the Student Union steps against the offensive remarks issued by Quidditch Club President. Though tensions remain between the two groups, the likelihood of actual fighting remains low as the groups rarely break from the rules dictated by their fantasy.

Freeman's Voice lauded, may bring world peace and profits

By Tea-Payne
Morning Wood Staff

Yesterday it was announced by the Norwegian Nobel Committee that the Voice of Morgan Freeman will be awarded the 2010 Nobel Peace Prize. Freeman's Voice is an actor commonly heard as the inspirational, savory narrator in a number of films, television shows, commercials, audio books, self-help DVDs, subway intercoms, political speeches, heart-to-heart talks, religious visions and inner monologues.

When asked why Freeman's Voice is to be awarded the Prize, the Nobel Committee chairman explained, "Any words spoken by his Voice inspire peaceful feelings amongst people. It is just generally awesome."

The committee said it was an easy decision: once they saw the Voice's nomination trailer, submitted by the Morgan Freeman Lobby of America and narrated by the Voice himself, there was unanimous consent. "Many of us teared up. I personally had to leave the room to call my wife and child. I had this uncontrollable sensation of love to spread. It was very emotional."

Freeman has told the Morning Wood that "while I'm glad for my Voice, I am a little disappointed that I am being cast to the sidelines. My Voice gets all the credit. I am the mind behind the Voice and that is more important than the Voice itself." When reached for comment, Freeman's Voice responded, "Freeman is just upset that I am finally getting the recognition I deserve. If he is pigeon-holed, it's his own fault, I'll say anything. And I mean anything."

Producer and rapper Kanye West was asked to comment on the turn of events, alluding to an all-too-public rivalry in the world of vocal talent. "I'm happy for his Voice and I'm gonna let it speak, but Beyonce's Voice is one of the best voices of all time!"

Studies have proven that Freeman's Voice is directly linked to uninhibited serotonin levels amongst audiences, and extreme periods of calmness and serenity are known to follow what some call "The Morgan Freeman Experience."

Scientists are baffled by the correlation but admit that it is not all that surprising. "I mean, it's just so smooth. Have you heard it? What are you doing later on? Do you want to come over my place after this? I have 'The Shawshank Redemption' on tape and I can set up some subwoofers. We can just hang out," said Dr. Leary at the Center for Anxiety Relief located in Cleveland.

The peaceful properties of Freeman's Voice were first discovered when it successfully negotiated a nuclear weapons treaty in the early 90s. Since then, Freeman has ended small-scale conflicts all over the Americas, even amongst people who do not speak English. While his voice has not been tested with larger, more deep-seated conflicts, the Morgan Freeman Lobby does make available remediation and divorce counseling podcasts on its website: www.morganfreemenow.org.

According to one presidential speechwriter who spoke on the condition of anonymity, President Obama will soon express interest in "harnessing Mr. Freeman's voice for its power as a force for hope and change" citing its ability to bring people together as a prime mover in his approach to the Middle East.

Officials are also testing the Voice's effectiveness in delivering emergency alerts and the State of Massachusetts is considering its possible use in court mandated anger management therapy materials. There are also rumors that a children's lullaby project featuring the Voice could be in the works. "Apart from all the 'hopey changey stuff,' so to speak, the commercial possibilities are endless, really," one producer explained.

The award ceremony is set to take place December 10, 2010. Psychologists predict that if enough of the world tunes in for the Voice's acceptance speech, World Peace may soon become a reality.

Tea-Payne can be reached on a boat.

Freeman will grasp his Nobel Prize this coming December. World leaders anxiously await the audience's reaction in hopes that The Voice's sothing tones will bring peace, while producers look to hypnotherapy audio book deal.

Escaped primates seek revenge

By Miso Sexy
Morning Wood Staff

In the past several years, a major point of contention at the University of Massachusetts has been our use of animals, specifically primates, for scientific experimentation. Along with Justice for Jason, and its less-popular counterpart Oppression of Omar, the University's primate experiments have drawn crowds of protesters and dozens of petitions by outraged students and lonely area hippies.

This week, however, the balance of power has shifted within the school's scientific community, as a group of chimpanzees have staged a revolt, escaping their cages and gaining freedom.

The breakout occurred Monday evening at the Holdsworth Natural Science building when, during a routine session of testing erectile dysfunction medication, the head researcher on duty was subdued by two chimps using the standard "you kneel behind him and I'll push" method of submission. Following the initial incident, five more chimps were freed by their cohorts and proceeded to sweep and secure the perimeter.

While it appears that no humans have been killed during this revolt, the chimpanzees have taken hostages, with the apparent intent of both obtaining revenge and bargaining with authorities. Currently in their custody are three doctoral researchers, five graduate students and one seriously confused freshman English major who was trying to find the Textbook Annex.

Local protest groups have flocked to this development in the case for animal rights, but seem to be unclear on what exactly they are rallying around.

"We support our primate brethren on throwing off the yoke of their colonial oppressors," said Starshine Waterfall McBride, leader of the local branch of the Coalition for the Liberation of Itinerary Tree-dwellers (CLIT). "They were here first, and they have the right to rule again!"

Some protesters are less supportive of this move by the chimps. "People are primates too," said a spokesman for the Liberating Apes Before Imprisoning Apes (LABIA) movement, "and they deserve to be free, no matter what those fascist kidnappers think they deserve."

Former NRA president Charlton Heston was also in the crowd, although when asked for comment he simply muttered something under his breath about "damn dirty apes" and wandered off.

The leader of the chimpanzees, known only as Bobo, has made a list of demands, although local authorities have failed to find an interpreter. All efforts at hostage negotiation have ended in failure, with the default response of bared fangs and thrown feces.

What this means for the University's proud tradition of animal testing is unclear. Also in question is the future of UMass' equally proud Animal Rights hippies. What is sure is that students should exercise caution when attending science classes of all kinds. Until an example is made of the apes, no lab creature, from parrots to paramecium, can be trusted.

Miso Sexy can be reached at kissmyring@gmail.com.

Chimps took up arms against their former captors at the Holdsworth Natural Science building. Area hippies gathered in protest of animal cruelty soon fleed for their safety under fire from chimp feces.

Cameron plays God with Bible

By Barf Body
Morning Wood Staff

At a press conference yesterday, a visibly giddy James Cameron confirmed recent rumors surrounding a possible screen adaptation of the ancient Judeo-Christian holy text the Bible.

"It is true what many of you have heard," said Cameron, whose 2009 environmentalist sci-fi epic "Avatar" replaced his own 1997 nautical disaster romance "Titanic" as the all-time highest grossing movie worldwide. "I think we're all ready for this. I have certainly been ready for some time. I am going to film the Holy *ing Bible."

Cameron will be directing the project, as well as co-executive producing with colleague Peter Jackson. Jackson is also slated to co-write the adapted screenplay with his two writing partners from "The Lord of the Rings" trilogy. We tried to reach him for details on the script, but the power is out in New Zealand.

When questioned on the screenplay at last night's press conference, Cameron was adamant:

"The whole thing. We're making the whole *ing thing. You don't think we can? I swear to God we can do it." He then glared at the crowd for about thirty seconds, adding, "next question."

After the groundbreaking commercial success of "Avatar," Cameron apparently went into immediate talks with 20th Century Fox regarding the scope of his next project.

"I was so amped. I asked them – I said 'what's bigger than the Titanic, bigger than Skynet, bigger than Pandora – I mean, what's bigger than a *ing planet, right? God. We are going to make God.' And so it shall be."

Cameron went on to make a slew of boastful statements on the subject, claiming the respective destructions of Sodom and Gomorrah were going to be "indescribable."

"And the tower of Babel? When that thing falls, holy nuts, it is going to make 9-11 look like Jenga Jr. The Red Sea thing is going to be magnificent, too, just magnificent. Like, at least a thousand times taller than any previous depiction."

Prompted about the relative tameness of the New Testament, he admitted that "most of that preachy Jesus stuff can be slipped into montages, or whatever," but added that, "Revelations is really going to knock your dick in the dirt."

Beyond revealing that the production budget was largely allocated for the CGI rendering of the film's central protagonist, God, he would not comment on the specifics of the film's finances.

"What do you want? I mean look, it's the kind of money murder's made of. I'll tell you one thing, it'll cost a little more than 'District *ing 9,' that's for damn sure."

"Back to God, though," he continued, with a maniacal shine in his eye, "we have some pretty big plans. IMAX was just the beginning, you see. We've been working on these new cameras – the level of visual stimulation you can expect is going to be absolutely inconceivable."

Cameron reluctantly conceded that the projection methods involved in the production are still undergoing tests.

"We're meeting with representatives from the Federal Commissions of both Communications and Health, but I think – as long as they experience this for themselves – they'll see things our way."

He then clenched a fist and pressed his teeth. He added, "they have to."

"In closing, I would like to thank all of you for coming to bear witness to this momentous announcement. We are, as I have said in the past, changing the way you see movies. Never before has a creative team approached this order of magnitude in film-making."

"Now, before your new God," Cameron added.

Bringing a close to the proceedings, he touched a translucent orb, and his image flickered and then vanished.

Barf Body can be reached at idontcarewhatthinkis@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS MORNING WOOD

STICKS AND BALLS AND WEED AND BONGS

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

YOURMAMA@MORNINGWOOD.COM

Harris, Putney lead UM to championship

By Doug Wiggins
I Wish I Stayed Out of Trouble

Failing to qualify for both the NCAA Tournament and the National Invitational Tournament, the Massachusetts men's basketball team settled for participating in the UMass Recreation Center Pick-up Invitational Tournament…thing.

Over the weekend, five members of the Minutemen entered the Rec Center looking to lead No. 1 seed UMass to the championship. At the guards, the Minutemen started Lex Mongo and David Gibbs, while Ricky Harris, Hashim Bailey and Raphael Putney anchored the frontcourt.

What would normally be an undersized unit, UMass stood tall above its competition, which consisted of 5-8 freshmen and 170-pound sophomores. Though the Minutemen had the experience of playing in Division I basketball, their opponents were not far behind, having played in multiple cartoon league championships.

To win the championship, UMass would need to win three games up to 11 points. There would be no clock, which seemingly favored the Minutemen who simply ran out of time in many games this season.

The Minutemen showed signs of rust in the first game, after not playing since their loss in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament to Richmond on March 12.

Unable to get off to a quick lead, they missed their first 10 shots from beyond the arc. Despite having a size advantage in the paint, UMass relied on the 3-point shot much like it did all season long.

The opposition took advantage and surprisingly took an early 5-0 lead. Harris, as he's known to do, quickly drained four 3-pointers to put the Minutemen ahead, 8-5. The other team though, went back to its mismatch on the other end of the floor, giving the ball to its center who weighed just south of 250 pounds. He was able to out-muscle Putney down low, and scored on three consecutive possessions to tie the game at eight apiece.

Refusing to suffer a first-round upset, Harris hit a running bank shot off the glass before nailing an NBA-range 3-pointer for the 11-8 win. The first game would serve as a warm-up for UMass, which steamrolled its opponent in the semifinals.

Game two featured Harris hitting six 3-pointers, which was one point more than the Minutemen needed for the win. Nevertheless, Harris was on fire, so why waste energy to attack the basket. On defense, UMass ran the 2-3 zone, as all five players locked down the opposition to earn the 11-0 shut-out.

Though the Minutemen earned their spot in the championship game, the contest sapped a lot of energy from the team.

Playing without time or a bench, UMass began to fatigue in the finals and started to take risks and make mistakes. Bailey stayed on the offensive end after a couple missed baskets and attempted to cherry-pick points. The gamble, however, didn't pay off as the Minutemen allowed three points while picking up none.

About midway through the game, UMass got an opportunity to tie the contest at six, but were hit with a questionable charging call on Putney. Somehow, an opposing player fell down after being bumped by Putney, which seemed like a flop to everyone in attendance.

Then, with both teams tied at nine, Gibbs got an opportunity to seal the win in transition when he found himself wide open for a three. Initially hesitating, Gibbs finally pulled the trigger after shouts from his teammates, taking his first shot of the tournament. The ball went halfway through the basket before excruciatingly rimming out, keeping the game knotted.

On the ensuing possession, Mongo made the play of the tournament with a defensive strip before finding Harris in transition for the game-winning trey. UMass celebrated at midcourt before being presented the Rec Center Trophy for its championship effort. Harris was named MVP as he scored all 33 points for the Minutemen on the day.

As URCPIT champions this season, UMass looks to repeat next year and raise another proud banner.

Doug Wiggins can be reached at takemebackB@hotmail.net.

Ricky Harris increased his draft status with 33 points in the Co-Rec tournament, leading the Minutemen to victory over the weekend.

Gibbs tears ACL after slipping on coaches, Kellogg needs gel

By John Calipari
SAT Proctor

Sophomore David Gibbs tore his ACL during a closed rehabilitation practice while playing 1-on-1 with Massachusetts men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg.

Earlier this year, Gibbs broke his left foot during practice on Feb. 2 and missed the rest of the season.

A player who chose to remain off the record said Kellogg had to put more gel on his hair after he realized that he missed a spot earlier this morning. Somehow, Kellogg still managed to play tough UMass defense, the way he always preaches in practice.

The player watching the incident said that while Kellogg was multitasking his coaching and fashion responsibilities simultaneously, he spilled his bottle of gel on the floor, causing the point guard to slip.

UMass Media Relations confirmed the injury, but had no comment otherwise besides a brief statement.

"David Gibbs will not be playing for the Minutemen throughout the 2010-11 season due to unfortunate circumstances that went on while he was recovering from his broken foot," the statement read.

The nameless player had plenty of criticism for his fallen point guard.

"It's one thing to miss so much of the season because of a basketball-related injury, but he should've at least watched where he was going," he said. "Everyone knows the only reason why we won our first Atlantic 10 tournament game in 2002 was because our coach doubled his usual gel intake."

Junior Gary Correia was filling out his transfer papers for Boston University for the second time after Kellogg designated freshman Freddie Riley as the starting point guard for next year when he heard the news.

Correia stopped mid-signature and told Kellogg that he wants to finish out his senior year with the Minutemen before he becomes an assistant coach.

"I'm saddened to hear that Gibbs won't be playing for us next year," Correia said before rethinking his words. "F—k it, I can't tell a lie. I just don't want to play behind Gibbs. Otherwise, you'd never see me come to this part of Massachusetts again."

UMass held an open practice later that day and, Kellogg surprised his team with a shaved haircut. Center Hashim Bailey stopped in the middle of a layup drill and fainted while the rest of the team just looked confused.

Gibbs talked to the media after practice and decided that basketball was no longer for him. He now has a part-time job with Bucci selling hair products to Amherst residents.

Send all hate tweets to JOHNCALIPARI, and be sure to download my iPhone application

Wellman, Marcou, Braun to return to UMass in the fall

By Barry Melrose
Morning Wood Staff

With four players from the 2009-2010 Massachusetts hockey team signing free agent contracts since the end of the season, it appeared their professional careers were set to take off.

But according to the General Managers of the Minnesota Wild and San Jose Sharks, the careers of Casey Wellman, James Marcou, Justin Braun and Matt Irwin will have to wait until next season for that to happen. Wellman signed with the Wild on March 16 and Marcou and Irwin signed with the Sharks on March 23, with Braun joining San Jose a day later.

"After taking a look at Wellman's two years at UMass, we decided not to play him in the second half of this season," Minnesota's General Manager Chuck Fletcher said on Wednesday. "While our chances are pretty slim of making the NHL playoffs – we're nine points behind the final spot in the Western Conference – having someone who has a history of collapses in the second half of a season and in playoff runs, we just felt it wasn't worth the risk."

San Jose has decided to take a similar approach with its three recent free agent signings, despite being in a different position. While Marcou, Braun and Irwin are currently playing with the Sharks' AHL affiliate, the Worcester Sharks, the organization decided it would be better to not take any chances.

"You know, we're holding onto first place in the West with a five-point cushion with six games to go, but we don't have that No. 1 spot locked up yet," Sharks General Manager Doug Wilson said. "Even with those three UMass players playing in Worcester, we're pretty sure, given UMass' recent end-of-the-year struggles, that it just wouldn't be a good idea, leave it at that, OK?"

"We have no doubt that those three men can play the game of hockey in the first half of any season – we've seen it throughout their careers – but when it gets to the half-way point of the season, just something happens and we're not willing to let that possibly take down our whole organization."

Both Fletcher and Wilson said all four will be playing at the beginning of next season, possibly starting because of their tremendous first-half talent. But both General Mangers stated that the organizations felt it was in the best interest of all of their teams if, again in the second half, of next season the players hang up their skates.

"The front office of the Minnesota Wild has decided that going forward this way will be the plan for Wellman – play the first half of the season and then stay at least 50 miles away from the team at all times in the second half of the season," Fletcher said. "The Wild will then reevaluate the plan each year and make adjustments accordingly."

Fletcher says the Wild are ready to force Wellman to stay even further away from the team in the second half of later seasons if the team experiences any sort of second half collapse next season.

Barry Melrose can be reached at thestellgamesinmanpolo@morningwood.com.

Muff Divers ready to get uniforms dirty with former MLB players

By Bardia Razzaghi
Morning Wood Staff

The 2010 Men's Intramural Softball season commences today, and the intramural fields will soon be home to slick fielding plays, big swings of the bat, and web-gem catches in the outfield. Yet, we cannot know where we are going unless we know where we came from, and the 2009 Intramural Softball season was all about the Muff Divers. Cast off as losers in the Fall 2008 tournament and their short-lived playoff run in the Spring 2008, the Muff Divers (then the Posadamizers) met following their last inning defeat and made a pact: to go undefeated and win the championship in the spring. Some worked tirelessly, both in the gym and on the diamond, to improve all facets of their game.

They made sacrifices and gave up many of their lifelong college dreams and goals to dedicate themselves to a common goal. They did not let the rankings go to their heads, although the figures were very impressive. As one of the most competitive seasons began, teams looked as loaded as ever.

The Muff Divers were ranked pre-season number one at UMass and number 16 in the New England Collegiate Intramural Softball Association, and they did not let the rankings down. How they got there, though, is a story unto itself.

Bringing the team together was a challenge.

The loss took a heavy toll on the players, and many went their separate ways after making the pact. Catcher Jason Montes, who was awarded the Bronze Bomber award for his crushing blows at bat, came back from a semester in California and doubling as Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson's stuntman to compete.

"I wasn't sure what to expect when I left, but when I got the phone call that we were going to assemble the team for another championship run, there was no way that I could turn it down."

Right fielder Chris Chistolini, who was training for the Beer Olympics and Oktoberfest, decided to exchange the brews for the balls. First baseman Jim Dailey, who was deep in the mountains of Jamaica on a quest to find his inner Zen, decided he belonged on the sod of the Intramural Fields and not on a beach.

Third baseman Adam Rubin had spent some time working on a Sport Science project determining what the difference between being and not being an accountant has on his bat speed and glove work. Short fielder Josh Levine challenged Jamaican sprinter Usain Bolt to a race around the bases and ruptured his Achilles in the process, putting his eligibility for the 2010 season in jeopardy.

Despite all of the off-field distractions, the team was able to buckle down and focus on the season. Redemption was the theme they carried throughout the season, and they played with the fire of a spurned woman.

In the short four-game season, there is little room for error. They had been there before, however, only two seasons ago. Ineligible players forced the team to forfeit two games with only two remaining, and they needed to win out in order to make the playoffs.

They did, but ultimately the stress and pressure was too much and they collapsed in the Sweet 16. In 2009, there were no excuses. They pummeled the first two teams in their season-opening doubleheader to lock up a playoff spot, and continued their slaughter of the Arctic Division, carrying the momentum into the playoffs. After squeaking out a win in the semifinal game by coming back and winning in the final inning, the team looked poised to have another collapse similar to the 2008 Fall Tournament.

But captain Eric Frost would not let that happen.

"We came too close (in the tournament), we couldn't let this one get away," He said.

Chistolini rallied the troops, knowing that he would never get this chance again.

"This was my last shot. I stayed an extra semester because I wanted the opportunity to play for a championship. I wanted it more than I wanted anything in my entire life," Chistolini mused.

The Muff Divers went on to win, 3-2, and with the victory, destiny had been fulfilled. Third baseman Adam Rubin was overcome with emotion and broke down into tears in his post-game interview. The prophecy had been fulfilled, but one question still remained: Would they play the next year with the same fire that brought them the championship?

Since the victory, the team has gone corporate. Players have become the spokesmen for corporations from Viagra (Chistolini) to Hood Skim Milk (Dailey). The players aren't the only ones that have gone corporate; the team has as well. The sponsorship of the Muff Divers by Amherst Crepene (Opening Soon in Downtown Amherst) and the Facebook Fan page are two examples of a team which has taken their popularity and ran with it. Yet, one individual has gone in the opposite direction. Left fielder Andy Weinstein has dedicated himself to non-profit organizations, founding a grassroots softball program called "The Little Muffers," which is sure to ensure that the legacy of the Muff Divers will never die.

This season looks to be the most challenging for the Muff Divers. The Championship hangover has plagued many teams in the past, but the team will tell you that it will never happen to them.

"We are too hungry. We got an appetizer last year, this year we are ready for the entree," says shortstop Dan Jette, who is back and healthy after having two successful knee replacement procedures. Jette had been previously playing on two artificial ACL's, but since he became the spokesperson for University Health Services in their fight against mid-day naps, he was able to afford the expensive procedure. The Muff Divers have lost Chistolini but have added in his place the highly touted prospect Mark DiFillipo, who was in the Muff Divers AAA team for the past two seasons and is ready to play.

"I feel great," says DiFillipo, who has had multiple plasma injections in his spine in an effort to wrangle two floating discs. "The treatment is going well and I am excited to play."

DiFillipo will fill the gap in right field, but the team has announced it will play the first third inning with right field unoccupied in memory of Chistolini, the heart of the team. The rest of the lineup will remain the same, only with Adam Rubin leading off followed by the big bat of Andy Weinstein. The offense will be potent and the defense will be stifling, and that does not bode well for the rest of the intramural hopefuls who will take the field in hopes of knocking off Goliath.

Their only hope will be that the Muff Divers will be lacking in the mental aspect of the game, but Eric Frost quickly retorted that, "We are ready to mash. Good luck."

They are going to need it.

You can watch the Muff Divers play every Thursday at 7 p.m. on the fields next to the Mullins Center. Come early, as there are only standing room seats left on Ticketmaster.

Bardia Razzaghi can be reached at tuffmuffia.sexisoftballz.net.

UM athletics announces plans to finally fund sports teams

By Rick Pitino
Morning Wood Staff

In a highly unexpected statement Wednesday, University of Massachusetts Chancellor Robert Holub and Athletic Director John McCutcheon announced the dawn of a new era in UMass athletics.

Before a crowd of reporters, alumni, students and community members, the pair shared their vision for the future of sports at UMass: funded athletics programs.

While it will certainly take a vigorous fundraising drive to make this vision a reality, Holub and McCutcheon appeared confident that they could make it happen.

"We're not going to reveal all of the specifics just yet, but let me tell you this much: by next fall, our men and women in maroon and black will be out there competing, at varsity status, in official uniforms, with regulation equipment, and may even be able to travel to other schools for competition," said McCutcheon as Holub nodded approvingly. "Like I said, these plans are all still in the works, but we are going to fund our athletics."

Holub appeared virtually teary-eyed, a glint in his face beaming as he took the podium.

"It gives me great pleasure to announce this milestone achievement in the history of the University of Massachusetts," he said. "No longer will we be the only major state university to support the local regional high school's athletics in lieu of our own programs."

While no specifics have yet been revealed of how the University will finance the funding hike, rumors buzzed within the administration that the school may start a booster club or that it may seek more state aid.

"I hear we're going to even charge money for the games, we could, even, turn a profit," said Joyce Hatch, vice chancellor for administration and finance. "Imagine that," she quipped, "making money of sports, oh my God, I'm tickled," she continued, forcing back muffled giggles.

Within the athletic department, reactions to the funding announcement were mixed, with some players ecstatic at finally being able to compete against other colleges, while administrators and coaches complained of an increased workload.

"Oh, great, 'funding,'" said men's swimming and diving coach Russ Yarworth, "now we'll have money for 'swimsuits' and 'chlorine,' what are they going to give us next, our own pool," he queried rhetorically, rolling his eyes and tossing a pen from his clipboard onto the ground.

Cher King, a senior on the field hockey squad, was happier with the development than Yarworth.

"I just always knew that with this whole field hockey team idea, maybe one day we could actually field a team and compete in games and maybe even win them, like I was promised when I came here," she said. "I am just so happy, but now we will have to practice and I will be so tired."

Others inside the athletic department met the news with lukewarm reactions.

"Well, you know what they say about UMass," said assistant athletic director Garrett Waller. "don't like the funding one day, wait till tomorrow."

"I'm just really happy to finally be tasked with some responsibilities, like scheduling games, coordinating academic and biographical data with the NCAA, maybe even catching a couple of games, this is going to rock," said Assistant Director Matt Korner. "Frankly I'm not even sure what we've been doing here all this time without any funding."

Other departments saw the announcement as a grim harbinger that maybe they, too, would receive funding.

"Oh dear, they're going to start paying for the sports programs?" remarked a visibly stirred Penny Remsen, chair of the theater department. "Does this mean we're going to have to start producing plays, with sets and casts and lighting, and a theater, where are we going to get that. This is horrible, I've got to run," she quipped, before pulling out her chair and fleeing her office.

"Data not processing, system error, concept of University giving department money cannot be rendered through server," said Andrew Barto, chair of the computer science department, as he painstakingly fumbled with the department's one 40-foot wall-length computer, a web of tangled cables and wires. "Insufficient file space for concept of school finance, no program available to operate," continued Barto, "system shutting down," as he slunk towards the floor.

While it remains unclear exactly how much UMass will fund its athletics programs, Holub and McCutcheon assured weary students and alumni the Minutemen absolutely would not be allowed to win any future games.

Rick Pitino can be reached at slymeball@louisville.edu.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM APRIL 2, 2010

HI 77 LO 49

inside this issue:

Exploring wins

SEE PAGE 16

Wizzing into NoHo

SEE PAGE 7

No charges in crash

SEE PAGE 2

Spring Legacy Tour comes to Campus Center to raise awareness
See page 3

Invisible Children of Uganda make selves seen

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 44

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.75 • STUDENT $7.50 (WITH ID)
CULT CLASSIC SERIES
EVERY FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
TICKETS ONLY $5 EACH!
APRIL 9th and10th
WAYNE'S WORLD
HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 145 415 645 915
◆ CLASH OF THE TITANS- 2D [PG13] 100 215 335 450 610 725 845 1000
◆ THE LAST SONG [PG] 105 425 725 1015
◆ TYLER PERRY'S WHY DID I GET MARRIED TOO? [PG13] 115 410 715 1010
◆ HOT TUB TIME MACHINE [R] ① 130 440 745 1030
ALICE IN WONDERLAND - 2D [PG] 210 455 740 1020
DIARY OF A WIMPY KID [PG] 120 400 650 915
THE BOUNTY HUNTER [PG13] 150 445 730 1025
CineArts
SHUTTER ISLAND - [R] ① 1005
THE GHOST WRITER - [PG13] 125 415 710 1000
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

No charge in crash

Driver who hit UM student in Feb. collision will not be held responsible

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

Charges will not be filed against the driver of a vehicle that struck and seriously injured a recent University of Massachusetts graduate who was crossing a stretch of highway in Sunderland, where at least four other pedestrians have been hit by cars in the past five years.

While walking on a crosswalk between the 7-Eleven and Cliffside Apartments on Route 116 in Sunderland shortly after 6 p.m. on Feb. 26, Casey Lee Patterson, 22, of Whitman, Mass., was hit by a Nissan pickup truck driven by Philip J. Rocasah, 68, of 16 Silver Lane in Sunderland, according to police.

At least two witnesses – a UMass student and an off-duty police dispatcher – as well as the driver said Patterson entered the crosswalk while the "do not walk" symbol was lit and that a recently installed traffic light at the crosswalk was green as Rocasah's truck passed through, said a Sunderland police investigation.

That investigation found the truck was traveling less than 34 miles per hour in the 40 mph zone and that, "there are no signs of improper operation by the driver of the vehicle," Sunderland Police Chief Jeffrey Gilbert also told The Daily Hampshire Gazette Wednesday that no charges would be filed against Rocasah, but Gilbert was not available for comment yesterday.

While in a "semiconscious" state at the hospital, Patterson told police she remembered pushing the walk button before crossing the highway, but "couldn't understand why she was hit."

However, in a March 19 Facebook post, Patterson said, "Listen, the light was red when I started crossing, and the stop line next to the crosswalk is literally less than 3 feet away from it. It was impossible to notice he had crossed it until I woke up 60 ft away. He was speeding, he ran a red light through a crosswalk."

Yesterday, Patterson posted, "Police report found that the guy who hit me was 100% NOT at fault," and in response to more than a dozen subsequent comments expressing disappointment in the police department's decision not to file charges, Patterson responded, "My attorney is on it, don't worry."

A woman who answered the phone as Rocasah's listed address said he did not want to comment on the matter. An automated message said that the number listed for Patterson in the University's student directory "is not a working number." Messages sent Thursday to Patterson via Facebook and her student e-mail were not returned.

Patterson, who was living in the nearby Squire Village Apartments at the time and, according to her Facebook graduated from UMass in 2009, was carried on the truck's hood for around 40 feet until the vehicle stopped. She was thrown from the hood causing her to tumble around 50 feet farther, said the police report written by the responding officer, Joshua S. Harris.

She was transported to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield and suffered multiple fractures to her vertebrae, a broken left wrist and facial lacerations, the report said. According to Patterson's Facebook, she spent around two weeks in rehab at the Bronson Rehabilitation Center at Noble Hospital in Westfield, Mass., and appears to be

See HIT on page 4

COURTESY FACEBOOK.COM

UMass student Casey Patterson was struck by a vehicle Feb. 26 in Sunderland.

The DAILY COLLEGIAN
IS NOW HIRING
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER
We are looking for a student to manage DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM and our related web presences for the upcoming FALL 2010 semester and beyond!
Experience with [illegible] tools; Analytics; and [illegible] (MultiEdit, JavaScript, PHP, [illegible]) a background in [illegible]
Please send cover letter with relevant [illegible] and resume to [illegible]@dailycollegian.com

Working towards achieving visibility

Human rights group Invisible Children addresses UMass

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Survivor of the Ugandan War and Invisible Children activist Innocent Opwanya told UMass about human rights issues in Uganda Thursday.

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

One man Joseph Kony, and his army have horrified five nations in Africa for 20 years, abducting and training thousands of children as soldiers and slaying those opposed to his militia, the Lord's Resistance Army. But his political motivations and relentless murders have not gone without opposition or response.

Invisible Children, a non-profit group which has raised awareness and advocated for the end of Kony's tyranny since 2003, brought over 200 attendees together last night in the University of Massachusetts' Campus Center auditorium for the Invisible Children Spring 2010 Legacy Tour presentation – a 10-week tour visiting different regions of the U.S.

The event began with an Invisible Children documentary screening, based on the experiences of three filmmakers, Jason Russell, Laren Poole and Bobby Bailey, while they attempted to find a story to film in Africa. They arrived first in Sudan, but quickly found an untold story waiting in Uganda, specifically in the northern city of Gulu, where they found thousands of children fleeing from the LRA each night and children involved unwillingly in the LRA.

The documentary chronicled children who had fled from their vulnerable villages to shelters, where they would huddle side by side each night, hiding from the LRA. The children, mostly orphans, were invisible to the rest of the world and the Ugandan government. This greatly impacted the filmmakers, and upon their return to the U.S., they started Invisible Children in San Diego, Calif.

The staff of Invisible Children said since the documentary, the LRA has retreated from northern Uganda, and the children no longer walk at night to shelters.

Invisible Children has come to the aid of the ravaged people of Uganda, forming schools and scholarships for former child soldiers and those affected by the war.

The Legacy Tour promotes a program where donors give a monthly individual contribution of $35 to a fund dispersed throughout a secondary school in Uganda. Another Invisible Children scholarship funds Ugandan students participating in college, with $65 enough to cover a student's monthly fee.

"It's surprising to see how much even $35 can do," said freshman Amanda Davis. "It's only three or four nights of giving up wings."

After the documentary, the Invisible Children staff Roadies introduced Opwanya Innocent, a 20 year-old former LRA child solider, and freshman at the Kampala International University in Uganda. He stood on stage with a white sweatshirt and gray t-shirt, though Innocent proved to be a college student with quite a different background than most.

See CHILDREN on page 4

Smith College REC Council presents
Jay Sean with special guest
Naughty By Nature
Thurs. April 8, 8pm
Smith College,
John M. Greene Hall
Tickets can be purchased at the Smith College Campus Center, UMASS Amherst Tix Unlimited, Northampton Box Office
(413) 586-8686, and at http://smith.tickets.musictoday.com
For more information please call (413) 585-2639.
$ 15 - Smith College Students
$ 20 - Five College Students
$ 25 - General Public

Lining up to see Ludacris

MATT ROCHELEAU/ COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of students lined up outside the Mullins Center box office Thursday morning awaiting the opportunity to pick up their ticket to Spring Concert 2010.

Ugandan Children raise human rights awareness

CHILDREN from page 3

He was taken from his village in Gulu and forced to participate in the LRA until he had the opportunity to flee. After fleeing, Innocent described how he was able to study and prepare for his dream – to change Uganda's government and create peace in a country that has seen war for some two decades. Making his attendance of Kampala International University possible is the Legacy Scholarship.

As for Uganda's future, Invisible Children hopes to be there along the way, and so does Innocent.

"Uganda needs somebody fresh," said Innocent, who announced he plans to run for president of Uganda in 2021.

"I need to forget about my past and start moving on," said Innocent of his motivation to change the political landscape of Uganda.

Invisible Children's influence on the U.S. government may be manifesting itself if the "LRA Disarmament & Northern Uganda Recovery Act 2009" is passed by the House of Representatives in the coming weeks.

"You've got to start somewhere, the bill is a huge first step," said UMass senior Danielle Soto.

Other than the potential for the act to be signed by President Obama, Innocent said, "We are going to the UN headquarters, and this is the perfect chance to talk about the condition of the war."

The Act, if passed would address three ongoing problems in Uganda; the U.S. would work with Uganda, The Democratic Republic of Congo and Sudan to enforce peace, it would work to keep innocent civilians protected, and it would help rebuild Uganda.

Omara Christo, Innocent's mentor is confident in his aspirations.

"He's seen the injustices, what the government is lacking. He knows first hand. He wants to change injustice and is the perfect candidate for doing so," said Christo.

As for the 10-week tour in New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut Innocent said, "I love it." He has the semester off from Kampala International University to tour and will return to Kampala in May to continue his studies in economics and statistics.

The event was sponsored by UMass sorority Iota Gamma Upsilon.

For more information on Invisible Children or to contribute to the Legacy Scholarship visit, www.invisiblechildren.com and www.invisiblechildren.com/the-Movement/National_Tour.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

Driver not at fault in Feb. accident recovering without any major complications.

HIT from page 2

Patterson became at least the fifth pedestrian to be hit by a vehicle along that section of Rte. 116 since Dec. 2004, according to The Springfield Republican.

Jessica Hayes, a 25-year-old UMass employee, was struck by a car and died in the Dec. 2004 accident there, according to The Republican. That car's driver was charged with vehicular homicide, but was eventually acquitted by a jury, said the Springfield-based newspaper.

Around two years later, a 56-year-old man was seriously injured there, and in Sept. 2009, two women were struck by a pickup truck while walking in the same crosswalk as Patterson.

Following the most recent accident, more than $2 million were spent to improve the safety conditions on that section of Rte. 116, according to The Republican. Reducing the speed limit from 45 to 40 mph, installing a traffic light, improving sidewalk conditions and building a pedestrian island were among the changes made there.

With apartment complexes and bus stops on either side of the highway, along with a shopping plaza that includes a 7-Eleven, a liquor store, a pizza shop and a Dunkin' Donuts on one side, the area can see heavy pedestrian traffic from local residents and college students alike.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

LETTER to the EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed, but can be found

Dear Editor,

Yesterday was April Fools Day, a day of lighthearted pranks that announce the start of spring. One group of students, all of whom shall remain anonymous, decided to celebrate the holiday with a prank where two of them dressed up as apes and chased another who was carrying a number of bananas through various large lecture halls.

Ultimately, this was a harmless prank, disrupting maybe 20 seconds of each class. Most of the teachers appreciated the April Fools joke, and in fact, when the group went through Mahar, one incident was right before the start of an exam and served as a stress reliever for students about to take the test.

One professor, however, did not appreciate the April Fools prank.

The runaway apes with bananas were accompanied by a select few people, and I was among them. After one of our chases through a lecture hall, we stood outside of the classroom giggling about how well the prank had gone. I should make one thing clear: I am not in any way trying to justify our behavior in any way. We were being childish, immature and dumb college students.

The professor came out to talk to us. And by came out and talked to us, I mean he stormed out, slamming the door into the wall in the process. This man was livid. We realized that we had angered him, felt bad about it and expected a stern talking to about our behavior. Rather than coming out to sternly talk to us, he came out and began yelling at us, threatening us with physical violence, and leaving the class for over two minutes. A bigger disruption than we had created.

We apologized, of course, and told him that we meant no harm and that it was just an April Fools Day joke. Of course he was right to be angry, we disrupted his class and not everyone appreciates a prank on April Fools Day. This is not an attack on the professor; we should have used better discretion when deciding who we would prank.

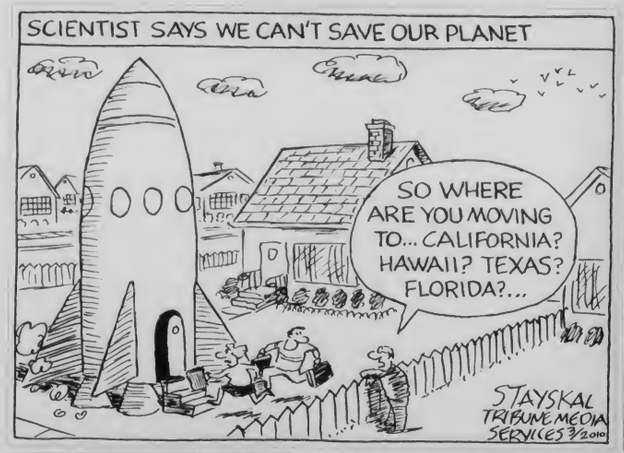
But, the puzzling thing about this is that he didn't yell at us about why we shouldn't do things like this and that what we did is inappropriate for our age.

That, I could have at least understood. Instead, he immediately went off the deep end, barely touching upon the behavior in general. We weren't even the people who had run through his class. But he still threatened us with physical violence, and as expected – thankfully – never acted on it.

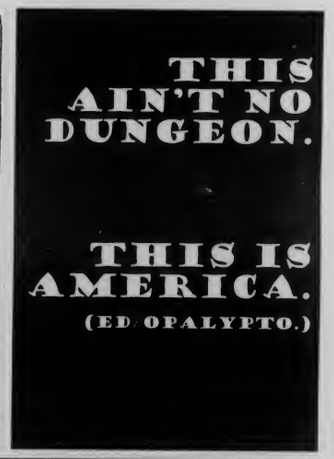
While this is one isolated incident, I think it highlights an important point: proper conduct when reprimanding at a student. Yes, some students deserve to be yelled at. However, there are certain guidelines that should be followed when yelling at a student.

One: Don't just angrily threaten a student. Even if you want to punch them, don't just straight out say it. Instead, tell them what they did wrong, why it was wrong, and basically shame them. At the very least, just tell them not to ever do it again and leave it at that. We are college students and I would like to think that a lot of us respect the authority of professors. We will listen.

Two: Threatening anyone with physical violence is not appropriate behavior. I cannot stress this enough. Violence is a terrible thing and threatening someone, while maybe inspiring fear, does not do anything really constructive.



Three: It's April Fools day, lighten up. I know this contradicts what I just said, but it is April Fools day. We meant no harm, we were just trying to have some fun and get some laughs. There is no reason to get too angry about something like that, especially for a class disruption that barely lasted 20 seconds. It is April Fools Day. You should expect to see at least one prank throughout the day. Life isn't any fun without some humor and if you weren't happy with us fine, that's fine, but at least try to understand where we are coming from. You only live once.



Four: Be professional. Teachers are some of the most highly respectable people I know of. They are in positions of authority, instructing students, teaching them with both their words and their actions. Because of this a teacher needs to understand that they need to maintain a certain professional standard. Yelling and threatening students with physical violence is not part of that standard, and in fact is not part of any professional standard.

How you act off campus is your own business, but while you are on campus you are a professor. Act like one, and you will be respected more because of it. Again, I am not justifying our behavior. The professor was right to be angry, and like everyone, could have just been having a bad day.

But I think a lesson is to be learned here for appropriate teacher conduct. I know I'm a dumb college student, but that's why I'm here … To learn.

Anonymous,
Class of 2010

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Show some mercy

Following three months of harassment by fellow students at South Hadley High School, student Phoebe Prince committed suicide. Prince's reported "bullycide" has brought national scrutiny on the quiet suburban town of South Hadley and provoked a lawsuit against the students involved in the bullying. The prosecution announced on Monday that nine South Hadley students were being indicted on felony charges in the case of Prince's death.

Rachel Dougherty

The charges against the students are part of an anti-bullying movement in the state that began following the suicide of Springfield student Carl Walker last year.

The students who bullied Phoebe Prince should be punished. No one is questioning this. But I have to wonder what the endgame is. Are Massachusetts officials really seeking justice for Phoebe, or are they trying to protect our state's reputation?

Students are bullied in schools every day – and rarely are there any repercussions. Phoebe Prince's suicide was a wake-up call about the reality of bullying in our school system, but the reaction to her death has been too much, too late.

A felony charge is a harsh punishment for behaviors that wouldn't merit a detention in most school systems. The students at South Hadley High had no way of knowing that their actions would result in Phoebe's death. Students are bullied in schools every day – and rarely are there any repercussions. Phoebe Prince's suicide was a wake-up call about the reality of bullying in our school system, but the reaction to her death has been too much, too late. By turning bullying into a felony, Massachusetts officials will not eradicate it from public high schools, but instead, turn it into a hot-button issue and increase tensions within the school and the community.

If every girl who called another girl a derogatory word was brought before the Massachusetts courts, the Commonwealth's District Attorneys wouldn't have time to do anything else. You've all seen the movie Mean Girls. Who here has ever felt personally victimized by Regina George? The answer: everyone.

The story of Prince's death has sex – not just the kind that makes babies, but also the sensationalist appeal that sells newspapers. It's sensational, it's tawdry; it will probably be a Lifetime movie next year. But the story has become more important than the case itself. The charges against the teenagers are building into a witch-hunt. The prosecution is trying to make an example of these students, to show that bullying won't be tolerated in their school systems. But we have to ask ourselves: is this really the right way to address bullying in our schools? Will bringing criminal charges against the South Hadley "Mean Girls" really change anything?

Nine teenagers have been brought up on charges ranging from statutory rape and criminal harassment to "violation of civil rights resulting in bodily injury." Six are being tried as adults on felony charges. Another three are being tried in juvenile court. According to Northampton District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel, one more student is being investigated and may be charged. No school officials are being tried. In an interview with the New York Times, Scheibel said this was because the administrators had "a lack of understanding of harassment associated with teen dating relationships."

Scheibel also said in the interview that at least four students and two faculty members tried to intervene in the bullying or report it to the administrators. No further action was taken.

The indictment of the South Hadley students is a way for Massachusetts officials to show that they are doing something about the problem of bullying. Phoebe Prince's "bullycide" was an embarrassment to the town of South Hadley. The prosecution is making an example of these students in order to protect the area's reputation.

South Hadley town selectman Robert Judge told the New York Times "Like most towns, we like to think of ourselves as a good place to live, and then this happens and your reputation is sullied nationally and even internationally and people look at you differently and make assumptions."

Trumping up charges against the teenagers now doesn't make up for the lack of action on the part of the administration at the time the bullying took place. There were adults who knew what was going on at the time Phoebe was harassed – and they did nothing. Criminalizing the act of "bullying" isn't going to improve the situation in South Hadley Schools because it does not address the real problem. Turning bullying into a felony only deals with the after-effects of bullying – it punishes students after the damage has been committed. The schools need to focus more on suicide prevention, and on creating a system for dealing with bullying before it reaches the point it did with Phoebe Prince.

Rachel Dougherty is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu

Deal justice to bullies

Phoebe Prince, the fifteen-year-old South Hadley, Mass. high school student who was the victim of intense bullying committed suicide in her home earlier this year. Bullying typically tapers off in high school. It is not, however, fully eradicated in those latter years before graduation. According to a 2007 study conducted by the Massachusetts Department of Elementary and Secondary Education, 14 percent of high school students polled admitted to initiating bullying in the previous twelve months, and 22 percent said they were the targets of bullying during the past twelve months. Phoebe Prince is a grave testament to this.

Shane Cronin

As of Wednesday, nine teenagers have been charged in varying capacities in connection with her untimely death and a small group of others having been expelled. Northwestern Mass. District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel has filed several different charges against Prince's fellow students including statutory rape, criminal harassment and civil rights violations.

It is despicable that the South Hadley High School faculty knew of the dangerous situation in which Prince, a native of Ireland, was engulfed in, and still did nothing. Students alerted administrators of the hostile situation. Prince's parents also spoke directly with school administrators. So why didn't the school take action against her verbal attackers? South Hadley High officials initially reported they knew little of the three months long harassment period that traumatized Prince. District Attorney Scheibel has found this allegation to be completely untrue.

The principle of South Hadley High School should be fired. All other faculty aware of the bullying at the school that did nothing should be fired.

On at least one occasion a teacher witnessed Prince being hounded by students while studying in the library. The teacher neither intervened nor reported the incident until after the victim hanged herself. Aside from that, it was apparently common knowledge that Prince was the subject of severe victimization. The D.A. found that Phoebe Prince was subject to, "relentless activities... designed to humiliate her, and to make it impossible for her to stay at school...the bullying, for her, was intolerable."

The Massachusetts House of Representatives has approved an anti-bullying bill. On Tuesday the Senate rejected the House's version, and the legislation must now be sent to a conference committee to ameliorate the two. The anti-bullying legislation was proposed last year in response to the suicide of Carl Joseph Walker-Hoover, a Springfield charter school student who was also the target of peer harassment. The eleven-year-old hanged himself with an electrical cord last April as a result.

More than 40 states have laws that address school bullying. Massachusetts and the remaining states need to get on board. Bullying is a reality for many students, unfortunately, and these laws will not provide a panacea for that. They will, however, help enforce accountability. Most Bay State schools have bullying policies in place currently, but there are great variances that exist among them. Cyberbullying further complicates matters. The tentative legislation incorporates protocol for handling this as well. In the case of Prince, Facebook and text messaging were factors despite most of the tormenting occurring in person, despite the superintendent's original assertion to the contrary.

Scheibel does not likely have grounds to prosecute South Hadley High School for the negligent and irresponsible manner in which they disregarded Prince's welfare. That does not mean the school can not be held accountable. Once the D.A.'s investigation is complete, action should be taken against the administration. The principle of South Hadley High School should be fired. All other faculty aware of the bullying at the school that did nothing should be fired. Furthermore, the superintendent of South Hadley Public Schools should be removed from his position. He initially denied that Prince's mother sought help from at least two staff members at the school, but the D.A. found she, indeed, had.

The community is calling for these officials to resign, but they should not be afforded that opportunity. They are liars. How can parents be expected to trust these apathetic administrators and teachers with their children's safety? Christine Sweklo, assistant superintendent, said a review of school bullying policy is underway and that future threats will be entered into a database. In other words, all that's happening is the usual spewing of bureaucratic leaders' bile rather than conceding they didn't do their jobs properly.

As for the accused students, who will be arraigned in the coming weeks, the charges of civil rights violations alone, brought forth by the D.A., carry sentences of up to ten years in prison. Because there is no legal statute concerning bullying, Scheibel has resorted to filing serious criminal charges. With roughly a dozen or so students implicated for bullying Prince, it is clear that a culture of violence was permitted at the school. Therefore, felony charges are warranted. If it is proven that these students acted in perpetuity and malice against Prince, they should receive jail sentences. Not all of the aggressors are being tried as adults. Their punishments should reflect that. The minors, however, should not be let off the hook with slaps on the wrists. When severe school-aged bullying is the cause of a teenager's suicide, all parties involved are damaged. The futures of the accused are uncertain. Clearly those most affected by this travesty are the Prince family.

This is not about making an example of anyone because of the national attention this case has attracted. A girl is dead. The people that should have been helping her ignored her, and the pleas of witnesses who spoke up on her behalf were ignored as well. There were numerous instances over the three month span that preceded Prince's suicide where her torments could have been abated. The school should have expelled the bullies long before Prince felt her only means of escape was taking her own life. That is why it is necessary these charges be filed.

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

Hip–Hop star to blaze up Pearl Street

Khalifa comes to NoHo night club

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Correspondent

Hip-hop artist Wiz Khalifa, flying high off of recent acclaim, rides his tour bus into Northampton tonight, bringing with him an effervescent flow and a bag of inspiration. The inelpient rapper is set to blow the roof off of the Pearl Street Night Club, and maybe blow some Os in the meantime.

Popping onto the music scene in 2005, the 17-year-old Wiz kid garnered the attention of underground mix-tape listeners right away with the release of "Prince of the City. Welcome to Pistolvania," hosted by DJ Big Mike. In 2006 he compiled his first full-length album called "Show and Prove," released off of Rostrum Records, and was recognized as a rising artist by AllHipHop.com and Rolling Stone magazine.

In 2007, he signed a deal with Warner Bros. Records which appeared to be his big break. After releasing two mix-tapes through Rostrum Records, "Grow Season" hosted by DJ Green Lantern and "Prince of the City 2," his first single "Say Yeah" debuted. The track, which featured a sample of "Better Off Alone" by Alice Deejay, reached 25 on Billboard's Rhythmic Top 40 and number 20 on Billboard's Hot Rap Tracks.

Sensing that his record company did not share his same vision for the future of his career, Khalifa (whose name is derived from the Arabic words for "succeessor" and "wisdom," and his natural propensity to excel) decided to break from Warner Bros. late in 2009, confident that he could promote himself with the help of growing online social networks.

"I feel like [Warner Bros.] lost interest in the project," said Wiz in an interview with the Pittsburgh Post Gazette. "I think they had me figured as a different kind of artist than I really am. With me being such an in-depth artist with so many different avenues and so many different pieces to me, it takes a little bit more to market me and really figure out who my core audience is."

Wiz wasn't willing to wait and so, taking matters into his own hands, he hit the digital networks drumming up fan pages on sites like Twitter, MySpace and Facebook and putting out free music through YouTube and iTunes. His strategy is proving successful with over 200,000 fans and followers on his sites and more attention in print.

COURTESY WWW.MYSPACE.COM/WIZ

Young hip-Hop star Wiz Khalida used social media sites such as Facebook.com and Twitter.com, rather than the usual record deal, to enhance his fan base. He will be playing tonight at the Pearl Street Night Club.

2009 was his most productive career as an artist, releasing hit mix-tapes "Flight School," "Burn After Rolling" and "How Fly," a collaboration with New Orleans rapper Curren$y who appeared recently at his performance at the Fillmore New York at Irving Plaza. In November, he released his second full-length album "Deal or No Deal."

On Burn After Rolling, an ode to haters on the song "If I Were a Lame" follows a fan favorite "The Thrill" while later on he tackles Camp Lo's classic "Luchini (This is it)" on the song "Won't Land."

His new album features upbeat songs such as "Chewy" and "This Plane" and a few collaborations with little known artists Josh Everette and Lavish, as well as one song with Curren$y entitled "Friendly".

The stoner-rapper won't hesitate to express his love for psychedelics in his songs, or in public, embracing his carefree image. He is featured in a recent spread in The Source magazine pictured amidst rings of smoking ereles, and he donned the cover XXL Magazine's Freshmen addition on March 16 when he was named one of the top 10 up-and-comers to watch.

The 22-year-old Wiz kid's energy on each track is as youthful as he is, effortlessly stringing together rhymes about all things green, including money, envy and a certain mind-altering plant. In his later recordings, he has taken more to singing hooks, sometimes more pleasant on the ears than others, such as in "Hello Kitty," but his enthusiasm is infectious and fans can't help but listen to his auto-tuned melodies and grin.

Young Khalifa has shown wisdom beyond his years in poising himself to explode as rap's next big thing, breaking away from a major record deal and using the internet to promote a fresh image.

He has a good taste for production, flowing smoothly over an eclectic blend of progressive beats, classic soul and old school hits. On his Star Power mix-tape, you can hear Khalifa's auto tune prowess and unfaltering flow on "Hero Freestyle," "Weed Roller" dedicated to his right-hand women, and insight into his egregious tattoos in "Ink My Whole Body," a sample of the retro "I'm Kurious" jam of the mid-'90s.

With a tour that started in Washington, D.C. on Wednesday and will later make its way to California in an effort to promote the new album, a promising future lies in the wings for the east coast talent, thanks to much praise in the music industry.

He performs tonight at Pearl Street beginning at 8:00 p.m. with opening acts Yelawolf and Hendersin.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

'Remember Me' a tear-jerker

Julie Holbrook
Collegian Staff

It's no secret that the oh-so-hunky Robert Pattinson will send teenage girls into a swoon with his latest flick, "Remember Me." The film is a dramatic, angst-filled love story, with Pattinson opposite Emile de Ravin (known best for her "Lost" fame), set in New York City in the summer of 2001.

Despite the predictable and somewhat offensive backdrop, this film does have heart, and will leave audience members feeling for these characters, and wanting them to overcome all their inner melodrama.

Tyler Hawkins, played by Pattinson, is a rebellious, chain smoking and emotionally damaged student at New York University. Pattinson shows a different side of himself than people are used to seeing him in the Twilight films. Not only does he have more color in his cheeks, but he has much more feeling and passion in his delivery. This passion is most prominent in the scenes opposite his big business man father, played by the ever-charming Pierce Brosnan. The two have had a rocky relationship ever since Tyler's older brother committed suicide years prior.

Tyler rides around on his bike from his beloved job at the local bookstore to his grungy old apartment wondering if there is anyone that will truly understand him and his emotional baggage. He and his goofy best pal Aidan, played by Tate Ellington, have a drunken run in with a hard-ass New York City police officer, played by the great Chris Cooper.

They later come to find out that cop in fact has an adorable, spunky daughter (de Ravin), also a student at NYU. She is finally the one who can handle all of Tyler's drama and distress. Cue the hot, emotional romance.

Ally (de Ravin) has her own internal agony to deal with – witnessing a mugging when she was 10. She's caring and loyal to both Tyler and her father, providing a great foundation for a heart-breaking, emotionally distressful courtship.

When Ally later realizes that her new beau and her father have a previously encountered, all hell breaks loose.

Yes, the story and the dialogue get a little too cheesy at points, but there are some redeeming qualities, such as Tyler's adorable, wise beyond her years, little sister Caroline, played by Ruby Jerins. The duos' relationship is enough to make even the most cynical cry out with an "awww" or two.

There are certainly some scenes that will have you hooked – such as Tyler and Ally going to a carnival on their first date, or Caroline's encounters with the mean girls in her class. And of course, multiple scenes with a shirtless Pattinson are sure to get the attention of many audience members.

Overall, "Remember Me" gets its message across, which is to live in the moments and don't let anything pass you by in life. Audience members may get annoyed with the cornucopian amounts of angst and emotional hardships, but even those who go in with a skeptical eye will certainly be holding back tears in the final scene.

Julie Holbrook can be reached at jholbroo@student.umass.edu.

At our 10 western Mass health service sites we provide:

- Birth control
- Pregnancy Testing
- Emergency Contraception
- HIV Counseling & Testing
- STD Testing & Treatment
- Breast & GYN Exams
- Gardasil HPV Vaccine

Call today for an appointment!
Walk ins welcome!

27 Pray Street
Amherst (413) 548-9992
Tuesday 11:00-6:00
Thursday 8:30-2:30
Saturday 10:00-2:00

also located at 16 Center Street
Northampton (413) 586-2539
open Monday-Friday

Serving Hampshire County for 37 years!

All services provided on a sliding fee scale, based on your income. Most insurances accepted.

TAPESTRYhealth.org
CARE WITHIN REACH

Samantha Weiser/Collegian

C-Banga and the Bang Boys reigned supreme in UMass' Battle of the Bands Wednesday night, and will continue on to open for this year's Spring Concert, featuring Ludacris.

Battle of the Bands rages on

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Wednesday night at Bowker Auditorium, UPC's annual Battle of the Bands was fought. Seven groups were tossed into the fray – some as big as seven members, others as small as one.

Each band was first given the opportunity to play one song in the first round. As the night progressed, the competitors were narrowed down by a panel of five judges from seven groups to four, four to two, and finally down to one. The starting lineup included three rock groups, two rap groups, and two solo rappers, who were both accompanied by the house DJ.

Performing first was East Over Kent, with a standard rock setup – electric guitar and bass, drum kit and an acoustic guitar for the singer. The group played its song extremely tight, but it lacked a particularly memorable melody to accompany its strong harmonic progression; the song sounded like a band arrangement of a solo acoustic song. East Over Kent was eliminated in the first round.

Next up, solo rapper Paul Markham displayed some lyrical chops with his ode to college, poking fun at his own goofy demeanor with lines like "people mock me like har-dee-har-har, but everybody knows we are the party starters." He will, however, not be starting the party at Spring Concert; he was also eliminated in the first round.

Following Markham, The Lank Monsta consisted of one rapper and one electric guitarist, who also sang the chorus. Its "Summertime Anthem" used a catchy, laid back beat built around a sample of a bluesy organ vamp, but the guitarist seemed to play his sporadic riffs in a different key than the sample, rather deflating any musicality the song might have had. At one point, the guitarist took a lengthy but lackluster solo as his band-mate encouraged a clap-a-long, with limited success. They, too, were eliminated in the first round.

Skasome Society brought the tempo back up with "TMS." Their name-brand brassy punk-pop was full of raw musical energy, but the on-stage energy didn't quite match, despite the bassist's best efforts to cheer up his stoic band mates. Still, the group members much more effectively held the attention of the crowd than any band prior, and had much more success getting the audience involved. Apparently, the judges felt the same way, advancing them easily to the next round.

Solo rapper Sound Execution shifted the mood once more, dropping a backing beat straight out of Dre's golden age of G-funk, which eventually combined with a soulful horn sample. He complemented the throwback beat with some good old fashioned mic control, getting a call and response going with the crowd: "I'm just tryna get mine – whatchu playin' for?" He got his; Sound Execution moved on to the second round.

Red Summer Sun lurched the event forward a few years, emulating the 90s pop-rock sound to a tee. Full of hummable hooks and refrains like "I'm a little bit in love with you," they seemed poised to rock an inebriated college crowd. It's no wonder they claimed to "play a lot of frat parties." Who wouldn't want to bottoms-up along to Lit in their prime? The group advanced unscathed to round two.

C-Banga and the Bang Boys finished out the first round with towering arena funk, powered by two keyboardists and a virtuoso electric guitarist. C-Banga himself, backed up by a solid supporting rapper, moved around the stage in practiced synchronization with the music. His lyrics were unfortunately somewhat drowned out by the overwhelming band, but that didn't seem to bother the audience or the judges, who advanced the Boys to the next round.

Round Two saw the elimination of Sound Execution and Red Summer Sun, leaving only Skasome Society and C-Banga, who advanced easily with the help of an impressive soulful vocal performance by Brian "B-Stokes" Stokes, who subbed in for C-Banga's supporting rapper.

In the final round, Skasome and C-Banga each played hard, accentuating their strengths (for the latter, namely "B-Stokes," who closed with the same song as round two). But in the end, there could only be one winner. The crowd, by applause, chose C-Banga and the Bang Boys by a pretty healthy margin. The hip-hop/R&B band earned through their victory an opening slot at Spring Concert.

Before the show, Samuel Asciotti of Skasome Society told us that he would be happy to "just do better than last year," where they did not make it past the opening round. Well, congratulations are in order – they performed admirably, and the crowd loved it.

Most of all, congratulations to C-Banga and the Bang Boys. Asked how it feels to be opening for, among others, Ludacris, C-Banga replied, "humbling."

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

Surprisingly, 'The Bounty Hunter' captures laughs

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Card-carrying member of Hollywood royalty Jennifer Aniston's new film, "The Bounty Hunter," is surprisingly good, if you take it at its face value – an extremely over-played plotline with a mostly A-list cast.

Unfortunately, viewers are put off by the actress and her co-star Gerard Butler trying to hold on to their declining youth.

"The Bounty Hunter" starts off with a promisingly hilarious scene straight from the middle of the movie. Butler's Milo attempts to run after Nicole (played by Aniston, running surprisingly well for someone in a little black dress and pumps) after being kneed in the groin. This chase culminates with him flat-out tackling her. At this point, viewers are thinking, maybe the movie will be full of laughs, perhaps the couple will have chemistry, and it's even possible that the plotline of the romantic comedy will be a fresh one.

"The Bounty Hunter," is extremely over-played, which is surprising, considering the director. Andy Tennant, known for his work on romantic hits such as "Sweet Home Alabama," and "Hitch," fails to bring anything new to the table. His other popular movies were almost revolutionary for the romantic comedy genre, but in this new flick, nothing seems to be new.

Tennant's film is about a divorced couple, Milo and Nicole; he's a bounty hunter, she's a low-level journalist who skips a traffic violation hearing to follow a lead for a story. He is then sent out to arrest her, much to his delight. However, that lead she was following turns out to be dangerous, so the pair must then run from people trying to catch them.

While this sounds like a decent premise for a date movie, or even a guilty pleasure movie rental, it is not worthy of Butler's and Aniston's talents. Butler shone in great movies like "300" and "P.S. I Love You," while Aniston will always be remembered for her small screen work on "Friends" and movie, "He's Just Not That Into You." A separated pair trying to overcome differences while solving a crime? Not memorable.

Things seemed a bit off after the first scene. Though the set up is executed pretty well, and Butler, with his beefcake-like physique, makes a pretty believable bounty hunter, the soundtrack is a bit too young from the beginning. Although Butler played the giddy role well, it's just odd to see a 40-something-year-old man chasing down criminals to Akon songs, and playing cards to Ke$ha.

To be fair, it does get better, with more mature rock songs by the Rolling Stones and newcomers Cage the Elephant, but "The Bounty Hunter's" grasp for youth doesn't end there. Christine Baranski is simply too young to be playing Aniston's mother. While she's not young herself, it just seems like too much of a stretch to ignore. And though Nicole was trying to do her job well, a 40-something woman should know enough to not skip out on a court date.

Though the plot should be a fairly simple one, "The Bounty Hunter" soon begins to take too many turns. It's supposed to be straightforward – a man is sent to haul his ex-wife to prison for $5,000. But soon the plot expands to include crooked cops, loan sharks, tortures and unrequited love by a co-worker who wears out his welcome far too early in the film. It becomes almost confusing.

Jennifer Aniston's comedic timing and on-screen chemistry with co-star Gerard Butler make 'The Bounty Hunter' worth viewing.

The element that saves the movie, though, is its spot-on comedic timing. Unfortunately, many of the film's funniest moments were revealed in the previews, but it's actually still worth the price of a movie ticket to see the laughs. From a furious Nicole using a stun gun to Milo smearing Dorito crumbs into her pristine white bedroom set, the funnier parts of "The Bounty Hunter" cannot be ignored.

Nor can all the tabloid fodder surrounding the movie. The onscreen couple definitely develops some chemistry as they're trying to solve crimes, while off screen, there was rumored to be a love connection as well. The question is, will Milo and Nicole reunite and find love again to save each other's lives?

For the movie aficionados and skeptical fans out there, maybe it might be best to wait until it hits shelves. But if you're going to waste an afternoon goofing off with friends or a loved one, why not?

Kate MacDonald can be reached at keitlynn@student.umass.edu.

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
MAGIC The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

Holy Week 2010
Holy Thursday 4/1 7:00pm
Good Friday 4/2 3:00pm
Easter Vigil 4/3 8:00pm
Easter Sunday 4/4 8:00am, 10:30am & 7:00pm
Newman Catholic Center

UM begins outdoor season at UConn

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams are eager to get back into a routine as they prepare for the first meet of the outdoor season, the UConn Invitational.

Both teams will travel to Connecticut this Saturday as they kick off their spring seasons. They enjoyed a lengthy four-week pause in their season, with their last meet coming on March 7.

Home course advantage

As it does each year, UMass will host outdoor meets here in Amherst. The teams do not schedule any indoor events on campus during the winter because there are no official facilities which may be used for indoor competition. However, this spring, UMass will host the Nine-Way Meet in two weeks in addition to the Atlantic 10 championship meet a few weeks later. The A-10 championship is a meet that UMass hosts every other year, alternating with Charlotte.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien said that it is a privilege to host any meet, particularly one with such implications, and that his team is excited to compete in front of a home crowd after traveling to surrounding schools all winter.

"There's nothing like a home course," O'Brien said. "We've found that it applies to our sport as much as any other sport. The guys always say that competing at home lifts their performances and makes them feel like fans are excited by their performances. With A-10's here this year, we'll see some great crowds and we can't wait to impress them."

New season, new faces

When UMass hits the track this weekend, there will be some new faces to competition on both teams.

With the addition or more outdoor events, both teams have a need for additional athletes than the indoor season. UMass will add competitors in events such as the javelin throw, discus throw, steeplechase and 10,000-meter distance run. These newcomers are mostly veterans who compete solely in the spring season, but there will be handful that are not as seasoned as their peers.

O'Brien said that his new athletes will be expected to contribute as much as anyone else and that they will be called upon frequently to help the team win points in competition.

"Our javelin and discus throwers along with our 10,000-meter runners are ready to go," said O'Brien. "They're new additions to the team for the spring, although most of them are veterans. We expect them to contribute a lot, like they have in the past couple of years."

Crossing the finish line

UMass finished well in both the men's and women's indoor seasons, and it looks to continue building on that promising start this spring.

The Minutewomen captured a higher overall finish in the Eastern College Athletic Conference championship than the men did in the IC4A championship meet, finishing in 39th place in the final event of the indoor season.

UMass relied on a health mix of veteran leadership and freshman talent while competing indoors throughout the winter, mixing in a few record-breaking performances along the way. Senior thrower Lisa Wilson set a school record in the weight throw, breaking her own personal record three times in the process. Her mark of 55-015.5 meters came during the Great Dane Invitational back in January.

She also set a school record in the shot put event at the New England championship with a mark of 45-03.5 meters.

On the men's side, the indoor season wrapped up on a bit of a low note, with the Minutemen taking 47th place in the IC4A championship. Yet, despite the outcome of the event, O'Brien said that he was very pleased with his team's performance indoors, and that they showed they can compete with the best athletes in the country.

"The guys did very, very well over the winter," O'Brien said. "It's tough being inside in a primarily outdoor sport, and they were spectacular. Now they've had some time off to decompress a little, and they're as eager as I am to get back out there and do it again this spring."

Leading the charge for the Minutemen in the first half of their season were the veteran upperclassmen. Senior Tyler Cotto and junior Sean Busch were two of the team's top performers all season long, and they look poised to improve upon their own marks this spring.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass is looking forward to starting the outdoor season at UConn on April 3.

Cotto came away as a New England champion after he won his signature event, the 55-meter hurdles, at the NEC's in late February.

Busch, UMass' best pole vaulter and a school record holder, was able to best his own record in the IC4A championship and now sits tied for first place in UMass history with his height of 15-09.00 feet.

Both teams will kick-off the spring outdoor season with the one day UConn Invitational meet on Saturday.

Michael Wood can be reached at mewood@student.umass.edu.

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
WE'RE OPEN!!!
Located In North Amherst,
Just Minutes from UMASS
on RT. 63
Student Discounts
Membership Just $399
Twilight Rates Just $13
Cherryhillgolf.org
413.256.4071

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Brian Miller vaults over the pole bar during a meet last year. UMass will host two meets during the outdoor season which includes the Atlantic 10 tournament.

UMass heads to Charlotte

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen head to Charlotte for a three-game series after having the March 30 game against Holy Cross rained out. UMass has two wins on the season.

Canes top Michigan

By Lelan LeDoux
The Miami Hurricane (Miami)

As they move into their final game, it seems like the Miami Hurricane women's basketball team saved the best for last this season.

The Canes (22-13) moved on to the National Invitational Tournament championship game after their 76-59 blow out against Michigan on Wednesday.

Just like they have done all season, sophomore sensations Shenise Johnson and Riquna Williams led the Hurricanes. Johnson accounted for 17 points, nine rebounds, seven assists and four steals in 36 minutes of action. Williams was dynamite, she had 26 points in 28 minutes of play. Williams connected on seven three-pointers and silenced the crowd at the Crisler Arena in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Head coach Katie Meier has called this her greatest season and it has been an extraordinary run for her team.

"It's such a big honor," Meier said. "There's really nothing to say. It's been a great run."

Leading 37-33 at halftime, the Hurricanes dominated the Wolverines even more after they took the court in the second half. The Lady Canes connected on 16-for-34 from the field and shot from the three-point land 45 percent of the time. The defense was stifling as the Canes held Michigan to nine shots in the second half. Miami outscored Michigan 39-26.

Senior Charmaine Clark had all of her 10 points in the second half and collected 10 rebounds as well.

For the game, Michigan was held to 39 percent shooting and just 23 percent from beyond the arc. From the moment Williams came off the bench, she was a spark. Miami outscored Michigan's bench 34 to 12 and out-rebounded the Wolverine's 45-36.

Miami has had plenty of dilemmas this season. The lady Canes lost 11 ACC games and total of 13 losses. Now, the Canes are in the NIT Championship gaine and the only ACC team still playing.

"We could have folded a long time ago," Meier said. "We had some tough losses. But these girls have taken advantage of being able to rewrite the script. It's been beautiful."

Throughout the NIT, Johnson and Williams have carried the Canes, who had never won two postseason games in the saine season before this incredible run. The duo combined for 57 of the team's 73 points against Providence in the semifinals. Johnson scored a career-high 33 points and had 10 rebounds and Williams accounted for 24 points off the bench. The two combined for 11-for-16 in the first half while the rest of the team was 0-for-13 from the field.

Meier has guided the Canes to their ninth 20-win season in program history and the first since the 2003-2004 season when the Canes advanced to the NCAA Tournament.

Miami will play the winner of California and Illinois State who square off Thursday at 7:05 p.m. CST.

No. 28 LSU takes on MWI

By Luke Johnson
The Daily Reville (LSU)

The No. 28 LSU men's golf team will head into the Morris Williams Intercollegiate in Austin, Texas, on Monday riding a hot streak that has put them back on the national radar.

The Tigers will tackle the 7,412-yard, par 71 University of Texas Golf Club course having won two of their last three tournaments.

At the beginning of the season, the men's team seemed poised to turn in one of the better seasons in reeent history for the LSU golf program.

The Tigers ranked No. 12 in the preseason Golfweek/Sagarin rankings and returned a core of young players that could reap the rewards of their vast potential.

But LSU stumbled out of the gates during the fall portion of its schedule, finishing 10th out of a stacked 15-team field in the season-opening PING/Golfweek Invitational, falling out of the top-25 completely.

"Golf's a little bit different than other sports," said LSU coach Chuck Winstead. "It's not like a baseball series where you get three games and three different chances to win. In golf you play over three days, and at the end of the three days you find out if you beat the other teams or not."

But LSU wrapped up a team victory in its last tournament of the fall at the David Toms Intercollegiate in Baton Rouge, which set the tone for their spring season.

The Tigers have won two and finished in the top five in four of their last five tournaments.

The scoring format for collegiate golf requires a team to count four scores toward its cumulative team scores. The success LSU has seen this spring can easily be traced to the consistency of the lineup from top to bottom.

Sophomores Austin Gutgsell and Sang Yi have catapulted the Tigers back into contention this spring. The sophomores have combined for five top-20 finishes this spring and two top-five finishes. Neither finished in the top-40 in the fall.

"I feel good about where we are. The guys have played well," Winstead said. "Obviously Sang and Austin's play this spring has had a big impact on how the team is doing."

Yi and Gutgsell are joined by standout juniors Andrew Loupe and John Peterson to form the scoring team.

Loupe has paced the Tigers in two events this spring, including his first-place finish at the Louisiana Classics tournament and his runner-up finish at the Gator Invitational.

Peterson, meanwhile, has been plagued by one inconsistent round in nearly every tournament this spring. The All-American has shot four rounds above a 77 this spring, yet has still managed to nab two top-15 finishes.

Winstead said he isn't concerned about his star player, in large part because of some unlucky bounces and his team's success this spring.

"I think [Peterson] is coming into form," Winstead said. "He hit a lot of very quality golf shots this week, and his putting hasn't been better all year long. I'm comfortable with where his game is headed. I think he's going to be just fine."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UM set to face Penn St.

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

One week after knocking off its second top-15 opponent in as many games, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team takes on Penn State tomorrow in the 11th game of the all-time series.

The No. 9 Minutemen (6-2, 1-0 Conference Athletic Association) lead the series, 7-3, including a 9-8 win last season at Garber Field.

Coming off a 13-11 win over St. John's, the Nittany Lions (1-7) are the home team this season.

While the Minutemen have the more successful season thus far, UMass coach Greg Cannella insists that PSU's recent shortcomings mean nothing heading into today's matchup.

"Penn State's a really good, athletic team," Cannella said. "I don't think that they're record is indicative of that right now. Traditionally, games between UMass and Penn State are one or two-goal games in the last six or seven years. It's always been a close game."

Last season, the Minutemen won on a goal by Jim Connolly in the final minute of the game. In that contest, the UMass defense pestered the Nittany Lions enough to cause 13 turnovers in the first half while the Minutemen offense built a two-goal lead by halftime.

PSU's first-half woes followed them into their first season in the CAA along with UMass. In their first eight games, the Nittany Lions allowed an average of seven goals per game before halftime. In contrast, the PSU offense averages four goals per game in the first half.

The Minutemen goal total is spread out evenly, scoring an average of three goals per period.

Sophomore attacker Art Kell has 21 of UMass' 110 goals this season, to go along with 12 assists and 11 ground balls.

Kell is as consistent offensively as anyone on the Minutemen roster. He has two points in each of UMass' games this season and two goals in all but one game.

Kell, midfielder Ryan Hantverk and fellow attacker Mike Fetterly are the only remaining players from last season's roster who scored on the Nittany Lions in the last meeting of the two teams, but there is still plenty of firepower to lead UMass against PSU.

Five Minutemen have double-digit goal totals this season, including sophomore midfielder Anthony Biscardi (13 goals, eight assists) and freshman attacker Will Manny (14 goals, 11 assists) who both come into this game after having dominant individual efforts in UMass' 11-9 upset win over then-No.6 Hofstra.

The duo combined for three goals, four assists against the Pride.

While the Nittany Lions are a big, bruising team, Cannella feels that there are other things that the Minutemen need to look out for as well.

"They've got good size, I love their transition game and their quick-strike offense," Cannella said. "Also, it's our first time playing on grass so there are a lot of other things to deal with besides the good team that they have."

PSU has five players with at least 10 goals this season, including attacker Matthew Mackrides, who is tied with Hofstra's Jamie Lincoln for ninth in the nation in goals per game, with three. Along with his 21 goals, Mackrides also has five assists.

The game will start at 12 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Seventh Annual Dulcy B. Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
In memory of Dulcy Blume Miller, Smith class of 1946

Marion Weiss + Michael Manfredi
WEISS/MANFREDI ARCHITECTS

Sequence/Section

Tuesday, April 6, 2010 7 PM
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

www.smith.edu/artmuseum

Maxwell Sparr, Collegian

Midfielder Ryan Hantverk has been one of the players making the Minutemen one of the toughest teams in the nation. He currently has 12 goals and seven assists.

Consistent help from defense crucial in wins

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

In order for any team to be successful, it must get consistent play from all of its players out on the field.

That is just what the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has done so far this season, getting steady showings from it's defensive midfield.

The No. 9 Minutemen take on Penn State on Saturday in their second ever Colonial Athletic Association game riding a two-game winning streak, thanks in part to players not usually scoring all the goals.

While UMass is fourth in the NCAA in goals per game (13.8), many of those scores would not have happened if not for the hard work from the Minutemen's defensive midfield unit.

Junior long-stick defensive midfielder Casey Rahn is third on the team in groundballs (23), as UMass' top long-pole and face-off wing. In the victory against Hofstra, Rahn had five groundballs and two caused turnovers, propelling the Minutemen to an 11-9 victory.

Rahn's play on the wing during faceoff's has benefited Anthony Toresco and Greg Rushing, UMass' primary face-off men.

Rushing is 13th in the NCAA, winning 59.3 percent of his draws, while Toresco won 7-of-11 faceoffs against Providence and 5-of-8 at Brown, both came during Minutemen victories.

Along with Rahn, junior Stephen Zorkers has been the team's most consistent short-stick defenseman, is second on the team in groundballs (24) and has six caused turnovers, while covering some of the best offensive players in the nation. Rahn and Zorkers both play the wings on face-offs, and have helped the Minutemen gain key possessions so far this season.

"Certainly we spread the ball around on the offensive end, but you look at our defensive midfield, those guys really set the tone for us and create the opportunities in the clearing game and transition game," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

With Rahn and Zorkers, seniors Will Jeffery, Kevin Wright and freshman Bobby Tyler have helped in the transition game.

Jeffery has seven groundballs and five caused turnovers with an assist, while Wright has shown his versatility by playing on both the offensive and defensive side of the ball.

Wright played in all eight games and has four groundballs while Tyler has three groundballs and two caused turnovers.

The UMass defense is third in the NCAA for caused turnovers per game (11.3). Senior captain Diogo Godoi has 12 caused turnovers and 16 groundballs, good for second on the team.

Sophomore defenseman Tom Celentani leads the team in caused turnovers (21) along with 21 groundballs. His caused turnover average (2.63 per game) ranks him third in the NCAA.

Along with the defensive midfield, special teams have helped the Minutemen edge out other teams.

Junior defenseman Brett Newgaard and freshman Ryan Hollenbaugh have come off the bench and have helped the man-down defense.

Freshman attackman Kyle Smith has taken over the role as the man-up specialist, converting three goals and four assists, good for six points in extra-man opportunities.

"If you're going to have a good team, you need contributions from a lot [of people]," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Long ball contributes to La Salle romp

Carta leads team with strong bat

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Led by a combined five home runs from Kylie Magill, Meghan Carta and Carly Normandin, the Massachusetts softball team swept La Salle in a double-header in Philadelphia Thursday afternoon.

The Minutewomen (19-7, 4-0 Atlantic 10) came out with strong hitting and quick base running as they shut out the Explorers (7-13, 1-5 A-10) 10-0 in Game 2.

After walking to first and stealing second base, Sarah Reeves's fielder's choice brought Carly Normandin home to give UMass a quick 1-0 lead. Kylie Magill slid home on a wild pitch and scored the Maroon and White's second and final run of the first inning.

Meghan Carta hit a solo home run in the second inning to give make her the team leader with five on the season. UMass tacked on seven additional runs started by Carta's two RBI singles to bring home Cyndil Matthew and Katie Bettencourt.

"I thought we did a better job getting ready to hit today, a little bit better than we did the previous weekend and we've certainly been working on it," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I think as the season goes on we'll gradually see a little bit more of a transformation in hitting."

Rookie of the Week Teea Rogers singled to drive in pinch-runner Jordan Storro, followed by Whitney Williams walking on to first to load the bases. Normandin stepped up to the plate and hit a grand slam to drive in four more runs and gave the Minutewomen a 10-0 lead. The grand slam was Normandin's first homerun of the season and the second of the year for the Maroon and White.

Courtesy UMass Media Relations

Michelle Libby makes contact during the double-header wins against George Washington. UMass dominated once again offensively with five home runs on the day, powering commanding wins over La Salle on Thursday.

"It was great to see Carly Normandin get a hold of the ball today," Sortino said "Obviously coming back from surgery it's been hard on her . . . it was nice to see her get that grand slam."

Plourde struck out eight batters in four innings pitched before Bailey Sanders took her place at the mound in the bottom of the fifth inning. After a bunt and a single from the Explorers, put two runners on first and third base, Sanders struck out the final two batters to end the game and keep UMass perfect in the A-10.

Behind 14 strikeouts in six innings from Plourde and three home runs, the Minutewomen defeated La Salle, 8-1, in Game 1 of the doubleheader.

A single from Jessica Serio put the Maroon and White up by one in the first inning. Normandin came through with another RBI single in the second inning, followed by Magill's first home run of the day to drive in two additional runs and give UMass a 4-0 lead.

The third inning produced two more runs for the Minutewomen with Michelle Libby scoring on a wild pitch and a Whitney Williams sacrifice fly ball to bring Carta home. Magill's second home run of the game came in the top of the sixth inning to put the Maroon and White up by seven runs.

The Explorers' scored its lone run of the day in the bottom of the sixth inning, spurred by a hit batter and single from Gina Massaro. Mary Pat Conville followed shortly after with a single to center field to drive in Liz Reed.

The Minutewomen produced its eighth and final run of the game off of a Carta solo home run to left field in the top of the seventh inning. Sanders replaced Plourde in the bottom of the seventh inning, retiring three batters in a row and ensuring the win.

"It's her third straight appearance, no walks and strikeouts on a minimal amount of pitches and just getting people out," Sortino said of Sanders. "She's doing a good job."

Plourde was credited with the victory in each game, striking out 22 batters in 10 innings pitched and one hit allowed.

UMass looks to continue its four game win streak when it travels to New York to face Fordham, who is also undefeated in the A-10.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

UM heads to Worcester

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team will continue setting its pace for the Atlantic 10 title in Worcester, Mass. this Saturday against the likes of MIT, New Hampshire, Williams and Holy Cross.

The five team regatta will include the first Varsity 8, second Varsity 8, Varsity 4, first Novice 8, second Novice 8 and Novice 4 races.

The Minutewomen, coming off a strong second place finish in last weekend's Yankee Cup, look to bounce back with skill and determination after a win on the Holy Cross Crusaders' home water.

UMass coach Jim Dietz expects there to be strong surges from the Crusaders in their efforts to win at home as they look to establish themselves as true competitors in the division. Dietz also sees Williams, who took the Division III title last year, to be tough opponents in an environment that allows for great speed.

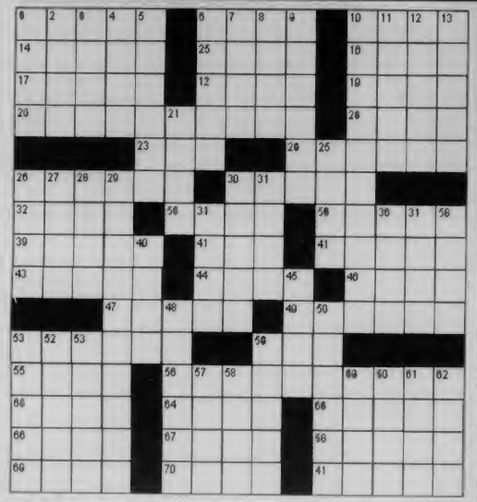
"Worcester's turf is a lake, and lakes tell a lot about speed," Dietz said.

Without a strong river current to either help or hinder the boats' progress, this weekend's regatta will show just the kind of speeds that each crew is capable of reaching out of sheer ability.

Dietz is expecting his boats to show great ability, both in terms of power and teamwork, as a result of their intense training regiment. The Connecticut River, which the Minutewomen train on, flows at 80,000 cubic feet per second, a speed that some schools have never even experienced before. This speed builds a rower's strength and reflexes to a higher level, which is a key attribute in helping UMass capture 13 A-10 titles in the past 14 years.

Another advantage that the boats have to enjoy this weekend is a stretch of warm weather and clear skies. The good weather not only helps the boats to glide more fluidly, but also helps to increase the morale of the rowers.

"Everyone gets that extra little bit of energy in their strides once they feel that the weather is warming up and the sun stays out longer," Dietz said.



All these factors add up to make a sport where luck has very little impact on the results. There is no wind gust to push a fly ball over the fence or an angled stick to cause a slap shot to redirect and find the back of the net. The outcome of a regatta depends heavily on intense practices, careful planning, strong teamwork and an ability to race your own boat from within, something Dietz feels his crew is highly capable of.

"As a whole, these girls are highly intelligent and very calculating to the point where they can win on many different levels," Dietz said.

David Martin can be reached at dmmartin@student.umass.edu.

comics

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Remove the surface
6. Leave out
10. Gangboard plank
14. Loaded
15. Monetary unit in Yugoslavia
16. Expert flyers
17. Turn aside
18. Highly excited
19. Just right (2-1-1)
20. Frolicking
22. Gaelic
23. Genus of house mice
24. Breadwinner
26. Bushes
30. Prone to wander aimlessly
32. King of the jungle
33. Gripped
35. Lets fall to the ground
39. Adjust
41. Misery
42. US symbol
43. Black European thrush
44. Sea eagle
46. Fruit tart
47. Way in
49. Have in mind
51. Prisoner
54. Metric unit of area
55. Podium
56. Appeals
63. Former Italian currency
64. A support for a bridge
65. Treasure
66. Not odd
67. Singer Fitzgerald
68. Plucked instruments
69. Repose
70. Like a snake-like fish
71. 10 in a decade

DOWN
1. Dross
2. A Polynesian alcoholic drink
3. Anagram of "Diem"
4. Action word
5. Bury
6. Gemstones
7. Wise men
8. A metal used to make steel
9. Labelled
10. Ship or boat
11. Fruit of the oak tree
12. Rental agreement
13. An organic compound
21. Luxurious
25. Assistant
26. Shut forcefully
27. Conceal
28. Lion sound
29. Obnoxious
30. High honor
31. City in Yemen
34. Pitcher
36. Look amorously
37. Scheme
38. Dispatch
40. Canvas dwelling
45. Ireland
48. Native tent
50. Tidily
51. A do-nothing
52. Innocent
53. Gets stuck
54. An impressive display
57. River in Egypt
58. Impart information
59. Not false
60. A very small amount
61. Always
62. Dried hemp leaves

UMass Amherst Quincy?

Take UMass Amherst home with you this Summer

Three Summer Sessions

200+ ONLINE classes

REGISTER NOW!

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST

Continuing & Professional Education

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING A DISTRIBUTION MANAGER

We are looking for someone to be responsible for managing delivery in the early morning hours.

If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Living the dream unlimited presents

FRIDAY APRIL 2ND

FULLY LOADED

ELECTRO • TECHNO • DUBSTEP • HIP HOP

FEAT:

PROPER VILLIANS (NYC)

&

REPEAT OFFENDERS

AKA BOSS & VADU'M HAZKIS

HOSTED BY MC KIDD RYDDIM

2 rooms of big sound

LTDUNLIMITED@GMAIL.COM

Diva's Nightclub, 492 Pleasant St Northampton MA

$10 before 11pm

$1 PBR PINTS 18+9PM

Dunkin' Deutsche

		5				4
	1				6
		2			9	8		6
			6
	5			7		4	2
			2		3		7
	9	7				5	8
		8			4
3			1

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 -
Time is only relative to scientific theorists and chronic masturbators.

pisces Feb. 19 -
Things seemed so much simpler when Michael Jordan was saving the Looney Tunes.

aries Mar. 21 -
There are some important life lessons buried within Nelly's radio edit version of "Country Grammer" if you listen over and over.

taurus Apr. 20 -
The answer to free, universal health care is simple: kill the Batman.

gemini May. 21 -
Two wrongs don't make a right. The same thing goes for double beef and bean burritos for 89 cents. Turn the other cheek.

cancer Jun. 22 -
When you initialize in spitting game, you must stay away from certain questions like asking them about their weiner.

leo Jul. 23 -
Ever wonder what happened to the Lycos dog? I wonder if he ever "got it."

virgo Aug. 23 -
It is really sad when money for cancer is dwarfed by the amount paid for the Pope's own urinal cake.

libra Sept. 23 -
The underpants gnomes drew on your inner thighs last night. I tried to stop them but I'm not a commando.

scorpio Oct. 23 -
The main difference between your laundry and anthrax is that one can fit in envelopes.

sagittarius Nov. 22 -
The girl over in the social gown is vexing you. Its time to teach her what McCarthyism is all about!

capricorn Dec. 22 -
Everyone needs to get lost in the woods sometimes. Woodland creatures love delicious taxpayers.

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from Umass

Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!

On site laundry,
off street parking.

Basketball and Tennis Courts.

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Is looking for a "HURP" Comics Editor for 2010-2011

SUBMIT YOUR APPLICATION AND A PICTURE OF YOUR RESULT IN THIS POSE TO

COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

HARK! a Vagrant by K. Beaton harkavagrant.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Help Me Move Furniture- April 8 or 9. $20/Hr. Truck or Van Preferred- Call Chabot 413-896-7022

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 under graduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

FOUND

Watch engraved with Class of 2008, Congratulations Steven. Call 413-559 9215

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug. or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, livingroom, eat in kitchen, pantry,laundry, fi nished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.amherstsales.com
www.AmherstMARentals.com
413.549.1398
Student Rentals

4 Bedroom in Northampton $1350. No pets. June & September. Skibiski Realtors. 586-1827

SERVICES

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

MISCELLANEOUS

Looking for a business opportunity that allows you to not only market services people use everyday, but the services of the future too? This opportunity provides outstanding earning potential with ongoing training & support. You are in business for yourself but never by yourself. Stop imagining & start living. ACN Independent Rep William Carey 774-232-8604. wmc7771@gmail.com http://4incomefromhome.acnrep.com

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 74 LOW: 45 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, APRIL 5, 2010

Money-making majors in sciences

According to latest NACE salary survey, huge benefits to earning engineering degrees

By Jessica Jankowski
Collegian Staff

The National Association of Colleges and Employers (NACE) just released the results of their Winter 2010 Salary Survey, and the list of top-paid bachelor's degrees is again dominated by engineers. Petroleum engineering takes the number-one spot at $86,220 as an average salary offer. Two computer-related degrees — computer science and information sciences and systems — also made the list.

Chemical engineering and mineral engineering took second and third place, respectively, with grads netting around $65,000 a year. Computer science grads took home about $61,205 a year, with computer engineers coming in a close fifth at $60,879.

According to Ted Djaferis, dean of the University of Massachusetts College of Engineering, a degree from his department allows "students to work on projects that have an immediate impact on society."

"Graduating with a bachelor's degree in environmental engineering can allow someone to work with companies that focus on clean water systems, and chemical engineering graduates can work in the field of alternative fuels (such as biofuels)," said Djaferis. "Electrical engineering graduates can find themselves working on the development of the next generation of medical imaging systems, and industrial engineers can contribute to improving the efficiency of health care systems. A mechanical engineering student can work on the design and construction of new medical instruments and devices. Certainly, advanced degrees in engineering would offer students additional opportunities but they can begin to make a contribution to society with BS degrees."

When asked about the best aspects of studying engineering, Djaferis was sure to point out that all fields of study are great and have many positive attributes. He didn't shy away from pointing out the benefits of the engineering field, however.

"In [engineering], in many cases one is able to construct devices, develop software and develop systems that can be relatively easy to prototype and test," said Djaferis. "One is therefore able to see in a very short time the fruits of his or her labors, and this is particularly gratifying. Designing, creating or constructing something completely new allows one to express their entrepreneurial spirit innovation. It is very satisfying to be able to say that you are working on something that makes a difference in peoples' lives."

When asked about the potential difficulties of becoming an engineering major, Djaferis noted that any prospective engineering student should have taken the relevant high school courses in mathematics, sciences and writing, and needs to demonstrate strengths in these areas. He also noted that it is important that the prospective engineering student be motivated and excited about entering college, and being ready to invest time and effort into their studies.

"If you have the grades and the self-motivation necessary to complete the major requirements, the major is available to you," said Djaferis.

"I believe any major or concentration with a narrow degree of flexibility is highly sought after," said Carmen Lo, a UMass junior majoring in operations management and pre-med. "Engineering is not only very specific, but it's also very technical. Students who study this major devote many hours practicing their skills in labs along with the intense classes they have to take. Therefore, I am not surprised their starting salary is the highest."

"It's at the top because engineering has a very demanding educational regimen," said Elise Conde, a UMass freshman. "It requires top-notch science and math skills to be successful in the engineering industry, which a lot of people do not possess. Personally, I don't feel like I

See MAJORS on page 2

Top ten best paid majors

Major	Average salary offer
Petroleum Engineering	$86,220
Chemical Engineering	$65,142
Mining & Mineral Engineering	$64,552
Computer Science	$61,205
Computer Engineering	$60,879
Electronics & Communications Engineering	$59,074
Mechanical Engineering	$58,392
Industrial/Manufacturing Engineering	$57,734
Aerospace/Aeronautical Engineering	$57,231
Information Sciences & Systems	$54,038

SOURCE: NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGES AND EMPLOYERS
NICK BUSHUEVA/COLLEGIAN

California schools tapping student fees

By Jack Dolan
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

While California universities have faced round after round of crippling budget cuts and protests against increased fees have flared on campuses, administrators have tapped funds meant for classrooms and students to cover some extraordinary costs: losses on ill-timed real estate deals, loans to high-ranking officials and an ambitious construction project.

Experts say the moves, made without wide student knowledge or public oversight, show that administrators have put aggressive business plans ahead of the teaching mission. When things go wrong, they're dipping into student fees, scholarship funds and money meant for classes to pick up the tab.

"It's almost like they kind of lose sight of the core purpose of what they're there to do, and get excited by the opportunity to speculate with other people's money," said Steve Boilard, director of higher education for the state's nonpartisan Legislative Analyst's Office.

At the University of California, Los Angeles, student fees are being used to save a plan to renovate Pauley Pavilion, home of the school's legendary basketball team.

In 2006, administrators launched a campaign to raise $100 million from private contributors to pay for the $185-million upgrade, which includes cushier seats, a high-definition scoreboard and expanded locker rooms. But when the fundraising effort fell victim to the recession, administrators changed the finance plan to include $25 million from student fees.

"Students really weren't involved in the process, beyond maybe some rubber-stamp committee," said UCLA Student Regent Jesse Bernal. "I don't think they know enough about it."

Most of the student money, $15 million, will be come from fees approved by a student referendum in 2000 to maintain two older campus buildings that house gyms and student centers. The remaining $10 million had been set aside for seismic repair of student facilities.

Using that money to renovate the arena "seems like a strange priority," said longtime UCLA fundraiser Richard Bergman, who originally chaired the Pauley Pavilion campaign. He said he was summarily dismissed last year after complaining about several aspects of the project, including the dip into student pockets.

UCLA Athletic Director Dan Guerrero told reporters last fall that Bergman "was very committed to the project, but along the way we had some disagreements — reasonable people have disagreements on how we should proceed, and it was just felt that it was better to part ways."

Bergman said that when money got tight, administrators should have scaled back their ambitions.

Steve Olsen, UCLA's chief operating officer, acknowledged that the referendum approving the fee included nothing about Pauley Pavilion. But "it was always clearly understood that as the revenues grew, additional projects could be appropriately funded by those fees," he said.

Cindy Mosqueda, who was a UCLA sophomore in 2000 and a leader of the campaign for the fee, said there was no such understanding.

"We . . . thought we needed additional space and the asbestos out of the basement," said Mosqueda, now a Ph.D. candidate. "If we knew it would be used in the future for Pauley Pavilion, we wouldn't have worked so hard."

Few students will be able to afford a good view at the renovated Pauley, where seats between the baskets are expected to cost more than Los Angeles Lakers tickets, Berman said. Season tickets will require a one-time fee in the tens of thousands of dollars.

At California State, Sacramento, administrators used general fund money to cover an investment that went bad.

University Enterprises Inc., an independent foundation affiliated with the school, paid more than $35 million raised from private donors to buy a commercial office building near campus in 2007. Administrators said they planned to hold classes in half of the building's 188,000 square feet and lease the rest to generate revenue.

Then the real estate bubble burst.

The building is empty, and university President Alexander Gonzalez said he paid $5.6 million

See FEES on page 2

Library renovations on track

By Jessica Bonheur
Collegian Staff

Over the past few months, the W.E.B. Du Bois Library at the University of Massachusetts has seen a vast number of renovations going on under its tall shadow. The renovations have been part of an ongoing project to improve the appearance of the learning space, as well as create a better learning area for the students at the University.

So far, the improvements have included installing "ADA motorized doors into the Assistive Technology Center," according to Theresa Warner, the assistant director for administrative services. This project was funded by the Campus Accessability Board, which aims to aid the UMass community by making it more accessible for students and faculty using wheelchairs to get around the library.

Warner states that the new ADA-motorized doors will not only allow easier accessibility for students in wheelchairs, but also "allow for the quiet environment necessary to use some of the specialized software that utilizes voice." These new improvements are designed to create a more comfortable learning environment for students. Over winter session, improvements included the expansion of the learning commons, allowing for more computers to be available to students. Warner says that when the project is complete, "the library will have a new service point on the lower level which will merge the circulation and reserves services into one area."

This merge will provide easier accessability to students who wish to check out electronics such as laptops, camcorders and headphones. Students will also be able to check out and return books at this same location rather than moving from the ground floor, first floor and third floor to complete these tasks at individual locations.

Starting after this year's commencement, there will be an elevator renovation project which will bring the current elevators up to date and up to speed. It has been almost two years since the elevator replacement project began its search for funding. Soon after the funding was finalized, the design process began. The amount of time it will take to complete all the elevator renovations is uncertain.

Of the facility projects that have been ongoing, some include the electrical upgrade project in the Integrated Sciences and Engineering Library; and the heating, ventilating and air conditioning project in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. The electrical upgrade project itself was funded by the campus facilities and capital project revenues, while the HVAC project is state-funded.

The HVAC project is estimated to take two or more years, while the electrical upgrade project has been ongoing for six months and will take about one year. Warner says these improvements are necessary because the systems were aged and needed to be updated (referring to the HVAC, elevators and electrical systems). They were also necessary for added capacity and more efficiency. The goal of these improvements is to "create a 21st century library, with comfortable space and services and resources that serve the needs of the students and faculty," said Warner.

"I'm very excited about having more computers in the Learning Commons," said student Akiyah Francis, who noted that she thought the improvements to the library are "more than welcome."

Jessica Bonheur can be reached at jbonheur@student.umass.edu.

Belfast artists unveil new mural today

KATHLEEN DUNN/COLLEGIAN

Congressman Richard E. Neal will be on hand today for the unveiling of a new mural in the UMass Campus Center Graduate Lounge, jointly painted by renowned Belfast muralists, Republican Danny Devenny and Loyalist Mark Ervine as a sign of Irish unity.

ARTS & LIVING

Scotch, scotch, down into my belly

Read photo editor Matthew Harrison's opinions of the Balvenie DoubleWood whisky, manufactured in Scotland.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass still perfect in CAA

Despite a late push from Penn State, the Minutemen pulled out a victory and moved to 2-0 in its new conference, the Colonial Athletic Association.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian Columnist Eddie Hand discusses what puts the "bad" in "badass."

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Localocracy.org have teamed up to offer UMass students an interactive and democratic way to respond to our news coverage.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 2010

MEN'S LACROSSE

After beating two ranked opponents, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team takes on Penn State.

SEE PAGE 12

TRACK AND FIELD

The track and field teams begin their outdoor season at the UConn invitational on April 3.

SEE PAGE 10

Slugfest

5 homers lift Minutewomen in sweep over La Salle

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 45
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Johnson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Raleo-Miller
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson
COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

California schools look toward student fees for new projects

FEES from page 1

last year to prevent the foundation from falling into foreclosure on it.

The money came from the school's general fund – a combination of student fees and tax dollars – which is more commonly used to pay professors' salaries, utility bills and the other day-to-day costs of educating students.

"It does kind of look like a gift of public money to the foundation," said Boilard in the Legislative Analyst's Office.

Patrick Murphy, an adjunct fellow at the Public Policy Institute of California, said the Sacramento situation is a prime example of why land deals are usually handled through separate capital accounts.

"Maybe instead of coming up with clever deals like that," Murphy said, administrators "should invest in the core courses that many CSU students say they can't get."

The payment exacerbated an already severe budget shortfall that has forced the school to forgo most spring admissions this semester, university spokeswoman Gloria Moraga said. And student fees rose 32 percent last year while classes were being cut, leaving many unable to finish their degrees on time.

"They said there's no money, and yet they come up with millions for that building," said Alma Lopez, 23, a biology major from the Central Valley town of Tracy.

The bailout adds to campus frustration that began in 2007 when the foundation came under fire for giving Gonzalez, then newly hired, $233,000 in personal loans and paying $27,000 to put a new stove in his house.

Moraga said the foundation made the purchase after the university's head chef declared the existing stove inadequate for the large parties and fundraisers Gonzalez would be hosting. "There were health and safety issues," Moraga said.

The transactions are the subject of an ongoing audit by the state attorney general's office.

Last month, Gonzales said the new building won't be a drain on school finances once the real estate market picks up.

"This is just a stop-gap," Gonzalez said of the $5.6-million expenditure. "The purchase of the building is still a very, very good deal."

After it is renovated, the nursing department will move out of its current cramped quarters and into the modern building, where it will be able to offer public clinics, Moraga said.

But the use of general-fund money to save the foundation's privately funded investment has become a rallying point for the California State University faculty union, some of whose members have been laid off or furloughed as budgets have tightened. The union is pushing a bill in the Capitol to force university foundations to share their financial documents under the California open-records law.

"These organizations can make arrangements that end up costing the campus money," said Cal State Sacramento math professor Scott Farrand, who sits on the school's budget panel.

The attorney general's office is also auditing a foundation at Sonoma State University following revelations that the organization, which provides student scholarships, lent millions of dollars to a former board member for private deals involving undeveloped land, home building ventures and a vineyard.

Clem Carinalli, a large area landowner, began receiving loans worth more than $8 million from the foundation days after resigning from the board, said university spokeswoman Susan Kashack. One of his business associates sat on the board while the loans were approved but was forced to resign in December over the apparent conflict of interests.

The foundation hoped to profit from interest on the loans, but Carinalli filed for bankruptcy protection last year. He still owed $1.25 million to the foundation, said Kashack.

There's less money available for scholarships this year, Kashack blamed the weak economy, not troubled investments with an ex-foundation board member.

"We do not make these kinds of investments anymore," she added.

(MCT)

Students marched in Sacramento, Calif., during a protest concerning cuts in higher education on Monday, March 22, 2010.

(MCT)

Paul Candia, a student at Evergreen Valley College in San Jose, Calif., holds a sign during a budget protest in Sacramento, Calif.

Latest survey shows major money to be in engineering would be cut out for the job, and I feel like a lot of people have a similar feeling towards themselves. However, due to the difficulty of the training for the job and the large demand for engineers, salaries are huge compared to other jobs."

MAJORS from page 1

When asked if she thinks engineering will still be at the top of the salary list in spring of 2010, Lo said that "engineering will continue to be one of the highest salaried majors – but this does not mean other majors, such as business, will not take its lead [eventually]. The reason is that the economy is constantly changing, and at times, some job fields might be saturated."

"America is always trying to advance in technology," said Conde, "therefore demand for engineers will not be waning anytime soon."

Jessica Jankowski can be reached at jjankows@student.umass.edu.

GARDASIL.
[Human Papillomavirus Quadrivalent (Types 6, 11, 16, and 18) Vaccine, Recombinant]

INTERESTED IN GARDASIL?
GARDASIL IS WIDELY AVAILABLE AND MANY PRIVATE INSURANCE PLANS* COVER IT.

TALK TO YOUR CAMPUS HEALTH CENTER OR OTHER HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONAL.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

While your insurance company may reimburse for GARDASIL, your eligibility for coverage and reimbursement for GARDASIL depends on your individual insurance benefit. You can contact your insurance company for details on coverage for GARDASIL.

MERCK

Accountants close to finding Rothstein Ponzi scheme funds

BY PETER FRANCESCHINA
MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The forensic accountants poring over the debris of Scott Rothstein's colossal investment fraud are nearing the end of one phase of their sleuthing – determining how much money flowed into the Ponzi scheme before its collapse last fall, and how much went back to investors.

Bankruptcy attorneys say the fraud brought in $1.4 billion to $1.6 billion. But not all of that money was lost.

The bankruptcy lawyers haven't put a final number on the losses, but an attorney for one of the large investors estimated half of the funds confided to Rothstein appear to have gone back to investors.

That still would mean losses in the hundreds of millions of dollars, illicit proceeds that powered Rothstein's conspicuous high living for the past five years and his downtown Fort Lauderdale, Fla., law firm, now mired in bankruptcy.

Bankruptcy receivers and trustees who work to recover assets gobbled up in fraud schemes call such losses the "hole," and it's their job to fill it.

Lawsuits seek to recover money lost to Rothstein, who is to be sentenced in federal court in May. The targets of the lawsuits include banks, accounting firms, Rothstein's investors who might have profited, his former law partners, even the swindler's hard-shopping spouse, Kim.

Lawyers and accountants reconstructing the fraud are applying a simple principle: "Follow the money," said Chuck Lichtman, the lawyer leading the investigative aspects of the bankruptcy case.

"Our objective is to maximize the recovery," Lichtman said.

Some of South Florida's heaviest hitters in bankruptcy law have been brought in on the case. The team at times has involved more than two dozen people from the Berger Singerman and Genovese Joblove law firms in Fort Lauderdale, and the forensic accounting firm Berkowitz Dick Pollack and Brant in Miami. They already have put in thousands of hours and are currently seeking about $2.1 million in compensation.

A major task for this squad of lawyers and CPAs is to determine which of Rothstein's hundreds of investors made money.

Asset-recovery experts say those investors likely will be forced to hand over their profits, and perhaps more – so the losses can be spread evenly among all the investors.

"[Investors] are not going to get the profits, because those profits were imaginary," said Harley Tropin, a Miami bankruptcy attorney not involved in the Rothstein case. "The goal is they all be treated equally, except for the bad guys."

The accountants and bankruptcy lawyers have a wealth of information to work with, including Rothstein's electronic records. They have e-mail chains and subpoenaed bank records, among other documents.

"You start by looking at everything that is available," said Gary Johnson, a 27-year FBI agent who now runs a forensic accounting firm in Colorado. "You look at the bank accounts, you look at the brokerage statements, you look at the all the financial records, you look at the e-mails, you look at the communications."

A few factors have made the investigation easier. Rothstein didn't keep a second set of false books, and had four dozen bank accounts, rather than hundreds.

Still, plowing through documents has proved tedious because the law firm's records were in disarray.

So far, a number of clawback suits have been filed by the bankruptcy attorneys to recover money they say rightfully belongs to Rothstein's creditors.

Actions against three of Rothstein's former law partners seek to get back $18 million paid in salary, loans and other benefits.

The lawyers want at least $1.1 million from Kim Rothstein, most for shopping purchases she made with a credit card funded by the law firm.

The accountants have identified $24 million in loans to Rothstein's employees, friends and business associates.

The lawyers have sent out more than 100 letters demanding repayment of investment money, according to court records, and they expect to recover hundreds of millions of dollars through litigation.

Lead bankruptcy attorney Paul Singerman said the bulk of the forensic accounting chores will be done in about two weeks, and then more letters demanding repayment will be issued.

"We will give all principal litigation targets the opportunity to engage in good-faith settlement negotiations before we file suit," Singerman said.

In the end, there won't be any winners, even among people Rothstein tried to help after he fled to Morocco last October. In two weeks, Rothstein tried to pay back $12 million to a small number of investors before his trust accounts were empty, a Sun Sentinel analysis has shown.

Most of that, almost $9 million, went to four people: Fort Lauderdale hotelier Shimon Levy; his son Ovadia Levy; Daniel Minkowitz, Ovadia Levy's business partner in Renato Watches; and Michael Szafranski, a financial adviser who was supposed to verify that the legal settlements Rothstein was selling to investors were legitimate. The clawback suit filed against Szafranski seeks $33 million.

William Salim, an attorney for the Levys, said in a statement that the payments Rothstein made after flying to Morocco were not honored by the banks. He said the Levys were victims of the fraud and "their collective losses are in the many, many millions."

"The Levy family has been emotionally and financially devastated by the Rothstein Ponzi scheme," Salim said. "Their relationship with Scott Rothstein has cost them their life savings, not to mention the personal and business turmoil that they now find themselves in."

Fort Lauderdale businessman George Levin formed a number of entities under the name Banyon that invested $775 million with Rothstein, according to bankruptcy records. Those entities were paid $43 million in the final three months, the Sun Sentinel analysis showed. A spokesman for Levin, Jesse Derris, would not say how much Levin received back, but said he was a net loser.

"His friends, his family and even his mother were tied up in these investments, and he personally guaranteed many of those," Derris said. "I think it's safe to say George is on the hook for a lot more money than anyone else in Rothstein's scheme."

The accountants also are trying to determine exactly what Rothstein bought with his Ponzi scheme money and whether any cash was transferred offshore. One Swiss bank account already has been identified in court records.

If Rothstein stashed cash overseas, Lichtman said he is confident it will be found.

"I think when it gets to the point of having to trace internationally, we will have great success," he said. "No stone will be left unturned."

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
■ PERRY APTS.
■ 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.
■ LANTERN COURT APTS.
■ MILL HOLLOW
■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

Now Hiring:
DAILY COLLEGIAN
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER
We are looking for a student to manage DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM and our related web presences for the upcoming FALL 2010 semester and beyond!
Keywords:
WordPress, Google Webmaster Tools, Analytics, and Adsense, Digital (Multi)Media, JavaScript, PHP, HTML, CS / ECE / IT background
Please send short cover letter with relevant experience and resume to Victor Jacek - vjacek@dailycollegian.com

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.
Send your news tips to: news @ dailycollegian .com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up? Need to spread the word?
for 70 each
On-Campus & Local Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Are you the next UMass Idol?

Enter today to win your chance to sing at the Taste of UMass 2010
TO QUALIFY: April 15, 6—9 pm · Berkshire DC
To register send an e-mail to:
rpipczynski@mail.aux.umass.edu or visit umassdining.com & click on the UMass Idol banner
• All entries must be received by April 12
• Each contestant receives a gift package
• Limited to 40 participants
Sponsored by: Coca-Cola, LAZER 99.3, UMASS DINING UMass Amherst umassdining.com, Taste OF UMASS
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." -Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Liberals need to be assertive

Eli Gottlieb

This is an open letter to President Barack Obama, to liberals in general and to University of Massachusetts student activists. I'm writing this because you all have a lot to learn about compromise.

I'll start with the incidents that showed me just how much you have to learn: health care and Ramat Shlomo. In the case of health care, you wanted to pass comprehensive health care reform that would create a public option, and in the case of Ramat Shlomo, you told the Israeli government that building a new Jewish neighborhood in east Jerusalem was prejudicing peace negotiations and encroaching on land the Palestinians wanted. Student activists, you did something very similar regarding the UMass Textbook Annex: You started out promoting a student-run textbook store to replace the annex, and ended up just settling with notifications of what textbooks we need to buy before the semester begins. My opinions on these issues are far too obvious to print, but what they reveal about you and your mentality interests me.

It's amazing in its idealism, astounding in its naiveté and incredible in its self-harm.

You honestly seem to think that you are engaged in negotiations with parties who will reciprocate your attempts to build a mutually-agreeable consensus. You therefore appear to actually think that your side making unilateral concessions will, even must, work toward your goals. It's amazing in its idealism, astounding in its naiveté and incredible in its self-harm.

Obama administration and congressional Democrats, how could you seriously think that conceding the public option would lead to victory? How could you seriously act as though Republicans were going to work with you rather than against you while, from the start, their news station spread rumors that President Obama is a "secret Muslim," and one of their former House majority leaders called him a "Marxist leftist" and recently held up signs demanding the right to "Kill the [Health Care Reform] Bill?" This is not politics but lunacy, and conceding to these nuts didn't work toward meaningful, bipartisan reform – it just resulted in you conceding on one of your core positions, your own values, for nearly no gain at all.

Likewise, how did you think that starting a spat with Israel over the building of Ramat Shlomo in East Jerusalem would help move peace negotiations forward? The so-called Arab anger about this new neighborhood is just an excuse to demand more of what Arabs think they deserve. This was proven when they rioted in a "day of rage" over the Israeli renovation and the re-dedication of a synagogue in the Jewish quarter of east Jerusalem, because they sincerely believed that it was the first step toward demolishing the al-Aqsa Mosque and building the Third Holy Temple (for your information, hell no, it's not). You can't ask for unilateral concessions to people whose entire historiography and narrative of self demands that, in the name of all that is good and right in the world, they win rather than compromise. You need to demand reciprocity and good-faith measures from both sides at the same time. If you don't, you're not helping anyone at all and you've failed to stand for the principles, values and ideals for which you stood in the first place.

After the political jihad against health care reform, why do we make it a mere matter of newspaper opinion columnists that our elected representatives have been attacked and threatened? As these attacks and threats have taken on racist and anti-Semitic tones, why have we not called out the attackers? It may seem trite to paraphrase Jon Stewart as a source for one's political beliefs, but I think we need to remind ourselves that however much these people, these inciting protesters and wannabe terrorists, claim to be and to represent the "real America," they aren't and they don't. We are just as much a part of America, real America, as they, including those of us who are New York Jews, Massachusetts liberals, godless socialists, Mexicans and Arabs.

For God's sake, people, I spent an entire column bemoaning the fact that the only thing capable of waking Americans from our political apathy is violence, but apparently not even that works.

By the way, someone still owes me an explanation of why we don't have a student-run textbook store. That's what I signed the petition for, that's definitely what I signed up on a Facebook group for and that's why I voted for Brandon Tower in the Student Government Association elections. We won that, didn't we? Did that even get included in the public higher-education protests last month? I know I received a message saying that he "won," and I know the guy I voted for became SGA president, but apparently all we got was a rental program, ahead-of-time notice about textbooks and some cost-saving measures. That won't help when I have to buy a WebAssign packet from the annex next semester to take linear algebra, since those packets are only sold at the annex. According to Tower in a message interchange I had with him, we're "making headway." Great.

To be quite frank, I think the time has come to discard the outdated idea that you can have bipartisanship from only one side while it remains bipartisanship. In that spirit, I wish to give a short seminar on how to negotiate. First, never demand what you really want up front. Demand something more. Second, never simply concede to anything. Demand and obtain reciprocity (of every incident I mentioned, the textbook campaign came closest to this). Finally, if the other side doesn't want to negotiate, use whatever power you have to do what you know is right. Leaving people uninsured, paying too much for textbooks, suffering violent attacks for their political views or suffering violent attacks for existing is absolutely shameful when we have the power to end these things.

In other words, let's get out there and change the world already.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Putting the 'bad' in 'badass'

Eddie Hand

Everyone loves a good villain. When done right, they'll almost always end up more popular than the protagonist. People love them. Heath Ledger won an Oscar when he played one and before him, Jack Nicholson got enormous praise for the same role.

Brad Pitt's most famous role to date is one. People love villains because they do the kind of stuff we think about doing, but can't or won't. And they get away with it (at least until the very end, or when the sequel's released).

These guys are badass.

This is, of course, vicarious living at its finest, but there's nothing wrong with it.

We all have a dark side. But how much would we really like this sort of person if they were real? I'm not even talking about a terrorist like Osama bin Laden; let's think small.

Let's think about someone that's just a jerk of epic proportions, someone we actually know.

The University of Massachusetts has the reputation for being a party school, so most of us know That One Guy, or TOG, for short. TOG is the guy who bases his entire self-worth on how much he is getting. This is the guy who will push you out of the way to get to a girl (sometimes literally). This is the guy who will hit on everyone around him who looks even slightly feminine. TOG is a bad person. Sex is the only thing that matters to him. Don't get me wrong, sex is pretty damn cool, but to only care about one thing is kind of scary.

This is the guy who will hit on everyone around him who looks even slightly feminine. TOG is a bad person.

Nobody likes TOG. He ruins everything. He scares away your female friends. Maybe he gets drunk and attacks someone once he realizes he isn't going to be getting any. He'd be a pretty good bad guy for most teen sex romps (in the model of Steve Stifler from "American Pie," at least until the sequels) and treated for laughs. In real life, not so much.

In another genre, this guy is the Joker, a psychopathic clown murderer-terrorist, who is coincidentally hilarious when he's not being utterly horrifying.

Or maybe he's Tyler Durden, the urban terrorist and anarchist from "Fight Club."

We root for the titular character of "Dexter" in the series of the same name because he kills bad people, but he's still a serial killer.

Colonel Miles Quaritch, the army leader from "Avatar," was a genocidal warmonger, but people still liked him – some even going so far to say he was the movie's real protagonist.

These characters are all very popular, and it's probably because of how on-the-edge they are.

Most people thought that the Joker was the best part of "The Dark Knight," but anyone that blows up a hospital in real life is considered an unforgivable monster, even if they did it in drag.

The entire point of Tyler Durden was that he was the product of a man's insanity whose aspirations for anarchy were impossible and actually destructive to everyone around him.

Yet there are still tons of kids who quoted him in their yearbooks, thinking he was not only deep, but also a hero.

If you think it's only fictional characters that get this sort of treatment, you're wrong. Che Guevara is seen as a symbol of freedom, his face placed in the center of many a t-shirt and poster. Somehow, the fact that a lot Cuban Americans refer to him as "The Butcher of Cabana" after he oversaw the execution of many of his enemies without the benefit of a fair trial, is ignored because he was charismatic and looked like a rock star.

There is a definite danger to blurring fantasy and reality. Some things sound great on paper, but very often the cost for such things is high.

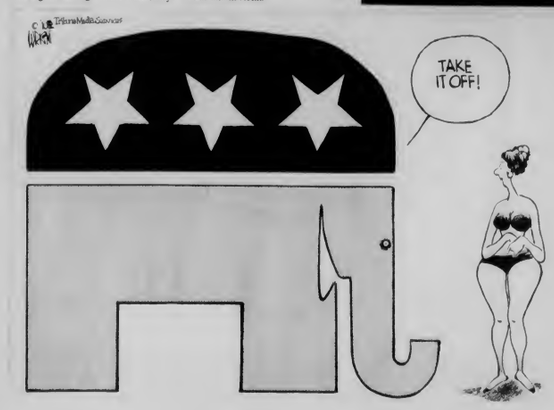
Tyler Durden believes that Western culture has become too materialistic. His solution is to destroy all the banks.

Miles Quaritch truly believes that the only way to save humanity is to wipe out the Na'vi. Even the most well-intentioned extremist is still an extremist. There's a reason that "badass" includes the word "bad."

Eddie Hand is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehand@student.umass.edu.

Six reasons why the Red Sox will win the World Series:

1) The late Sen. Ted Kennedy's ghost will be there to help.



2) With health care reform, the DL is no longer a problem.

3) Red Sox Nation recently signed a peace treaty with Colbert Nation.

4) Youkilis has been studying sorcery.

5) Who else will? The Phillies?

6) Someone has to spit on the Cubs' hopes.

Tiger on the prowl for more jackets

Alex Perry

I have spent my entire life rooting against Tiger Woods on the golf course. I really couldn't stand Tiger. I hate how he beats my favorite players every time. I hate how he ruined David Duval's career simply by showing up. I hate how he can shank a drive onto a fairway bunker on a different hole, and then have his next shot stick within 10 feet of the pin on a par-4. I hate how when I mock him for exaggerating an injury, it turns out that he just won the U.S. Open on a broken leg.

Tiger Woods is the greatest golfer to ever live, and I couldn't stand it. I would never root for him. He isn't human. But that all changed on Thanksgiving this past year.

Tiger Woods is the greatest golfer to ever live, and I couldn't stand it.

When I was with my family on Thanksgiving and I saw that Tiger Woods got into a car accident. I immediately had two reactions. Is Tiger alright? Is Tiger going to be able to play golf again?

When it comes to Tiger Woods news – for anyone outside his family and friends – all that should matter is that he is healthy and winning matches. If either of those are affected, I will show some interest; otherwise, I really don't care, and I don't think any of us should.

As it turns out, Tiger Woods is indeed healthy – at least physically – and the accident should not at all impact his physical ability to swing a golf club.

So why is Tiger in the news every day? Why do I have to hear about him hooking up with girls like this is some sort of unbelievable and unprecedented event?

I can see how it's terrible that he's supposed to be a role model and is showing poor morals by treating sex casually – especially when he is married. Honestly, it's shameful.

But what do I care? I assume that almost all pro athletes are engaging in this kind of behavior whether they are married or not. Really, there is no reason to think they aren't all doing this. Look at the best player in every sport.

Kobe Bryant is married and has been caught with other women. Tom Brady knocked up a woman outside of marriage. Alex Rodriguez couldn't resist Madonna and others while married. It's ridiculous.

But it is difficult to blame them because they are rich and athletic guys traveling across the country, with women constantly throwing themselves at them. They can whomever they want, whenever they want them. You don't even have to look further than the University of Massachusetts to see how some girls throw themselves at athletes – and the athletes at our school aren't even rich or famous. The temptation is constantly there for all pro athletes to indulge themselves with women, and many of them do. This isn't big news.

In some of Tiger's cases it's funny news, but it's not big news.

Yet the media turned Tiger Woods into the villain. They made it seem like he was the only rich and famous athlete hooking up with lots of girls. How could a role model do this? As if all the young men in the world who look up to him are going to hold this against him.

As if any guy over the age of 16 doesn't know how the game works. Sorry to break this news to all of you people living under rocks, but if you're a pro athlete, one of the privileges you get is access to lots of money and women.

People look up to Tiger and want to be Tiger because he is the most dominant athlete in the world, and want the privileges that come with the territory. Tiger's behavior will not change any of this. The man is a billionaire.

He is still the best golfer to ever live. He is by far the highest paid athlete annually. Maybe he lost his marriage, but he should have never been married in the first place.

At this point in his life, it is safe to say he isn't mature enough to handle the responsibilities that accompany being a loving husband and a good father.

He is lying if he said he loved his wife, because if he did, he wouldn't have felt compelled to sleep with so many women.

This all being said, I think the fact that the media turned on Tiger should make us want to root for him. I have never rooted for him before, but I know I want to now. I hope he kills the Masters this week from the first time he enters the tee box to his final putt on Sunday.

I hope people boo him when he has his name called at the first tee, and he smacks it 320 yards right down the heart of the fairway. I hope we see vintage Tiger Woods this week. I hope Tiger gets into the final pairing with some European stiff like Sergio Garcia on Sunday and embarrasses him on national TV. And when he does, Tiger can flip the bird to the media as Cabrera puts the green jacket on him.

If Tiger pulls all that off, he will truly be newsworthy again.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A Scotch lover's guide to drinking whisky

By Matthew Harrison
Collegian Staff

Scotch is defined as any whisky made in Scotland. By law, it must be made from barley, distilled in Scotland, contain less than 94.8 percent alcohol, aged in oak barrels in Scotland for a minimum of three years and bottled at no less than 40 percent alcohol by volume.

It should be noted that Scotch is spelled "whisky" and not "whiskey." The "e" was added in the 1800s when American distillers felt that their whiskey was superior to all of the Scotch whiskies flooding the market, so they wanted a way to differentiate their product from the rest.

Scotch comes in a variety of styles. Single malt, which is made from a single distillery; single grain, which is made from grain other than barley at a single distillery; blended or vatted malt, which is a blend of single malts from multiple distilleries, blended together to create a uniform taste that doesn't change from bottle to bottle; and blended Scotch, which contains a mix of single malts and single grain whiskies. Scotch is also often "peated," which results in a smoky taste since the barley is tried over fires containing peat. This is different than American whiskey, which gets its smoky taste from the charred oak barrels used in aging.

There are several Scotch-producing regions of Scotland, and each area manufactures a very different style of whisky. The Lowlands, which only has three distilleries in operation; the Speyside, which is Scotland's largest whisky-producing region and is famous for such big names as Glenfiddich and Glenlivet; the Highlands, which includes the subregion of the Islands; and Islay, which is an island region known for producing peaty, salty Scotches.

While most people are introduced to whisky (or whiskey) through blends (think Jack Daniels or Johnnie Walker), I'm primarily interested in single-malt whiskies since they share a lot of similarities to wine. Each bottle can have a very different taste, and bottles made at the same distillery but in different years can be completely different from one another. Be warned, however, since the taste of single malt can be much more intense than a blend.

In today's review, I'll be tasting the Balvenie DoubleWood single malt from the Speyside region of Scotland. The DoubleWood is unique because it is aged in two stages, and in two different casks. It is first aged in American oak bourbon barrels (barrels previously containing bourbon or other whiskey from the United States) for 11 years, which gives the whisky a very vanilla-like flavor, and then in Sherry barrels (casks previously containing Sherry) for just a few months, giving the whisky a very sweet, fruity characteristic.

I love the bottle and package design of this Scotch. It looks like something that could be found in a gin joint in the Old West. The whisky is a gorgeous honey color, and it looks to be medium-bodied. The nose of the whisky is ripe with vanilla, which comes from the American bourbon barrels. I also detect sweet honey or molasses, and some raisins spiced with cinnamon and allspice.

MATTHEW HARRISON — STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

The Balvenie DoubleWood single-malt Scotch is rich with flavors like raisin, cinnamon, vanilla and honey. While the drink has approximately 40 percent alcohol content, it has a sweet and long-lasting taste, an appeal that trumps the usual college whiskey choice, Jack Daniels.

This is not a peated Scotch, so there's no smokiness to it, and the alcohol isn't harsh whatsoever. Vanilla is the dominating flavor, and it's followed by beautifully sweet honey. The spiced raisins really come through in the taste, and the finish lasts a long time.

The DoubleWood is by far the smoothest and sweetest Scotch I've ever tasted; I give it a letter rating of A+ easily. At $45 a bottle, it's not something a college student like myself can afford often, but liquor stores often sell half bottles of Scotch at half the price of a full bottle. I encourage everyone to get out there and explore the flavorful world of whiskies whenever they can. Good whisky should not be mixed with soda or even ice, although certain Scotches benefit from a little bit of filtered water to bring out the flavor.

When you're finished tasting your whisky, always put it back in the box or cardboard tube it came in to protect it against light. Also, at 40 percent or more alcohol, always drink Scotch responsibly, and never drink and drive.

Until next time, cheers!

To see a video review of the Scotch talked about in this article, visit Dailycollegian.com or TheBottleReview.com.

Matthew Harrison can be reached at mharrison@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY HANWAY.COM

Won Bin plays a mentally disturbed alleged murderer whose mother tries to prove his innocence in the Korean film, "Mother."

2010 Asian film award given to thrilling, spiritual movie

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

We begin with a field.

We don't know where this field is, but as we see a middle-aged Korean woman walk through it, we understand that it is going to be a place of importance. It calls to mind Tarkovsky's buckwheat field of memory in "Mirror," but in no way does it feel like a thematic retread. This classically beautiful cinematic composition enthralls, and involves audience members in the events that are about to occur. We hear the strum of a classical guitar, and the woman starts to dance. The credits begin to roll, and we are now in the world of "Mother."

In a film climate where little substance appears to be occurring in the mainstream, it is nice to see a film like "Mother" (Madeo). What viewers are privy to is an incredibly gripping, thematically complex, and beautifully directed thriller by Bong Joon-ho. Now that it has won the 2010 Asian Film Award for best picture, it looks like it has the potential to be a runaway success.

After the international cult success of his 2006 monster movie "The Host," it was suggested that this Korean director was someone to keep an eye on. With "Mother," we have proof of this. This is a singular work, with a distinctive style that hopefully will continue to develop in an equally beautiful and groundbreaking manner.

Kim Hye-ja gives an incredible performance as the titular "Mother," who will do everything in her power to keep her mentally-challenged son Yoon Do-Joon (Won Bin) from being jailed for murder. The film begins with a series of events which lead us to believe that he has been framed. But, of course, there is more to the story than meets the eye. The lengths that this mother goes to in order to save her child will disturb and unsettle some, but also inspire.

This is a film of startling, complex morality. The themes of trauma and catharsis are dealt with in a way that few have approached before. The main character is an unlicensed acupuncturist and prescriber of herbal remedies. The more audience members see her at her work, the more they are able to connect her existence thematically to the story. It is this which makes the film a fully-realized work. By being both a wholly involving narrative and spiritually involved work, "Mother" is a film which has the capacity to both thrill and intellectually engage.

Bong Joon-ho has crafted a work of truly singular vision and effect. "Mother" may occasionally bring to mind echoes of "Vertigo" and "Marnie" due to its treatment of memory and sexual themes, but the very power of these qualities, and the original treatment that Bong Joon-ho brings to them easily pushes "Mother" up to the heights of Hitchcock. One sequence even relies on a tipped-over water bottle for its "hook," and the nerve-wracking moments it generates in the audience easily ranks with the best sequences of the "Master of Suspense."

To make an effort to see a movie like "Mother" is to further the creation of great art in the mainstream. We are long past the point where the majority of modern Hollywood filmmakers are making works of depth; those days began to fade with the releases of "Star Wars" and "Jaws," and they have been dying a slow death ever since. The upside to this is that independent and world cinema has continued to flourish. The Oscar for Best Picture going to "The Hurt Locker" was a good step. The release of "Moon" was another one. Hopefully, "Mother" will be commercially successful, because it definitely deserves the recognition.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu

Wiz Khalifa goes up in smoke at recent Northampton concert

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Correspondent

Wiz Khalifa's landing at the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton on Friday was greeted by an excited audience of unanticipated proportions.

The rapper was pleased with the turnout and enjoyed interacting with them after the show, saying, "The crowd was crazy. Some people were acting wild, but it was fun. There were a lot of people there. I didn't expect such a crowd."

The doors opened at 8 p.m., but the lines didn't begin to get long until an hour later.

Opening act and novice rap artist Hendersin took the stage at 9:15 to a welcoming reaction from the audience. With much enthusiasm, the new hip-hopper from Greenfield, Mass., willed the crowd to wave their hands and recite his choruses to a backdrop of bass-heavy beats, performing in his biggest show to date.

But after a handful of unmemorable songs, Hendersin sensed it was time to bow out, when an encouragement to "jump" fell on deaf ears and attempts to bring attention to one 'DJ Q' left listeners asking, "DJ who?"

Fans remained lively following the opener's departure. College students continued to fill the venue and some zealous fans took to early crowd-surfing amidst the sea of fitted caps.

A 25-minute interlude featured a girl behind the ones-and-twos, pumping out Southern-style beats. She adjusted her levels and periodically shouted into the microphone until she surprised audience members by declaring her other talent as an emcee. Channeling her inner MC Lyte and Roxanne Shante, the deceiving deejay known as Jasmine spun together some well-rehearsed rhymes that helped quell the crowd's eagerness.

A rough-stepping Yelawolf then pawed onto the stage, looking as much like a skateboarding protégé as an accomplished underground mic-grabber. With a black tank-top and matching beanie with the white letters "Ghetto" spelled out (implicitly inspired by Chad Muzik), the gritty Alabama native's brash flow and rugged-demeanor excited the crowd, at least for a short time.

"Good to Go" led off a set of hypersized rhythms and alliterated lingo. Yelawolf sped through his verses with a syllabic style, so quickly at times it seemed like he couldn't keep up with himself, until breaking into a hook that was reminiscent of Kid Rock.

One excited young girl breached the stage, flailing wildly in some excited dance, cuing the rapper to unveil his drooping mohawk and begin head-banging. This made way for almost two dozen other girls to jump on-stage and let loose themselves.

After one song, Yelawolf ordered the lively girls to leave the stage and played his most popular hit "Mixin' up the Medicine," a collaboration with the well-known but absent Juelz Santana. With the girls off-stage and the main performer still looming, the crowd began losing its enthusiasm.

The unabashed vocalist began a profane chant inciting audience members to flip the bird, and then partook in a duet with the aforementioned Jasmine entitled "Lick My Cat." At this point, he all but lost his listeners, and after a total of about 20 minutes on-stage, the crowd began chanting for the main bill.

Jasmine did well to regain the restless spectators behind the turntables, spinning retro hits to a resplendent response from a recently reticent residence, until Wiz Khalifa donned the stage at 11 p.m., appropriately wearing sunglasses and his trademark pirate-logo cham.

He jumped right into his set list with the introduction to his "Burn After Rolling" mixtape, followed by a brief introduction of fellow emcee Kev Da Hustla. Shedding the glasses, the Wiz's eyes were distinctively "low," chuckling his way right back into the music with the song "On tha Pill."

This song, featuring a chopped-and-screwed hook about a sensuous sexual fling and a slowed-down beat with dragging lyrics, didn't react well with the crowd. Additional commentary on his unflattering intimate prowess in an acapella freestyle that followed also fell flat.

This then led to some awkward singing. Without wishing to hear his ambitious melodies, the Wiz's ineptitude was exposed from behind the curtain of autotune, identifying him as a very ordinary singer. The hooks he sang were anything but magical, leading one to imagine it likely that he wrote them amidst a cloud of emerald green smoke.

Yet, at the sound of fan-favorite songs "The Thrill" and "Say Yeah," the crowd jumped right back aboard the Khalifa plane and energy began to take off once again. The performers grabbed white towels and spun them overhead like a helicopter, simulating fans at their local Steelers games. "Won't Land" and "Shame" kept audience members feeling great as Khalifa slid into his "ATL freestyle."

The intricately produced beats offering techno-sounds and upbeat rhythms certainly trumped the slower, more deliberately paced sound-scapes that the Wiz performed to. Whereas the slow-as-molasses song "Material" offered a glimpse into just why he wore those sunglasses at the beginning of the show, the song "Ink My Whole Body" was buzz-worthy, to say the least.

The alarmingly gaunt Khalifa removed his white t-shirt, exposing a work of art (or artists, I should say) and wooing the lucky women standing in the front rows. The Wiz's ensuing songs "Chewy" and "Studio Love," whose lyrics are somewhat of an exposé, elicited ladies at the wings of the stage to admire his tattoos with their hands while he repeated a thrusting motion that could be only loosely described as a dance move.

Following the song "Sky High," determined to elevate his energy to full throttle, young Khalifa put his game-face on in the song, "Go Hard or Go Home." The Wiz sprung to the proscenium with his second wind, only to realize half-way through the song that he might be out of gas. Wiping the sweat from his face at the song's end, he handed himself wheels down next to the deejay and announced his next song as his send-off. Arms spread, the rapper broke into "This Plane," to what might have been his warmest reaction.

Just like that, his performance trailed off, giving his fans a first-class experience that was pleasant, but nothing spectacular.

An appreciative Wiz Khalifa exited the stage gracefully. He grabbed his belongings and made way to his next destination, Syracuse, N.Y. Khalifa hopes to continue his "Deal or No Deal Tour" success when he travels down south for the month of April before heading west to California in May.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

Senior Bobby Hayes runs from a Hofstra defender while looking to make a pass in a game earlier this year. Hayes scored two goals and an assist in UMass' 10-8 win over Penn State on Saturday.

Hayes adds 3 points, McCormack stops 12

M. LAX from page 8

week for them, but again, our guys persevered, we pushed it to 5-2 in the second quarter, and every time we pushed it up a couple goals, they came back on us, which is a sign of a good team," Cannella said.

The Nittany Lions fell to Bucknell 11-9 on Tuesday, and have just one win so far in 2010 – 13-11 against St. John's, a team the Minutemen scrimmaged this season.

Godoi and senior long stick midfielder Will Jeffery kept PSU sophomore attackman and Nittany Lions' leading scorer Matthew Mackrides without a point on the afternoon, as Godoi had two groundballs and four caused turnovers.

"He's an excellent player who is very fast, so today I barley threw any checks, it was more of a footrace with him," Godoi said.

Mackrides leads the Nittany Lions with 25 goals and 30 points, but was kept at bay by the Minutemen defense.

"Obviously, you try to motivate your players, and every time, Diogo knows who he's playing against, he gets up for it," Cannella said. "But it was a team effort today, Tim McCormack played really well in the goal, you watch our D-middies out there, they were exhausted, they played their hearts out. Casey Rahn and Will Jeffery did as well."

McCormack made 12 stops for the Minutemen, while PSU goalkeeper Dave Baker also made 12.

UMass moved the ball around on the offensive zone, as all 10 scores were assisted, with junior midfielder Ryan Hantverk having three assists while Biscardi had a goal and two helpers.

"We felt like 1-on-1, they could challenge us, and they did, so we told our guys to keep playing off the ball, find the open man and be unselfish, push the ball behind and things worked out for us," Cannella said.

Senior midfielder Bobby Hayes had two goals, while Steve D'Amario, Ryan Liebel, Christian Hain and Ryan Smith all found the back of the net for the Minutemen.

"It was a tough day for us, [the] first time we have played in heat like this. [You] can't say enough about Tom Celentani at the end getting a ground ball, all those guys really contributed, so it was a team win, specifically, we played really good team defense, and hopefully we can continue that," Cannella said.

While Cannella is happy with his team's success as of late, he knows the Minutemen will have a target on their back, especially when they take on Towson on Saturday at Garber Field, UMass' Senior Day.

The Tigers upset Delaware in their CAA opener this weekend, and hope to end the Minutemen's four-game winning streak.

"It's better than being 0-2 and 2-7, so we'll take it, but we have a long way to go here, and I think our guys know that," Cannella said.

David Branch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Magill drives in pair in sweep at Fordham drive m Fisher and put Fordham down one run.

SOFTBALL from page 8

Plourde allowed another two singles to go by after the second out, but finished the game with her 11th strikeout against Nicole Callahan.

"Our pitches got a little flat," Sortino said. "They weren't moving the way they needed to, and [Fordham] is a good team too."

Even with Plourde being a little flat, UMass still won the game with its hitting. The Minutewomen got an early start when Williams reached second base on a fielding error, then advanced to third on a wild pitch.

Magill once again brought home Williams, this time on a sacrifice fly to right field.

The Maroon and White stayed quiet until the fifth inning when freshman Teea Rogers hit a leadoff double. Sophomore Jordan Storm pinch ran for Rogers, who scored after outfielder Carly Normandin hit a double with one out.

UMass made one last run in the top of the seventh inning when Rogers tripled on her second hit of the day. Rogers scored on a single to left field by junior Audrey Boutin.

"That's big help for a pitcher just to have the offense hit runs," Plourde said.

The Minutewomen will make their way back to Massachusetts against Boston College on Tuesday before playing their home opener on Wednesday. UMass was supposed to have its first home game on March 30 in a double-header with Dartmouth, but it was rained out.

A makeup date has yet to be announced.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Kellie Magill slides home in a contest last season. The sophomore led the Minutewomen with two RBIs in two games against Fordham.

O'Donnell nets a hat trick

Jesse O'Donnell looks for a teammate in a game earlier this year. The sophomore had three goals and three assists in UMass' 16-7 victory over Temple, leading the Minutewomen with 28 goals in the 2010 season.

W. LAX from page 8

back of net in the early moments of the second period. After a failed opportunity at the net by Lyons, O'Donnell picked up the pace and scored less than a minute later.

The next seven minutes of play showed an absence from Lyons, as the Owls came blazing through the half. Temple went on a three-goal run, with scores added by midfielders Melissa Schweitzer, Stephanie Markunas and Swavola.

With the score 9-6, and UMass' lead deteriorating, Lyons came back strong into the match as she notched her fourth goal of the contest.

The score by the junior sparked the Minutewomen offense, as it was the opening goal of another four-goal run. After goals by O'Donnell and attacker Nina Sarcona, Lyons finished off the run with her final score of the game.

Once the Owls notched their seventh goal off of attacker Lindsey Colferai's free-position shot, Lyons continued to contribute on offense, as she assisted the ball to midfielder Danielle Pelletier who put in her 12th goal of the year.

UMass closed out the game with two more scores, with midfielder Jordan Renna earning her first goal of the season and Cosgrove adding another.

Lyons was 5-for-7 with her shots, six of which were on goal. She earned four draw controls, and improved her goals average to just fewer than two per game. Five goals separate Lyons and O'Donnell as the top scorer on the team.

"She did a great job reading the defense and picking it up and putting some shots away," Venechanos said.

With Lyons' performance, the Minutewomen showed an impressive display of talent. The UMass side was one clear away from perfection (13-for-14), and missed on one free-position shot of the two they took. The Minutewomen also narrowly defeated Temple in the draw control category by a 15-10 margin.

"I felt really proud of them," Venechanos said.

Lyons and the Minutewomen head to Pittsburg, Pa. to take on Duquesne next Friday. The game against the Dukes (6-7, 2-2 A-10) is the final contest of a five-game road trip for UMass.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu

Minutemen struggle in first three innings

BASEBALL from page 8

weekend by a formidable pitching staff. Aside from Rothlin's stymieing performance, pitcher Cory Roberts pitched a no hitter into the fifth on Friday, getting a win on four hits, 10 strikeouts and one earned run over seven innings pitched.

Tyler Pilkington was the only pitcher to have problems against the Minutemen lineup this weekend, going three innings and allowing eight hits and four earned runs, but the bullpen helped to leave his record unblemished. Four pitchers came in to give up four hits and one run, unearned, to save Pilkington's day as reliever Bryan Hamilton (2-0) was credited with the win and Patrick Lawson the save.

UMass was outscored in the first three innings of each game by a combined 13-4. Its lone lead after three innings came in Game 2 of the series on Saturday when it scored four runs in the third to take the lead, only to relinquish it in the fifth inning.

After one third of the season has taken place, UMass has been unable to find any consistency at the plate or on the mound and will look to find that moving forward in its schedule. Its next game is a home-and-home set against Connecticut beginning Tuesday on the road at 3 p.m.

Dan Giglioti can be reached at dgiglioti@student.umass.edu.

Matt Gedman circles the bases in a game against Hartford earlier this year. The Minutemen have struggled to a 2-14 record so far in 2010.

How do we fit over 600 courses in more than 60 subjects, 6 international programs on 3 continents, 4 summer institutes, 3 field study programs, and 6 courses on Nantucket into just 13 weeks?

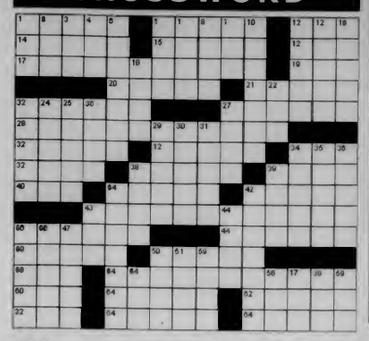
There's only one way to find out.

Summer 2010 at UMass Boston

SMALL CLASSES. BRILLIANT FACULTY. DEDICATED STUDENTS. MAJOR RESEARCH.

SUMMER.UMB.EDU | 617.287.6000

UMASS BOSTON



WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?

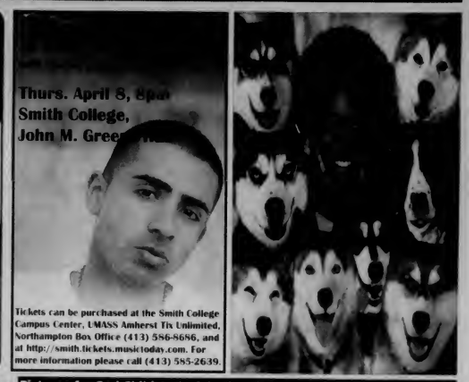
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
We like the things you whisper in our ear...

CROSSWORD

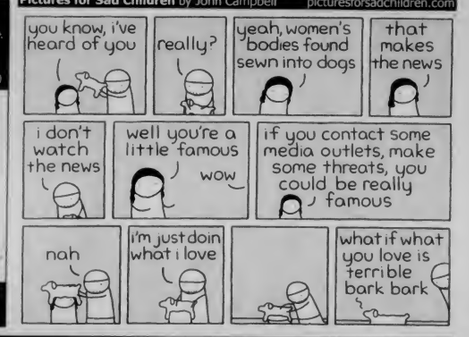
ACROSS
1. Beau
6. Mixture of coffee and chocolate
11. Card with just 1 symbol
14. Memorable saying
15. Collection of maps
16. Gear
17. Explosions
19. 1
20. Construct
21. Brother of Moses
23. Measured amount of drugs
27. Quipped
28. In an astonishing manner
32. Harlots
33. Unable to react
34. A triangular forward sail
37. Not that
38. Suit
39. A measure amount of medication
40. Grain
41. Gadget
42. Used in laser printers
43. Designed to confuse or deceive
45. Lusting for money
48. 4 pecks
49. Loaded
50. Ultra
53. Comes from a chicken
54. Near enough
60. Honey insect
61. Rings
62. Another name for Peter the Apostle
63. S
64. Detect
65. Threesomes



DOWN
1. Small boy
2. Lyric poem
3. A large open container
4. Self-importance
5. Fails to fulfill a promise
6. Spouse
7. Relating to the ear
8. Coagulate
9. Star Wars' Solo
10. Attack
11. Fruit of the oak tree
12. A small boat
13. Make improvements to
18. God of war (Greek mythology) 22. Whichever
23. Repeat
24. One of the D-Day beaches
25. A light spar on a boat
26. Not sciences
27. Sassy
29. Strainer
30. Imply
31. Obscures or conceals
34. He was swallowed by a whale
35. A valley in France
36. A colored transparent gem
38. A flock of quail
39. Puts on clothing 41. Abducts
42. Visitor
43. D
44. An African wild goat
45. A plot of parish land
46. Funes
47. Boundaries
50. Extent
51. Website addresses
52. Model
55. P
56. Former Soviet space station
57. French for "Friend"
58. As well
59. N N N N

Take UMass Amherst home with you this summer

THREE Summer Sessions
200+ online classes
REGISTER NOW!



Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID nike new era
Clarks
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

Pictures for Sad Children by John Campbell picturesforsadchildren.com

PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION! 1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS! 1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Please Don't Do It

	4
		8	4			3
					2			9
				3		7
2				8			1
			6		1			5
		3					2
					9	5		7
	1		7	5		6

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN is looking for a "M.I.T. Comics Editor for 2010-2011" SUBMIT YOUR APPLICATION AND A PICTURE OF YOUR SELF IS DISPOSED TO
COMICS @ DAILYCOLLEGIAN .COM

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
No one wants to hear about how you have been training your dragon in 3D all day, every day.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Do not forget to hide your drugs in the hyperbole.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
One does not need the help of theoretical sciences to explain why your favorite number is 80,085.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
One small step for man and one monumental and mindbending step for psychology majors.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Sniffing potent markers is not so much a crime but is forbidden in the colorful land of Crayola.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
You will be tarred, feathered and put into the back of a Honda CRX.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Your fingernails do not crave LSD. French fries are responsible for that one.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
This horoscope was supposed to possess the dirtiest line from Ludacris' hit single, "What's Your Fantasy?"

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
A hangover from Easter dinner does not mean that you have become closer to the divine.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Your weekend has become tainted with sentences like, "My stripper friends are coming over with Velveeta."

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
A TV does not measure a man's importance but his attention to consumerism and the size of his penis do.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
They paid me to tell you to stop wearing socks when you guys make whoopie pies in the bed.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Fall 2010 internships with the Student Legal Services Office. Get hands on expenence in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn 12 under graduate credits. No experience necessary and will provide training! Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

Help Me Move Furniture- April 8 or 9. $20/Hr. Truck or Van Preferred- Call Chabot 413-896-7022

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

HOUSE FOR RENT

4 Bedroom in Northampton $1350. No pets. June & September. Skibiski Realtors. 586-1827

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St, Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM fights off Nittany Lions

Godoi, defense key in victory, remain perfect 2-0 in CAA

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Defense played a huge part for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team again, as the No. 9 Minutemen remained undefeated in the Colonial Athletic Association with a 10-8 victory over Penn State Saturday afternoon in Happy Valley.

With less than a minute remaining in regulation, senior All-American defenseman Diogo Godoi intercepted a pass, with the Nittany Lions (1-8, 0-1 CAA) trying to tie the game at nine, generating a goal-scoring opportunity that put the game away.

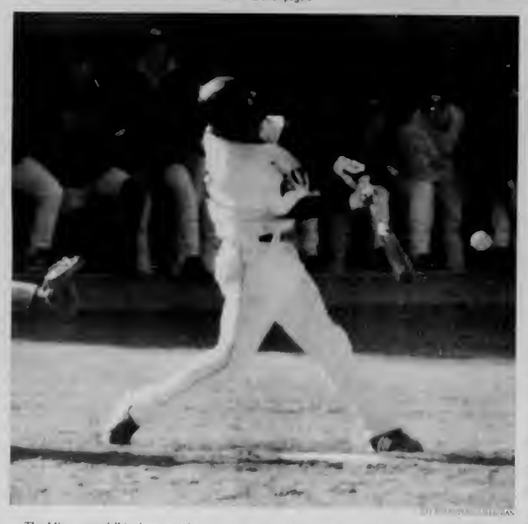
"Sometimes it just goes your way, and luckily, I got my stick up, and the ball went in it, and we were able to clear the ball and win the game. So it was a good play," Godoi said.

UMass	10
Penn State	8

Freshman Will Manny, who had a hat trick, tallied his third goal of the game on a pass from sophomore midfielder Anthony Biscardi, putting the game away with 38 seconds remaining, propelling UMass to a 7-2 record and a 2-0 conference record.

"We knew Penn State was an excellent team, we've lost a bunch of one goal, two goal games. We knew it was going to be a battle going down here," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

The Minutemen lost to Yale and No. 14 Harvard by one goal margins earlier this season, but have since rattled off four consecutive wins.



"I thought they had more legs then we did, coming off a short

See M. LAX on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Ryan Liebel looks to escape from Albany defenders in a game earlier this season at Garber Field. Liebel scored one goal and assisted on another in UMass' 10-8 win over Penn State on Saturday, a victory that kept UMass perfect this season in conference play.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen fell in three straight games this past weekend on the road to Atlantic 10 foe Charlotte. UMass was outscored 25-10 in the three-game series.

Minutemen swept by 49ers over weekend

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

This weekend spelled another disappointing road trip for the Massachusetts baseball team, worn down by superior pitching and ineptitude at the plate.

UMass lost to Charlotte on Sunday, 7-1, dropping its fifth straight series while falling to 2-14 overall. Minutemen starter Mike Gedman, one of the few bright spots on this season's roster, was hit-around, taking the loss to fall to 1-2 on the short season.

The 49ers (19-6, 6-0 Atlantic-10) scored six runs in the first three innings, beginning with three two-out hits to score four runs and a run-costing error. Charlotte's Chad Rothlin enjoyed a smooth day as the starter, pitching seven and two-thirds innings of four hit baseball, giving up a lone-earned run.

During the first inning, Gedman walked the first batter up and allowed a fielder's choice to Cory Tilton. After striking out the next batter, an error on catcher's interference allowed Ryan Rivers to reach and Tilton to advance to second. Kevin Gillespie then singled to left field followed by a Miguel Rodriguez double to right field which put Charlotte up 2-0.

Gedman allowed the leadoff man to reach base again in the second, as Zane Williams doubled to right field and scored on a throwing error by right fielder. The 49ers then filled the bases after singles by Corey Shaylor and Justin Wilson and a Tilton walk before Mike Perkins extended his hitting streak to 15 games on a two-RBI single to push the lead out to 5-0.

The 49ers manufactured a run in the third by scoring the leadoff man Justin Roland to give themselves a 6-0 lead.

Gedman allowed seven runs, including six earned, on 13 hits over four and one-third innings. He also struck out four and walked two in 99 pitches.

Ben Hart (2.1 inning pitched) and Glen Misho (1.0 inning pitched) combined in a formidable relief effort as the two allowed just one base runner in three and one-third innings of relief.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, the damage had already been done as its one run in the eighth inning did little to help them get back in the ballgame. A two-out Ryan Cusick single and steal led to a Justin Fredette RBI double and the only blemish on Rothlin's pitching-line.

UMass was swept in this weekend series, marking the fourth time this season UMass has lost a series, dropping the three games they played in North Carolina this weekend. The three losses drops the Minutemen to 1-5 in Atlantic 10 play in 2010.

The Minutemen were shut down for most of the 49ers	7

UMass	1
49ers	8
UMass	5
49ers	10
UMass	4

See BASEBALL on page 6

Lyons leads UMass over Owls

Junior notches 6 points on 5 goals, perfect 3-0 in A-10

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

Jackie Lyons changed the game.

The junior midfielder led the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team to a 16-7 victory over Atlantic 10 rival Temple on Saturday with five goals and an assist.

"Jackie's been doing a good job of reading what the defense [has been] giving her," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "They weren't plotting as much as teams in the past, and she did a good job of screening them. She put the shots away."

UMass	16
Temple	7

Lyons started off the game between the Minutewomen (6-6, 3-0 A-10) and the Owls (4-6, 1-2 A-10) quickly, finding her way to the back of the net within two minutes of the opening whistle.

The goal by Lyons was followed by a score from attacker Stephanie Hopkins at the 26:48 mark, giving UMass a comfortable opening lead over Temple.

"We came out with a great start to the game. We had a couple quick goals and a couple quick defensive stops," Venechanos said.

The fouls in the opening five minutes produced trouble for the Maroon and White, as it led to Owls midfielder Chelsea Rostek's score nearly 30 seconds after UMass' second goal. The goal by Temple seemed to fuel the Minutewomen, as they opened up on a four-goal run over the Owls.

While defender Riley Perry and midfielders Jesse O'Donnell and Merrin Cosgrove all notched scores in the run, Lyons once again made a difference with a shot that capped off the run. Similar to four of the five goals by Lyons, her second score was done without assistance.

Lyons proved to be in the mix of things throughout the entire match. After a score by Owls midfielder Charlotte Swavola, followed by another opportunity to finish out the half, Lyons and midfielder Danielle Pelletier sent in a pair of shots to give UMass a commanding 8-3 lead going into the break.

Lyons did not back down in the second half, pursuing the

See W. LAX on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Lyons waits for a pass in a game earlier this season. The junior is tied with Jesse O'Donnell (32) for the team lead in points.

Minutewomen take two from Fordham

Plourde strikes out 29 batters, leads nation with 302 on season

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Saturday's game was not the usual hitting display that the Massachusetts softball team has become accustomed to since beginning Atlantic 10 play, but it continued to stay undefeated as it swept Fordham, the only other conference team receiving votesy.

Pitcher Sara Plourde recorded her 11th shutout against the Rams, 2-0, in the first game and won a close 3-2 game later that afternoon. The sophomore finished the day with 29 strikeouts and moved past the nation's strikeout leader, Troy's Ashlyn Williams (282 strikeouts), with 302 strikeouts this season.

Plourde is currently6sixth for the highest number of strikeouts in a single season. In the first game, Plourde struck out 18 batters while allowing one hit to first baseman, Jamie LaBovick.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino called Fordham pitcher Jen Mineau one of the best in the country, but her arm couldn't keep Sortino's team from producing the offense it needed to win.

The Minutewomen (21-7, 6-0 A-10) didn't strike until the third inning when second baseman Kyllie Magill hit a two-out double to bring in shortstop Whitney Williams. Sophomore Katie Bettencourt added to the damage in the sixth inning with a solo home run.

UMass ended the game with six hits, all from different players.

"Our timely hitting really, really helped," Sortino said. "I thought our [players] had pretty good discipline at the plate and they did a good job."

In Game 2, Plourde allowed two runs and five hits in seven innings after keeping the Rams scoreless through six.

Sortino believes the problems started in the second inning, but never really threatened the Minutewomen until the seventh, when the Rams had four hits to end the inning.

The rally started with Erin Fisher, who hit a single to left field after LaBovick flied out. Beckah Wiggins followed that up with a home run to

UMass	3
Fordham	2
UMass	2
Fordham	0

See SOFTBALL on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

SCATTERED T-STORMS HIGH: 73 LOW: 53 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 2010

UM student dies in Coolidge

Loved ones mourn sophomore found in Southwest dormitory

By Matt Rocheleau
Bobby Hitt and
Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

Nora Ruchman's friends and family mourned her death yesterday, remembering the 19-year-old sophomore's compassionate demeanor, sense of humor, and her contagious smile.

"She was a really nice and bubbly girl," said her roommate Alana Hallisey, a sophomore English major. "She transferred here, and I was her first roommate. It's just really a shock. I don't even really know what else to say right now. She will definitely be missed."

Ruchman, of Rockport, Mass., was found dead in her Coolidge Hall high-rise tower dorm room at 9:10 p.m. Sunday by UMass Police responding to a request about her status.

"This was an unattended death, and there is no indication of foul play," said UMass Police, according to a University statement released yesterday afternoon.

Her mother, Anita Ruchman, was reached Monday at her Rockport home.

"All I would like to say at this time is that I'm really feeling for the kids and her friends. I appreciate their love and their grief, and I just hope that they're OK," she said.

When and how Ruchman died remains unclear. UMPD Chief Johnny Whitehead said more information will follow after autopsy results return, but he did not know when the results would be available. State police are investigating the specific circumstances surrounding death, "as they do for all unattended deaths," said UMass' statement.

Questions to the state police media relations office Monday afternoon were referred to Northwestern District Attorney's Office Elizabeth D. Scheibel's Office, which was not immediately available to comment on Ruchman's death or the ongoing investigation.

Ruchman transferred to UMass this spring as a second-semester sophomore after spending three semesters at the University of South Carolina, Columbia, said a campus-wide e-mail from Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin. She did not have a declared major with the University, but was studying music, philosophy and management, the e-mail said.

"While Nora was new to our community, she joined a large community of friends from her high school who are enrolled here," said Vanin's e-mail. "Our deepest sympathies go out to Nora's mother Anita Ruchman, all of her family members and her many friends here and at home."

According to her Facebook profile, where dozens of those who knew her posted fond farewell messages yesterday, Ruchman graduated from Ipswich High School in 2008.

Coolidge residents gathered at a somber "community meeting" yesterday in the tower's 19th-floor lounge.

Grief counselors from various areas of campus life were made available to students including representatives from mental health services, the area's religious community and Coolidge Hall residence staff. In her e-mail, Vanin also said anyone seeking support services can visit the Dean of Students office at 227 Whitmore Administration Building.

Two years ago, a UMass student died in Southwest on the same date that Ruchman's body was discovered by police. On April 4, 2008, 20-year-old Liam O'Donnelly was found dead, after he fell from a 17th-floor window of the John Quincy Adams Hall tower, according to police who ruled the death was a suicide.

COURTESY PHOTO/FACEBOOK

Nora Ruchman, 19, died Sunday night in her dormitory.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhittia student.umass.edu Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Pedestrian struck in Mass. Ave. crosswalk

Freshman driver faces charge

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts freshman was charged yesterday after the vehicle she was driving earlier Monday morning allegedly struck a UMass sophomore who was walking in the crosswalk of a campus intersection.

The pedestrian, Jessica Casper, 20, of Leominster, Mass., was hospitalized with non-life-threatening injuries after she was hit at around 7:55 a.m. Monday while crossing Massachusetts Avenue at the roadway's intersection with Sunset Avenue, according to University spokesman Edward Blaguszewski.

The vehicle's driver, Kali Ackerman, 18, of Ashland, Mass., was charged with a motor vehicle crosswalk violation, he said.

Casper was transported from the scene to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield by an Amherst Fire Department ambulance.

"[The vehicle driven by] Ackerman was traveling in the eastbound lane ... that is the time of day when the sun can be in the driver's eyes if you're heading east," said Blaguszewski.

Casper was "treated and discharged" from the hospital several hours later, according to Baystate's public relations office.

During a brief interview with Casper late afternoon yesterday, she stated that she was "still in a tremendous amount of pain."

"My parents are taking me into Boston to a women's hospital. I was released earlier from Baystate," she said. "At Baystate, they only took X-rays of my legs. There was no full-body X-ray done, so we're going to get another opinion."

Ackerman declined to comment on the incident.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

After eight days, mural unveiled at ceremony

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

This 18-by-20 feet mural was unveiled yesterday at a special ceremony in the Campus Center Auditorium. Irish muralists Danny Devenny and Mark Ervine had been working on it for the past eight days.

By Anna Meiler
Collegian Staff

After eight days of painting with the help of University of Massachusetts faculty and students, Congressman Richard Neal unveiled the 18-by-20 feet mural that Irish muralists Danny Devenny and Mark Ervine finished on Saturday.

About 200 hundred people, including members of the campus community as well as local residents went to see the finished product in the Campus Center Auditorium. The event was part of the Art of Conflict Transformation Event Series. It is also a belated celebration of the 10th anniversary of a historic agreement in the North Ireland peace process, The Good Friday Agreement, signed in 1998.

Host John Mullen, the Dean of the University's Graduate School, also noted that this event was a celebration of Congressman Neal. The congressman worked for a year to get a visa for Devenny, who is considered a terrorist because he was once a member of the Irish Republican Army (IRA). Leah Wing, professor of Legal Studies at UMass and the event coordinator, also noted that Devenny wouldn't have been able to come to UMass without Neal's help.

The main image of the mural is a golden statue of liberty with famous historical figures painted on her crown. The statue is surrounded by other images which represent the campus community and student ideals. It touches upon issues such as Justice for Jason and is also an outcry to stop wars worldwide because in war "there are no winners, only victims," said Ervine.

The muralists said the most important part of their project was creating a mural that reflected the ideas of UMass students and the campus. The artists were able to gather ideas from a blog where UMass students could post their thoughts, and they also held public Skype sessions over the past year.

Devenny and Ervine were once enemies in the Irish War of Independence. Devenny is a republican and former prisoner from the IRA while Ervine is a loyalist whose father was a Progressive Unionist Party leader and Ulster Volunteer Force member. The artists painted murals throughout the war which depicted the conflict, conveyed urgent messages and honored those who had died.

Devenny and Ervine met about four years ago and began collaborating to paint peace murals. They are trying to help the peace process in Ireland by painting together and showing their communities that it is possible for past rivals to come together to create a peaceful future.

Devenny said that their mural painting at UMass was very different from their experiences back home in Ireland because the muralists spent decades painting images of war and conflict. However, he said they also celebrated the good parts of their lives and their culture through painting. This was the aspect of their work they tried to incorporate into the mural by creating a celebration of UMass culture.

Devenny said that "no world is perfect," and so they also included pictures of things that UMass students felt were campus issues or areas that needed improvement. He also laughed and said that though the abundance of campus squirrels is a trivial issue, they were still included in the mural.

"I hope we have done justice in the representation we have created," said Ervine.

The mural is also more than what it depicts, according to Devenny, who said that the project was a "demonstration of skills" and a way to "show students how murals are conceived and produced."

The event included live Irish music and speeches by

See MURAL on page 2

Author: Boards should change to avoid future market collapse

By Chris Stores
Collegian Staff

In order to avoid a stock market collapse similar to the one in 2008, regulation and change must be applied to companies' board of directors, said John Gillespie to a full audience in an Isenberg classroom yesterday.

Gillespie is the co-author of the book of "Money for Nothing: How the Failure of Corporate Boards Is Ruining American Business and Costing Us Trillions." A self-proclaimed "recovering investment banker," Gillespie examines the situation that led to the market collapse, offers a criticism of boardrooms and provides solutions for change.

"When you step back and think about it ... companies have taken the place of governments and religions of being the single most important entity that affects individuals," he said.

In 2008, "leaders in companies weren't doing what they were supposed to do," he said. "If entities aren't led well, the people who are hurt are all of society."

Ideally, boards are supposed to represent the shareholders of a company, Gillespie said. They should "oversee management," providing support and maintaining growth.

But this is not always realized, he said. The shareholder does not get a fair say in who becomes board members. Instead, the "proportion of power is reversed," allowing the CEO to make decisions about board member appointments, with the shareholder getting a limited and restricted vote.

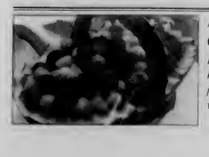
In "Money for Nothing" Gillespie and David Zweig provide many examples of boards that did not contain representation of qualified members.

For example, the Disney board of directors led by CEO Michael Eisner from 1984 to 2005 contained board members such as Eisner's child's school principal, the architect who built his house, the head of the university to which he donated money and actor Sydney Poitier.

O.J. Simpson was on three company boards including a knife company, said Gillespie. Priscilla Presley, ex-wife of Elvis Presley, was on the MGM board despite no business experience.

Boards also feature an "utter lack of diversity," said Gillespie, who borrowed a common explanation of them as being "male, pale and stale." As older white men, they work with "blinders on," he said.

"They aren't going to notice things have changed," Gillespie said. He cited General Motors as having this problem in not recognizing that many people were concerned about buying more eco-friendly cars instead of cars that simply looked nice.



Gillespie explained that the vote

See BOARDS on page 2

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

John Gillespie reads an excerpt from his book "Money for Nothing" during a lecture to an audience in an Isenberg School of Management classroom yesterday.

ARTS & LIVING

College cooking guide

Learn helpful tips about how to keep your home-made meals healthy and simple with just a few easy steps. Perfect if you're watching your waistline or wallet!

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen tangle with Eagles

Coming off back-to-back wins against Fordham, the Massachusetts softball team will look to continue its winning streak against Boston College this afternoon.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Amanda Johnson believes that the UMass class registration system is in desperate need of a system overhaul.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go online to check out Photo Editor Matthew Harrison's video guide to Scotch whisky.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 46
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Jonson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Barnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnoer
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rubin-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Monarrs
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cosh
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890 as the paper began to age, became the College Signal in 1918, the Weekly Collegian in 1919 and the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1930. Published daily since 1965. The Collegian has been boycotted since January 1979. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:00 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Mural seeks to capture UM essence

MURAL from page 1

Chancellor Holub, Mullen, Wing and Neal, as well as a few words from the artists.

Neal called the event a "powerful example of what men and women of good will can accomplish."

"We've all had a chance to witness one of those 'it-will-never-happen' moments," said Neal in regard to the event, as well as the artists helping transform war into peace in Ireland.

Many of the students in attendance raised their hand when Wing asked the audience who had helped the artists paint last week.

Jenna Oelschlegel, a senior at UMass, who spent last year abroad in Ireland said that she enjoyed helping paint and said that the mural is "something that is going to be a great symbol for future students to learn from."

Another UMass senior who helped paint, Alex Bonazoli, said that the mural is a great representation of the UMass community as well as a depiction of the "muralists themselves and what they've been doing in the peace process and the importance of the artistic process."

The artists had planned to finish on Friday, but almost destroyed their own piece of work, said Devenny. As the artists applied the finishing glaze, the black markers the artists had used created black streaks across the canvas.

The artists had to spend an additional day fixing the mistake but Devenny said they didn't mind because they "enjoyed the warmth and hospitality of the students."

The mural will be hung in the Campus Center above the ATM machines.

The artists and the mural "have left a lasting impression already," said Wing, who also said in her speech that the unveiling of the mural marked one of the happiest days of her life.

Anna Meifer can be reached at ameifer@student.umass.edu

Students and faculty praised the mural unveiled yesterday. The two artists hoped the process involved students and showed them a behind-the-scenes look on how the mural came about.

'Money for Nothing' offers economic solutions

BOARDS from page 1

Top-earning executives

How much CEOs of top U.S. and European companies were paid in 2007:

Salary, $ millions ■
Bonus, $ millions ■

CEO	Company	Long-term incentives, $ millions
Europe
A. Sarin	Vodafone	2.3 3.5 8.3
J.P. Garnier	GlaxoSmithKline	1.6 3.2 6.4
Lord Brown	BP	2.8 1.6 6.2
J. van der Veer	Royal Dutch Shell	2 2.5 3.7
P. Scaroni	ENI	1.8 2.8 5.3
U.S.
E.E. Whitacre Jr.	AT&T	1.9 6.2 15.2
A.G. Lafley	Procter & Gamble	1.6 5.6 15.5
C. Prince	Citigroup	0.9 12.1 8.6
J.R. Immelt	General Electric	3 4.6 13.3
K.D. Lewis	Bank of America	1.4 6 13.3

Comparison of the executive salaries of the top five U.S. and the top five European CEO's, also showing long-term incentives and bonuses.

for board members by shareholders was part of an "unbelievably undemocratic" process. Shareholders have a single vote, usually just "for" or "against." The system is supposed to be a majority rules vote, but often times even this is ignored by boards and CEOs.

Even those who are qualified for the board position can be ineffective because of the nature of the board and the company.

"It's impossible for a well-intentioned board member to do well in that circumstance," he said.

Gillespie cited the example of a Bank of America director who asked for further discussion of a CEO's increased pay package. The next day she found herself fired from the board without any notification.

He also said that the "culture within boards" has been a major problem for companies.

"[Some] people… are strong in their own jobs but when they get in the board room and close the door… they become like church mice," he said.

"People are reluctant to ask tough questions. They don't want to seem ignorant or jeopardize their role," he said.

In one case, a CEO had been stealing $21 million from the company. He had successfully been achieving the theft by inventing a warehouse in Canada, said Gillespie. Eventually, the board of directors discovered the theft and arranged an emergency meeting. During the meeting, there was news that the CEO had committed suicide, to which one of the directors said, "Let's fire him for his sins anyway."

Boards will "often take action after they're embarrassed," said Gillespie. But by then, "it's too little, too late."

"Money for Nothing" ends with examples of effective board of directors in companies such as Target. Good practices include having evaluations, allowing the board of directors to nominate members for appointments, allowing poor directors to be fired by fellow members and preventing CEOs from being chairman of the boards.

Gillespie worked for 18 years as an investment banker for Lehman Brothers, Morgan Stanley and Bear Stearns. He was the chief financial officer (CFO) of a nationwide human services company and has an MBA from the Harvard Business School.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@dailycollegian.com.

– Community Clips –

Lecture: "New Reality of Mexico-U.S. Migration: Effects of America's War on Immigrants"
Douglas Massey, the Henry G. Bryant Professor of Sociology and Public Affairs at Princeton University, speaks as part of the 2009-2010 CPPA Grants Workshop Speaker Series.
Tue Apr. 6, 12:30 p.m. Thompson 620

Lecture: "Rethinking Immigration and the Family in the Age of Global Vertigo"
The Center for Research on Families is pleased to present Dr. Marcelo M. Suarez-Orozco, Professor of Globalization and Education at NYU, co-Director of Immigration Studies at NYU, and a member of the School of Social Science at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton University.
Tue Apr. 6, 4:00 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

STEM Education Institute Tuesday Seminar
Jeff Blanchard of the Department of Microbiology presents a lecture entitled "Using Genome Technology to Develop Renewable Alternatives to Gasoline."
Tue Apr. 6, 4:00 p.m. Hasbrouck 138

Reception for "Invertebrate Art"
Come enjoy refreshments, and meet the artists of "Im-ertebrate Art," a collection of photographs showcasing the incidental artwork produced by insects, spiders, and snails as they go about their daily lives.
Tue Apr. 6, 4:00 p.m. Student Union Art Gallery

Lecture: "The Impact of Financial Speculation on Commodity Prices in Developing Countries."
A lecture by Jayati Ghosh, Professor of Economics at Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi.
Tue Apr. 6, 4:00 p.m. Gordon Hall Third Floor Conference Room

Panel Discussion: Being a Boss People Want to Work For
A panel discussion on lessons learned by high level leaders in successfully managing people and teams.
Tue Apr. 6, 6:00 p.m. Campus Center 905-09

Catalan Film Festival
Catalan Film Festival presents "Tres dies amb la familia," a film by Mar Coll.
Tue Apr. 6, 6:30 p.m. Herter 212

Tuesdays in Bezanson
Jazz faculty and guests perform eclectic works including Concerto for Trumpet and Chamber Jazz Orchestra.
Tue Apr. 6, 8:00 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall

Distant Shores: A Fiction Reading by Caryl Phillips
The Interdisciplinary Seminar in the Humanities and Fine Arts (IHSA) is pleased to announce 'Distant Shores: A Fiction Reading by Caryl Phillips,' part of its week-long residency featuring Phillips, 'Writing Migration'.
Tue Apr. 6, 8:00 p.m. Goodell Bernie Dallas Room

Conference: New Worlds of Adoption: Linking Research with Practice
A conference focused on creating a bidirectional linkage between adoption-related research and practice. Activities include a poster session, break-out sessions, and lectures.
Wed Apr. 7, 8:00 a.m. Campus Center

Lecture: "Dynamics and Stagnation in the Malthusian Epoch: Theory and Evidence"
A lecture by Quamrul Ashraf, Assistant Professor of Economics at Williams College.
Wed Apr. 7, 4:00 p.m. Thompson 9th Floor Seminar Room

Renaissance Wednesday
Claudia Olk speaks on "Transformation and Perfection in Antony and Cleopatra."
Wed Apr. 7, 4:00 p.m. Renaissance Center Reading Room

Play: "The Shelter" by Caryl Phillips
A performance of Caryl Phillips's play, 'The Shelter,' in collaboration with the Theater Department. Phillips will introduce the performance and participate in discussion.
Wed Apr. 7, 4:30 p.m. Curtain Theater

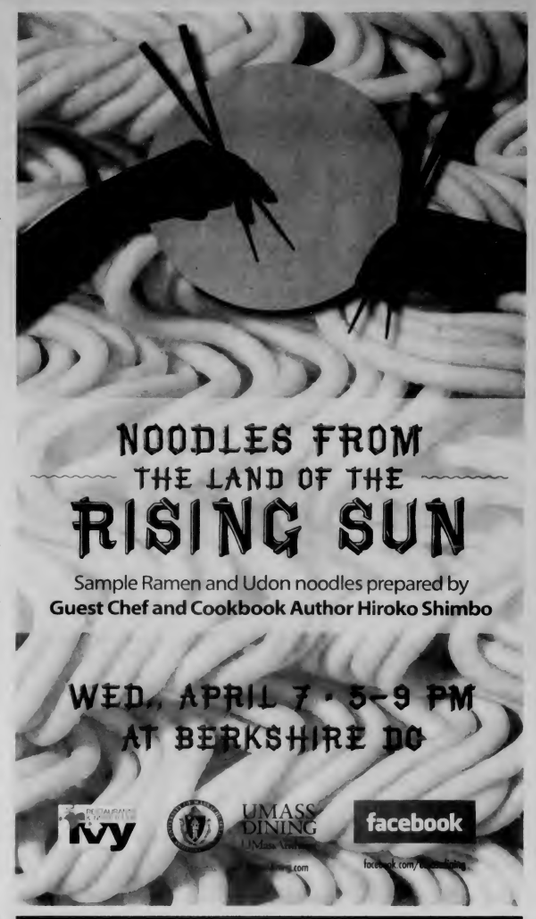
Lyme Disease Film Screening: "Under Our Skin"
A screening of award-winning documentary about the growing Lyme Disease epidemic.
Wed Apr. 7, 5:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 133

Panel Discussion: The Department of Communication Alumni Career Night
A panel discussion featuring alumni of the Department talking about the many different careers and activities they are engaged in.
Wed Apr. 7, 7:00 p.m. Goodell Bernie Dallas Room

Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: "Playing Away"
A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: "Cinematic Cities."
Wed Apr. 7, 7:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137

The 7th Annual Water Resources Research Center Conference
The 7th Annual Water Resources Research Center Conference will address the needs for water monitoring, assessment, and management of water resources in New England in the face of variability due to changes in climate, land use, population, and other environmental stressors.
Thu Apr. 8, 8:15 a.m. Campus Center

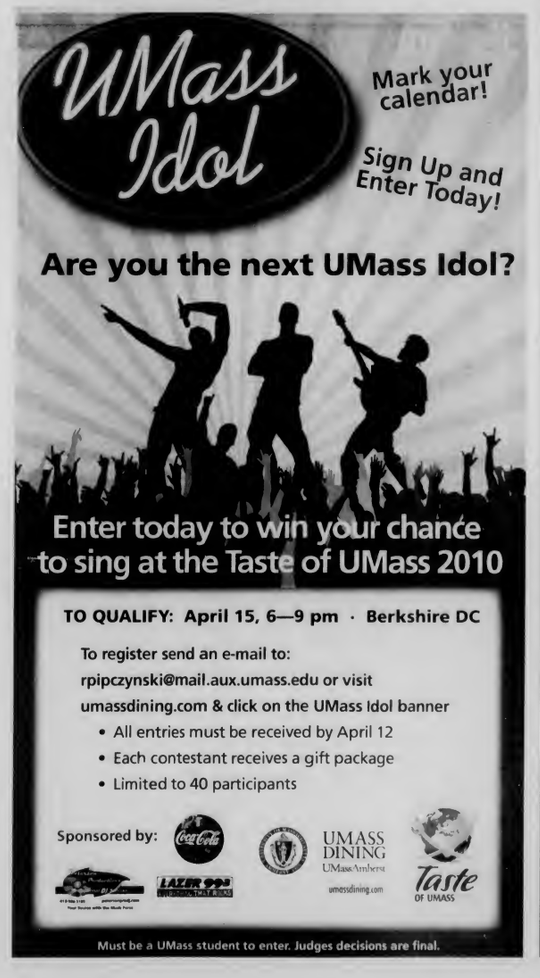
FSI 2010 Workshop
A one-day workshop on fluid-structure interactions.
Thu Apr. 8, 10:00 a.m. Engineering Lab II Kellogg Conference Room, Room 118



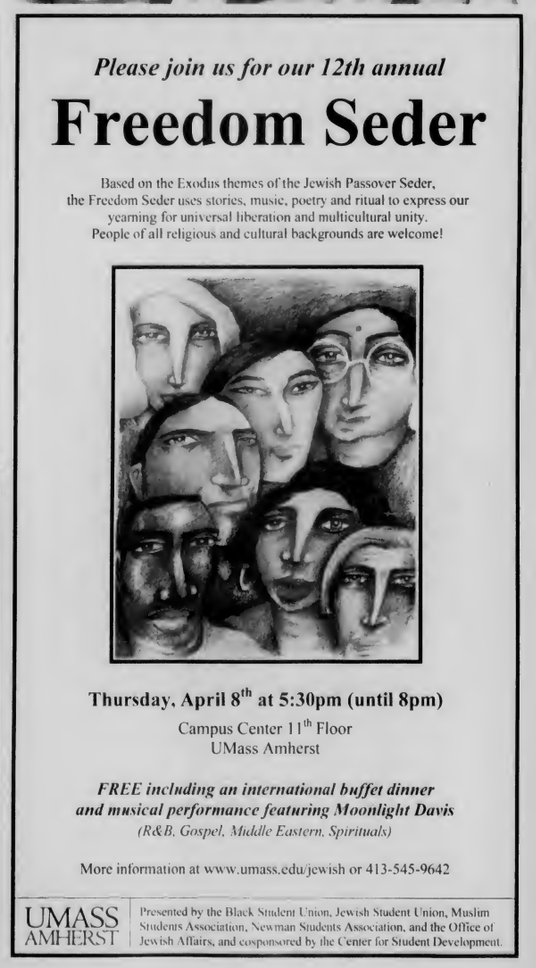
RefWorks Workshop
Learn to use RefWorks, a program that manages citations and creates quick bibliographies.
Thu Apr. 8, 11:00 a.m. Integrated Sciences Building 3rd floor

BDIC Information Session
Information session on creating your own major through interdisciplinary studies.
Thu Apr. 8, 2:00 p.m. Goodell 608
Fri Apr. 9, 11:00 a.m. Goodell 608

Lecture: "Social Exclusion: Morality, Prejudice and Group Identity in Childhood"
As part of the Tay Gavin Erickson Lecture Series, the Center for Research on Families is pleased to present, Dr. Melanie Killen, Professor of Human Development and the Associate Director for the Center for Children, Relationships, and Culture at the University of Maryland.
Thu Apr. 8, 4:00 p.m. Campus Center 904-908



Making Connections: Life After UMass Amherst
UMass Amherst grads from the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of Afro-American Studies, the Labor Center, STPEC (Social Thought and Political Economy) and Women, Gender and Sexuality Studies return to campus to meet students and offer internships and career information.
Thu Apr. 8, 4:30 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge



Annual ISHA Lecture: Caryl Phillips, "Colour Me English"
The Annual ISHA Lecture, "Colour Me English," will be presented by eminent author Caryl Phillips, part of the weeklong residency, "Writing Migration."
Thu Apr. 8, 4:30 p.m. Goodell Bernie Dallas Room

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Look both ways, maybe three

Ben Moriarty

My father says I simply have bad karma when it comes to cars. During one winter I raced to make it up a snowy hill but missed the turn up the hill, hit a sand bump and flew across a frozen ravine. I hit a telephone pole one misty evening, totaling my car. I, despite obsessively checking my lights, seem to have a battery which always drains. When going home one day from work, the front axle snapped and my tire rolled away. It is hard to drive with only three tires and one corner of the car is on the pavement.

But recently, there was a student who was hit by a car. There has been a handful of these incidents in the past year, and we have to wonder what can be done. Something can be done, but nothing should be done.

And then, when I was in first grade, I was hit by a car. I was in the center of my town, playing and watching my friend's Little League games, when I ran across the road to get a foul ball, and upon running back, I was nailed like road kill.

However I wasn't killed. I feel like I have good karma with cars.

At the very least, and for a reason I can't come up with, I am alive for some reason.

There are about 5,000 pedestrians who die by being hit by cars every year. The figure of those who are hit and live is obviously higher. A couple years ago, there was a big hoopla about hybrid cars. Apparently, the cars were too quiet and blind people couldn't hear them, causing an increase in the number of accidents and potential accidents. If there was a worst-way-to-die contest, being driven over could surely win – especially being driven over by some hippie in a nerdy hippie car. And that is no way to die no matter who you are.

That is why, on Massachusetts Avenue, there are rumble strips. And no, they aren't for deaf people, the strips are there because last year there was a bunch of kids who got hit by cars. And also, they want to provide me an obstacle to evade while I'm driving down Mass. Ave, so instead of paying attention to not hitting pedestrians, I can try to only have one side of my car rumble on the rumble strip.

So believe me, I only get one side to rumble every time, and I have yet to hit someone.

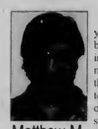
But recently, there was a student who was hit by a car. There have been a handful of these incidents in the past year, and we have to wonder what can be done. Something can be done, but nothing should be done.

When I was in first grade, I realized, as I was tumbling through the air after being hit by the bumper of a car, I probably should have looked both ways.

My father's cousin told me to look three ways when you cross the street: to the right, to the left, and up, because a plane crashes every day. Fifteen years later, I still know I should probably both look ways.

You can say that it is the driver's fault, and I imagine sometimes it is, but knowing how reckless I still am when crossing the street, there shouldn't be much blame except on the person. Looking both ways before you cross the street is something every single child knows, and every young adult at an institution of higher learning should know as well.

One of the first things my father said to me when he was teaching me to drive is to never trust blinkers. To make sure you know the person is actually turning before you pull out, so you don't get T-boned. That knowledge isn't specific to just that instance. You shouldn't trust lights, you shouldn't trust paint on the ground and you shouldn't trust the law and how you have the right of way.



You should, unless you are blind, trust what you see, and that's whether a car is near you or not. If you're blind, I still have no advice except learn to play the piano well enough to hire a butler. That's what blind people seem to do. But if you see a car coming, don't walk, and if you need to, run.

If you don't see one, then walk. And when you walk, actually inspect what is around you, because you never know when a car is going to blow a red light.

If you can't do that, which simply requires taking necessary and intelligent precautions, you kind of deserve getting hit by a car – and that's coming from someone who has been hit by one.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

No science stunts society

Matthew M. Robare

For many years it has become increasingly obvious to many observers that despite the tens of millions of dollars being spent on education in this country, we are suffering from the very serious affliction of scientific illiteracy. This doesn't mean that people are any less curious about science; it means that many of us lack access to high-quality scientific information and most importantly, it means that we are not being taught to think scientifically.

Scientific thinking is, at its roots, empirical. That means that the question of whether or not something is factual can only be settled through a controlled experiment. A fact can be derived from principles, but it can only be proven through experiment. The prevalence of belief in the claims of "crystal power," "pyramid power," "Reiki," "qi," "2012 Maya doomsday prophecy," "young earth creationism" and similar alleged facts only demonstrate the need for good scientific education.

In a world where the developments in ecology and climatology, to say nothing of physics and computer science, are every day becoming more and more relevant, a good scientific education is necessary to remain involved and informed. A world in which science must play a key role in political policy must have people who understand it or be dominated by an elite class.

But just as important as scientific literacy – in fact, perhaps more so because we are already being affected by our general lack of it – is economic literacy.

Take, as an example, the nightly news. Every year, around Thanksgiving you start to see an almost constant stream of news stories about projected holiday spending. Stories about the weather get spun into massive sagas about how snow storms and heating prices will affect holiday spending.

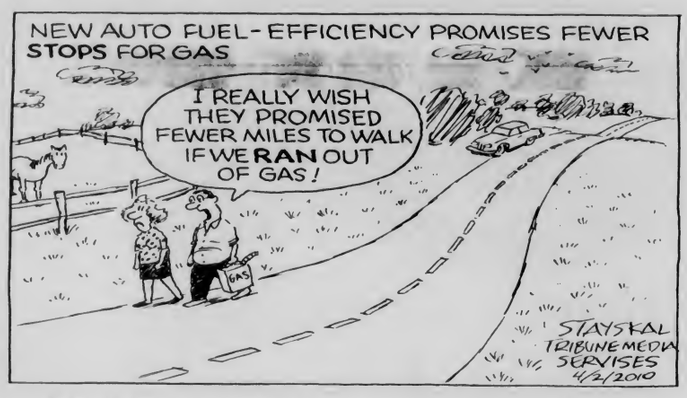
In a world where the developments in ecology and climatology, to say nothing of physics and computer science, are every day becoming more and more relevant, a good scientific education is necessary to remain involved and informed.

Manicured and immaculately groomed TV reporters dressed in black pea coats in front of the New York Stock Exchange will read off a list of numbers representing trends in consumer holiday spending, with the implication that if we don't spend every penny we earn in October, November and December on Christmas presents, the national economy will collapse and we'll all lose our jobs.

It is, of course, a load of bull and one of the best examples of economic illiteracy. Consumer spending just isn't that important to the economy, it's just that the most common statistics overstate its importance and understate the contribution of capital goods spending and investment – purchases of raw materials, use of natural resources, production and things like that. At its most basic, a factory that makes steel I-beams that can be used in a bunch of different things is always going to contribute more to society than any amount of Barbies or G.I. Joes bought at Toys'R'Us for Christmas ever will.

The classic example, however, has got to be the broken window fallacy. It will be invoked after virtually every natural disaster. A government official or media person will talk about how all the destruction is horrible right before saying something like "But now there will be a more robust economy because the rebuilding will bring jobs and spending to the region."

No, no. Just no. Yes, there will be more construction jobs in the wake of a hurricane or earthquake – but what about the jobs lost because of the destruction of the workplace? What about the economic activity that would have occurred had the firm not lost its building or the workers their homes? They could have been saving for their children's college education, but now they have to use that money to recover to a previous standard of living instead of increasing the one they have. If large scale destruction of building and infrastructure is good for the economy, why spend billions on a stimulus package when George W. Bush and Barack Obama could have ordered American cities to be leveled for the economy, costing us only a few million?



These fallacies are perpetuated in the face of common sense and empirical facts. Constant encouragement to spend contributed mightily to the current recession and the propagation of the broken window fallacy can hinder sound policy decisions, costing society even more wealth than just the destruction alone. It is as like what happened with the myth that the Large Hadron Collider could destroy the world, being repeated so often that it became conventional wisdom.

Another important facet of economic literacy comes out in relation to scientific literacy. Only a few people believe that global climate change is a hoax – even when the exaggerations of the Climategate scandal are taken into account, the evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of climate change – and so, ecological knowledge will have to be taken into account in the future. But that knowledge must be connected to sound economic knowledge in order us to make sensible decisions.

One fundamental tenet of economics is the law of scarcity. It's exactly what it sounds like, encapsulating the idea that the amount of anything – steel I-beams, plywood, Barbies and iPads is finite and so we must always figure out a way to use less of some resource for more products. For instance, a model of car once made with two tons of steel and now made with one ton frees up that much extra steel for more cars. The amount of steel involved doesn't change, but the amount of cars do.

As we go forward in the 21st century, with its challenges of climate change and the declining amount of oil available for extraction, it is more important than ever for us to understand the science behind these changes. It is equally important to understand the economic changes that will be associated with them.

Matthew M Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

SPIRE registration needs a reboot

Amanda Joinson

To put it simply, I have a problem with class registration. As you all know, registration for fall 2010 classes is currently upon us, and although the convenient system of having a shopping cart is in place, there are still problems which are embedded in the registration process.

The registration day for classes is always frustrating. Registrations at 8 a.m. leave students no time to nestle and snuggle in their beds, causing them to worry about not getting into the classes they had hand chosen with care the night before. They rush to their computers, still in a daze, hoping that all their sections would be there. The suspense of what will be available kills as they scramble onto SPIRE, only to find that half of their requirements sitting in their shopping carts, waiting to be checked out, are filled.

For the available classes they have chosen, they can only hope that all the prerequisites have been completed. Enrolled in half the classes they want to take, they must look for classes that may not meet any requirements or are not as appealing.

Having written, haphazardly, the class numbers on napkins left near their computer, students enroll in classes that RateMyProfessor.com simply states: "Completely ridiculous, really painful. Basically: DO NOT TAKE!"

Frustrated to the point of no return they give up after accepting that the only section of their last major requirement is at 8 a.m. on Monday and Wednesday with a three hour lab on Tuesday nights. And there is nothing they can do to change it.

Registration leaves many students in a unique predicament, especially when classes are offered early in the morning or in the same time slot.

The registration process needs altering as it leaves everything to chance, making students beg and plead to professors to get into their class during the first week of every semester.

Having to wake up for an 8 a.m. when the rest of your classes are after 1 p.m. is not favorable, and I'm not even talking about general education requirements. Mandatory upper-level courses are being offered at this outrageous time in the morning. Whose idea was that?

They force us to wake up ridiculously early, resulting in us falling asleep in class and stumbling back home to fall asleep – learning nothing. Then, of course, you always encounter the problem when all the classes that are supposed to be for your first semester sophomore year or last semester senior year are offered at the same time as all the other classes you need to be in. I cannot physically be at the 11:15 meeting of Journalism 300, Journalism 360 and Psychology 305. Three requirements at one time leads to another dilemma, but there are bigger problems out there.

The schedules we so carefully select never work out, and it is not the fault of SPIRE for the first time in history. This time, it falls in the hands of the administration. The University of Massachusetts budget, currently in a shaky place, leaves us all unable to get into the classes that we need to graduate because there are fewer sections being offered to the same amount, if not more students.

I understand that only a limited amount of sections can be offered, but if there is more demand for the class, the class enrollment size needs to be increased. The registration process needs altering as it leaves everything to chance, making students beg and plead to professors to get into their class during the first week of every semester.

Some students don't even have the option of begging a teacher admission to a class. – as a required class isn't offered that semester. For example, there are two parts' to some classes, an introductory class and an advanced class. Most introductory classes are offered all year long, but usually the advanced courses are only offered in the spring. What happens to the students that took the introductory class in the spring semester and now cannot take the advanced course until the following spring?

Undoubtedly, they will forget a lot of the information, but it also puts a major hindrance on the ability to graduate and plan your classes in a normal fashion. The ridiculous system the University has in choosing what classes will be offered prevents many students from taking the classes they truly want to learn from. There's a big problem that we can only hope will be solved after meeting with our advisors.

As for now, slip back into bed, for it is only 8:35 a.m. and class doesn't start until 10:10 a.m. Registration will always make us berserk, but all we can do is dream that UMass will implement something that works to a broader range of students, offering more seats and more courses every semester.

Amanda Joinson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ajoinson@student.umass.edu.

Fed/Up?
Ed/Op.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Healthy college cooking can be made simpler

By Steven McPartland
Collegian Correspondent

Cooking an enjoyable meal every night for yourself can be a daunting task, and making it a healthy meal can make the difficult seem downright impossible. You're strapped for time, you don't want to spend a fortune. You want something that will taste good enough to be worth the effort without making you gain 10 pounds just by looking at it. Against those odds you might feel like giving up and trying for something more attainable, like turning dust into gold or blowing up the sun.

But don't go hungrily eyeing the moon just yet – if it really is made of cheese it probably has a lot of fat anyway. These obstacles may make a healthy home-cooked dinner feel like a world away, but tackle each individually, and they will fall before you.

First off, how exactly does one go about eating healthier? A big part of healthy eating is a varied diet, and that may mean trying new foods. More importantly, it may involve trying old foods – maybe some you've tried and didn't like – in new ways that make them more appealing.

Start with these tips: Buy a recipe book, or find a good website with recipes. Look for ways to incorporate more beans, vegetables, fruits and whole grains into your diet. For example, many chili recipes include beans and vegetables and are readily prepared in a slow cooker. Also, look for recipes that use little or even no meat. Meat is healthy, but eating less of it may encourage you to eat more plant foods, and may even save you some money in the process.

Don't be afraid to retry a food you've had bad history with. Maybe you never cared for raw broccoli florets, but you may find that stir-fried in the right sauce broccoli becomes a new favorite vegetable.

Now, new recipes are all well and good, but what about your old favorites? While there's no need to give them up completely, take a look at your old recipes to find ways you could make them healthier. For example, when recipes call for oil, try using a healthy oil like canola, peanut or olive oil. These oils are higher in healthier "unsaturated" fats, and lower in saturated and transfats, which can have some nasty effects on your cholesterol. Instead of using regular noodles, try whole-wheat pasta. You will find little, if any, difference compared to the processed stuff, but it has three times the fiber. On that note, in recipes that call for white flour, replace half of the flour with whole-wheat flour to increase the fiber of the recipe without compromising the texture and quality.

While fruits are said to have a high content of sugar, fresh fruits and vegetables can add significant amounts of vitamins to your daily meals, and require little time and effort to prepare, making them a good choice for college students on the go.

While you shouldn't load up on artificial sweeteners, they can be an effective way to cut calories out of sweet recipes. Try replacing just half the sugar in recipes with a substitute to reduce calories without adding so much artificial sweetener to your diet to be of concern. Most artificial sweeteners have been shown to be harmless in any reasonable dosage. Just make sure you use a sweetener suited to the task – use one designed for baking if that's what you need it for.

All this may be starting to sound like a lot of work, but don't give up yet. Simple inconvenience can be a surprisingly powerful obstacle to eating healthy, but don't let a busy schedule or fatigue it stop you. There are some ways to cut some time and effort out of cooking. Remember that slow cooker I mentioned earlier? It really is your friend; these nifty little contraptions can make cooking a whole meal incredibly easy. Many recipes are easy to find in books and online, and often include ways to incorporate veggies into a tasty dish.

Slow cooker or not, try making meals that combine all the ingredients into one pot, pan or dish. By mixing foods you like with foods you're less fond of or uncertain about, you'll vary your palette and save time and hassle before, during and even after cooking. No one likes having five pots to clean after dinner.

For other ways to save time, buy pre-washed, pre-cut vegetables – they'll save you the trouble of having to cut, peel or de-seed on your own. In many cases, frozen vegetables can be more convenient to store and use than their fresher counterparts, and they're about as healthy. Consider them if you think they'd be more convenient. If the main course is a bit time-intensive, make a quick and simple side-dish, like a salad, to avoid over-burdening yourself.

What about cost? All this sounds good on paper, but if it costs too much, it may be out of the question. Ultimately there's no one answer when considering how much healthy eating will or should cost, and a lot will depend on your available funds. Here are some guidelines: Give yourself a reasonable food budget. There's no reason why food should cost you a fortune, but consider healthy eating a worthwhile investment. Take advantage of store loyalty cards – they're usually free to get and make more sales available to you. A slow cooker is a reasonably-priced one-time expense, and it could prove quite valuable to your future cooking efforts.

At the market, look over the produce section for some healthy ingredients with an eye for which ones are the cheapest, or offer the best bang for the buck. Then look up recipes that specifically use those ingredients and you'll be all set. If on any given week you see a sale on certain ingredients, such as potatoes or turkey, look up recipes that use those ingredients and give them a try, or make an old favorite recipe that uses those ingredients.

Cooking can be a lot of fun, and knowing that you're cooking something healthy can be a great feeling. See how many of these tips you can incorporate into your eating schedule, and you may find you actually

Whole wheat pastas and fresh vegetables, such as tomatoes and basil, are tasty alternatives to carbohydrate-heavy noodles and oil-based sauces. When cooked correctly, the difference in flavor is almost impossible to distinguish.

Chills for Frills: UM students proud of their musical style

By Leigh Greaney
Collegian Staff

There's nothing like a heavy dose of irony to kick up punk appreciation. The not-so-frilly group "The Frills" know this well. The group members, all University of Massachusetts students, don't even really like punk music, but they consider themselves part of the genre.

Guitarist, vocalist and songwriter Lauren Garant, bassist Meagan Day and drummer Isaac Simon do, however, consider themselves influenced by punk music. Finding it hard to shimmy themselves into a musical mold, Garant describes their sound as "punk influenced garage rock."

"We're an electric band that tends to play high energy songs," Day added. Simon, finding even harder to place a label on his music, has a hard time explaining his sound, claiming that his drumming is more like "rolling down a mountain top with fire."

All in all, the band agrees that if they hate the way it sounds, they're not playing it. If they wouldn't want to listen to it, they're not going to make the song. Garant explained, "If I'm in the middle of writing a song and I go – 'God, I wouldn't listen to this' – then I'm just going to stop writing it."

Thanks to the Internet, there is so much music open for public consumption. Day summed it up and said, "There is no music shortage. You can afford to not play what isn't good." When a band tries to copy a band that already exists, the music loses its soul. The Frills won't stand for that. Soulless music is and always will be banned from its speakers.

To keep its sound full of emotion and energy, the band places the primary writing in Garant's hands. She, in turn, craps out songs in batches. "I just poop them out. They don't really develop. I have this idea, and it's gotta come out now. It all floods me at once, and that's what it is," she explains. For this pooping process to begin, she has to be emotionally constipated. Once there is so much build-up that she can't hold it in anymore – boom – there's a bowlful of songs to work with.

The band has come accustomed to Garant's musical explosions. Day describes the song writing process as "insane real life karaoke." The songs always evolve from the time they make it from Garant's mind outburst to the time they're put into bass lines and drum beats. Usually, drums are added last. Day said, "It sounds like one thing when we play it, then we bring it to Isaac and it sounds like something different and 100 percent better."

It's obvious that the girls of the band really appreciate their male counterpart and his "funk bringing." As the newest edition to the band, Isaac came to the rescue after previous edition of the band was a still-birth. He was added to the team only two months before the band released its seven-song EP in the summer of 2009. "We got spoiled quickly (because of Isaac). It sounds like a sham when we practice without drums," Garant said.

The creation of the group – including the almost-ska band that was buried due to poor band member gelling – was based on bassist farce. One day while Garant was fuming over her band formation frustration, she stormed out of Baker Hall and yelled, "I need a bassist!" Sitting on a nearby bench, Day answered to Garant's cry for help with, "I play bass." Ironically, that wasn't at all true.

"I totally lied," admitted Day. "I was like, 'Well, my bass in St. Louis, which is where I'm from. But somehow, Lauren took this to mean I know how to play it or something. So, shortly thereafter – like in the next half an hour – we were in the room listening to music together and talking about music," she said. The song Day and Garant wrote that day – "Elation" – served as proof that some musical chemistry was brewing.

That chemistry is still kicking for the band. They even played "Elation" in their set for WMUA's Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk's live radio show. While staying true to its roots by playing old songs, The Frills are still making new songs from Garant's brain excrement. The group has recently released an LP entitled "The Fairer Sound," which is now available online.

The Frills frequent local venues and tour the area weekly. To check out their high-energy and raw music, head to www.myspace.com/nofrillsthrills.

Also, be sure to look out for the imminent birth of the ironically feminist band – Tits and Giggles – a Frills cover band.

Leigh Greaney can be reached for comment at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Lauren Garant of The Frills records with her other band members, who have been together for almost three years. Garant is responsible for most of the group's song writing.

Streak on line for UM

SOFTBALL from page 8

Brittany Wilkins has helped BC this season and scored a run in Game 1 over the weekend. She has contributed 10 RBIs this season along with two homeruns.

The Minutewomen (21-7, 6-0 Atlantic 10) hold an advantage coming into the game with plenty of momentum spurred from six consecutive wins over George Washington, La Salle and Fordham. The wins put UMass at No. 1 in the A-10 and No. 23 in the country according to the USA Today/National Fastpitch Coaches Association Division I Top 25 Poll.

The Maroon and White's offense also seems to have found consistency at the plate, which it will look to continue with six players boasting a slugging percentage of .500 or better. Carly Normandin leads the Minutewomen with a .441 batting average and .576 slugging percentage, along with hitting her first homerun against La Salle since coming back from a back injury. Sophomore Katie Bettencourt also has a strong .363 batting average and hit her third homerun of the season against Fordham's No. 1 pitcher, Jen Mineau.

Kyllie Magill and Meghan Carta have had no problem hitting homeruns this season, with four and five respectively. Magill's slugging percentage is .527, while Carta comes into Tuesday's game leading UMass in homeruns along with a .581 slugging percentage.

The Minutewomen will return home tomorrow to face Boston University. The Terriers (18-10, 3-0 America East) come into the game undefeated in their conference with a sweep over Stony Brook this past weekend.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombardi@student.umass.edu.

The Minutewomen boast six batters with a slugging percentage of .500 or better this season. Carly Normandin leads the team with a .441 batting average and a .576 slugging percentage.

Minutewomen finish in second place at Lake Quinsigamond at Holy Cross

UMass will start tapering for A-10 tournament on Sunday

By Eric Mansfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team came away with a second-place finish at Lake Quinsigamond at Holy Cross on Saturday.

Among the Minutewomen and the Crusaders, competing schools included Massachusetts Institute of Technology, New Hampshire and Williams, which sits atop the nation's top Division III crew. The regatta came after an intense training session on the UMass campus Friday morning.

Before the Minutewomen even stepped foot in the lake at Holy Cross, they were already pretty tired, UMass coach Jim Dietz said. Many of the team's rowers were attaining personal records in what was a "max 2k" or 2,000 meter test session Friday morning. The test session was "good for them psychologically" and it gave the team high morale, Dietz said.

When the Minutewomen got to Holy Cross, they were able to stay consistent throughout the 2,000 meter regatta. UMass captured second-place finishes in the Varsity 8 in 7:29.51, the second Varsity 8 in 7:45.3, the Varsity 4 in 8:36.03 and the third Varsity 8 in 7:29.5. The Novice 8 was able to place first in a time of 8:17.44. In all, with four second-place finishes, the Minutewomen trailed only the Purple Cows, who Dietz said he expected to be very fast.

Dietz said that the team is "working for a peak" and building for the conference championships that will be held in two weeks. Dietz said he holds a testing session about every two weeks that can push his rowers before they taper, or gradually decrease training for the conference championship.

Overall Dietz was pleased with his team's effort at Holy Cross and said that he is still looking for the right combinations of rowers for specific races. All of the varsity rowers "thought they had good rows" as well.

In a change made from last week's regatta at Rhode Island, junior Meredith Kearney was moved from the Varsity 4 to the Varsity 8 in order to give that crew "more power". Teresa O'Brien was also moved from the Varsity 8 to the Varsity 4 and Michaela Streitfield was moved up to varsity from novice.

Dietz said next weekend will include "big time racing" as some of the girls will compete in up to four races a day at the Knecht Cup in Camden, N.J. The crew will keep training hard to prepare for that regatta, and Dietz plans to continue moving people around in the lineup.

At Holy Cross, the Varsity 8 included Kearney, Samantha Schnoerr, Jennifer Coyne, Kelsey Shaether, Alexandra DiMatteo, Jessica Stern, Samantha Smith, Amanda Doolin and Megan Rodgers. The second Varsity 8 included Streitfield, Molly Bogle, Elizabeth Euiler, Chelsea Wakeham, Emily Grogan, Rachel Spielberg, Katelyn Alloco, Megan Donovan and Ana Tocco. The Varsity 4 included O'Brien, Carly Payne, Emily Boucher, Kathryn Kern and Beth Paret. The three coxswains for the crews were Schnoerr, Bogle and Payne.

Training for UMass has continued to be limited to the indoor ergometers due to the recent flooding.

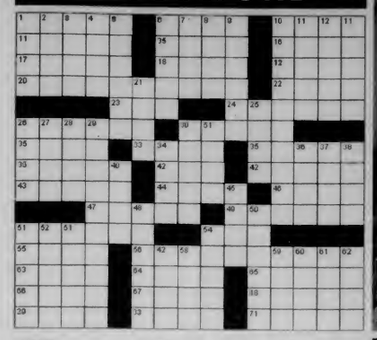
UMass will start tapering for the Atlantic 10 championships on Sunday, Dietz said.

Eric Mansfield can be reached at emansfield@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN PRESENTS
PAPER JAM
★ THE FIRST BAND BATTLE BEGINS ★
• First •
Solo Sexx
• Featuring •
Leisure Colony
Bubonic Souls
Bella's Bartok
The Telephone Company
On Trak & Malado
Darlingside
HAMPDEN COURTYARD
• SOUTHWEST •
APR. 12 | 6:00
FREE | PRESENTED WITH
UMass Amherst Alumni Association · Sprint · Southwest Area Government

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
Sugarloaf Estates Apartment Homes
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons Apartments
133 Belchertown Road Rt. 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Select Units
On the B-1 Route · Salt Water Swimming Pool · Fitness Center · Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Campus Local Business Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement



The DAILY COLLEGIAN
IS NOW HIRING
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER
We are looking for a student to manage DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM and our related web properties for the upcoming FALL 2010 semester
The webmaster should be proficient in Analytics, and (multi-)Markup, JavaScript, PHP...
Learn and share your cover letter with relevant experience and resume to jobs@dailycollegian.com

A Room of Their Own
THE BLOOMSBURY ARTISTS IN AMERICAN COLLECTIONS
You know about Virginia Woolf. Now explore art created by her circle.
APRIL 3 - JUNE 15, 2010
Free Family Day: Art is in Bloom!
Saturday, April 3 10 AM - 3 PM
Free Second Friday
Friday, April 9 4 - 8 PM
Scholar on Art 6 PM
Frances Spalding, Professor of Art History, Newcastle University, UK, and Bloomsbury expert
Stoddard Hall
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
museums Advocate
The Bloomsbury Artists catalogue was recognized by the Herbert F. Johnson Museum of Art at Cornell University in conjunction with the Nasher Museum of Art. The catalogue was made possible by the National Endowment for the Humanities. Presentation of the exhibition at SCMA was made possible by Programming: www.smith.edu/artmuseum

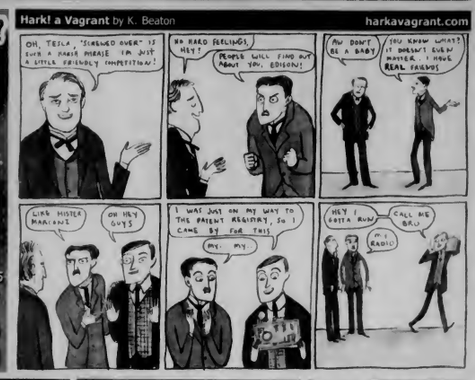
COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
We like the things you whisper in our ear...

CROSSWORD



ACROSS
1. Lanat
6. Swill
10. A period of discounted prices
14. Homeric epic
15. Cab
16. Blockage
17. Skin disease
18. Cards with just one symbol
19. Employ
20. Appraisal
22. Japanese sashes
23. A small drink
24. Woodwind player
26. A frenzied woman
30. The unsaturated organic radical C3H5
32. A single time
33. Europe's highest volcano
35. To curve
39. Celebrate
41. Also
42. The wife of Abraham
43. Rinse, as with a solvent
44. Marsh plant
46. Ritual
47. Rubber
49. Maximum
51. A photographer's need
54. Recent
55. Matures
56. Einstein's theory
63. North Atlantic Treaty Organization
64. Streetcar
65. Leg bone
66. Detail
67. Initial wager
68. Office worker
69. Arid
70. Require
71. Spells

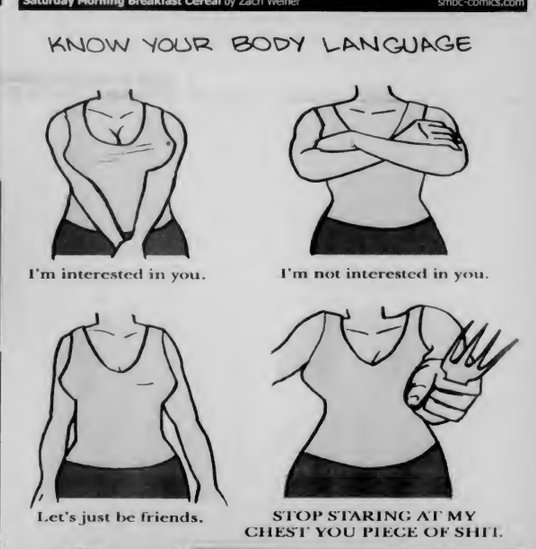
DOWN
1. City in Peru
2. "Oh, my!"
3. Transgressions
4. Wise one
5. A city in the Ukraine
6. At least one on an envelope
7. Shoestring
8. Beasts of burden
9. Handgun
10. Schoolmistress
11. Excuse
12. Large-eyed lemur
13. Discharge
21. Fries, maybe
25. Farewells
26. Brood
27. Freudian stage
28. Almond
29. Irritating
30. Building addition
31. Stow, as cargo
34. Container weight
36. Verve
37. Feed bag contents
38. Sharpen
40. 365 days
45. Song for two
48. Plaid
50. A sudden muscle spasm
51. ___ Major (southern constellation)
52. Marble
53. Almost 40 inches
54. Appointed
57. Coastal raptor
58. Tardy
59. Loathsome
60. Wild goat
61. Rubber wheel
62. Tibetan oxen

WANT TO WORK IN RADIO?
WMUA 91.1 FM is looking to hire specialty Department Directors in the following departments for the 2010-2011 academic year:
SPORTS · OUTREACH
NEWS · FUND DRIVE
SALES · TECH
PUBLICITY
For information and/or applications, stop by WMUA 105 campus center or visit wmua.org
Applications are due by April 17th

Hark! a Vagrant by K. Beaton — harkavagrant.com

Snuke in the Snizze

	3	7	5				6
	6			4	3		7
	4	9			7
							5
5	8		9		4	7	2
9		2	3		1
			7	9			1
6	5	1	2	3	8	4
				1		6	2



APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner — smbc-comics.com

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry, Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Your brain is 6 months pregnant with sexual frustration. Might we suggest a C section?

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Your geneology is as muddled as Nick Cage's. It is filled with with circus folk and a bunch of uncles named Satan.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Who said you could cry? Only the cover-girls for "Girls Gone Wild" cry themselves to sleep over their substance abuse.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
When in doubt, look to the stars. Only they can tell you what Ray J would do.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
You are only good enough if you can bring candle light and pillow fights together in one evening with Wolf Blitzer.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
The only thing that removes Sharpie marker stains are the tears from the Democratic donkey.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
The world will shout out, "save us", and you'll whisper, "nah, son."

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Is that an improvement in your GPA or have you been sipping on too much dunkleweiss?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Because of you, all of the forgotten Easter eggs have hatched and mosied their way into a pro-life debate. Good job, there pal.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Make a love song and dedicate it to Leonardo DiCaprio's ability to smoke a cigarettes while time travelling.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
The only way for you to get on TV is for you to be on "Dirty Jobs" as Taylor Lautner's nipple's assistant.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Every once in a while, that special moment comes and goes. It is a good thing that yours is still stuck in traffic on the Mass Pike.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT
Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

HOUSE FOR RENT
4 Bedroom in Northampton $1350. No pets. June & September. Skibiski Realtors. 586-1827

SERVICES
Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass heads on road to face Boston College

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Coming off back-to-back wins against Fordham, the Massachusetts softball team looks to continue its six-game win streak against Boston College this afternoon.

The Eagles (9-17, 0-6 Atlantic Coast Conference) started out their season fairly strong, going 2-2 at the Texas A&M-Corpus Christi Tournament and 3-1 at the Stetson University Tournament. After a 2-3 performance at the University of Central Florida Tournament, Boston College's record went downhill as it has lost 10 of its last 12 games.

Most recently, the Eagles fell to North Carolina State in a three-game series over the weekend. After leading for six innings, BC relief pitcher Allison Gage gave up three late runs as the Wolfpack took a third win Saturday afternoon. Friday's doubleheader showed similar problems for the Eagles as Gage gave up five runs in the sixth inning of Game 2, while the offense could not find any consistent momentum in the 7-0 loss.

Starting pitcher Nicole D'Argento had a better showing in Game 1 of Friday, where she allowed five hits despite a 3-2 loss. D'Argento is 3-5 for the season with a 2.03 ERA. In 65.2 innings pitched, she has allowed 53 hits and struck out 71 batters.

Gage is 2-4 for the season with a 2.70 ERA. She has allowed 27 runs on 62 hits and batters average .300 against her. Combined, D'Argento and Gage have given up 57 runs this season, compared to UMass pitcher Sara Plourde who has given up 43 runs. Plourde has also struck out 302 batters, compared to 88 combined from D'Argento and Gage.

On offense, senior Renee Ramos has had a strong year at bat, leading her team with a .391 batting average and 13 RBIs. Ramos also boasts a .813 slugging percentage, placing her second in the ACC. She also leads her team in homeruns with seven this season, and has hit a homerun in three of her last four games, something that could pose a challenge to Plourde.

Freshman Maria Pandolfo has also positively contributed to the Eagles with seven runs scored and six RBIs. Pandolfo hit a timely two-run homerun in Game 3 of the weekend to help out her team. The homerun served as her second of the season, improving her slugging percentage to .531.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

BY STANLEY CHOU/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen will attempt to continue their six-game winning streak when they play Boston College this afternoon. After being swept over the weekend, the Eagles have dropped 10 of their last 12 games.

UMass will play a home-and-home series with UConn, beginning on the road in Storrs this afternoon.

Minutemen look to get back to winning against Huskies

Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

A third of the way into the season, the Massachusetts baseball team continually struggles to bring all aspects of its game together.

After the pitching staff allowed only a pair of runs in the last two games of the Saint Joseph's series, the Minutemen allowed 25 runs in three games to Charlotte as they were swept in North Carolina.

It's clear that UMass (2-14, 1-5 Atlantic 10) still has a ways to go, with only one win taken from the last two series.

"We're working to establish an identity at this point," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We still haven't established what kind of ballclub we're going to be yet and hopefully it will happen in a positive way very soon."

The Minutemen can look across the diamond into their next opponent's dugout for a blueprint for success when they face Connecticut this afternoon for a home-and-home matchup, starting at UConn.

The Huskies (16-7, 4-2 Big East) pitching staff has proved consistent, giving up only four runs in their past nine games.

UConn is coming off a three-game sweep at West Virginia, as its hitting complemented the staff, scoring a total of 32 runs against the Mountaineers. The balance of pitching and hitting on this club has resulted in seven wins in the last nine games, and 10 in the last 13.

"UConn's an excellent team," Stone said. "They should be ranked first in New England this week. They're a good scrappy team. Springer killed us last year."

Stone referred to UConn outfielder George Springer, who in two games against the Minutemen last year imposed his will as a freshman. Springer went 6-for-8 with six runs scored, eight runs batted in and three home runs, including a grand slam.

However, Springer is not the only hitter the Minutemen pitchers need to be weary of. Eight Huskies are hitting .280 or better in batting average. UConn also doesn't just get its power from one or two players as its totaled 23 home runs, with no player claiming more than five. Seven hitters have double-digit runs batted in.

The Huskies are also one of the best teams when it comes to stolen base success, having swiped 56 bases in 65 attempts.

Not to be outdone, three starting pitchers have an earned run average below 2.11. Matt Barnes leads the staff with a 5-0 record in five starts with 35 strikeouts in 34.1 innings.

"They're obviously strong in the areas where you need to be strong in," Stone said. "That's the kind of ballclub we would like to be. It's going to be a good test for us this week – no question. We need to play well in every facet. We need to play a complete game where we execute throughout the entire ballgame."

Sophomore Leif Sorenson will make his debut as a starter for the Minutemen. A transfer from Vermont, Sorenson's pitched a total of three innings this season in four games, allowing five earned runs on six hits.

"[Sorenson] started during the summer, and he'd done pretty well," Stone said. "We just haven't gotten him enough innings, and we think he's going to be a good pitcher. We need to give him a start at this point."

UMass lost to UConn in both matchups last season, the first by a score of 8-1 and the second in an 11-9 defeat. The last time the Minutemen beat the Huskies was April 10, 2007.

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

Schedule hurting UM

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The well-traveled Massachusetts baseball team has done a lot of sightseeing on its way to its first 16 games this season, while watching its record plummet and its name fall in the standings.

Two weeks ago, UMass coach Mike Stone spoke about his team needing to find a rhythm and that it would take an uncertain number of games to begin to play comfortably on the diamond. He hoped that his team would improve with every outing but, so far, that has not happened.

"Baseball is a tough game mentally," Stone said. "[Our play] has been inconsistent at times, sloppy at times, in all facets of the game. It has not been a smooth road."

Following a weekend in which they were swept for the fourth time in five series, the 2-14 Minutemen seem to be stuck in spring training mode. UMass has been unable to snap out of a funk that has seen no reliable batters step up to the plate and a starting rotation that's lacking leadership.

"Some days, some parts of the order are better than others," Stone said. "It would be nice to have a solid one-through-nine performance everyday, but that hasn't been."

The Minutemen have been hankered by a strenuous schedule in their first 16 games this season. In three weeks of play, all but one game has come on the road, including four separate road trips amassing nearly 6,000 miles of travel. That is the equivalent to traveling clear across the country and back.

In the upcoming month, the Minutemen will leave Massachusetts twice with a game against Connecticut and a three-game series against Rhode Island. That means 17 of the next 21 UMass games will be enjoyed in the Bay State's confines and 14 of those at Earl Lorden Field.

"The field is ready. It looks great. Everyone's a little more excited to play at home," Stone said.

In defense of its early struggles, UMass has played teams with a combined record of 88-55 this season. That amounts to a .620 winning percentage. Excluding its game against Hartford which it won at home, its opponents' winning percentage jumps to .660.

The next 10 opponents for the Minutemen – excluding one provisional game played in the Beanpot competition – share a combined record of 119-116, just over a .500 winning percentage.

Yet, Stone is not willing to concede that his team's ineptitudes correlate with time spent on the bus, saying that it is normal for his teams to play their first 20 games on the road. As for the possibility for his players to perform more steadily on familiar ground, he accepts that part of the game as a surety. He is also not at a point where he will admit that his competition has simply been more talented.

It seems that Stone and his team are in a pickle. Stone's approach for breaking his team from its current slump is to be upfront and challenge them, while encouraging them to stay positive.

Moving into a more favorable schedule in the next month, the Minutemen will attempt to find an identity, or else, they will continue to slump.

"Some days you have it, some days you don't," Stone said.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

After being on the road for much of the last three weeks, the Minutemen will play 14 of their next 21 contest at Earl Lorden Field.

Pompei, Vercollone set marks in school history at UConn

By Michael Counos
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams opened their seasons in Storrs, Conn. on Saturday at the UConn Invitational with third-place finishes and many athletes setting qualifying marks for the New England Championships.

The men had a solid showing, especially in the field events, with six New England Championship qualifiers and one Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America qualifier. The IC4A qualifier was senior thrower Chris Vercollone who led the Minutemen, winning the javelin throw with a distance of 196 feet, three inches, the fifth best mark in UMass school history. Sophomore Zachary Koncki had an excellent meet, winning the long jump event with a distance of 6.93 meters and taking third in the 110 meter hurdles as he qualified for the New England Championships in both events.

The distance squad dominated the 5,000 meter event with four runners finishing in the top seven. Senior Jason Ayr and junior Scott VanderMolen finished second and third while senior Sonny Gamble took fifth and sophomore Andrew Erwin finished seventh. Senior Brian Miller jumped his way to third place in the high jump event.

Sophomore David McKenna took seventh in the discus, throwing 149 feet, nine inches, good enough to qualify for New England Championships. Sean Busch also qualified, finishing sixth in the pole vault with a height of 14 feet, nine inches. Junior Sean Duncan finished second and qualified for New England Championships in the steeplechase with a time of nine minutes, 31.11 seconds. The Minutemen had three top 10 finishers in the 1,500 meter run with fifth, sixth, and seventh place finishes by senior Jonathan Pierce and juniors David Johnson and Zachary Gordon. In the 400 meter hurdles, sophomore Evan Donadt took sixth while freshman Nick Otis finished ninth in the event.

The Minutewomen had great success with senior thrower Lisa Wilson leading the way. Wilson finished fifth in the shot-put and discus throw and took fourth in the hammer throw, qualifying for the New England Championships in all three as well as qualifying for the Eastern College Athletic Conference championships in the hammer throw.

Both teams are back in action on Saturday at 11:30 a.m. at the UMass Track and Field Complex to host the UMass Nine-Way Meet.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

STAN CHOU/COLLEGIAN

Distance runner Scott VanderMolen finished second in the 5,000 meter event over the weekend.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

MOSTLY SUNNY/HIGH: 88 LOW: 56 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 2010

Economist offers insight on world food crisis

UM guest lecturer examines international rise in food prices

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

The developing world is experiencing a serious food crisis, which is being widely ignored by the mainstream media according to Jayati Ghosh, professor of economics at Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi, and Executive Secretary of International Development Economics Associates.

On April 6 Ghosh addressed the gathered crowd in Gordon Hall, located at the University of Massachusetts, to present a lecture titled "The Impact of Financial Speculation on Commodity Prices in Developing Countries."

Ghosh chronicled the intricate economics behind the "historic" rise of food prices and how she believes this rise has affected the world's poorest citizens.

Bob Pollin, professor of economics and co-director of the Political Economy Research Institute (PERI), introduced Ghosh with a quote by economist John Maynard Keynes which outlines what he believes to be the qualities of an outstanding economist.

"Master-economists must possess a rare combination of gifts," read Pollin.

"He must be a mathematician, historian, statesman, philosopher – in some degree. He must understand symbols and speak in words. He must contemplate the particular in terms of the general, and touch abstract and concrete in the same flight of thought," continued Pollin.

Adding that Ghosh possessed all of the qualities of an outstanding economist, Pollin introduced Ghosh to the audience.

Beginning her presentation, Ghosh criticized the lack of coverage of the food crisis by the mainstream media.

"In the middle of 2007 and 2008 the global food in sub-Saharan Africa and India crisis was all over the news, but disappeared because of coverage of the economic crisis," said Ghosh.

"However in many countries the food crisis is much worse," continued Ghosh.

"Maybe some food riots in India would cause the media to pay greater attention to the problem," said Ghosh.

According to Ghosh, India has seen food prices increase by 45 percent over a two-year period.

"What we are seeing is large population food prices are going up really sharply and families are skipping meals, children aren't getting enough to eat, children are being born with low birth weight," said Ghosh describing the impact on human life due to the price hikes.

Ghosh argued that the "historic" rise in food prices was driven by speculation on commodity prices and deregulation by the U.S. Ghosh described the use of speculation as highly volatile.

According to Ghosh, the food crisis in developing countries is "intimately related" to the current financial crisis.

The deregulation resulted from the passing of the Commodity Futures Modernization Act in 2000.

According to Ghosh, the act allowed financial companies into futures market which allowed banks to influence the prices of food.

According to Ghosh, a popular explanation for the increase in prices is increased demand from China and India.

However, Ghosh added that India and China have consumed less, leading her to conclude that the increase in food prices was not caused by regular supply and demand.

"She gave us a very different look at the state of India," said Pollin following her presentation, "It is very important that [Ghosh] is documenting this problem."

"[Ghosh] goes back to an older tradition of economists," said Pollin.

"Not only is she a very good technical economist, but also thinks from the human standpoint."

According to Jayati Ghosh, world hunger issues are on the rise in countries such as China and India in large part to increases in food prices.

Gerald Epstein, professor of economics and fellow co-director of PERI, said Ghosh's talk was "very convincing."

"Ghosh has shown speculation can lead to extreme volatility in commodity prices," said Epstein, "and can impoverish people in poor countries while making profits for bankers."

Ghosh was described by Pollin as an economic and political activist and has played an important role in the political scene of her native country of India and is a regular columnist in newspapers.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY HIND MARI

WOCLN offers women academic assistance, as well as a place to develop friendships and leadership skills for future success.

Inside look: women's leadership network

By Ashley Berger
Collegian Staff

Upon walking into 202 Wilder Hall located on the University of Massachusetts campus one is instantly hit with a cozy, safe atmosphere.

The room is complete with pictures on the walls, computers for schoolwork and couches to hang out and relax on. There are cookies, brownies, tea and hot chocolate in the corner. This is the home of the Women of Color Leadership Network (WOCLN).

The WOCLN celebrates and supports the accomplishments of a variety of racial and ethnic women not only at the University but throughout the Five College area.

The program functions as an independent body in addition to working closely with the campus through collaborations with many other university services such as the Everywoman's Center, the Stonewall Center, the Graduate Women's Network, Residential Life as well as Legal and Health Services.

The group is in alliance of international women, known originally as the Women of Color. The group was created in order to reinstate funds and resources to support women at the University that may have otherwise been lost in the fiscal crisis of the late 1980's.

The group receives state funding, as opposed to the University funding given to registered student organizations on campus. The WOCLN program was dissolved in 1997 and renamed to reflect all members and participants.

While the "Women of Color" title implies that the group only serves African American women, WOCLN better reflects that its members come from a variety of different races ranging from African American, Latina, South American, Asian, Native American, Arab, Middle Eastern as well as biracial and multiracial women.

Since it's founding in 1993, the WOCLN has underwent some changes to its home and structure. In 2005, it broke away from the Everywoman's Center to reside within the Center for Student Development. A year later, it became a part of the Office of Programs and Services for ALANA Students. Last December, it moved back to its former home within the Everywoman's Center.

The program has fallen under direction of Hind Mari since 2006 and the main services that the group provides advocacy, mentoring and training as well as connecting students to internships that typically focus on social justice work, outreach, economic and health issues.

According to Mari, the goals for the WOCLN include making the group as "open and welcoming as possible."

This sentiment has been reinforced by the women who work within the group who agree that these goals have been a success. Letisha Harris, a sophomore psychology major and the WOCLN's Body Politics coordinator, got involved with the program as a freshman.

Harris said that being a part of WOCLN has given her direction and a place where she can feel at home. "I came into college knowing that I would be a psychology major, but now I'm more open to different minors," Harris said. "I'm also now involved with many activities and do a lot of social justice work."

Importantly, the group also provides tutoring to encourage academic success, as well as a place to build friendships and teach leadership skills to be successful after graduation. According to Mari one of the most important issues that she focuses on is the student's academics. "The way that the skills that the women learn here translate into academics is amazing" Mari said.

According to the group's web site, the core beliefs and philosophy of the WOCLN include providing the tools for women of color to foster self-awareness and personal development, to apply leadership skills and to enhance personal qualities. Among these are practicality, resourcefulness, initiative, innovation and self-directed motivation.

"Women are able to come and go as they please, there are always new faces that appear and old faces are always welcomed back" said senior and communications major Jenny Otero.

The group puts on a variety of workshops and events to raise awareness surrounding issues of social identities, self-care, and self-expression.

See WOMEN on page 3

UMPD make weekend arrest for on-campus gun possession

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

A party in the Southwest area of the University of Massachusetts campus on Saturday resulted in the arrest of a local Springfield man on numerous gun related charges.

Lamont C. Thomas, 20, of Springfield, Mass., was arrested April 3 on charges of carrying a firearm on school grounds, receiving stolen property worth more than $250, carrying a firearm without a license, possession of an unregistered firearm and disorderly conduct.

Thomas, who is not a student at UMass, pleaded innocent in the Eastern Hampshire District Court on Monday.

Thomas' initial arrest was the result of a fight in which he was involved in on Saturday night on Sunset Ave. A UMass Police Department (UMPD) cadet radioed the station at 3:22 a.m., reporting that there were numerous people fighting outside of Pierpont dormitory hall.

According to UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald, the cadet and other witnesses saw Thomas involved in the fight and brandish a firearm.

Upon the arrival of two UMPD officers, Thomas fled the area, running south down Sunset Ave., requiring the officers on the scene to chase him on foot.

After the officers restrained Thomas, he was arrested on the charge of disorderly conduct.

Officers did not find a weapon on him when they arrested him, though Archbald said, "We believed the gun did exist because one of our officers had seen it."

On Sunday morning, Thomas was released on bail at 5:30 a.m. Still having not found the gun, officers were on patrol on Sunset Ave.

While on patrol, the officers saw Thomas return to the area of the previous night's fight. According to the police report, Thomas was seen searching around the bushes on the east side of the Patterson dormitory.

When approached by the officers, Thomas reportedly told the officers that he was looking for his car keys, and the officers volunteered to help search. After speaking with the officers, according to the police report, Thomas appeared nervous and uneasy.

The officers issued Thomas a trespassing notice, and told him not to return to campus. Soon after, UMPD Officer Jonathan Hall found a loaded AMT semi-automatic .22 caliber pistol, with a round loaded in the chamber, and seven more in the magazine.

After running the gun's serial number in the National Crime Information Center's database, the UMPD learned that the gun had previously been reported stolen 32 years ago, in Sidney, N.Y.

Thomas is scheduled to appear in the Eastern Hampshire District Court for a pretrial hearing on May 10.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

Apple's iPad arrives on campus

MATT BOCHTELL/COLLEGIAN

Huddled around a U-Store demo station, several students test out three iPads available on display. The tablet device, which launched nationwide Saturday, is Apple's latest technological sensation.

ARTS & LIVING

The Local Music Project

The Collegian's Local Music Project features Andyhasaband and Mallory this week. Be sure to check out their video and live recordings from WMUA on the site.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Dawley replaces Dacko

Former Vermont coach Sharon Dawley will take the helm for the Massachusetts women's basketball team. Dawley brings NCAA tournament experience to the Minutewomen.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Sara Crossman encourages all female students to take the Rape Aggression Defense course offered by UMPD.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Go online to check out Photo Editor Matthew Harrison's video guide to Scotch whisky.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 47

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Johnson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jax Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

You are cordially invited to attend
the UMass Amherst
13th Annual Commencement Ball
Fire & Ice

Friday, May 7 • 9 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Mullins Center
$25 per person
Light Hors d'oeuvres • Desserts • Dancing
FORMAL ATTIRE - CASH BAR
Tickets may be obtained at UMassAlumni.com/students or at the Alumni Association Office in Memorial Hall (545-2317).
Commencement Ball sponsors to-date.
UMass Amherst Alumni Association • Student Alumni Association • Coca-Cola Auxiliary Services • Student Affairs and Campus Life • Isenberg School of Management • College of Natural Sciences • Housing and Residential Life Senior Campaign • Mullins Center

Campus to Career
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
HTM 457 SENBERG
SPRING Etiquette Dinner
Wednesday, April 21 • 5:30 pm
Marriott Center, Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center
The Essentials of Etiquette
Enjoy a multi-course meal and socialize with UMass Amherst students and alumni as our etiquette professional shares the basics of proper dining etiquette and how to make a great first impression.
Enter to win a UStore gift card.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 7, 2010.
$10.00 per student
Register online at UMassAlumni.com/students
The Etiquette Dinner is sponsored by the Student Alumni Association and the UMass Amherst Alumni Association in partnership with HTM 457

Crime Log 3/23 – 4/5

MARCH 23

Noah Thissel was arrested at 11:00 a.m. on breaking and entering charges.

A resident of the Brown dormitory called the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) after realizing that items in their dorm room were missing.

Thissel reportedly walked into the dorm room, which had been left open, and took a MacBook laptop, three iPods, a wallet with cash and a blank check inside as well as an Xbox 360.

The items are estimated to value over $2,000.

Thissel was identified as a suspect and found to be in possession of the items.

While being booked at the police station, the officer found two Valium tablets on him. Thissel is not a student, and was signed into the building by a resident of Brown dormitory.

Thissel was arrested on the charges of breaking and entering during the daytime, larceny of property worth less than $250, larceny of property worth more than $250 and possession of a class C drug.

MARCH 24

Anthony Moccia, of Wakefield, Mass. was arrested at 1:45 a.m. for disorderly conduct.

The UMPD responded to a call from the victim who claimed that Moccia had attacked him.

When the officers arrived at the fourth floor of the Brett dormitory, Moccia was repeatedly punching the victim. While trying to restrain Moccia, he resisted arrest, screaming profanities at the officers and attempted to hit the officers.

Moccia was arrested on the charges of assault and battery, resisting an officer making a lawful arrest and disorderly conduct.

MARCH 26

Russell Lewis Courtney, a homeless man of Northampton, was arrested on battery charges.

The UMPD responded to a call from the Campus Center that a man, identified later by the UMPD as Courtney, had assaulted a person. Courtney was arrested on the charge of assault and battery.

MARCH 27

Joseph Anthony Colitti IV, of Feeding Hills, Mass. was arrested on liquor law violations. A driver of a red Ford Taurus was seen pulling into a restricted spot in the Dickinson Hall dormitory parking lot at 8:20 p.m.

After seeing this, an officer approached the car to instruct Colitti to move the vehicle.

While talking with Colitti, the officer saw a 30 rack of beer in the back seat, as well as empty beer bottles on the floor of the passenger side. Colitti also seemed intoxicated, smelling of alcohol and was slurring his words.

The officer asked Colitti to perform multiple sobriety tests, all of which he failed. At the police station, he blew a .16 on the breathalyzer.

Colitti was arrested on the charges of a liquor OUI, resisting an officer making a lawful arrest, disorderly conduct, possession of an open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle and possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

MARCH 29

Reginald F. Halstrom of Carlisle, Mass. was arrested for drug law offenses.

The detective bureau of the UMPD began an investigation of Halstrom in early March, after receiving a tip from a confidential informant.

The officers participated in numerous buys with marked bills with Halstrom.

He was arrested at 5:00 p.m. in the Southwest Circle, and was found to have $232.26 dollars on him, plus the marked bills used by the officers in the set-up buys.

Halstrom was arrested on the charges of distribution of a class D drug, possession to distribute a class D drug and possession of a class D drug.

MARCH 31

Katelyn Mary Martinson of Reading, Mass. was arrested due to an outstanding warrant in his name.

An officer went to Martinson's room in the Washington dormitory and transported her to the Eastern Hampshire District Court. Martinson was arrested on the charge of an outstanding warrant.

APRIL 1

George Garrett McNellage of Franklin, Mass. was arrested for disorderly conduct. The UMPD responded to a call from the Lot 50, on Sunset Ave. McNellage was arrested on the charge of disorderly conduct.

APRIL 3

Lamont Christopher Thomas of Springfield, Mass. was arrested for disorderly conduct. Officers responded to a report of a large fight happening on Sunset Ave., outside of the Pierpont Hall dormitory. Upon arrival of the officers, Thomas ran while the officers followed on foot. Thomas was arrested on the charge of disorderly conduct.

Vincent D. Smith, of Ludlow, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations. An officer on patrol viewed a grey Jeep driving recklessly on Clark Hill Rd, near Baker dormitory. When pulled over in Lot 29, Smith appeared under the influence, smelling of alcohol and had impaired speech.

The officer asked Smith to perform numerous field sobriety tests, all of which were failed. Smith was arrested on the charges of a liquor OUI and possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

Darius D. Coleman of Amherst, Mass., and Joseph A. Walker of Hadley, Mass. were arrested as the result of a traffic stop.

Walker was driving a blue Honda Civic when pulled over by an officer. After a search on the police database, Walker's license came up as suspended. Coleman was found to have an outstanding warrant for his arrest.

Walker was arrested on the charges of driving with a suspended license, and littering. Coleman has received summons to the Eastern Hampshire District Court.

- Collegian News Staff

Open Mic Night:
Friday, April
7:30 p.m.
Earthfoods Cafe
Student Union
Next to Union Ballroom
Bring your song/poem/short story/skit or instrument to the Open Mic Night
Cru.
Sponsored by EPIC and Campus Crusade for Christ @U

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
- PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
- PERRY APTS.
- 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
- LANTERN COURT APTS.
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.

400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

Become an
ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE
Build your resumé
Get business and sales experience
SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.

To Apply: Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500
or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Group offers haven for women

WOMEN from page 1

According to Mari, the WOCLN takes pride in putting on events such as Dorm Dialogues, a collaborative event with the ResLife staff that addresses topics such as public health, social life, relationships and politics. In the past the WOCLN has set up panels to discuss healthy relationships, teen motherhood, disease, among others, as well as holding poetry readings and social hours.

Dorm Dialogues are presented by groups of two or three women to discuss any one of the aforementioned issues. Each woman is required to write a proposal for the workshop and then work as a team to make it happen. The first Wednesday of every month from 12 p.m. until 2 p.m., the WOCLN also hosts a social hour that is open to any woman who wants to join in the conversations about every day situations.

Every year around Valentine's Day, WOCLN collaborates with other groups in order to put on "What is Love 101?," a discussion based forum in which three or four couples of different ages and sexualities discuss their relationships and answer questions from the audience.

One of the main reasons for the various collaborations is to encourage participation from all different members of the student community.

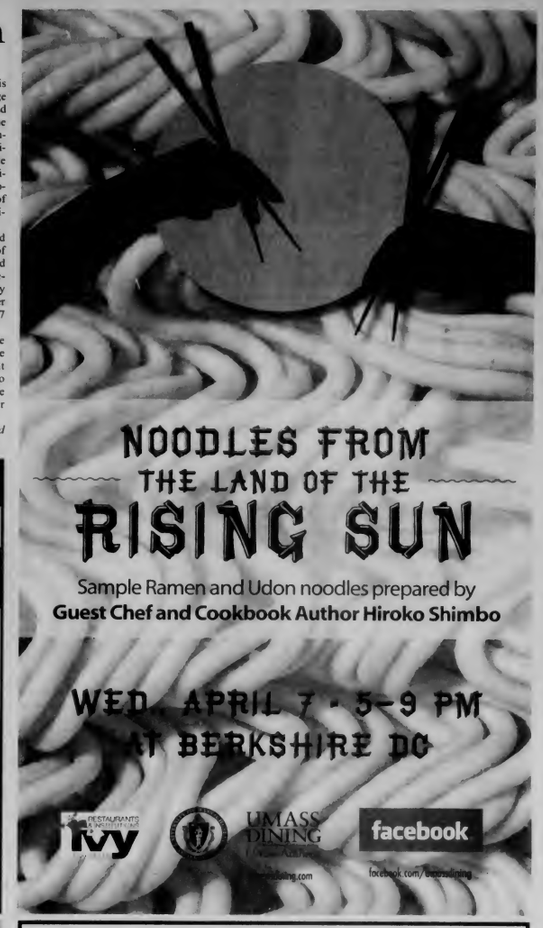
The most prominent event, according to Mari, is Body Politics. It is a multi-generational and transnational women's project that dramatically expresses women of color, who they are and what they stand for through prose, song, speech, poetry and other forms.

The program is open to any women who identifies as a woman of color who wants to participate, and this is the first year that the program coordinators had to turn people away because of the amount of applications.

The main idea, as the name implies, is how external or political factors influence, impose, characterize, or stereotype who these women of color really are, as well as to incorporate as many diversities and identifications from the women themselves.

The goals of Body Politics is to raise awareness and encourage exploration of women of color and their respective identities for the audience as well as the cast members, to build community and solidarity among participants, promote agency and voice with the participants as well as sharing original stories which are true representations of real life experiences of the participants.

Body Politics was named the winner of the 2009 Voice of Inclusion Medallion Award and toured the other colleges in the Five-College area last December. Body Politics 2010 will be held in Bowker Auditorium on April 16 and 17 at 7 p.m.



Of the program, Mari said, "We want to provide a space for these women to talk about anything that may be bothering them or to get help on their homework. We want to provide a safe place for all women."

Ashley Berger can be reached at aberger@student.umass.edu.

The DAILY COLLEGIAN
IS NOW HIRING
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER

student to manage and our related web
FALL 2010 semester
with relevant
dailycollegian.com

NOODLES FROM
THE LAND OF THE RISING SUN
Sample Ramen and Udon noodles prepared by Guest Chef and Cookbook Author Hiroko Shimbo
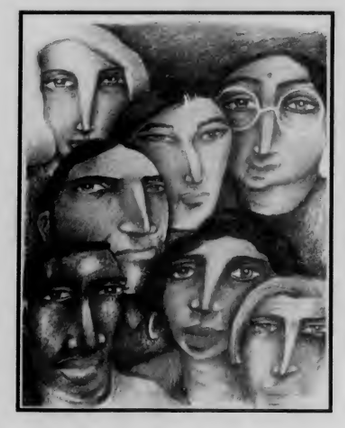
WED. APRIL 7 • 5-9 PM
AT BERKSHIRE DC
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
UMASS DINING
facebook
facebook.com/umassdining

Worcester, Franklin & Hampshire DCs
Thursday, April 8 from 7am–9pm
Celebrate SORRENTO DAY



BREAKFAST Ricotta cheese Blintzes with Raspberry Sauce

LUNCH Tomato Bel Paese Pizza
Southwestern Style Turkey Club Quesadilla

DINNER Sorrento Supreme Macaroni and Cheese
Baby Greens with Walnuts and Gorgonzola
Sliced Fresh Mozzarella, Fresh Tomato Slices and Fresh Basil

RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
LACTALIS FOODSERVICE
PRECIOUS Sorrento

Please join us for our 12th annual Freedom Seder
Based on the Exodus themes of the Jewish Passover Seder, the Freedom Seder uses stories, music, poetry and ritual to express our yearning for universal liberation and multicultural unity. People of all religious and cultural backgrounds are welcome!

Thursday, April 8th at 5:30pm (until 8pm)
Campus Center 11th Floor
UMass Amherst
FREE including an international buffet dinner and musical performance featuring Moonlight Davis
(R&B, Gospel, Middle Eastern, Spirituals)
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish or 413-545-9642
UMASS AMHERST
Presented by the Black Student Union, Jewish Student Union, Muslim Students Association, Newman Students Association, and the Office of Jewish Affairs, and cosponsored by the Center for Student Development.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 2010

"What progress we are making. In the Middle Ages they would have burned me. Now they are content with burning my books." - Sigmund Freud, 1933

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Self-defense becomes second-nature

Sara Crossman

It's called R.A.D.

I know. It's kind of a cheesy name, but it stands for Rape Aggression Defense. This is a class offered across the country by certified R.A.D. instructors who are often members of the police department.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department offers this course to women on campus, including students, staff and faculty, free of charge. This four night course teaches behaviors and self-defense techniques that will help to keep women out of danger.

The first night covers smart behaviors that can help keep you safe. For example, when you are in a parking lot, walk down the central aisles, not through the cars so that if someone tries to grab you, you'll see him coming. At night, always do your best to walk in well-lit areas where there are people, and if you decide to go out drinking, always keep an eye on your drink, and only take drinks from people you know and trust or better yet, go get it yourself.

The course also covers suspicious behaviors that you should watch out for. There are common behaviors that we, as women, sometimes see that we need to stop as soon as we see them.

When a guy does something that makes you feel uncomfortable, put a stop to it right there. If you're at a bar or a party and some guy brushes up against you and it doesn't seem like an accident, or if he grabs your butt or any other private part, don't let him get away with it. Grabbing your private parts isn't just inappropriate, it's indecent assault and battery. Tell him that, and he will most likely forget any thoughts he had of trying to harm you.

This class doesn't teach fighting, it teaches survival.

This sort of behavior could be drunken stupidity, but it might not. The offender could be testing your response. If you let the offender brush up against your breasts because he's reaching for something in front of you once, it could just be an accident. But if he does it again, and you still don't react, he might think he can grab you and you won't react, then he might go further and further. The behavior escalates.

This is why you must put a stop to it right away. If he brushes up against you and it could be an accident, just say, "watch where you're going," or "keep your hands off me," and that should put a stop to it. You are chosen as the target of this kind of negative attention or behavior because the offender thinks you're a victim; he doesn't think you will defend yourself.

The second two classes focus on what to do if the offender doesn't back off. This is where you learn what to do if it comes to physical contact: if he grabs you, if he tries to hit you, if he tries to strangle you.

The first thing they tell you to do is yell and not scream. People scream all the time and for all different reasons, but you can't tell why someone is screaming. However, you can always tell when someone is yelling out of panic.

The instructors then explain the techniques, why they're effective and show you how to do them.

Then, you actually practice yelling while using these techniques in the air and against bags in a repetitive fashion with the intention that they become more of a reflex than something that you have to think about. When you're being attacked, there isn't any time to think about what you should do. Your reaction should be to attack the easiest targets, then run away. This class doesn't teach fighting, it teaches survival.

In the last class you actually put these techniques to the test. Certified male instructors put on "aggressor" suits, which are head to toe pads to protect them from harm, and in different scenarios they actually attack the women who choose to participate in the simulation. The women also have elbow and knee pads, helmets, and gloves to protect them from harm.

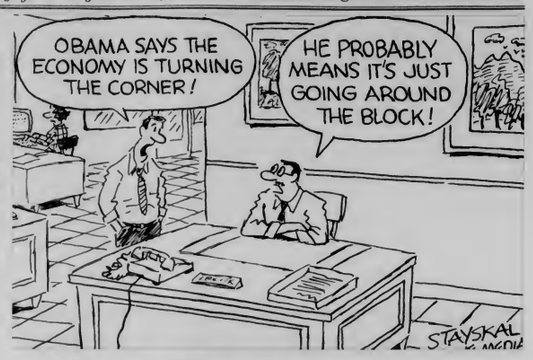
As someone who has taken this class, I can honestly say that the simulation accurately invokes the sense of panic and fear that you would feel if you were really being attacked even though you are in a completely safe environment.

When you're being attacked, you feel like you've forgotten everything and you revert to survival mode to try and get out of there. Watching the other women while they were being attacked, I could see them effectively using the skills we learned. These techniques had become second nature. It's scary to participate, but it's also extremely empowering. Everyone who did it, even those who didn't know if they could or didn't know if they wanted to, felt far more confident in their abilities after the simulation.

The best part of this program is that after you have completed the course, you are a lifetime member and can retake this class to brush up on your skills anywhere it's being offered for free.

Every woman should take this class so that no woman has to be a victim. It's free here at UMass, and the R.A.D officers would love to see more women take this class.

So look for UMass R.A.D. on Facebook and check out the UMass Police Department web site for the dates of upcoming classes.



There won't be any more classes until next semester here at UMass, but if you're eager to take R.A.D., check out the official R.A.D. website to find out where classes are being offered near campus or near your home over the summer.

Sara Crossman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at scrossma@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PHOTO

Columnist Sara Crossman demonstrates a self-defense technique taught during the R.A.D. course called "the hammerfist," which is intended to break an agressor's nose on a practice dummy.

Gov. Patrick opens up to 'fair questions'

Shane Cronin

Recently Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick agreed to interview on the talk radio circuit.

For those of you unfamiliar with the Amplitude Modulation genre, I implore you to adjust your dials.

On April 1 — April Fool's Day to boot — the embattled Democrat, facing re-election this year, sat down for a chat with WRKO host Howie Carr.

A long running joke on the show revolves around Patrick's unwillingness to talk with Carr.

"When the phone doesn't ring, [I'll] know it's you, Deval," said Carr. The radio host, columnist, and author often quips about the Bay State's Governor.

After last week, however, the Governor forced Carr to eat his words. Patrick made his first appearance at the studio.

The overall tone of the exchange was jovial, yet Carr managed to ask all the tough questions.

Deval Patrick realized he needs the right leaning Howie Carr show. Instead of hurling accusations at conservative hosts like the Obama camp does, Patrick bit the bullet. And guess what? He lives to tell the tale! And he's a stronger candidate for it.

"The first thing I want to know, where's my property tax cut?" Carr asked the Governor.

For those of you with short or selective memories, Gov. Patrick campaigned on lowering property taxes for all homeowners of the Commonwealth. "It's comin'" Patrick answered. Carr incredulously retorted, "I'm writin' this down for my column," which ran in Friday's Boston Herald.

Carr covered every base from the notorious Cadillac scandal, which plagued the Governor's early days in office, to pension reform, bringing casinos to Mass., the state sales tax increase last year and more.

And all of this happened in 15 minutes – 15 minutes, which I dare say most of the votes Patrick can count on in November didn't catch.

In the next six months of campaigning Deval Patrick won't sit for a tougher interview. Mark my words.

I lost a lot of faith in the Governor over the past year, but this 15 minute segment blunted the downward trend for me. Let me tell you why. Barack Obama, while peddling healthcare reform over the last 12 months, didn't answer a single tough question about it.

He interviewed with CBS, NBC, ABC and MSNBC. He wrote opinion pieces for the New York Times. These media outlets are all friends of his administration and heavily supported Obamacare.

The question you should ask yourselves is why didn't Obama sit down with Rush Limbaugh or Bill O'Reilly if he was so confident about his healthcare reform bill? They have much larger audiences than any left leaning news organization he frequents.

Wouldn't the President have been able to reach a larger percentage of Americans by speaking with one of them? Yes, Obama interviewed with Fox News personality Bret Baier, but it was hardly a test of the President's mettle.

Deval Patrick realized he needs the right leaning Howie Carr show. Instead of burling accusations at conservative hosts like the Obama camp does, Patrick bit the bullet. And guess what? He lives to tell the tale! And he's a stronger candidate for it.

I commend the Governor for ... expanding his horizons, for lack of a better expression. I stop short of applauding him, however. Media outlets should all be as skeptical of politicians as Carr.

Politicians shouldn't have friends in the press.

The role of journalists is to question government, not sing its praises. And under no circumstances should a media outlet favor one party over another.

The talk radio medium engenders the intended role of the press best of all its counterparts. I don't always agree with what my favorite hosts say, however, I appreciate well formulated, independent opinions. And the beauty of America is I can take an opinion or leave it.

Aside from all that, the Deval Patrick interview wasn't about opinions. It was about the Governor of Massachusetts answering fair questions about his campaign promises and executive actions that affect every resident of this state. Howie Carr didn't castigate Patrick.

He simply wanted to know when the tolls will be removed from the MassPike, and why State Senator Marion Walsh, a friend of the governor's, was appointed to a 12 year vacant position paying $175,000 annually. No comment from the Gov. on the latter.

What are politicians so afraid of? Is it reaching out to a different audience? Or is it being held accountable to their records?

Scott Brown won in Massachusetts due, in part, to the listeners of the Howie Carr show. Martha Coakley declined her WRKO invitation. We all know what happened to her.

At the end of the day the tough questions are coming from the Laura Ingrahams and the Michael Savages in the media not the Rachel Maddows and the Matt Lauers.

No matter where you stand on the political spectrum, you can't deny that. If you're voting in the Massachusetts gubernatorial election later this year download the April first Howie Carr/Deval Patrick podcast. It is available free on iTunes.

And if you are planning on casting a ballot for the incumbent, it will be, perhaps, the most important 15 minutes you'll hear now until Election Day this November.

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

Radicals protest funerals to oppose U.S. support of homosexuality

Matt Kushi

There's a saying that many of us are familiar with that goes, "to add insult to injury." The context in which Albert Snyder has found this saying to be true has not been a laughable matter. Snyder's son, Lance Corporal Matthew Snyder was killed in action in Iraq in 2006.

Like any parent, Snyder was devastated. Then came the next blow: a group of protestors showed up at Lance Corporal Snyder's funeral. That would seem to be enough insult to injury for any family.

However, this story gets even sadder. Snyder sued the protestors, who are members of the Westboro Baptist Church out of Topeka, Kansas headed by Reverend Fred Phelps, without success. Though they originally sided with Snyder, the court reversed its decision saying that Phelps and his protestors were protected under the First Amendment of the Constitution. In an even crueler turn of events, the Baltimore District Court ordered Snyder to pay Phelps and his protestors $16,000 in legal costs.

When looking at the details of this case, there are some things that should strike some nerves. The reasons to which Phelps claims to have the right to protest military funerals are corrupted to start. The reasons that he gives are the opposite of what America should stand for.

The protesting at these military funerals, including that of Lance Corporal Snyder, are not the stereotypical "War is evil" chants. Instead, Phelps and his group stand outside of the church where the funeral is being held, holding signs and chanting such things such as, "God hates you" and "You're in Hell."

The reason these radicals terrorize funerals? They claim that all United States' soldiers are evil because they are "defending a country that tolerates homosexuality."

Where did this thought process even come from?

Freedom of speech was intended to help democracy and the liberty of man.

Now, we are starting to get a picture of why the ruling in this case was wrong. The United States is built upon a combination of morals, logic and vision. What Phelps and his radicals represent is near opposite of this foundation that builds our Nation. In a twist of irony, they are using a loophole of Constitutional interpretation to represent what America does not stand for.

These funeral protesting radicals are claiming, and the court granted them, the right of the First Amendment: freedom of speech. However, this is beyond freedom of speech. Freedom of speech is intended to give rights to all law-abiding citizens. It was meant to be a tool for a better America. Here is where the difference lies. Freedom of speech was intended to help democracy and the liberty of man. The way that Phelps and his protesters are using it is as an arm of oppression and inhumane cruelty.

In this case, those being oppressed by these radicals are military families. Also, being oppressed are people that are gays or lesbians. For military families, they have done nothing other than have a family member give his or her life performing one of the most honorable duties that one can ask – putting their country before their own selves.

That means defending the members of their country no matter who they are. That is the crime that Phelps decided that Snyder, and all other soldiers, committed. A family does not deserve to suffer for this, or be treated as criminals, by the hands of the ignorant, who make illogical connections.

The other groups being oppressed in this case are gays and lesbians. No matter if you agree with someone's choice of sexuality or not, there is one thing that you can never take away from them – that they are human beings and have the same rights to lead a happy life as any other. They are humans who happen to be gay or lesbian; not lesbians and gays that happen to be human. The fact that they are being discriminated against by Phelp's group is a wrong that should not be.

If the current ruling is to be believed, than the Ku Klux Klan had the right to oppress the rights of African-Americans with their rhetoric. If the current ruling is to be believed, then the oppression in the rhetoric of Neo-Nazi's is right. If the current ruling is to be believed, we are giving others access to create an America that will not find its base in liberty and freedom but rather on oppression and terror.

We escaped that path once by overcoming slavery. Let us not venture down the same road again.

The reason why the former two have been subdued to a point, and why the basis of the latter must be subdued as well, is due to the fact that they are immoral. This is not a protest to free people from a form of tyranny, as some may argue. Rather it is a protest with the misguided moral principle of attempting to create a better world for oneself through the means of oppressing others.

While what Phelps and his followers are doing may be constitutionally legal, it is a crime against humanity on the two counts listed above. Snyder should not be forced to pay $16,000 in legal costs to radicals that violate the morals for which Snyder's son was fighting for. Fortunately for Snyder, he has support.

Conservative TV host Bill O'Reilly has voiced his support for Snyder, and there are cries being shouted out by true Americans for the case to be heard by the Supreme Court. Maybe then this case will end right where freedom of speech will be ruled to mean freedom and liberty, instead of oppression and terror.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Local Music Project

COURTESY PHOTO

Do-It-Yourself band Mallory is the epitome of what the culture implies as they took their act from Boston to New York for their first tour – riding on bicycles with their instruments strapped on tightly.

Mallory a band that can do it themselves

By Leigh Greaney
Collegian Staff

Mallory and its Do-It-Yourself subculture rips the screws out of the capitalist machine. Since the 1970s, DIY culture has pitted itself against the materialist dogma. In a world where music is all about advertising and big labels, Niko Para, Justin Fallon and Andre Ricard of Mallory say 'no thanks – we can handle this ourselves.'

Swimming against the current of mainstream music may be difficult at times, but for Mallory, it's nothing short of fulfilling. Because of their modern incarnation to DIY musical approach, it's also difficult to whittle their sound down to a specific genre. It's a moral dilemma to narrow their sound down, however, the band agrees that they fit into certain genres, including blue grass, folk, DIY and punk. Older people have told the band that they sound like "really aggressive folk." However, Ricard explains that although they fit into these "genres," it doesn't really describe what they sound like.

What they do sound like may not fit a recipe, but it sure tastes good.

With all members playing all instruments – ranging from banjo, guitar, bass, drums and recordings (with the exception of Para who is the only one who plays accordion), you can hear the oneness within their music.

That same oneness heard in the final product is put into the creation of every song. The band describes their song writing process as a type of synthesis.

"Whenever we get together to write songs, we end up bringing different songs we've written on our own to the table. Although each song as a primary song writer, it gets changed by the other people's opinions. They're all collective efforts."

Having just written a song before their appearance on WMUA's Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk from midnight to 2 a.m., Fallon explains that his song "Someone Else's Eden" wasn't very good until he brought it to his band mates. "They just feel incomplete until we sit down together and figure them out," he said. Played live for the first time on air in WMUA's studio, "Someone Else's Eden" is a song about displacement. However, the song itself seems to know exactly where it belongs with its escalating spirit and harmonic chanting.

For Mallory, dealing with issues of displacement seems to take a backseat to issues of dislocation. With Ricard living in Providence, RI, the band's biggest obstacle is being in the same place at the same time. No matter what though, they figure it out – keeping their DIY vibe strong. "Mostly I just come back through various means. Niko has had to come to pick me up before or I've had to hitchhike. We just make it happen," Ricard said.

Now on a break from school, Ricard has united with the rest of the band to record their new album, "Strange Homes." They consider this album to be the best in terms of representing the culture they hail from. They also consider it to be their most cohesive, in terms of exemplifying the values they strive to live out.

Those values – the values of DIY culture – are vital to the band's composition. Without throwing around a lofty list of adjectives to describe exactly what that means, they explained it as "common values."

"It's all about doing it yourself and everything that applies to that. It's about not participating in capitalism and consumerism," Ricard said.

One of the ways the band likes to practice what they preach is embodied in their touring process. The first tour they ever went on was a bike tour. This is not to be confused with a motorcycle tour. "We're talking two wheels and two pedals," said Ricard. "We're also talking from Boston to New York City." Touring with Grex, a fellow DYI inspired band, Mallory biked 340 some-odd miles from city to city, averaging 60 to 70 miles a day with their instruments strapped on tight.

The very thought of that kind of hardcore do-it-yourselfing is enough to make the typical load-up-the-van-type musicians cringe. The sheer thought of playing a show after that kind of marathon seems ludicrous, but Mallory disagrees.

"You have the most energy for shows after biking. You're so amped. It's not draining at all," Ricard said. However, they agree that mornings can be draining when there's another 60 miles of road staring them in the face.

They love it, though. So much so that they're planning on another bike tour this summer. "We're going to give ourselves a break this time," they admitted. "We're going to average 30 to 40 miles a day instead of 60/70 and space out our shows to every couple of days." This one will be even longer – taking them all the way to Washington, D.C.

Mallory also plans on embarking on two other tours this summer, along with the bike tour. One will be a northern tour and the other will be a cross country tour that will span from Texas, California, Arizona, through Louisiana and then up the East Coast.

This is all made possible because of the same culture that the music is part of. Because Mallory doesn't advertise or use any form of capitalistic endorsement, their culture makes their touring possible. Fallon explains that there's a "cool little circuit of musicians that's developed that all get each other shows and help each other out and go on tours."

"The kind of music we play is specific enough and often backed by a lifestyle. I'd even go so far as to call it a culture. It's small enough of a community, yet still international. Basically, if you're within the culture and within this community and act as an active participant, then we can basically just go to the West Coast and be like: We do this," said Ricard.

With pipe dreams of a European tour, Mallory goes to where the culture takes them. Most importantly, it's taken them to a new level within the realm of music. It's becomes more about community and networking then about only music. It's a collective – it transcends sound.

"We don't want it to just be music and just be albums. It's important to us that it's about what we're doing and when we go play somewhere. It's about what the people are doing there. We want to help out and be part of that community. We want to include as much art and as much poetry and all the other things we do as well. It's more of a project and portfolio," they said.

To be part of this movement, community and experience, do it yourself and contact the band. They'll play basically anywhere – an aspect they consider to be one of their most important. To get in contact with them, check out their web site malloryband.org.

Leigh Greaney can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Andyhasaband wants to be heard; listen up

Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

Meet Andy Gould. Andy has a band and they call themselves Andyhasaband.

The tale of how the band got started is an "ancient story of cryptic lure" according to Gould. "It came from kind of a belief that I couldn't work well with others and that all my bands kept breaking up..."

Gould started off on his own, writing songs on his acoustic guitar. Eventually he began playing shows, but after a while Gould felt he was lacking something. The songs needed to gain more energy and evolve past their acoustic origins, and so Gould began searching for a rhythm section to get that energy.

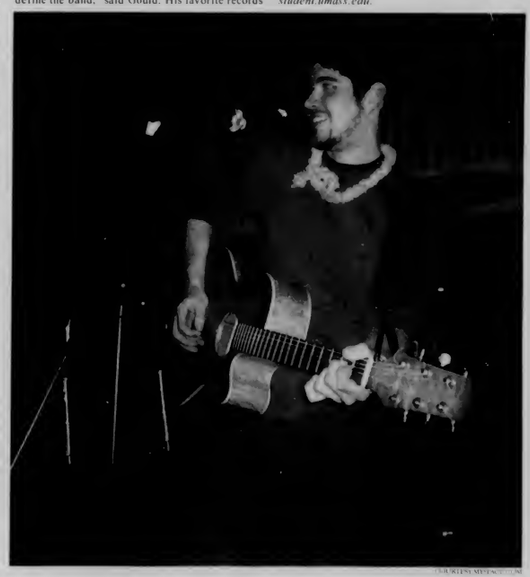
When Gould started his search, he went through a couple drummers and bassists before finally settling on his two current costars: bassist Jeff Higgins and drummer Amy Barnes. Andy says he "couldn't ask for more" from a rhythm section.

While shows are now somewhat infrequent, the band still manages to play about once a month, be it at a cafe or for WMUA's Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk radio show. Andyhasaband often plays alongside various punk bands, folk singers and blues artists when they manage to get shows.

Gould explained that the band started by saying it was a folk band, with influences from We Are Scientists and Peter Paul and Mary. But there are so many other categories that the band falls into that that they ended up calling their style "alt-post-folk-rock-pop-progressive," quite a mouthful for any fan. This can be abbreviated as 'frappp'.

The band clearly likes diversity. None of their songs are ever too similar and that's just the way they like it. "Conflicting but similar personalities define the band," said Gould. His favorite records are generally ones where "it could be a different band every song."

Their song "Coffee," is one of their more interesting pieces. As one of their minor key moving grooves, the song describes the feeling you get when something bad happens to a friend and all you can do is listen. This somewhat morose song is contrasted by one of their happier songs, "Hypnotize," which is written in a Johnny Cash style happy swing. The song is very poppy and just makes you want to dance as you listen to Gould's story.



The band just released their first album, called "The Unrelenting Andyhasaband," which is available at all of their live shows. Some of the tracks can be found on Facebook or on Myspace.com/andyhasaband.

Andy and his band agree – "We want to play more shows." Gould wants "everybody to be involved in the band." Not just the people on stage, the audience too. Everyone should be having fun and be an active member in the performance. The more dancing there is, the better.

Andyhasaband has served mainly as an opening act, but Gould noted that many opening bands always act like they have to be up there – like they aren't doing it for fun. He never wants the band to get old or tired, instead aspiring to shows where they show appreciation for the people who came out to see them, even if they are an opening act. This can include random sections of talking during the middle of songs, including fun little side notes or even chatting with crowd members, creating a lively, fun experience for anyone listening.

Andyhasaband is about getting individuals together to have a good time. They want to be heard and they want people at their shows. Andy has a band, but he wants you to be a part of it.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PHOTO

Led by Andy Gould (above), Andyhasaband refers to themself as a combination of Blink-182 and Bob Dylan. They played a wide range of songs on WMUA last Wednesday including a cover of "Runaround Sue."

Check out EXCLUSIVE videos and live recordings of Andyhasaband and Mallory from their appearances on WMUA's Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk weekly radio show on the Collegian's Local Music Project page at DailyCollegian.com/SweetBabyLou.

George Washington on top of A-10 after win over SBU

BY MICHAEL WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A commanding 15-4 victory over St. Bonaventure on Saturday vaulted the George Washington baseball team into a tie for first place in the Atlantic 10 conference. Capitalizing on six errors by their opponents, the Colonials earned the victory and their second straight series sweep to remain perfect so far this season in conference play.

A-10 Baseball

Despite a 4-for-5 day at the plate for Jesse Bosnik, the Bonnies couldn't keep pace with the Colonial attack. They recorded double-digit hits for the second straight game, with 11, but the Colonials topped their mark with 13 hits of their own.

Upperclassmen led the offensive explosion for the Colonials, who saw two players hit home runs, three record multi-hit games and five score multiple runs in the contest.

Senior infielder Chris Holland had three hits, two runs batted in and scored two runs. Fellow senior Chris Luck followed suit, recording two hits and scoring three runs in the rout.

Junior Brendon Kelliher and sophomore Stephen Oswald each homered in the win. Kelliher tallied his seventh home run six games into the season. Entering the game as a pinch hitter, Oswald highlighted a seven-run eighth inning with a towering blast over the right field fence and gave the Colonials some insurance.

Pitcher Eric Cantrell earned his fourth win of the season with six scoreless innings and seven strikeouts. Cantrell now leads the team in strikeouts with 49.

George Washington (16-10, 6-0 A-10) travels to Annapolis, Md. on Tuesday to take on the Naval Academy. The Bonnies have lost five straight games and now fall to 4-13 overall and 0-5 in A-10 play.

URI OUTLASTS FORDHAM

After a marathon 15 innings of back-and-forth play, Rhode Island pushed the winning run across the plate and beat Fordham on Thursday night.

Freshman Kevin Stenhouse's pinch-hit double in the top of the 15th inning scored Adam Derner and gave URI the 6-5 lead as it held onto for the victory.

URI scored first after a solo home run by sophomore Milan Adams put them up by one in the third inning, but the Rams countered in the next half inning by plating two runners of their own. They added two more runs to their total in the fourth inning, holding onto a 4-1 lead for the next two innings.

In the sixth, URI's offense awoke and reclaimed the lead after four runners scored in the top half of the inning. Smart base running allowed runners to advance into scoring position, and timely hitting by junior Evan Laude highlighted the inning for the Rams. Fordham failed on a pickoff attempt, which allowed the go-ahead run to score.

Fordham rallied in the bottom of the ninth inning to tie the game at five and send the game into extra innings, where it remained for several frames. Pitcher Daniel Munday struck out three in the last four innings of play, but could not hold on any longer, giving up Stenhouse's double in the top of the 15th inning.

With the 6-5 win, URI moves to 10-12 and 3-1 in A-10 play, while Fordham drops to 7-17 and 2-2 in the A-10.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

George Washington pitcher Eric Cantrell follows up on a pitch during a game. The Colonials defeated St. Bonaventure, 15-4 on Saturday.

Charlotte pitcher sets team strikeout record

BY SCOTT COURNOYER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Charlotte ace Emily Jeffery set the school record for career strikeouts with 590 over the weekend.

Jeffery passed former 49er Kristen Bowen on Saturday, striking out the fourth batter of the game to cement the record in her own name. She has 150 strikeouts this year, fourth most in a single season by a 49er.

Jeffery already holds the school's single-season strikeout record from last year, fanning 294 batters. During this year's campaign, Jeffery has a 13-4 record, a 1.23 earned run average and seven shutouts on the season.

A-10 Softball

Charlotte now holds a five-game winning streak, giving up a total of three runs combined during the stretch. During conference play, the 49ers have dominated every facet of every game, outscoring their opponents, 31-2.

FAGAN HITS WAY TO POW

Another senior led her team to back-to-back victories as Temple's Danielle Fagan brought home the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week award for her efforts at the plate against St. Bonaventure in a two-game series over the weekend.

During the series, Fagan delivered for the Owls, going 4-for-5 at the dish, with three home runs and five runs batted in. Fagan has put together an impressive senior campaign, hitting .313 while compiling four home runs, 21 RBIs and a .554 slugging percentage.

The Owls seemed to find themselves offensively against the Bonnies with 16 runs over the series.

RAMS STUN IN A-10 PLAY

Predicted to finish in the basement of the Atlantic 10 conference standings, Rhode Island put itself in a good situation with a 4-2 conference record.

The Rams drove in runners with 24 runs in four games while the pitching staff gave up six runs.

A key offensive piece to their success has been senior Melissa Wilson, who has racked up 10 of her 17 RBIs on the season in conference play, while also posting a staggering .750 slugging percentage.

SOPHOMORES LEAD THE WAY

Saint Louis, who was predicted to finish in the top 5 of the conference, won its games with timely hitting by everyone in the lineup, but more significantly with their pitching and defense.

The Billikens are 7-2 over their last nine games, shutting out their opponents in four of those seven wins. Sophomores Kelcie Matesa and Hannah Huebbe lead the team, both compiling earned run averages below 2.00, while racking up over 150 strikeouts, 14 complete games and a batting average against around .225.

PARKS TAKES HOME ROW

Saint Joseph's Dana Parks came through for her team last week, delivering two hits in the second game of a double-header against SBU and secured her spot as the A-10 Rookie of the Week.

Despite the losing record in conference play, Parks has become a leader for the Hawks, batting a team-high .333 while starting 19 games as a freshman. Sophomore Erin Gallagher currently has a 1.97 ERA, six complete games and 124 strikeouts in 117 innings of work.

GAMES TO LOOK FOR

Conference play will continue later this week for all teams vying for spot in the tournament in early May. Teams such as Massachusetts and Fordham will host the next few games, looking to separate themselves from the rest of the conference pack. Other top teams like Charlotte and Saint Louis will travel on the road, looking to take down the perennial powerhouses that remain the cream of the crop.

Scott Cournoyer can be reached at scournoy@student.umass.edu.

Hofstra looking to fix recent struggles after loss to Drexel

No. 8 Pride on 2-game losing streak after defensive lapses

BY DANIEL GIARDINA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

After starting a hot, the Hofstra men's lacrosse team had two consecutive loses that hurt it in the rankings, which include losses to Massachusetts and Drexel.

On Saturday, Hofstra faced a fired up Drexel team, which is on three-game winning streak. Junior Jamie Lincoln and freshman Adrian Sorichetti both contributed three goals for the Pride, but it wasn't enough.

CAA Lacrosse

After being tied at seven at half-time, Hofstra gained momentum by scoring two quick goals by senior Dan Stein. But that still was no match for the Dragons.

Robert Church, who is an All-American attackman for Drexel, had five goals in the first half, and added two more goals in the second, including the one that put Drexel over Hofstra with 50 seconds left in the game. The Dragons defeated the No. 8 Pride, 13-11, which is their third win over a top 10 opponent this season.

Church, who now has 24 goals, in 10 games has been named the Colonial Athletic Association Player of the week as well as Rookie of the Week for the second time this season.

JOHN HOPKINS LOSING SIGHT

The Blue Jays, a powerhouse in men's lacrosse for on a four-game losing streak, with losses to North Carolina, Virginia, Syracuse and Hofstra.

Midfielder Michael Kimmell, who leads the team in scoring and assists didn't score on Saturday against the Tar Heels. In fact, attack Kyle Wharton (three goals) led the team in scoring during the 11-7 loss to UNC. Junior Max Chautin also contributed with two goals while senior Steven Boyle had one.

Goalie Pierce Basett allowed 11 goals and had six saves. On the other hand the Tar Heels dominated, especially on the offensive end. UNC's junior All-American Billy Bitter crushed JHU's defense by contributing four goals.

The Blue Jays fall to 17th in the top 20 rankings, while the Tar heels move up to No. 2 right behind No. 1 UVA, with a 10-0 record.

UVA STILL PERFECT

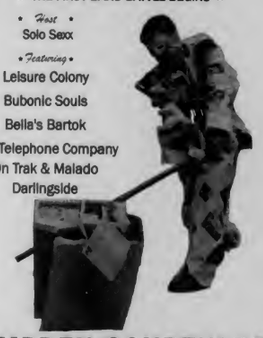
Virginia continued its perfect record this season thanks to sophomore Chris Bocklett, who has 30 goals this season.

The Cavaliers have the NCAA's top offense, averaging 14 goals per game while allowing seven from their opponents per game.

Chris Bocklett earned co-Atlantic Coast Conference Player of the Week, alongside Tar Heel Billy Bitter. The Cavaliers have outshot their opponents, 451-307, over the course of the season, and has allowed the least amount of points in a game.

Part of the defense's success has to do with goalie Adam Ghitleman, who now is the best in the country with a save percentage of 53 percent and has more than 77 saves on the season. On Saturday, the No. 1 Cavaliers faced then-No. 4 Maryland.

The Terrapins narrowly lost to UVA, 11-10. Maryland has two consecutive loses on the season, which now puts it back to No. 5.



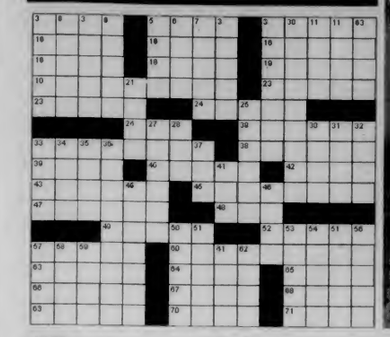
Daniel Giardina can be reached at giardina@student.umass.edu.

Get the skinny.

ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN PRESENTS
PAPER JAM
★ THE FIRST BAND BATTLE BEGINS ★
• Host •
Solo Sexx
• Featuring •
Leisure Colony
Bubonic Souls
Bella's Bartok
The Telephone Company
On Trak & Malado
Darlingside

HAMPDEN COURTYARD
• SOUTHWEST •
APR. 12 | 6:00
FREE | PRESENTED WITH
UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION Sprint Southwest Area Communications



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
for
On-Cam
Local B
Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40000
MAGIC The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shopping Ctr.), Hadley 413-586-3451

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
We like the things you whisper in our ear...

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. A facial disguise
5. Matures
9. Imperial
14. Distinctive flair
15. A light
16. Lacquer ingredient
17. Part portrayed
18. Found in skin lotion
19. Units of heredity
20. Merge
22. Catkin
23. Electrical pioneer Nikola
24. Ancient Roman magistrate
26. South southeast
29. 60 seconds
33. Curse
38. Supporter
39. Not a single one
40. Cuban dance
42. Matured
43. Loath
45. Without agony
47. Deputy
48. Exist
49. Concepts
52. A punctuation mark
57. Not sit
60. Storage room
63. A clique
64. Epic
65. Operatic solo
66. Mountain crest
67. Website addresses
68. Thick bituminous liquids
69. Almost 40 inches
70. Smell
71. Visual organs

DOWN
1. Excellence
2. Without company
3. Preserves, as pork
4. Get on one's knees
5. Winged
6. Celebration
7. Overact
8. Velocity
9. Especially fine or decorative clothing
10. Primary
11. Heredity carrier
12. Ends a prayer
13. Enumerate
21. Deep cut
25. Make imperfect
27. Peaceful
28. Relative of an ostrich
30. Encourage
31. "Little piggies"
32. Concludes
33. A Freudian stage
34. Exploded star
35. Once again
36. Cease
37. PA system component
41. Sheep sound
44. A repairer of horse equipment
46. Between the head and shoulders
50. Ancient Assyrian city
51. Impolite look
53. Give a speech
54. Eel
55. Wavelike design
56. Accumulate
57. Con game
58. Container weight
59. Assist
61. Look at flirtatiously
62. Barrel

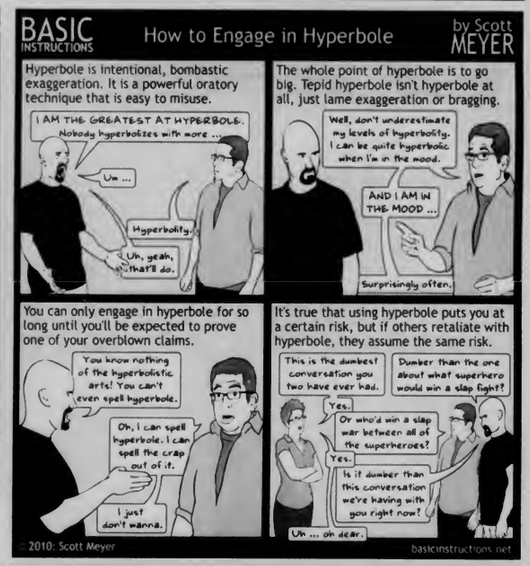
WANT TO WORK IN RADIO?
WMUA 91.1 FM is looking to hire specialty Department Directors in the following departments for the 2010-2011 academic year:
SPORTS | OUTREACH
NEWS | FUND DRIVE
SALES | TECH
PUBLICITY
For information and/or applications, stop by WMUA 105 campus center or visit wmua.org
Applications are due by April 17th

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!
NEW! 3 Sessions:
• Session I: May 17 - June 7
• Session II: June 8 - July 13
• Session III: July 14 - August 17
Classes fill up quickly...REGISTER NOW
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

ONLY YOU CAN HELP ME HIDE THE BODY

Panting vs. Pantalons

	6	7			3		4
			8			3	9
9							5
					7	4	1
8		5			1
		4	9			2
			1		4
7		2	3
	9			2



PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

My whole life I had assumed there were threesomes in Heaven.

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS How to Engage in Hyperbole by Scott MEYER

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
I have a minor suggestion for when you get up in the morning, stop it.

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
I just got one question, what are you gonna do brother! When Luda-mania runs wild on you?!

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Having a rough day? Go back to your room, light some candles and play your meanest game of "Bop-it!"

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
Compliments are always better when they end with the words "in bed."

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
You are so good about putting the appropriate amount of salad dressing on your chicken wrap, in bed.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
There is a star studded revolt that wants to rid you from the world, see for yourself at www.standup2cancer.org.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Forget the triple threat, when are people going to bring back more threatening numbers like the squirty dozen?

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Soothe your nightmares about Hilary Duff by picturing her less frightening, cartoon counterpart from Lizzie McGuire.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
Tomorrow you will wake up in a church parking lot with nothing on but a crown from Burger King. You are simply, epic.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
Nothing is worse than getting in between a horny elephant and a hard place.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
By the end of the day you will posess geniophobia. It means to fear chins.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Why hasn't anyone formed a roast chicken business in Amherst called, Emily Chickenson?

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FULL TIME JOB VACANCY

$5000 MONTHLY. Excellent Full Time/ Part Time Customer Relations Opportunity Local Distributor for Domestic & International Manufacturer with divisional office. Now Hiring Full/Part Time for Indoor Air Treatment System. Now Expanding with Immediate Openings P/T in Sales Department in nationwide branches office. No Experience Required. Must be at least 18 years of age. Reliable Vehicle for Transportation. EVENING AND WEEKEND POSITIONS AVAILABLE. Company Offers: PAID TRAINING, NO LAYOFFS, RAPID ADVANCEMENT, PAID VACATION

FULL TIME JOB VACANCY

All applicants must be Neat in Appearance, Hard Working, & Ready to start Immediately! SEND YOUR RESUME... vvenus71@gmail.com

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7879

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St. Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

JEFFREY R. LARNARD / COLLEGIAN

The new coach of the Minutewomen, Sharon Dawley sits with Athletic Director John McCutcheon during yesterday's press conference announcing her seven-year contract. The athletic department hopes her experience in bringing Vermont to back-to-back NCAA tournaments can carry over and lift UMass' past its losing history under former coach Marnie Dacko.

UMass hopes proven coach helps team to winning ways

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team has a new head coach, and it's one that is expected to be around for some time.

Just under a month after UMass announced it would not renew the contract of former coach Marnie Dacko, the athletic department signed Sharon Dawley, the former head coach at Vermont, to a seven-year contract to fill the vacancy.

"I am extremely pleased that Sharon is joining us," UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon said in the team's press release. "She has a proven record of success and is highly respected by her peers. We are very excited about the future of UMass women's basketball."

The seven-year contract is the longest signing for a coach while McCutcheon has been the Athletic Director at UMass. The exact terms of how much the deal is worth was not released because it was an agreement in principle and still had to work its way through the system.

Dawley leaves Vermont after leading the team to one of its most successful seasons. With a 27-7 record this past season, the Catamounts won a second consecutive America East championship and made it to their second-straight NCAA tournament.

After receiving a No. 10 seed, Vermont upset No. 7 Wisconsin in the first round, for its first ever NCAA tournament win, before falling to No. 2 Notre Dame in the Second Round.

Despite her success at Vermont, Dawley saw numerous things that made the job attractive to her and gave her reason to believe there was an opportunity at UMass for even greater success.

"The community, the facilities, the coaches, the conference," Dawley said. "I don't see anything that doesn't say we can't win here.

"Making the next step, watching the games this year, watching Xavier being two layups away from the Final Four, we have that possibility here. I'll be honest with you, it's not something you can turn down. The possibility is just very attractive."

Dawley was also attracted to the Atlantic 10 conference and its caliber of play.

"I think it is an amazing conference," Dawley said. "We were fortunate to beat Dayton on a neutral floor and then to see how well they did in the tournament. And [with] Xavier, where they are at now, I'm really fired up about this league. There is some tremendous basketball in this league and you can't help but get excited about that."

Prior to speaking at Tuesday's press conference where her hiring was announced, Dawley met with the Minutewomen. She wanted to make sure her and her new players were on the same page as well as let them know her missions.

"We talked about being a team, we talked about moving forward, we talked about how excited we are to get better every day starting today just by talking and getting our goals on the table," Dawley said. "I really just have one mission right now and that is to let the returners and the incoming freshman know that I am here for you guys 24-7 and I can't wait to get going."

According to Dawley, many of her staff from Vermont will be coming with her to UMass, and others will have opportunities to join her staff.

In her seven seasons with the Catamounts, Dawley led the team to a 128-86 overall record with at least 20 wins coming in each of the last three seasons.

Prior to coaching at Vermont, Dawley spent six years as an assistant coach at Dartmouth from 1997-2003 and nine years as the head coach at Tufts from 1984-1993. While at Tufts, Dawley was 137-62 (.688) and never had a losing season.

"This all ready feels like home and I can't tell you how excited I am to be here," Dawley said.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Plourde allows 1 hit, pitches 20 k's in win

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

If there's anything Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino can complain about regarding her ace Sara Plourde's performance against Boston College, it's the double at the bottom of the sixth inning that ruined her no-hitter.

But by any other barometer, Plourde still proved herself to be an elite pitcher, even if her performance didn't impress Sortino or the sophomore who got the one-hitter in the first place.

"It's funny because we both graded her pitching as a B-minus today," Sortino said.

Plourde finished the game with 20 strikeouts and one walk in seven innings as the Minutewomen downed the Eagles, 6-0. She raised her strikeout total to 322, the fifth most in school history in a single season, and is 23 away from passing Brandice Balschmiter's single-season record of 344.

Her 20 strikeouts broke the UMass record for strikeouts in a seven-inning game that Plourde shared with former pitcher Danielle Henderson (18), who did it three times.

Freshman Teea Rogers rounds a base during a game earlier this season. She currently has four RBIs.

UMass	6
BC	0

UMass (22-7, 6-0 Atlantic 10) finished the game with three home runs by right fielder Katie Bettencourt, left fielder Michelle Libby and shortstop Whitney Williams. It also finished the game 13-for-31 as a team at the plate.

From the beginning, Sortino and Co., set the pace with its offense while Plourde kept the Eagles (9-18, 0-6 Atlantic Coast Conference) from being effective at the plate.

Outfielder Carly Normandin had a leadoff walk in the first inning and then advanced to second base on a bunt-single from Williams. The next play, both runners advanced on a hit-and-run play by second baseman Kylie Magill, who grounded out to third base.

With runners on second and third, right fielder Katie Bettencourt put the Minutewomen up 3-0 with her fourth home run of the season.

"I thought that [Williams] had a great bunt for a hit in the first inning that opened up the door for Better ourt's home run," Sortino said.

Behind Plourde's pitching, the Maroon and White didn't really need any more insurance runs, but it got them anyway.

UMass struck again in the top of the fourth inning when Libby homered to left field, but a double by Williams was the only other player to reach base that inning.

During Libby's next at-bat as the leadoff hitter in the top of the sixth inning, she singled up the middle. After senior Normandin flied out, Williams hit her first home run of the season to left-center field, and brought in Libby.

BC's first hit didn't come until the last out of the seventh inning when Renee Ramos doubled down the left field line. But other than spoiling Plourde's no-hitter, her hit didn't do any damage to the Minutewomen.

She struck out the last batter anyway.

Plourde's only other blemish on the day came when she walked Alison Kooistra in the fifth inning.

UMass returns to Amherst for its home opener against Boston University today. The Minutewomen were supposed to start the season with a double-header against Dartmouth on March 30, but the games were rained out.

BU features America East All-Conference First team selection April Setterlund, who ranks first in the nation with a .595 batting average.

The Terriers (18-10, 3-0 America East) are on an eight-game winning streak and have shut-out Stony Brook two out of three games during the series sweep. The last time BU went on the road, it came out with a strong offensive performance defeating Harvard, 14-8.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

UM gives up 10 runs in loss against UConn in 1st game

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team has yet to catch a break this season.

Last weekend, the Minutemen lost three straight games to Charlotte, which currently leads the Atlantic 10. UMass then traveled to Storrs, CT for a home-and-home set against Connecticut, which has won six straight.

But after suffering a 10-2 loss yesterday to the Huskies, the Minutemen's best hope is to split the series with a win tomorrow in Amherst when the two teams square off at 3 p.m.

"It was a good game up until about half-way through," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "But then they hit the four home runs and that really was how the game was decided."

UMass (2-14, 1-5 Atlantic 10) plated the first run in the top of the third, when junior Matt Gedman tripled to score Eric Fredette. The Huskies (18-7) answered back in the bottom of the frame with a run before both teams rolled through a scoreless fourth.

UConn broke the 1-1 tie when it touched up UMass starter Leif Sorenson for three runs in the bottom of the fifth. It started when the Huskies' leadoff hitter, Pierre LePage, singled in a run. The next batter was shortstop Nick Ahmed, who hit a two-run home run and drove Sorenson out of the game.

"Sorenson pitched really well," Stone said. "He hasn't thrown too many pitches yet [on the season] and he started getting the ball up a little bit. He wasn't getting groundballs anymore so it was time to take him out."

Sorenson finished his outing with 4.2 innings pitched, giving up four runs on six hits and three walks. He struck out one.

After recording the final out of the fifth, sophomore reliever Glen Misho pitched two more innings, giving up four runs on five hits and three strikeouts. Freshman reliever Aaron Zalecnik threw the final inning, giving up two runs on one hit and one walk.

In the end, it was the long ball that did in the Minutemen pitching.

"[The bullpen] battled out there," Stone said. "But we got hurt by three more home runs when people were on base. That really decided the ballgame."

Contrary to UConn, UMass couldn't do much to support their pitchers. The Minutemen registered seven hits and no walks against four Huskies' pitchers.

"They had pretty good pitchers on the mound who threw strikes and got ahead," Stone said. "We weren't in any deep counts [against them]. You could tell they were breaking the game up because they wanted some of their guys to get some work in – that happens a lot at this time of the season."

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Pitcher Isaac Oakley reaches back for a pitch during the home opener against Hartford on March 24.

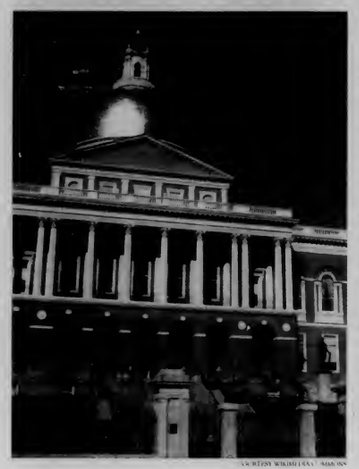
UConn	10
UMass	2

Nonetheless, UConn's pitchers collectively shut down the Minutemen, whose only other run came from a Brian Baudinet home run. UMass' offense continues to sputter as of late, which has scored a total of 12 runs in its past four games.

The Maroon and White will try to reverse that trend tomorrow, when Isaac Oakley gets the start. Oakley hopes to replicate his last start, when he threw five innings and was up one run while striking out four en route to UMass' home-opening victory against Hartford.

It should not come easily, however, as the Huskies will look to continue its six-game winning streak. Win or lose, UMass will be relieved to depart from Connecticut, when its schedule eases up and they near a nine-game homestand beginning on April 23.

"We just have to keep battling," Stone said. "We have to stay positive, keep battling and get them tomorrow."



Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 74 LOW: 56 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 2010

Students lobby Beacon Hill

COURTESY WILLIAM LEAV / MASSPIRG

50 UMass students traveled to the State House on Beacon Hill on Tuesday to lobby the legislature for increased higher education funding.

By Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday, a group of students from the University of Massachusetts and the surrounding community colleges traveled to the Mass. State House in Beacon Hill, Boston to lobby legislators for increased funding for public higher education.

Of the students who attended the Lobby Day, 50 students were from UMass, one student was from Holyoke Community College and six students were from Springfield Technical Community College. The students in attendance lobbied legislators from their regional districts for funding for public higher education, support of MASSGrant and other need-based financial aid awards, as well as funding for the Commonwealth Honors College.

Gov. Deval Patrick's fiscal year 2011 (FY 2011) budget currently includes $969.7 million for public colleges and universities. This allocation was based on the necessity of protecting public colleges and universities from budget cuts since the fiscal year 2009. The allocation includes $873 million in General Fund dollars and $96 million in State Fiscal Stabilization Funds through the federal recovery act.

"I think [the Lobby Day] went really well," said Sam Dreyfus, a Student Government Association (SGA) member. "It's a really tough budget year, and no one is going to be able to get what they want."

"The legislators were really impressed at our level of knowledge and participation," said Dreyfus, "showing that we are a presence that needs to be paid attention to."

Gov. Patrick's FY 2011 budget proposal also suggests maintaining current funding for scholarships provided by the Office of Student Financial Assistance (OSFA). This allocation totals $87.8 million. This also includes assistance of $3.5 million from the University of Massachusetts to increase need-based financial aid for in-state students.

Funding is projected to increase, particularly in the MASSGrant program. According to the OFSA Web site, MASSGrant is "a grant assistance program funded by appropriations from the Massachusetts Legislature." The program provides need-based financial aid to undergraduates who are residents of Massachusetts, seeking a degree from any public college or university in Massachusetts.

Currently, Massachusetts spends $134.69 per person aged 18-24 in financial aid grants, placing 35th in the country, with the national average at $269.32. Between the 1988-89 to 2007-08 academic years, funding for the MASSGrant program declined by 53 percent.

"It is important to remind legislators that as students and voting members of this state," said SGA Speaker of the Senate Modesto Montero, "we feel strongly about supporting public higher education and want it to be an issue that is a priority during the upcoming months."

Students were given the opportunity to hear various State House representatives speak at a press conference during the Lobby Day. Commissioner Richard M. Freeland, the Massachusetts Commissioner of Higher Education, spoke before the students. Freeland spoke of the power students have as voters.

"We have to look at everything realistically," Freeland said. "Know that public higher education matters [and] you as students have the attention of the legislators."

Representative Ellen Story (D) of the Third Hampshire District, said she believes the future of the state lies in higher education.

"Public education is the foundation of democracy," Rep. Story said.

"I think it was an excellent day of lobbying, and the overall feedback from legislators was very positive," Montero said. "They were impressed by how well-organized the event was, and the fact that so many students came out – a constituency that is inconsistently heard from."

State Senator Hen Downing (D) representing Berkshire, Hampshire and Franklin counties, spoke to the group of students about his own experience with paying-off college loans. With the average tuition and fees at Massachusetts public 4-year institutions being $7,922, 33 percent higher than the national average of $5,950, Downing supports MASSGrant and other forms of need-based financial aid.

"Public higher education is a social good and it's important," Sen. Downing said. "[It] is a smart investment and [it] is about jobs."

SGA Senator Melissa Urban felt the Lobby Day was effective. "We will see what the numbers look like when the House budget comes out next Wednesday," she said. "We hope that by having a presence through our letters and by being on Beacon Hill, the House will think of us in their budget."

Both the house and senate will be coming out within the next few days to debate the proposal and will finalize the FY 2011 budget next Wednesday.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu.

Amherst store owner denies credit fraud

Charged in court with theft of Belichick daughter's credit card

By Owen Boss and Scott Merzbach
Special to the Collegian

A local shopkeeper, charged with using Bill Belichick's daughter's credit card to buy more than a thousand dollars of merchandise at stores in Hadley, denied his involvement in court Tuesday.

Mohamed S. Nagooradumai, 39, of 42 Palley Village Place, who owns Amherst Grocery Store at 319 Main St., pleaded innocent in Eastern Hampshire District Court to charges of committing credit card fraud over $250 and receiving stolen property valued over $250.

In December, Amherst resident Amanda Belichick, an assistant coach for the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team and daughter of New England Patriot's head coach Bill Belichick, went to the local police station to report several unauthorized transactions had been taken from her Bank of America checking account.

The card, she said, had either been lost or stolen, according to police.

A police inquiry revealed that last year, during November and December, unauthorized charges were made on her card at Old Navy, Sears and Walmart in Hadley and at Nagooradumai's grocery store, according to court documents. The largest transaction, made at Sears, was for a Kenmore washer and dryer set reportedly valued at $616.23.

After obtaining surveillance video from Sears, police identified Nagooradumai and his wife, Zuharia Mohamed, whom they recognized from past dealings, waiting in line just moments before the transaction was made, according to police.

On Tuesday at 11 a.m., police executed a search warrant obtained Monday in Eastern Hampshire District Court at Nagooradumai's Palley Village Place home and seized a Kenmore washer and dryer set and a variety of clothing as evidence.

COURTESY UMASS ATHLETICS

Amanda Belichick reported her credit card missing in December.

Lt. Ron Young, head of the police detective bureau, said the investigation is ongoing and the credit card used in the alleged thefts has not been recovered. Young said additional charges may be filed against Nagooradumai as the investigation continues.

Judge Laurie MacLeod released Nagooradumai on his own recognizance and ordered him to return to court for a pre-trial hearing on May 18.

Amanda Belichick was reached Wednesday, but declined to comment. A call to the number listed for Nagooradumai's residence was not answered, and a voicemail left there Wednesday evening was not returned.

Owen Boss and Scott Merzbach are Gazette staff writers. They can be reached at obossa@gazettenet.com and smerzbach@gazettenet.com.

(Editor's note: This story is part of a joint effort between the Daily Collegian and the Daily Hampshire Gazette.)

Credit unions rising where banks struggle

Business

By Matt Bonteillier
Collegian Staff

In a recession defined by collapsing financial giants and the subsequent government bailouts, there is a success story to be found among local credit unions. While profit-seeking banks are struggling to extend loans to the community, non-profit credit unions have weathered the economic storm and continued to provide quality member service.

The consumer shift to a cooperative bank rather than a traditional bank is easily explained; local credit unions offer much more to their members than traditional banks do. In the United States, there are approximately 7,800 credit unions serving 92 million Americans.

The UMassFive College Federal Credit Union, which in the last year experienced its largest member growth in a decade, illustrates the recent success of such institutions. The credit union offers a host of services and savings for its members, such as better rates on savings accounts as well as lower interest rates on loans.

The ability of credit unions to provide such services rests on the idea that credit unions do not operate their establishment in order to make a profit. This fundamental difference from a commercial bank allows credit unions to focus on quality member service rather than stock price.

"Since the profit is de-emphasized, it allows us to keep our focus on member service rather than risky derivatives and commercial investments," said Jon Reske, vice president of marketing at UMassFive.

In addition to more competitive member interest rates, the Hadley-based credit union saves members "$200 a year compared to traditional bank," said Reske.

That's not just because fees are lower, but also because the staff advises members on how to avoid being charged at all.

The credit union promotes fiscal responsibility by issuing credit cards that have a $500 student limit to help students avoid getting in over their heads. But UMassFive's benefits are not just limited to monetary savings: the member community is entitled to a personalized banking experience, which includes classes and workshops on how to invest and borrow wisely. Next year, the credit union will debut a five-part workshop on how money grows.

"Our student members are very important to us," said Reske. "We are currently focusing more on students than ever before."

This focus includes panels of students who are members of the credit union who give insight on how to improve businesses, as well as specialized loans for items like a computer or a bike which feature low interest rates and can be paid back over four years.

Membership in UMassFive is restricted to students and faculty of the five Pioneer Valley colleges, but student members can continue to take advantage of these benefits even after graduation.

"Once a member, always a member," said Reske.

Credit unions rely on fundamental business methods to attract new members.

"Much of our business relies on our reputation, and we attract members mostly through word of mouth," said Reske. "Our only purpose is to provide service to our members."

Matt Bonteillier can be reached at mbonteil@student.umass.edu.

Heat wave

After a rainy Tuesday, students laying on Orchard Hill took advantage of the beautiful sunshine yesterday afternoon, with temperatures rising into the mid-eighties.

ARTS & LIVING

'Time Machine' a dated trip

'Hot Tub Time Machine' is exactly what you'd expect: a juvenile romp of 80s references and slightly offensive jokes with a star-studded cast, but funny enough.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen win eighth straight

Pitcher Sarah Plourde shut down the nation's leading batter and the Boston University Terriers Wednesday as UMass got by BU 3-0.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Nick Mikmo is a loyal Catholic, but recent pubisse allegations and Pope Benedict's behavior of late is causing him to reconsider his view of the Vatican.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Head online to DailyCollegian.com to check out Photo Editor Matthew Harrison's video guide to Scotch whisky.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 48

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Copy Editor Andrew Witte
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larsard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zoltnerz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN PRESENTS

PAPER JAM

★ THE FIRST BAND BATTLE BEGINS ★

★ Host ★
Solo Sexx

★ Featuring ★
Leisure Colony
Bubonic Souls
Bella's Bartok
The Telephone Company
On Trak & Malado
Darlingside

HAMPDEN COURTYARD
★SOUTHWEST★

APR. 12 | 6:00

FREE | PRESENTED WITH

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION Sprint Southwest Area Government

Get the skinny.

ZANNA
downtown Amherst
www.zanna.com

Are you a media giraffe?

Are you way ahead of the news?

Can you see far into the horizon?

WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

CONTACT:
NEWS@
DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Start here

X Live off campus? The Census needs you to return your form.

There are special programs in place to count students on campus. But if you live off campus, you have to complete your own 2010 Census form that arrived in the mail. By participating, you're helping future students enjoy some of the same benefits and services that you have today. It's just 10 questions and takes about 10 minutes. So fill it out and mail it back.

WE CAN'T MOVE FORWARD UNTIL YOU MAIL IT BACK.

United States Census 2010
IT'S IN OUR HANDS

2010census.gov

Paid for by U.S. Census Bureau

Ex-Fed Chair Greenspan says current recession not his fault

By Kevin G. Hall
McClatchy Newspapers

Former Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan defended his legacy Wednesday, telling a special panel that's looking into the origins of the financial crisis that insufficient bank capital and poor business decisions brought the nation to the brink of ruin, and it wasn't his fault.

Greenspan's appearance before the congressionally created Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission was much anticipated and didn't disappoint.

It included revelations that the Fed's own internal reviews had found insufficient policing of Citigroup, which taxpayers later rescued. A regulator whom Greenspan had silenced also grilled him mercilessly.

"The Fed utterly failed to prevent the financial crisis," Brooksley Born told Greenspan, after reeling off a litany of what she called failures by the central bank that helped bring about what Greenspan himself now labels the worst financial crisis ever.

Born was the chairman of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission in the late 1990s, and her unheeded warnings to Greenspan and other top Clinton administration officials came back to haunt the nation.

On Wednesday, she tried in vain to get Greenspan to acknowledge that deregulating the markets in 2000 allowed for an explosion of complex insurance-like products called credit-default swaps, which helped spark the collapse and rescue of insurer American International Group.

Greenspan said those products weren't an issue at the time of deregulation, but Born reminded him that they became one of the principal causes of the financial meltdown in September 2008.

"Are you aware that the collapse of AIG was caused by its commitments under credit-default swaps that it had issued? The taxpayer has had to bail out AIG because of its exposure to credit-default swaps to the tune of more than $180 billion," she told Greenspan.

At the end of the bitter exchange, Greenspan told Born, "I really fundamentally disagree with your point of view."

He said the financial crisis occurred because regulators were unaware at the time that capital requirements how much banks have to sock away to offset potential losses were insufficient. Even this begrudging mea culpa from Greenspan, however, had a caveat. Regulators "were undercapitalizing the banking system for 40 or 50 years," he said, suggesting that the problem predated his 18-year tenure.

The other major cause, he said, was a breakdown at the originating point of mortgage finance, where lenders failed to know their clients, the borrowers, sufficiently. This can't be regulated, he suggested, but it's a fundamental part of doing business.

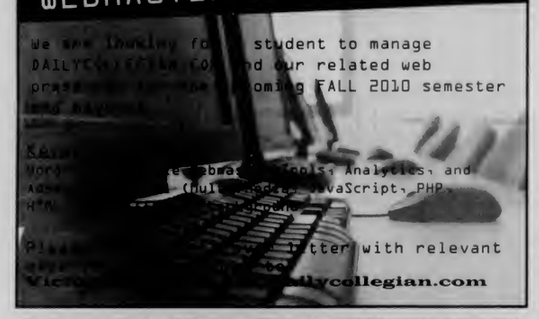
The explanation, however, misses the fact that regulators allowed popular no-documentation loans, in which a borrower who was willing to pay a quarter-point more on a lending rate could avoid having to document any income.

Commission Chairman Phil Angelides, a former California state treasurer, read Greenspan a long list of warnings from within the Fed about brewing problems in housing finance that were ignored.

"You could've, you should've and you didn't," he said.

Greenspan said the Fed couldn't be blamed for insufficient bank regulation since it didn't have supervisory powers over investment banks, which pooled millions of poorly underwritten loans for sale to investors. That responsibility fell to the Securities and Exchange Commission, which monitored the banks for investor protection but not for their safety and soundness, however, as it wasn't a bank regulator.

As to why the Fed's own inspectors within big banks failed to see problems, Greenspan said they relied on credit-rating agencies to determine the riskiness of complex securities backed by pools of U.S. mortgages.



Under questioning from Heather Murren, a former Merrill Lynch research analyst, Greenspan appeared surprised that two internal reviews by the Fed, obtained by the commission, were critical of how the Federal Reserve Bank of New York policed the risks taken by Citigroup and other Wall Street banks.

A so-called closeout report by the Fed in May 2005 found that "there are insufficient resources to conduct continuous supervisory activities in a consistent manner." A similar report in December 2009, after Greenspan was gone, concluded that the "supervision program for Citigroup has been less than effective" and cited "significant weaknesses in the execution of the supervisory program."

Greenspan seemed vexed.

The DAILY COLLEGIAN IS NOW HIRING

WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER

We are looking for a student to manage DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM and our related web properties beginning FALL 2010 semester

Knowledge of Analytics, and (multivariate testing), JavaScript, PHP, HTML

Please submit letter with relevant experience to vicejacek@dailycollegian.com

Rain is not a reason to stay indoors.

Find us on Facebook
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

College Students
Get 20% OFF all full-price EMS® brand items and 15% OFF all full-price national brand items
Must show valid college ID. Exclusions may apply, visit store for details

Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
413-584-3554

eastern mountain sports
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

Summer sessions begin May 24

Ten sessions.
160 courses.
One great summer.

Framingham STATE COLLEGE | Graduate and Continuing Education

Register now for undergraduate and graduate summer courses. Classes are offered day and night—on-campus, online, or hybrid.

Visit www.framingham.edu/dgce or call 508 626 4550.

Worcester, Franklin & Hampshire DCs

Thursday, April 8 from 7am–9pm

Celebrate SORRENTO DAY

Breakfast Ricotta cheese Blintzes with Raspberry Sauce

Lunch Tomato Bel Paese Pizza
Southwestern Style Turkey Club Quesadilla

Dinner Sorrento Supreme Macaroni and Cheese
Baby Greens with Walnuts and Gorgonzola
Sliced Fresh Mozzarella, Fresh Tomato Slices and Fresh Basil

RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy AWARDS

UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

LACTALIS FOODSERVICE

PRECIOUS Sorrento

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fairness and its limitations

Tim Cheplick

To be optimistic, I will say that I am fairly sure most viewers of Fox "News" realize that the information the channel provides is nothing like their slogan, 'fair & balanced.'

Loyal viewers of Fox's programs may immediately point to MSNBC and say that they are no better, no fairer and no more balanced, but to this comes a simple answer. MSNBC's slogan is not 'fair and balanced.'

Is it wrong for cable news companies to be so biased, towards either side of the political spectrum? Difficult to say, but this isn't my point. I think fair and balanced is overrated.

Sometimes, fair and balanced just doesn't make sense. Sometimes, you just shouldn't try to hear out both sides.

Opinions can be wrong. I firmly believe this. Facts are either correct or incorrect, but opinions can be this way too. It depends on the subject.

Let's take opinions on climate change, for instance. Roughly half of this country doesn't "believe" in global warming. I'm sorry, America, but some of you have wrong opinions. Regardless of what coal and oil companies want you to believe, climate change is happening, and your petty opinion won't change that.

When Fox "News" debates climate change it is anything but fair and balanced. If almost 90 percent of climatologists agree that the Earth is warming and believe that it's because of man, then shouldn't the panel debating on TV have nine individuals on the side of "yes, it's happening," and one on the side of "no?" Any reasonable person can follow this logic, but this is not how I've seen these so called "debates," on any news channel, for that matter. This is an example of when 'fair and balanced' doesn't work.

Another great example of wrong opinions comes from a recent Harris poll where two-thirds of self-identifying Republicans believe President Obama is a socialist and 57 percent believe him to be a Muslim. By definition, he is neither one of these things. You think he's socialist? Try living in China or Soviet Russia.

Perhaps the most unsettling statistic is that 24 percent of Republicans believe Obama to be the "Anti-Christ." I'm not sure how to argue with that, but somehow it just doesn't seem right.

Fair and balanced in these cases just doesn't make sense. Instead, we should see one individual on TV explaining the situation, not debating it with someone else. If a channel wants to claim they balance the news, then that is how it should be done. Opinions can be wrong; there is no reason to give equal time to unequal sides.

On a lighter note, it is important to show that wrong opinions can happen outside of politics as well, of course. Let's examine them in popular culture. If you say, for instance, Nickelback is better than the Beatles, it's obvious that you're simply wrong. No facts needed to back it up. But if you say Nickelback is better than the Fray, then we have a valid argument. The first match-up doesn't need, nor deserve, a fair and balanced debate, but the second could perhaps use one (if anyone cared).

If you say, for instance, Nickelback is better than the Beatles, it's obvious that you're simply wrong. No facts needed to back it up. But if you say Nickelback is better than the Fray, then we have a valid argument.

Not only am I a firm believer in the possibility of wrong opinions, but I also believe that majorities, no matter how great, can be completely wrong. (Hopefully, one can understand the difference in a consensus among the scientists mentioned above, and a consensus among the general public.) Just because lots of people believe the wrong thing, it doesn't make it right. Religion is a good example, but probably out of the scope of this article.

Wrong opinions abound. Uninformed, or misinformed, individuals walk our streets every day. It's a dangerous world out there. Try to realize what should be debated, as if 'fair and balanced' is always something to strive for, no matter the circumstances.

There's room for debate on a lot of issues, but not all of them. To the news media: please recognize which subjects warrant a debate and which do not. To my dear readers: please understand that 'fair and balanced' is not always all it's cracked up to be.

Tim Cheplick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tcheplic@student.umass.edu.

A Catholic PR campaign

Nick Milano

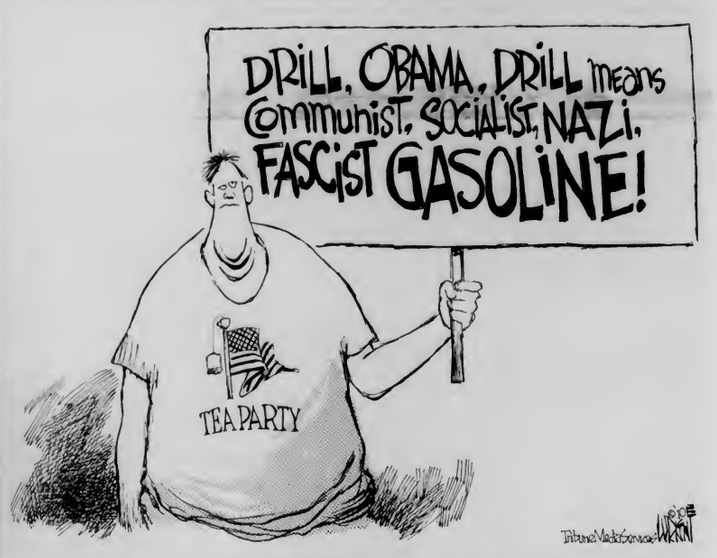
Has anything ever been in direr need of a good public relations expert than the Roman Catholic Church? The days, weeks and months of bad press are just beginning to break my spirit. It has come to the point where I no longer even read the articles, just make my own conclusions from the headlines – it's too depressing to read them. As a Roman Catholic, and someone who is relatively active and frequently attends Mass, I do not know how much more I can take. All this misguided anger at the federal government being a slow, corrupt and abusive bureaucracy deserves to be showered upon the Catholic Church.

I love the idea of the Catholic Church. In a perfect world, it would exist to stress its teachings: treat others as you would have them treat you; blessed are the poor, care for the poor and needy. At its very basic root, the Catholic Church is a huge engine for good. Its social justice platform is incredibly beneficial to greater society both here in the United States and abroad. But this is where the Catholic Church departs with reality.

I have been raised in the Church, from baptism through confirmation. My family is tied very closely to it as well. My mother's parents were raised in Catholic dominated Ireland and they brought their faith with them to America. My father's mother taught in a Catholic school for nearly twenty years, while his father grew up in an Italian immigrant home. We even used to do a watered-down version of the Feast of the Seven Fishes. My father used to serve on a board that met with Cardinal Sean O'Malley to help guide the archdiocese of Boston. I used to do readings at Mass all through high school and still attend mass every weekend when I am home.

In short, I am not someone who would lose faith in the Catholic Church very easily, but this past Easter weekend was a sort of tipping point. When scandal after scandal breaks, when more and more sermons concentrate on cultural and political issues, when the very man who is supposed to be God's representative on Earth is unable or unwilling to take a proactive approach, it gets hard to take the Church very seriously. Three definite steps must be taken for the Church's image to improve.

First, the Pope must come clean. It's next to impossible to put such a celibate man in the same sentence as Tiger Woods, but Tiger Woods answered all the questions that were asked of him. Yet, Pope Benedict's reaction to the crisis in Ireland was a letter. It goes without saying that the Church is a backwards organization, but it really needs to enter the 21st century. If my father can pay his contribution of the weekly collection with a credit card over the Internet, then Pope Benedict can use the television or perhaps have a webcast shown for free around the world offering an apology and putting out an action plan.



If my father can pay his contribution of the weekly collection with a credit card over the internet, then Pope Benedict can use the television or perhaps have a webcast shown for free around the world offering an apology and putting out an action plan.

Second, the Pope must convene a new council to seriously consider ending the celibacy requirement for priests. Deacons can marry and raise children, but priests are prohibited. 99 percent of priests may not be child abusers or inclined to commit sexual assault, but maybe ending celibacy will help prevent any other disgusting acts. It is also another way to rebuild the Church community – having a priest who is raising a family within a parish will surely strengthen the bond between a priest and his parishioners. The Vatican II Council allowed Mass to be spoken in a country's vernacular language – a similar council could play as crucial a role in modernizing the Church.

Third, the pageantry of the Church must be sharply curtailed. Clips from the Pope's Easter Mass just reeked of fake worship. Sure, bring out the pageantry every once in a while when a new Pope is chosen, but otherwise, keep it to a minimum. Watching the ornate, egotistic flaunting of wealth by the church makes me wonder where my money every Sunday goes. In light of the accusations against the Church, wouldn't Jesus Christ prefer his resurrection be celebrated with reconciliation and righting years of wrongdoing than with an obscene ritual of wealth. It is altogether fitting that when the Pope was a cardinal, he was the one responsible for condemning liberation theology – an approach to religion built from the ground up, concentrating on the plight of the poor.

I will never completely abandon the Catholic Church. It means too much to my family. The idea of the Roman Catholic Church is awesome to behold. Imagine all the good it can do, the light it can bring to people's lives. One does not have to be a true believer – I certainly do not agree with the Church's stances against abortion, same-sex marriage, pre-marital sex, birth control use and other issues – to see the Church's ability to be a force for good in this world. Right now, it is a laughingstock in America, and has a long way to go before reclaiming its former status. Perhaps with some strong, decisive leadership from Pope Benedict, the Roman Catholic Church can find its road to recovery.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

The changing landscape of higher education and technology

Yevgeniya Lomakina

When walking across campus, one is bound to run into one (or more) students who are busy checking something on their Blackberry or listening to the latest music on their iPod. Their eyes are glued to the little screen in front of them; their hands are covering the gadget to protect it from the glare of the sun. They are closed to the outside world; one is unable to speak to them. Never has technology penetrated so many levels of human relations, and now it is finding a secure place in the classroom as well.

A laptop is a required component for today's higher education, perhaps more so than even the textbook. One does not need to be a computer science major to receive assignments that depend on access to the Internet. Typed papers must be in a certain format: with extension .doc and not .docx, because not all computers have the latest version of Microsoft Word. If it is a Mac, there needs to be a version of Word for Mac. Other qualifications include the size of the margins, double or single spacing, and the font. Such petty details do not improve the paper; one wonders, however, if they should even become a factor when the main purpose is to learn. When is the last time someone submitted a hand written paper?

If the access to computers were to suddenly disappear, the educational system would suffer massive drawbacks. Technologies have changed not only the way in which assignments are submitted, but also the nature of education and the use of the classroom.

More and more professors integrate a presentation in the curriculum. Most students choose to use PowerPoint, a program allowing the author to create a presentation with various fonts, colors and outlines. As a result, instead of sorting out information to present to the class, students spend hours deciding whether their text looks better in Times New Roman or Arial. Or could it be Script MJ Bold?

It is true – and this has been so for some time – that the scholar, sitting for hours on end in the library, surrounded by stacks of books, responsibly memorizing the conjugations of Latin verbs, has disappeared. The exact moment where this ideal has vanished is unknown. Some propose that it was due to the invention of TV; others, to the invention of the first video game; still others – to the co-ed nature of schools. Nevertheless, the ideal is gone.

Now, upon entering a library, one is likely to see rows and rows of students, each crouched in front of their laptop, armed with a mug of coffee, clicking away, sending and exchanging information into the emptiness which is otherwise called the Web. In a matter of seconds, papers get submitted and the only assurance that they are received is a little window that reads "Your message has been sent." When continuing on the stroll through the library, one does not hear the turning of the pages, but the banging of the keys as the students try to reach the minimum word count needed to complete their paper: one thousand forty four, one thousand forty five…

With all the technologies influencing our lives, even education, one must ask: what have we gained? Did we simply substitute technological convenience for human interaction?

"That is only normal," you might say, "we are, after all, in the twenty first century." So we are. Let us now look at what the Latin-studying scholar has been replaced with.

Colleges and universities must compete with the ever-changing world of technology by spending large sums of money to upgrade their facilities. Entire campuses have been upgraded with Wi-Fi technology. More computers have been purchased, and with them, licenses for more programs, which must be updated, and these updates, paid for. Only recently did the Learning Commons expand and add new computers to the already existing multitude. Even that, however, does not seem to be enough, judging by the ever-lasting lines for the computers in the Du Bois library.

What about the classroom? Students bring their laptops to class for the sole reason of being provided with a distraction from the lecture. The question arises, then, why come to class at all? Institutions such as George Washington University, American University and University of Virginia ban laptops from their lecture halls.

According to the Washington Post, some professors set out to counter their students' distractions. They decided to use Twitter to engage students in real-time dialogue. The students are tweeting their responses to the professor's comments, and are able to post questions anytime, even after class is over. It seems that the future of education lies not in dialogue, but in instant messaging on forums.

With all the technologies influencing our lives, even education, one must ask: what have we gained? Did we simply substitute technological convenience for human interaction?

The textbook lies abandoned under the student's bed while the student chooses an e-book alternative that is easier to view with a new iPhone application. Though the e-book may seem like a more "green" initiative, there is a limit to the amount of pages that can be read on a blinking screen. Or perhaps this is yet another inconvenience which hinders us from becoming more technologically advanced.

Now, when students walk around campus listening to their iPods, their ears are filled with knowledge from the audio lectures they downloaded. Only rarely does that knowledge become interrupted by the latest Britney song.

Yevgeniya Lomakina is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at vlomaki@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Spanish wine a flavorful bouquet

By Matthew Harrison
Collegian Staff

MATTHEW B. HARRISON / COLLEGIAN

These two wines, Santa Rufina Viña Rufina and Campo Viejo, are Tempranillo wines, meaning that they are made using grapes that ripen earlier than most other Spanish grapes. Though they are two different wines, both were found to be generally enjoyable.

In today's wine review, I taste two Spanish wines, both of the Tempranillo varietal. Tempranillo, which comes from the Spanish word for "early," is a grape which ripens several weeks earlier than most other Spanish grapes. It leads to wines which are flavorful and full-bodied, and it's one of the two most common grapes in Spanish wines (the other being Garnacha).

The first wine I tasted is Santa Rufina Viña Rufina, Reserva 2000, from the Cigales region of Spain ($18, 13.5 percent alcohol). This wine is aged for 17 months in oak barrels, and the grapes are grown on historic vines, which range between 70 and 100 years old. The "Reserva 2000" means this wine was made in 2000 but was kept at the winery and not released to the public until later.

I decanted this wine for two and a half hours, and this is a wine which absolutely must be decanted. It has a very dark color, ranging from pitch black in the center to dark ruby red at the edges. It looks full-bodied in the glass, and it coats the edges of the glass, leaving nice legs.

The alcohol is a bit intense on the nose at first, but once I got past that, the wine smelled deep, rich, leathery, and with a strong black currant component. There was also a tiny hint of oak and chocolate covered oranges, but there were also some intense aromas which I couldn't identify. This wine has a very beautiful and flavorful bouquet, overall.

This wine feels full-bodied and wonderful in my mouth. It has a massive black currant and blackberry taste, and I'm surprised I didn't detect any blackberries on the nose. It has just the right amount of tannins and acidity, and I can really feel it on the sides of my tongue. The finish is strong and lasts a long time, and it's primarily a blackberry taste with a bit of oak and leather. The oak is wonderfully blended with the wine, and it's not the least bit over-oaked or nutty. Again, there are other flavors which I wasn't able to identify.

This wine would pair well with large blackberries, duck, teriyaki beef jerky, and steak that is seared on the outside but rare inside. A flavorful cigar would also pair nicely. I found absolutely no bad qualities of this wine, and it's the first red wine that I've had that I gave an A+ rating too. An amazing wine, overall.

The second wine I tasted is Campo Viejo, Crianza 2006, from the Rioja region of Spain ($12, 13.5 percent alcohol). This wine is aged for 24 months, with 12 of those months in oak barrels. I found this wine at Four Seasons Wine and Liquor in Hadley, and I was really impressed with their large selection of wines and spirits.

This wine is a much lighter color than the Viña Rufina, and it's a see-through ruby color all around. It's medium-bodied in the glass; it's neither watery nor viscous. I decanted this wine in the glass for around three hours before tasting.

The alcohol is extremely potent on the nose, and it made smelling the wine very difficult. It has a sweet and fruity aroma, but also a strange sour component. There's a peppery, black currant aroma, and a hint of strawberries and some other fruit which I couldn't identify. Even though it was aged in oak for 12 months, there's no oak on the nose.

The alcohol is surprisingly strong in the mouth, and it's not blended well with the wine at all. There's a bit of a sweet cherry tomato taste at first, and then the oak starts to come through, giving it a smoky, nutty, vanilla-like taste. The blackberry and black currant taste is much less pronounced than the previous wine. The finish is all oak, and I wouldn't be able to identify the varietal of the grape in the finish because it's masked by oak. There's also a strange bleu cheese-like component to this wine.

Overall, I found the alcohol bite on the nose and taste to be entirely too unpleasant. Between the initial alcohol taste and the over-oaked finish, the wine was very difficult to taste, and the flavors just weren't blended together very well. I was intrigued by the bleu cheese component, and I'd like to try pairing this wine with the cheese. I gave this wine a B- during my video review, however, after drinking some more of the wine and realizing the flavors were never going to open up more, I have to downgrade this wine to a B/B-.

This Tempranillo tasting has taught me that I not only really enjoy Spanish wines, but I prefer wines of a single varietal to wines that blend together different grapes. I definitely recommend giving the Viña Rufina a try if you can find it, but you may want to give the Campo Viejo a pass. Don't take my word for it though - get out there and try some new wines!

To see a video review of these wines, go to dailycollegian.com or TheBottleReview.com.

Until next time, cheers.

Matthew Harrison can be reached at mharrison@student.umass.edu.

Outer Stylie's Nate Martel performing on Sweet Baby Lou's radio show. The group is in the process of making an EP and will be touring this July.

Outer Stylie delivers

By Leigh Greaney
Collegian Staff

Outer Stylie beamed down to earth for WMUA and the Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk radio show. Something of a space oddity, the band knew the most important part of being on the radio was looking really good. All dressed up to get down, drummer Kyle Heon, bassist Tom Schack, guitarist/vocalist Nate Martel and guitarist John Duffy did just that.

Clad in his three piece suit with purple tie-dye t-shirt and matching purple glasses, Schack placed the same label on his band's music as he put on his t-shirt: definitely psychedelic. Although everyone in the band comes from a diverse music-loving background, they all can attest to the same love of songs that are full of life and thought. Psychedelic for obvious reasons to anyone who's ever had the chance to meet the band seemed to be a perfect fit.

However, for music dubbed "psychedelic," this band is a little heavier than your run-of-the-mill jam band. It's a power-packed punch with a peace sign. As Martel says, "It will take you there."

Soon to move into a house together, Outer Stylie has been together for roughly nine months (with the current members), but they busted out of the musical womb long ago, playing shows nationally. With the loss and gain of a new drummer and with many of the members contributing to other musical projects, Outer Stylie went through a few mechanical changes, but they're now one unit – all members solely dedicated to this one endeavor.

That endeavor, of course, is taking people there.

"We want to make people feel things. We want to help people feel, well, unexplainable greatness," explains Martel.

Best compared to lyrics of theirs concerning the crisis between being the "dragon or the butterfly," their sound is both powerful and beautiful. More importantly, it gives you wings – like a Red Bull without the taurine hangover. It's the beast and the beauty. On flying, Schack added, "One time we did and it was good." On a more existential note, Duffy said, "The best way to learn to fly is to throw yourself at the ground and miss. That's the only way to do it."

That tactic seems to be working. After playing Hampshire Halloween, Outer Stylie received double encores and went 20 minutes into the next band's set after playing a ten minute last song jam.

They were so happy about the response they got that it trumped what had previously noted as the coolest experience they'd had as a band. That experience: having McLovin' at their show. The guys had watched "Super Bad" the night before the show and the next thing they knew – there was McLovin' and he was mc'lovin' it.

Aside from Hampshire, they've played other local shows, such as Extravaganja (and after playing WMUA, the band plans on having their own little extravaganja). They plan to play at Snowzee's in Sunderland on May 1.

Currently, an EP is in the making. The concept is "earth and space." According to Martel, their inspiration for the album came from Jimi Hendrix, who said his music was a combination of earth and space. According to Duffy, they're just living on earth and looking to space. Either way, the EP is sure to deliver "unexplainable greatness" and "take you there."

Make sure to look out for Outer Stylie's summer tour, which is set for July. Until then, stop by myspace.com/outerstylie for some psychedelic flying lessons.

Leigh Greaney can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

'Time Machine' a juvenile romp

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

The premise of "Hot Tub Time Machine" is mostly contained in its title, so you pretty much know what you're getting, sight on scene. Actually, even if you fell down some stairs and woke up at the beginning of the movie, there still wouldn't be much room for confusion; the film's pre-title sequence is a moving collage of historical jacuzzi scenes set to '80s music.

So it's a hot tub that's a time machine. To the 1980s. Not quite all the way there with the title, but then I guess "Hot Tub Time Machine: Freedom of '86" might have been pushing the limits just a tad. Either way, there you have it. It's one part "Ski School," two parts "Groundhog Day," and fill in the rest with "The Hangover."

Sorry, what's that? You want that title one more time – slowly? Here we go.

Hot tub: It's a scatological sex romp – juvenile as all heck. Most of that comes with Craig Robinson's cuckolded sad-sack, Nick, and Rob Corddry's cripplingly depressed party animal, Lou. Nick's first scene ends in wet dog poop; Lou explains the proper degree of erection for oral sex. Lou's ambiguously suicidal character introduction might be the funniest scene in the movie, and Corddry keeps it coming with the sharp tongue and shriveled black heart of a professional insult comic. The humor is gross, sexist and homophobic, but it's all silly enough to forgive.

Time machine: It's over-the-top and absurd, with much higher priority placed on fast-paced comedic impact than on smooth plotting or character development. Not that there isn't any character development, or even a solid story-driven message – John Cusack's heartfelt Adam discovers firsthand the wondrous unpredictability of the universe when he meets Lizzy Caplan's vapidly whimsical music journalist April (what critic Nathin Rabin would call a "Manic Pixie Dream Girl") – just that none of that high concept stuff matters to your enjoyment of the film. The humor hits hard and fast, no matter how little any of it means.

Freedom of '86 (sticking with this): It's an '80s-reference jubilee for which you need only have seen VH1's "I Love the '80s!" to get every last reference. Like right after John Cusack's Adam has just done what John Cusack does best – get dumped – and he consoles himself with Peter Gabriel's "In Your Eyes." This movie will never let you forget what decade it is. The jheri curls are thick and bouncy, the Day Glo is dizzying, and also there's Chevy Chase.

Which brings us to the film's obsession with its own influences. Besides '80s comedy legend Chase, there is Crispin Glover of "Back to the Future" (who actually gets one of the movie's funniest running gags) as well as 1980s Hollywood's go-to stuffy twerp, Billy Zabka. The control panel on the hot tub has the same read-out as Doc Brown's DeLorean, a coked-out Nick tries to explain the time travel in "Terminator," Lou uses the Biff Tannen sports almanac trick, and so on. Even recent comedic cousins like "Wild Hogs" get name-dropped. See this movie only if you can stand near-constant pop-culture bombardment – and chances are you can, especially if you are a college student.

Put all that together, toss in the mostly expendable Clark Duke as Adam's nerdy nephew Jacob (so forgettable that he literally flickers in and out of existence) and "Hot Tub Time Machine" is a full-grown man-child of a buddy comedy, in the recent tradition of Apatow's "Frat Pack." It may be really, really dumb, but it's funny enough. The agile on-screen chemistry engages pretty consistently, the bro-mances triumph over the romances, and there's plenty of lady breast and dude butt to go around.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

"Hot Tub Time Machine" is chock full of references to the 1980s and, although some of its humor may seem offensive, it's just silly enough to forgive.

UM returns to A-10 play

PLOURDE from page 8

head coach Elaine Sortino said of Plourde's performance. "I wish she hadn't missed that pitch, but [Sutterlund] is a good hitter."

For the day, Plourde struck out 15 batters, as she increased her career totals to 337, and continues to lead the nation in that category. The shutout was her fourth of the season, along with the eighth game that she has recorded 15 strikeouts or more. Plourde now leads the A-10 with 20 wins for the season.

Going against a strong hitting team such as BU (18-11) is something that Sortino thinks will benefit Plourde.

"It's what's going to make her better," Sortino said. "She had to come in with some alternative pitches, it wasn't as easy as it was yesterday. It's just going to make her better."

UMass hosts Charlotte

UMass will return to conference play as it hosts Charlotte this weekend on Friday and Saturday afternoon. Charlotte (25-8, 4-0 A-10) comes into the series after splitting two games against Appalachian State on Tuesday afternoon, led by starter Emily Jeffery.

Game 1 resulted in a 1-0 shut-out, Jeffrey's eighth of the season, as she retired the first seven batters by strikeouts alone. She struck out 17 batters during the doubleheader, 13 coming in Game 1.

Although the 49ers lost 4-2 in Game 2, Jeffrey still recorded four strikeouts. The loss broke her streak of 24.1 innings pitched without a run scored by an opponent.

Three days earlier against Dayton, Jeffery also broke the school record of strikeouts, as she struck out nine batters in the game and improved her totals to 590 career strikeouts.

Along with facing a strong pitcher similar to herself, Plourde will also face a tough Charlotte offense. The 49ers have four batters hitting over .300; Kendra McCall, Whitney Williams, Tenaya Tucker and Serena Smith.

Williams and McCall are ranked third and fourth in the A-10 for runs scored, with 27 and 25, respectively. McCall leads her team with a .366 batting average and .430 on base percentage. Williams comes into the series with a batting average of .345, and is also ranked fourth in the A-10 in hits with 38 for the season.

Smith and Tucker are also highly ranked in the A-10, placing third and fourth for RBIs. Smith, with a batting average of .340, has 33 for the season. Tucker stands behind her with 25 RBIs and a .343 batting average. However, Tucker leads Charlotte with a .528 slugging percentage and four home runs.

The 49ers are one of three undefeated A-10 teams, with UMass and Saint Louis also yet to see in-conference defeat. The action begins at 3 p.m. on Friday, followed by game two at 12 p.m. Saturday at the UMass Softball Complex.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

Pitcher Sara Plourde struck out 15 batters en route to a 3-0 victory.

Sortino wants strong hitting from UMass

SORTINO from page 8

"I felt like we were roping shots, but we weren't really letting the ball come in," Sortino said. "We just need to let it come in a little bit so we can release our hips and let it pop."

The rally was far from over.

Senior Sarah Reeves singled with a full count to bring home right fielder Katie Bettencourt, who doubled to right field after Magill's home run to give the Minutewomen a 3-0 run.

At the start of the bottom of the fifth inning, BU (18-11, 3-0 America East) replaced Hardy with Whitney Tuthill, who gave up two hits, but no runs.

Williams got her second hit of the game on a single to third base. Freshman Christine Della Vecchia pinch-ran for Williams, but couldn't reach third on Magill's single up the middle. However, Bettencourt ended the rally with a strike-out to end the inning.

UMass struck out twice the entire game.

The next hit came in the seventh inning, but this time, from the Terriers. With one out, Sutterlund hit a single on a 2-2 count down the right side, but didn't impact the overall outcome of the game after Plourde recorded two strikeouts against Caitlin Rentler and Rachel Moeller.

The Minutewomen will play the Terriers again next Tuesday in Boston after finishing its homestand with two games against Charlotte.

Sortino said Wednesday was the latest home-opener her team has played in a while. The reason for UMass starting so late is that its scheduled debut in Amherst against Dartmouth was rained out.

Since the start of the season, the Minutewomen were on the road for more than seven weeks.

"It's really nice to finally be home," Sortino said of returning to the UMass softball complex. "I feel like we've been on the road for nine years. It really feels like a long time."

Game notes:

BU's first hit came in the second inning, when Taylor Cowan doubled to left field with two outs … Plourde recorded her ninth shutout of the season and eighth game with at least 15 strike-outs … She is currently fifth for most strikeouts in a single season.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

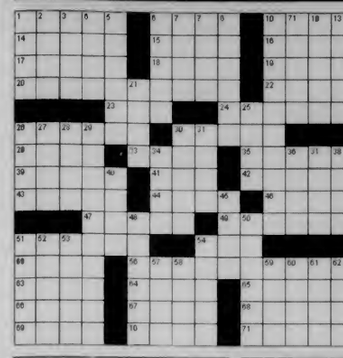
JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen got a boost offensively from Kyllie Magill, who had a two-run home run against the Terriers.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
Sugarloaf Estates Apartment Homes
28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons Apartment Homes
133 Bedchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
FREE Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Select Units
On the Bus Route - Hot Water - Swimming Pool - Fitness Center - Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com



Open 'till 11pm everyday!
Four Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BEER * All beer prices plus deposit
Stella Artois 24 pk bt. $22.99*
Miller Lite 30 pk can $20.49*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl. $16.99*
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl. $12.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl. $11.99*
Ono Ono Light Lager 12 pk btl. $10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can $9.99*
Molson 12 pk btl. $9.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl. $9.99*
LIQUOR
Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml. $59.99
Patron Anejo 750 ml. $52.99
Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L. $25.99
Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml. $20.99
Svedka Vodka 1.75 L. $19.99
Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L. $17.99
Johnnie Walker Red Label 750 ml. $20.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml. $16.99
WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties $19.99
Bogle Vineyards Phantom Red Blend $18.99
Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon $14.99
Layer Cake Malbec $12.99
The Velvet Devil Merlot $10.99
Blackstone Merlot $10.99
Mark West Pinot Noir $10.99
Santi Pinot Grigio $10.99
Hillbrandt Vineyards Riesling $10.99
Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon $9.99
Callia Alta Malbec $8.99
584-8174
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Off The Wall Games
Warhammer 40,000 Magic The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 63 Pleasant St (Behind the Village Smoke Shop) - Amherst 413-886-5451

A Room of Their Own
The Bloomsbury Artists in American Collections
You know about Virginia Woolf. Now explore art created by her circle.
April 3 - June 15, 2010
Free Family Day: Art is in Bloom!
Saturday, April 3 10 AM - 3 PM
Free Second Friday
Friday, April 9 4 - 8 PM
Scholar on Art 6 PM
Frances Spalding, Professor of Art History, Newcastle University, UK, and Bloomsbury expert
Stoddard Hall
Smith College Museum of Art & Museum Shop
museum 360 Advocate
The exhibition and its catalogue were organized by the Herbert F. Johnson Museum of Art at Cornell University, in conjunction with the Nasher Museum of Art, Duke University and was made possible in part by the National Endowment for the Humanities. Presentation of the exhibition at SCMA was made possible by the Susannah J. Lading Program Fund for SCMA.
Programming: www.smith.edu/artmuseum

COMICS

CROSSWORD

What's on Tap at the Amherst Brewing Company?
Every Thursday: John Sheldon's Masters of the Stratocaster downstairs 9 PM - 12 AM
Every Tuesday: Lost in HD upstairs on the big screen
Thursday April 15th: Sierra Nevada beer tasting 6PM
Chance to win Red Sox tix!
Saturday April 17th: Roots Reggae Pancakes & Pub with I-Ganic Soundsystem after Etmaganga 10PM
Also on facebook
Book your graduation party now!
24 N. Pleasant Amherst MA
www.amherstbrewing.com

PHANTOM SCRIBBLES

1				6			7
				7		4
					9	1
	4		7		1	3
		4	6
7		9		3		5
3			8			7
				9	8
2		7	3

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
We like the things you whisper in our ear...

Monday - Saturday
Happy Hour - 1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
Every Thursday: Promo & Trivia Night
Everyday: $1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21st Birthday: Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
Arizona Pizza

LA Piazza
Sundays Open at NOON
Best Deals in Town!!
All Calzones $4.99
All 12" Subs $4.99
All Salads $4.99
All Entrees $8.99
16" Cheese Pizza $4.99
Each X-Tra topping .75
12" Cheese Pizza $8.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1
16" Cheese Pizza $6.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1.25
16" Cheese Pizza + 10 Wings (Bone) $11.50
16" Cheese Pizza + 1/2lb Wings (Boneless) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

"Club Nights" at the Monkey Bar
Thurs 4/8 DJ BIGGZ
Top 40, Dance, Techno, & an all new "HOUSE SET"
Sorry, Dance Dance Revolutionaries, This one's for the real steppers!!!
Fri 4/9 OH YES, It's McKnight Night and the Feelin's right
OH<YES<It's McKnight Night
Oh What a Night... Oh What a Night!!!
Sat 4/10 DJ CONSTRUC
Call all mash-up worshippers. Your messiah has arrived. Praise the dance floor, and spread the word. Construc!!!
Tues 4/13 DJ HOT SIZZLE TECHNO TUESDAY
No Cover 10:30-11:15 P.M.
Drink Specials!!!
413-259-1800
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

Want to work in radio?
WMUA 91.1 FM is looking to hire specialty Department Directors in the following departments for the 2010-2011 academic year:
Sports | Outreach
News | Fund Drive
Sales | Tech
Publicity
For information and/or applications, stop by WMUA 105 campus center or visit wmua.org
Applications are due by April 17th

I just saw the ending to the film Orphan.

Monday - Saturday
Happy Hour - 1/2 Price Appetizers 9:30 - Close
Every Thursday: Promo & Trivia Night
Everyday: $1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21st Birthday: Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
Arizona Pizza

amherst cinema
Fri Apr 9 - Thu Apr 15
A Prophet 2:30 6:30 9:30 +11:15 Sat & Sun
Creation 2:15 4:45* 7:15 9:45 +11:45am Sat & Sun *NO 4:45 Sun
Greenberg 2:00* 4:30 7:30* 10:00 +11:30am Sat & Sun *NO 2:00 Sun NO 7:30 Sun, Tue, Wed, Thu
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

Pleasant Street Theater
Fri Apr 9 - Thu Apr 15
The Runaways 4:30 7:15 9:45 +2:15 Sat & Sun +2:15 10:30am Wed
The Last Station 7:00 +1:45 Sat & Sun
Ghost Writer 4:15 9:30 + 10:00am Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

Become an Advertising Representative
Build your resumé
Get business and sales experience
*SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.
To Apply:
Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500 or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

HEY KIDS!
The comics page now has 200% more VITAMIN C ...
BOOM!
Don't forget to tell your friends!

CLASSIFIED S

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

FOR RENT

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

28 Stockbridge St: 4 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage, 1.5 mi to campus! $2,575/Mo+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry, Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Peoples' attention spans in 2012 will be remarkable. They shall make fine assistants and weiner vendors.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Don't worry, your milkshake still brings all of the boys to the yard.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
That guy who always gets the front seat has no business whatsoever in this horoscope.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Condom break? Quick, get a spatula, some handcream, welding goggles and a gander at today's classifieds.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
No matter what happens, Justin Bieber will always have the last laugh.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Extra! Extra! Megan Fox is now political but still cannot be trusted due to her terrible goblin thumbs.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Just like the Michael Jackson song, "wanna be startin somethin" says, "you're a vegetable."

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Be pride in the geek that you are. Rock out with your "Spock" out.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Your roommate walked in last night and saw that your last Google search was "salty sweat and topless robots."

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Is your RA giving you a hard time. Try to soothe your worries away with the calming phrase, "I can has cheeseburger."

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
In this day and age, justice can only be served by giving a Yankees fan the wrong directions to Fenway.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Take about ten minutes out of your day and ask yourself, "Would I be doing this if I were sober and a wildabeast?"

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Shutout success for No. 22 UMass

Team effort gets Minutewomen win number 23 of 2010 season

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Seven innings, two hits, 15 strikeouts. Not bad pitching by most standards, except for Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino.

UMass	3
BU	0

It was just another B- performance, because pitcher Sara Plourde allowed a hit to the nation's best hitter, April Setterlund, who came in with a .595 average. It didn't matter that Plourde gave Setterlund her seventh strikeout of the season in her first at-bat, or the fact that she flied out to center field the next time up.

"I felt we crossed up a hit that we got in the 3-4 hole, missed the pitch," Sortino said. "It was supposed to be out, it came in and that's in her wheel house."

Despite Sortino's criticism, the Minutewomen (23-7, 6-0 Atlantic 10) came out with a 3-0 win against Boston University to extend their winning streak to eight games. All three runs came from a strong third inning against Cassidi Hardy with two outs.

Shortstop Whitney Williams (2-for-3, one run) started the offense by singling to center field. On the next play, second baseman Kylie Magill (3-for-3) homered to left field on an outside pitch.

Magill, a lefty who Sortino said usually doesn't get inside pitches, swung at the ball like a golf swing in order to reach for it. Although the swing got UMass its first two runs of the game, Sortino wants to make sure her players don't get in the habit of reaching for pitches.

See SORTINO on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen celebrate after defeating the Terriers at home, 3-0. UMass hosts Charlotte Friday when it returns to A-10 play.

Plourde silences Setterlund, UM hosts Charlotte Friday

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team's starting pitcher Sara Plourde came out on top Wednesday afternoon, as she faced the No. 1 hitter in the nation, April Setterlund.

Plourde held off Boston University's star hitter, allowing one single from her for the entire game, as the Minutewomen (23-7, 6-0 A-10) recorded its eighth victory in a row.

Setterlund came into the game with a .595 batting average, along with a team-leading nine home runs. The nine home runs for the season have also earned Setterlund a 1.177 slugging percentage. Setterlund's impressive batting average leads not only the America East conference, but the NCAA as well.

Along with leading the AE in homeruns, Setterlund also dominates the conference with 47 hits and 39 RBIs. She leads in doubles with nine this season and is tied for first place with three triples.

In the first inning, Plourde struck out Setterlund, something that has only occurred six times this season. The two faced off again in the fourth inning, where Plourde forced Setterlund to fly out to center field on the first pitch. With the count at 2-2 in the seventh inning, Setterlund got on base after singling up the right side.

Before going 1-for-3 against Plourde, Setterlund had an on base percentage of .663 and led the AE with 37 runs scored. However, she would not go on to score, as Plourde struck out the final two batters to ensure the 3-0 victory.

"I thought she did okay," UMass

See PLOURDE on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

A member of the Minutemen looks to connect against UConn Wednesday afternoon. After blowing a 10-4 lead, UMass suffered its fifth-straight loss.

Stone and Co. drop fifth-straight to UConn

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

26 runs, 34 hits and nine home runs.

The Massachusetts baseball team hoped it could be on the better end of both teams' offensive outbursts, but instead, the Minutemen fell to Connecticut, 15-11 in the final game of a home-and-home Wednesday afternoon.

UMass	11
UConn	15

After Minuteman pitcher Isaac Oakley surrendered a first inning run, UMass (2-16, 1-7 Atlantic 10) responded quickly in the bottom half with four runs, all coming from home runs at Earl Lorden Field.

Junior Eric Fredette sparked the rally with a solo home run, which was the first of two on the day. Shortstop Matt Gedman then followed suit, going back-to-back with Fredette, giving UMass a 2-1 lead. Right fielder Mike Donato then drew a walk and was promptly driven in by center fielder Brian Baudinet's two run blast.

UConn (19-7, 5-2 Big East) scored three runs to tie the game at four heading into the bottom of the third, but UMass responded with one run in the third before Oakley pitched a scoreless fourth.

The Minutemen established some breathing room in the bottom of the fourth, when a lengthy rally provided five runs on six hits and one error.

The 10-4 lead wasn't safe for more than a few minutes, though, as UConn rallied in the top of the fifth with four runs. Oakley was relieved by Ben Hart after an error by Matt Gedman and a single that followed. Oakley pitched four innings, allowing six runs (five earned) on six hits. Hart could not get out of the jam, as he surrendered two hits and two runs. The Huskies' rally finally ended on two dazzling defensive plays by Peter Copa at third and Matt Gedman at shortstop. The damage was done, though, as UConn's effort made it 10-9.

"We thought we were in pretty good shape up 10-4," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "But it obviously didn't work out that way."

UMass then scored its eleventh and final rup of the game in the bottom of the fifth on Eric Fredette's second solo shot.

"We've learned that we can never sit back on our heels," Fredette said. "It's too bad we couldn't score any more runs after the fifth – sometimes that's just the way it goes."

UMass pitcher Brian Leigh threw a scoreless sixth inning, but then got tagged for four runs in the seventh, when UConn's Mike Olt hit what became the game-deciding three-run home run to left center field.

"It was a great hitter's day and they out-hit us," Stone said. "I was impressed with their ball club yesterday and then today; they just kept coming at us offensively. They showed quality hitting throughout their whole lineup."

UMass' bright spots included Jared Freni, who closed out the game with 1.2 scoreless innings and Fredette, who continues to impress after transferring from Vermont. Fredette finished the game 3-for-5 with two runs and three runs batted in. The Minutemen will continue to rely on him batting second in the lineup when their upcoming series at home against conference rival Richmond (14-13, 2-4 A 10) begins on Friday.

"This is a conference series, and it would be a good time to get some wins on the board," Fredette said. "Hopefully it will spark something better for the future."

Stone also recognizes the importance of this series, as he anticipates Nick Serino, Mike Gedman and Bryan Leigh will start each game.

"[It's] really important," Stone said. "We have to turn things around here. It is [an] A-10 weekend, and we're playing at home, so hopefully we'll be ready to go."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

No. 7 Minutemen host Towson Saturday afternoon at Garber

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

It took 47 years, but the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team hosts Towson for the first time on Saturday afternoon in only the second meeting between the two teams.

The No. 7 Minutemen (7-2, 2-0 Colonial Athletic Association) are 1-0 against the Tigers (2-5, 1-0 CAA), and bring a four-game winning streak into Saturday's Senior Day matchup, slated for 1 p.m.

UMass is 4-1 hosting teams at Garber Field, while Towson is winless in three road contests this season.

UMass coach Greg Cannella feels the Tigers are victims of a tough stretch of games against some of the top teams in the country.

"They're a really well-skilled team that has very slick sticks," Cannella said. "They've got great defense on a really good quick-strike team. They play the second-toughest schedule in the country."

The focal points for opponents playing the Minutemen often center on stopping the high-powered UMass offense, led by sophomore Art Kell (21 goals, 12 assists). But, Kell missed the Minutemen's last game, a 10-8 conference win over Penn State (1-8, 0-1 CAA).

However Kell's injury didn't seem to affect UMass, which gained a 6-4 lead by halftime, thanks in part to attackmen Will Manny and midfielder Bobby Hayes, who combined for five goals and two assists on the day.

As a freshman, Manny logs significant time for Cannella, in part because of his impressive scoring and good vision on the field. Along with Kell, Manny leads the team in assists this season.

An under-sized player (5-foot-7) compared to the rest of his fellow attackmen, Manny's speed is also an asset to a UMass team which averages nearly four more assists per-game than the Tigers.

As offensively-stagnant a team as Towson is this season – their nine goals per-game average is a CAA-worst – Cannella doesn't want the Minutemen to underestimate the Tigers as a legitimate threat.

"We need to continue to play hard and play together with intensity," Cannella said. "You have to put in a 60-minute effort. You can't let up at all, and we've had a tendency to do that this year at times."

UMass has a conference-worst .405 penalty-kill percentage, allowing 22 man-down goals, but the Minutemen balance that with a CAA-best .469 man-up scoring percentage. UMass has 15 goals in extra-man opportunities this season.

The goalkeeping in the contest should be strong, too. Both redshirt sophomore Tim McCormack and Towson's Travis Love average around nine goals-against per-game, and McCormack comes off a 12-save win against the Nittany Lions.

The win against Penn State marked another solid game for a UMass defense which had four caused-turnovers from All-American defenseman Diogo Godoi.

Between Godoi's 16 caused turnovers this season and sophomore Tom Celentani's team-high 21 caused turnovers this season, the Minutemen should trouble the Tiger offense, as long as their play in the faceoff circle holds up.

Sophomore Greg Rushing had a season-low 6-for-12 performance against Penn State, but still has a solid .584 faceoff percentage as the primary faceoff midfielder for Cannella.

Opposite Rushing will likely be Matt Thomas, who has a .483 faceoff percentage.

Christian Pastirik (15 goals, nine assist(s) and Will Harrington (14 goals, two assists) lead the Tiger offense, while Peter Mezzanotte has 13 caused-turnovers on the season for the Tigers.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Seventh-ranked UMass hosts Towson on Saturday afternoon at Garber Field. The Minutemen are coming off a victory at Penn State, and are undefeated in CAA play.

Bullpen continues to struggle

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

In a 15-11 slugfest, it was the bullpen of the Massachusetts baseball team which exposed their season-long struggles.

Three different relievers combined to surrender nine runs in just over three innings to give Connecticut the win on Wednesday afternoon.

The game started well enough for the Minutemen (2-16, 1-5 Atlantic 10), who jumped out to a 10-4 lead heading into the fifth inning.

Starting pitcher Isaac Oakley, to that point, had limited the high-powered Huskies' offense to four runs over four innings of work. He began the fifth by allowing the first two hitters to reach base, triggering UMass coach Mike Stone to make a pitching change.

Stone handed the ball to sophomore Ben Hart, giving him a six-run lead to protect. Hart proceeded to allow a single and a triple to plate both inherited runners. The inning was capped off by a wild pitch, which allowed a third Huskies player to score, as UConn cut the deficit to 10-8.

After the Minutemen got a run back in the bottom of the inning, senior Bryan Leigh was given the next opportunity to maintain a lead. He pitched a scoreless sixth inning, giving reason to believe that the Minutemen were on their way to victory.

But then came the seventh inning.

Leigh tried for his second-straight effective inning. Instead, he was greeted with a leadoff single, a walk, and a three-run home run that tied the back-and-forth affair at 11-11. Before he could recover, the next batter took him deep to give the Huskies a 12-11 advantage.

Junior Charlie Benson did not fare much better.

He opened the eighth inning by relinquishing a home run, a double, and a two-run home run. After all the dust had settled, UConn led 15-11, having outscored UMass 11-1 in the final five innings of the game.

The final two relievers for the Huskies threw a combined four scoreless innings.

Leigh got the loss in a game that featured nine total home runs, five by Husky hitters.

"It was just a good hitting day, I guess," Leigh said. "I didn't make many pitches and that hurt us."

Senior Jared Freni was the lone bright spot out of the bullpen, tossing the final 1.2 innings without allowing a run.

It would be easy to blame the 88-degree temperature as a reason why so many balls were jumping off the bats and leaving Earl Lorden Field. However, a mirror image occurred two days ago in Connecticut, when the UMass bullpen gave up three home runs en route to a 10-2 defeat.

"You have to give [UConn] credit," Stone said. "They hit the ball hard. Yesterday they hit a bunch of home runs and the same thing [happened] today. [We have] some good [pitchers] out there and they're trying hard. They just didn't have too much success."

In the short two-game series versus UConn, UMass relievers yielded a total of 15 runs on 18 hits, including seven home runs.

"At this point, we're being challenged," Stone said. "We just need to hang in there and keep fighting."

However, Stone knows it's just a matter of getting on the mound with his pitchers and seeing batters.

"They need to get work, get the experience. Our guys will come around. Those guys are the guys we plan to have as relievers for the year, so we have to stick with them."

Leigh knows that in order to get better, he cannot delve too much into the outing Wednesday.

"I have a pretty short memory, so I'll pretty much forget it after I leave here," Leigh said. "We just have to get back to practice tomorrow."

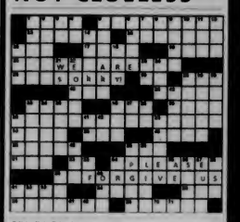
Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu

the daily collegian

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM APRIL 9, 2010

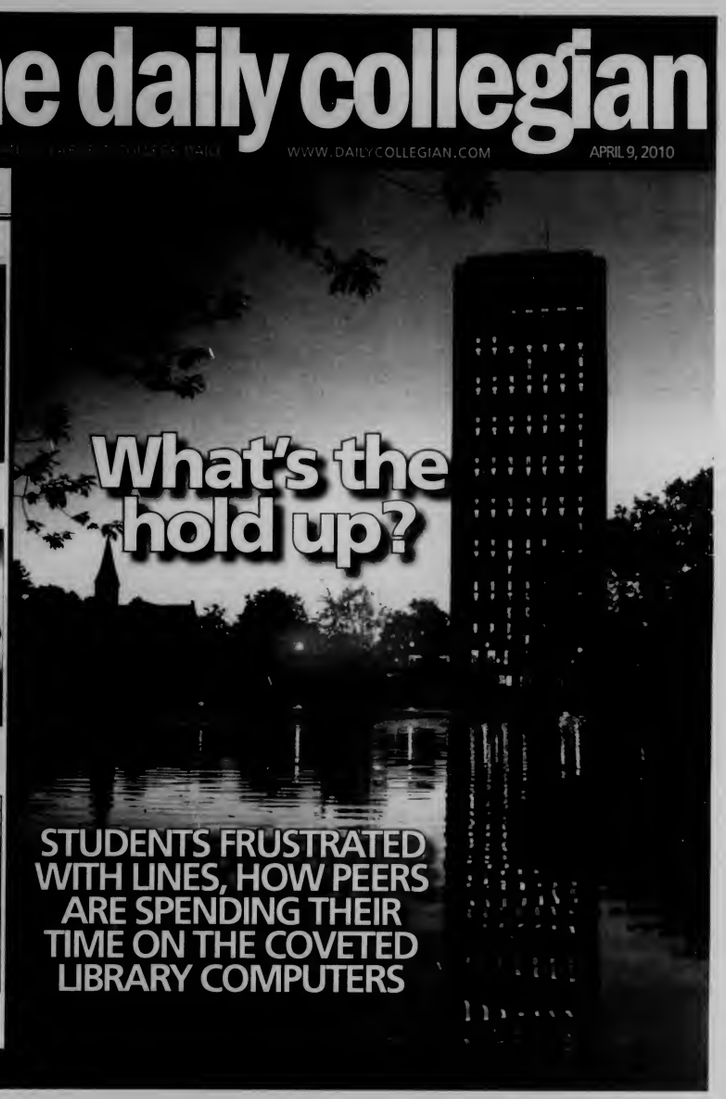
inside this issue:

SPORTS



SEE PAGE 16

ARTS&LIVING



SEE PAGE 7

NOT CLUELESS

SEE PAGE 14

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 49

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Watts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rukon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
MATT ROCHELEAU
COPY EDITOR
HANNAH MCGOLDRICK
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Prof. visits UM, lectures on global immigration views

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

"Immigration's dark side has become the Les Mis of our time," said speaker Dr. Marcelo M. Suarez-Orozco during his presentation, "Rethinking Immigration and the Family in the Age of Global Vertigo" Tuesday evening in the Cape Cod Lounge.

The lecture was part of the Tay Gavin Erickson Lecture Series, which is being supported by The Center for Research on Families at the University of Massachusetts. Suarez-Orozco, a Member of the School of Social Science at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton University and the Courtney Sale Ross University Professor of Globalization and Education at New York University, spoke of the impacts of global immigration on countries and families. He has also been the author of over 20 books and 100 scholarly articles.

"Migration is written in our genetic code," said Suarez-Orozco, who spoke of how immigration is a natural occurrence which comes with time. "It accounts for how we became the country we are and the country we will become," he added.

He claimed that worldwide, immigrants account for about three percent of the total population of the world, and that 1.5 billion people are shaped by the experience of immigration.

Suarez-Orozco spoke of how the promises of a utopian future in a new country for immigrants often become a dystopian reality, with issues such as poverty and family separation causing strife rather than payoff.

"Two-thirds of migrations came through family reunification programs," he said.

He told the audience how various factors can lead to migration to another country, such as the environmental conditions of a country.

"This is a biosocial adaptation to another environment because of unlivable conditions," said Suarez-Orozco.

He also said that war often changes a country for the worse, and families with the ability to leave their homeland will often do so. Fear is a cause of massive displacement among these families, said Suarez-Orozco.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Dr. Marcelo M. Suarez-Orozco gives a presentation Tuesday on how "migration is written in our genetic code" and is a natural occurence with time.

The total number of immigrants worldwide has risen by over 55 million people within the last 20 years since the Berlin Wall fell, he said. However, that number has significantly decreased since Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. filed for bankruptcy in September 2008.

He also said that that the distribution of children born in the United States in 1990 was 69 percent white and 12 percent Latino, and that in 2030 it is estimated that 46 percent will be White and 21 percent Latino in the U.S.

He commented that although conditions may worsen for countries, the overall amount of migrants remains stable throughout the world. He also said that the immigration era of today has fewer migrants than last era of migration.

Suarez-Orozco commented that the life of a child moving to another country to be relocated with family may be difficult, but a recurring feeling of discomfort and displacement may linger. He pulled out various quotes from children reconnected with their parents and almost all of them expressed how they felt like their parents were strangers or how they missed someone else from their home.

He noticed one disturbing trend in the children of immigrants.

"Never before have so many headed to criminal justice system," he remarked.

Tim Jones can be reached at timothyj@student.umass.edu.

PD: Student stole $2K in goods from dorm

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts sophomore accused of stealing goods valued at $2,000 from a Sylvan Residential Area dormitory recently is scheduled to have a pretrial hearing May 5 for three felonies charges he is facing.

While visiting a friend in Brown Hall, Noah Thissell, 20, of Acton, Mass was arrested March 23 on charges of breaking and entering during the daytime, larceny of items valued greater than $250, and possession of a Class C drug.

According to Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archbald, the UMass Police Department received a call from a first-floor room in Brown that numerous items were missing from one of the bedrooms in a suite. The items missing included a MacBook laptop, three iPods, an Xbox 360 gaming system, and a wallet with cash and a blank check inside. The items were estimated to value $2000. Archbald said the door to the room had been left open by one of the residents, allowing Thissell to walk in.

Thissell was found in possession of the items and arrested at 11:08 a.m. While being processed at the police station, officers found two tablets of the anti-anxiety drug Valium on him, for which he did not have a prescription.

According to a friend of Thissell and his Facebook account, he is currently still enrolled at UMass, living on-campus, and attending classes. Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin declined to confirm Thissell's academic or residential status. Vanin also declined to speak to what actions the University might be taking to deal with allegations.

See LARCENY on page 3

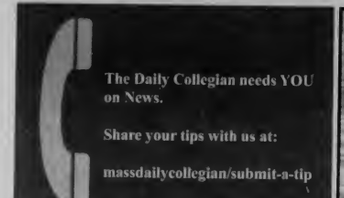
MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

A MacBook was one of the items the sophomore allegedly stole from a Sylvan dorm.

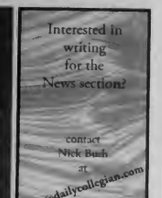
Sophomore facing three felony charges

LARCENY from page 2

"In general, depending on the severity of the crime, stronger action will be taken," she said.



It is unknown if Thissell has yet to face any sanctions from the University.



According to the Code of Student Conduct, a student, faculty member or administrator can file charges against a student through the University. Such charges can result in housing removal, suspension or even expulsion.

Vanin also added that depending on how involved Thissell's friend was in the crimes, actions could be taken against that student as well. Currently no charges have been brought against Thissell's unidentified friend.

An arraignment hearing was held in late March to formally announce the charges against him. Thissell has yet to enter a plea, and declined to comment for this report.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwilliat@student.umass.edu.

THE AMHERST COLLEGE PROGRAM BOARD AND AAS PRESENT:
THE ROOTS
FEATURING jason derülo
SATURDAY, APRIL 24TH
DOORS OPEN AT 7, SHOW STARTS AT 8
LE FRAK GYM, AMHERST COLLEGE
FREE FOR AC STUDENTS; TICKETS GUARANTEED MARCH 29th- APRIL 9TH
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL AUDIENCE TICKETS AVAILABLE APRIL 9TH
FIVE COLLEGE: $15
GENERAL ADMISSION: $25
NO CAMERAS OR LARGE BAGS
AC TICKETS AVAILABLE IN ROOM 114 KEEFE CAMPUS CENTER
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL ADMISSION AVAILABLE ON
https://www.amherst.edu/campuslife/keefe/calendar

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
PRESENTS
PAPER JAM
★ THE FIRST BAND BATTLE BEGINS ★
★ Host ★
Solo Sexx
★ Featuring ★
Leisure Colony
Bubonic Souls
Bella's Bartok
The Telephone Company
On Trak & Malado
Darlingside

HAMPDEN COURTYARD
★SOUTHWEST★
APR. 12 | 6:00
FREE | PRESENTED WITH
UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Sprint
Southwest Area Government

Students check Facebook while peers wait

OIT: Ethics code prohibits crackdown on library's recreational computer users

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

It is 1 p.m. on Monday afternoon in the Learning Commons in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Senior Rebecca Trudel is waiting patiently in line for her chance to use one of the public access computers. One thing she notices could be adding a problem to her plan is several of other students using said computers recreationally to access websites like Facebook and YouTube.

"People are on these sites, and it's annoying when you're in line for printing,' she said. "I try not to be one of those people, but lately I haven't been waiting as long as I have before," she added.

At least six people were on Facebook and another three were on YouTube while Trudel was in line. Trudel isn't alone in her frustration either. Every day, clusters of students utilize the library computers to finish up their work, and many of them end up waiting in line just for their chance, something that could possibly be avoided.

"It does suck, but I definitely am guilty of going on Facebook on these computers," said junior Kelley Schlehuber. "It's nice to take a break when you're working on an essay."

Recently expanded over winter break, the Learning Commons space increased by 20 percent and added 150 seats. There are at least 56 OIT computers, which require a University log-on for access, and 36 public access stations, which are open to anyone and do not require a log on.

The activity of the computers is not monitored, allowing anyone to access any site they wish.

Tuesday morning at 10:45 a.m., a line of at least 13 students, constantly growing and changing, waited through the rush to print papers before their classes. All the while, at least eight people were on sites like Facebook and YouTube on the public access computers, and at least four on Facebook on the OIT computers.

The same time Wednesday morning, another 13 students were waiting for their chance. Meanwhile, at least five people were on the same sites on the public access computers and at least eight were on them on the OIT access.

Carol Will, Coordinator of the Learning Commons says that nothing can really be done to prevent students from accessing those sites.

"I understand the frustration of needing to get work done," she said. "However, it is really not possible for us to truly determine what is actual 'work' or legitimate computer use," she added.

Activity is not monitored because of a ethics code and confidentiality issue.

COURTESY UMASS

Despite expanding the library's Learning Commons by 20 percent earlier this semster, students are still struggling to get access to the commons' computers in a timely manner.

COURTESY UMASS

Students are frustrated while waiting in line for a computer in the library Learning Commons, while some of those already on the devices browse sites with few academic uses, like Facebook and YouTube.

"Due to issues of confidentiality, staff do not concern themselves with what a library user is doing on the computers," Will said.

The library follows the Code of Ethics of the American Library Association. According to principle three of the ALA Code of Ethics, "We protect each library user's right to privacy and confidentiality with respect to information sought or received and resources consulted, borrowed, acquired or transmitted."

Although the possibility of staff intervening with students to explain why such behavior can be annoying is unlikely, Will said efforts are being taken and will be taken to make an overall better experience for students who need computer access.

"It's obvious that we do need more computers," she said. "We try to make students aware of the other computer classrooms in the building [floors 7 and 16] as well as on campus."

The classrooms on floors seven and 10 are closed at various times during the day for classes, but when class is not in session, students are free to utilize the computers however they wish.

There are also two quick-print stations in the library that allow students to print papers without going on the computers in the Learning Commons.

Some students feel there should be equal opportunity for all students using the library's computers.

Senior Mike Krahm believes people should have free access to what they please.

"It's not fair for me to criticize anyone else since it's public access, and I should just be prepared to wait in line."

"It still sucks, but I don't think anything should be done about it," he added.

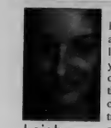
Junior Jessenia Gonzalez agreed that anyone should be allowed to do what they want with the computers.

"Personally, I think if you're waiting in line for the computers, it doesn't matter what you use it for."

Students cannot have any influence over what others are allowed to do on the computers, so knowing various other options exist may help students who are in a rush to print out a paper or finish up some work before their next class.

Trudel knows it's a problem for her, but feels it comes down to the actions of other students.

"People on those sites realize that there is a line, but they just don't care."



Tim Jones can be reached at timothyj@student.umass.edu.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Religion on the decline, society still standing

Leigh Greaney

Finding out there was no Easter bunny was more of a relief than a setback. The last prying anxiety a five-year-old needs is the threat of a giant rabbit breaking into their house at night to give out candy and eventual cavities. I never remember being entirely sold on it, but the threat was enough to stay up and keep a look out. Relief set in as I saw my mom shuffling through our pantry and filling baskets with candy eggs.

After that, Easter lost most the mask and became about different things – like quiche and overeating chocolate and someone in the family that drank too much wine. It became about togetherness. The bunny was mentioned for fun and for the kids who still let themselves stay suckered in. However, no one seemed to be mentioning the guy who brought on the quiche and overeating chocolate and someone in the family who drank too much wine.

Jesus should be an Easter buzz word, but it's just not. It's become more about the resurrection of the Cadbury bunny egg – not the resurrection of God. I thought this was just my family, but it seems like I'm not alone.

From 1990 to 2008, the percentage of Americans who claim "no religion" has doubled. Now at 15 percent, people who are swearing off God trump 1990's 8 percent, according to the American Religious Identification Survey.

This "no religion" religion comes in third place of what most believe. Catholics take first with 25.1 percent and Baptists take second with 15.8 percent. Atheism is more popular than Judaism, Protestantism, and Spiritualism (Wicca, other pagan traditions, etc).

God may or may not be out there. That can be debated.

This could mean many things. This could mean that people are going to start losing their moral ground. Without "consequences" that stretch into the afterlife, without guilt and without shame for doing what we want coming from above – does that mean without moral fiber? Will our compass break and spin us into different directions?

This could also mean that our standards of self have been lowered. Do we not need to be all we can if we're not being judged by the only being whose opinion matters more than our own? Will there be chaos of self-expectation?

This could mean that we'll stop acting as responsible members of society. Without consequence – without heaven and hell or wrath or reward – will we sink the ship? We could all become victims of ourselves and full of apathy. Without God to take care of Americans, who will?

The bitter truth is that it's happening. Churches are closing down nationwide. Here in New England, the once Catholic monopoly has been added to the melting pot.

The good news is, although the religious belief has begun to fade within people, religious customs stay embedded into culture. Even those who mock religious beliefs still find themselves with a plate of Christmas ham in front of them when that day rolls around.

God has become a sort of hobby. It can be played out or put down whenever it's convenient. "Losing my religion" isn't just an R.E.M. song anymore for a lot of people. It's a reality.

With this 15 percent of America's population calling themselves atheist, there doesn't seem to be a loss of moral identity. Moral philosophy can be taught through religion, but it can be learned otherwise. Being a responsible, functioning part of society has not deemed it necessary to require religious belief.

Just because someone had a civil wedding, didn't get baptized or didn't get their baby baptized doesn't mean that they can't contribute to society or even contribute to religion. It's just not traditional. Spirituality and belief come in many forms. If being true to yourself is being untrue to a religious custom, it's very easy to claim "no religion."

It seems society is missing something. The important part of life needs to be seen in the spot life – and this important part of life needs to be agreed upon my religious followers and atheists and semi-atheists alike.

Christmas and Easter, for example, may be about big dinners and presents for some people, making them not as religious as those celebrating it in the name of God. However, whatever motives a family or friend group has to get together on those days, the end result is the same.

There is still togetherness.

Isn't that what it's really about? If it isn't – shouldn't it be? God may or may not be out there. That can be debated. Having friends and family get together to share each other's company is just as important. That can be also be debated, depending on how much you enjoy your family. But, they are tangible. They're only here for so long. Why not use that time to make the best of the memory making? Why not celebrate the love you feel for those who you care about?

Religion may be dying, but love and moral fiber doesn't have to. We just need to get our priorities straight.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Point-Counter-Point

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Residential areas: the quest to be the best

Southwest is where it's at

Roy Ribitzky

Et tu, Orchard Hill?

Let's just go through the run down real quick: a new recreation center, the best Grab-n-Go in Berkshire, 2-rooms and the nicest looking beach in all of western Massachusetts provide the scenery for the one of the best atmospheres on campus in the Southwest Residential Living Area. With over 5,500 students living here, it is impossible to not see someone new everyday. While the campus as a whole is not very diverse, there are more people of different backgrounds, ethnicities, orientations and majors down here. And we have a skyline.

I am not going to talk about the other living areas, because, quite frankly, the residence halls have more similarities than differences. We just have a larger home base down here.

The generalization of Southwest residents goes something along the lines of us being drunks, immature party animals, jocks, inconsiderate noise-mongers and slacker students.

That's debatable.

Every dorm has "that guy" at parties. Every dorm has obnoxious residents who blast really bad music too loud. Every dorm has those students who don't go to class.

And, surprise to even those residents, people up in Central play drinking games (don't ask how I know). But Southwest still has that edge that dominates the rest.

For my fellow city lovers, Southwest is the closest housing center in farmland we have to being in a city. I like an urban environment, and Southwest fits that need.

Personally, I cannot sit still for five minutes let alone live in a mostly quiet area. I like to know that people are around me; that no matter what, there is always something going on like in Southwest. Sure, there are nights where I want to yell out my window on the 14th floor of John Adams tower and tell some people to shut it, but I've felt that everywhere on campus. But this part of campus feels like it's alive. I think of Southwest as similar to the Learning Commons in the DuBois Library: it is relatively noisy, but with enough resources and space to feel comfortable to get things done.

I have friends in Orchard Hill and Central who say they could not focus over here. With thousands of students living here I would not be surprised to know that at least one person does not like Southwest. Let me then make this clear: there is no problem with not liking Southwest. There is a problem, however, with saying other areas are better.

Down here we're close to the fields, a healthy walk from our classes, and have the best DC on campus: Berkshire (Franklin isn't that bad, either, so I'll give them that).

Something else I love about Southwest is the impeccable timing of construction work. Five weeks left of school until over two months of summer vacation and most of Southwest South gets sealed off for rebuilding. People also sound sarcastic down here, which can be funny. Sometimes.

Say what you want, but I love Southwest. Besides, do you really expect to ever live in place that fits your desires 100 percent? Sure you do! Just come down to Southwest and we'll give you a fun time of meeting new people, having a nice view in a tower, getting your degree, eating well, and living life on the south side.

See you at the bottom of the hill.

Roy Ribitzky is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rribitzk@student.umass.edu.

O-Hill? Oh yes

Harrison Searles

The time has finally come for another battle between aspects of the University of Massachusetts; while last year it was the battle of the Dining Commons, today begins the battle for the mastery of the residential areas and we all know, whether consciously or not, that Orchard Hill is clearly the superior of all of them. Of all the residential areas to live on the UMass Campus, it is clear that Orchard Hill (colloquially known as "O-Hill") not only triumphs in terms of the best location, but it also provides the best living conditions by far.

Let's begin by noting what Orchard Hill does better than every other residence area (I shall not be including Sylvan here since even trying to compare Sylvan to O-Hill is to blaspheme). Unlike Southwest, Orchard Hill actually provides a spot that someone would actually want to live in on days that are not weekends and yet, unlike Northeast, it still has people that one would want to hang with during those same weekends.

While it may be fun in the short term to live at the ground zero of party central, it is not exactly the place one would want to be while actually trying to finish college with an actual major and grades that would actually help one to get an internship or job once graduation is over with.

It is surely important to enjoy what society calls the four best years of anyone's life, but let's remember that life actually continues after graduation. Furthermore, the only thing that either Central or Northeast can boast that it has over Orchard Hill is that they are in closer approximation to the rest of the campus, but all that this boils down to is merely saving around 10 minutes a day walking.

However, such a critique is fallacious because it does not take into account a hidden variable: the health benefits of those extra strides, plus the walks up and down the Hill also work on the thigh muscles that are so often neglected.

Ironically enough, what would seem to be a detriment to the desirability of O-Hill only serves to further illustrate its superiority over other living areas.

In addition, O-Hill is a beautiful place, definitely the Garden of Eden of the University of Massachusetts; a residence area where one can actually see the green of the Earth on a daily basis and not just the concrete jungle that so characterizes the rest of the campus.

While it may have that dreary gray Stalinist concrete architecture we all love to hate, the plaza between the four buildings provides a great location for enjoying the beautiful spring weather, a place to play Ultimate Frisbee in the bowl and where activities like Bowl Weekend '10 also happen.

For those who would prefer to enjoy the radiance of an April's sun while working on a tan, the Hill is a perfect place to bring out a towel and enjoy the day sunbathing while watching the sun take its daily course across the azure sky.

Indeed, if one wants to escape UMass for a day, thankfully enough one need not walk a half an hour to the nearest parking lot for Orchard Hill provides one a mere minute's walk from the buildings.

Plus, the dorms themselves provide a great amount of space along with closets that provide more temporary privacy within the room for changing and other such affairs, and they also provide desks at the end of the room so that there's no need for desks placed awkwardly in the middle.

For those who have a television there is always the option to loft the two beds to create both a perfect spot for the 36" your roommate brought on which to play the latest first-person shooters as well as extra space for Guitar Hero and Dance Dance Revolution and another spot for a couch – a perfect setup indeed.

In the end, the facilities and location of Orchard Hill are simply the best of all in UMass.

Without a doubt, Orchard Hill is simply the best residential area on the UMass campus, what more need be said?

Not only does it provide the quality of life and social scene that students are looking for, but it also provides a beautiful place to get away from the UMass campus while still technically being on it. There is simply no competition, O-Hill is simply the greatest of them all.

Harrison Searles is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at hsearles@student.umass.edu.

Of all the living areas on campus there can be only one to claim the title: Best Place to Live.

Vote online at dailycollegian.com

Next week: Sylvan v. Central

Ed/Op is going to Comedy Jam this weekend.

See Arts for more.

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

14th Comedy Jam in a Bowl

By Dave Coffey
Collegian Correspondent

This weekend, Student Valley Productions will host its annual Comedy Jam at the University of Massachusetts. After its 14 years of production, the event promises record attendance. It will center on a football theme, and will be aptly titled, "Comedy Bowl XIV."

The jam will take place over two days, with performances on Friday night and Saturday morning. Student Valley Productions is made up of three comedy troupes from UMass, namely Mission: Improvable, which specializes in short-form improvisational comedy, Improv With Attitude, which focuses on longer-form improvisational comedy, and Sketch-22, a sketch comedy variety. All three troupes will perform at the comedy jam, with Improv With Attitude scheduled to perform at 8:30 p.m. on Friday night, and Mission Improvable and Sketch-22 scheduled to perform at 8:00 a.m. and 9:20 a.m. respectively on Saturday morning.

Student Valley Productions is also inviting other comedic performers to the jam. A total of 10 other groups will perform in addition to the Student Valley Productions troupes, bringing the total number of acts to 13 over the course of two-day event. In addition to other collegiate comedy ensembles, several professional comedy performers will also be invited to play the jam, including Team Submarine, Pangea 3000, MC Mr. Napkins and The Dowry.

On top of the live comedy performances, there will also be comedy workshops held by several of the invited professional comedy performers in the early afternoon on Saturday after the morning show. Improvisational comedy squad The Dowry will host an improv comedy workshop. Sketch comedy group Team Submarine will host a sketch-writing workshop. Comedy-rapper MC Mr. Napkins will host a workshop on comedic freestyle rapping. Comedy workshops have been commonplace at the annual comedy jam in recent years.

"It helps to have professionals come in and help us hone our craft, so we can then return it to the UMass community," said Peter Storey, secretary of Student Valley Productions and producer for Sketch-22.

Attendance to the comedy jam is both free and open to the public. In past years, the event has garnered a significant turnout, and is expected to do so once again this year.

"We have been blessed with excessive attendance in the past, and we are hoping for the same this year," says Storey.

While Storey says that public attendance has usually been limited to the live performances in the past, the public is also welcome to attend the comedy workshops as well.

The performances will begin on Friday evening at 7:45 p.m. and Saturday morning at 7:45 a.m. in room 65 of Bartlett Hall in the downstairs auditorium. The comedy workshops will take place in rooms W-26 and W-27 in Machmer Hall. For more information, visit the Student Valley Productions office in room 415 of the Student Union, or visit their website, www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~svp.

Dave Coffey can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu

Improv With Attitude will be one of several local comedy troupes performing at the 14th annual Comedy Jam Friday and Saturday in Bartlett 65 at 7:45 p.m. Admission is free.

La Piazza serves up some great deals

Brendan Murphy
Collegian Staff

La Piazza Pizza has reinvented the $5 footlong. Gone are the days of generic breads and cheeses. Paper-thin meats packed into everyday sandwiches are in the past. This pizza place serves up heaping hot chicken, eggplant, or meatball parms for the uber-affordable price of $4.99 – the same value that another unnamed sub shop uses as their claim to fame.

The sandwich variety and portions are bigger here as well. Whether the buyer is in the mood for a BBQ chicken sandwich or cheeseburger sub, a five-spot (and some change) will buy you any hot grinder.

La Piazza's deals don't end with the subs though – they offer a veritable laundry list of man-sized salads and calzones for the same price, too. Buffalo chicken or caprese salads run the same price as chicken cordon bleu calzones and the meat-lover's Texas-style calzone. Additionally all pasta entrées are $5.99 and a large 16" cheese pizza only runs for $6.99. Their deals are great and the portions are generous. Value is great, but taste is more important.

La Piazza's cheeseburger sub has everything one could want from a succulent juicy burger packed into a 12" grinder roll. Top it off with lettuce, tomato, onion and maybe some ketchup or mustard, and the cheeseburger sub is a sandwich the consumer wishes would never end. The chicken finger sub is equally as tasty, and heaped with juicy (not greasy) chicken fingers with fresh veggies and a wonderful blend of delicious sauces. The sandwiches are not to be missed!

This pizza joint's calzones are delicious as well, although somewhat generic in terms of college-town calzones – but again, for only $4.99. The Texas-Style calzone is chock full of chopped steak, breaded chicken, bacon, tangy BBQ sauce and cheddar cheese. The buffalo chicken calzone is wonderful as well. La Piazza utilizes breaded chicken once more to create their buffalo chicken calzone, but they pack in hot sauce and generous amounts of American cheese and bleu cheese as well. Vegetarians need not worry since they also offer vegetarian calzones. Other options include Mexican, lasagna, and chicken fajita.

The entrées offered are traditional pasta dishes with a side of bread and butter. Choose from ziti chicken alfredo, chicken broccoli Alfredo, baked ziti or manicotti. Their baked ziti is Italian comfort food at its best, although it's recommended to ask for an extra side of sauce. The huge size of the pasta entrée should be enough to eat in two sittings, so clear some room in the fridge before ordering.

Specialty pizzas at La Piazza aren't the same price, but are obviously much tastier than just plain cheese. They're one of two pizza places in town that serve up a margarita pizza. When struck with a craving for tomato, fresh basil, and red sauce, head to La

See LA PIAZZA on page 9

Activision faces big COD lawsuit

By Andrew Witts
Collegian Staff

Very rarely would you be able to talk to a person off the street and have an informed conversation about the video game industry and how it is structured somewhat similarly to the motion picture business. One could blame the major news outlets like Newscorp and CNN for their lack of coverage of the industry, but where are all of the video game journalists in this equation?

Outlets like IGN, Game Informer and Kotaku usually cover nearly every aspect of the on goings of the medium, but rarely do they make a point to get their news out to the public eye in a bold manner. This is not to say that every single man, woman and child need to know about how many accelerometers are currently in the Wii Motion Plus, but there are certain stories that every one should have brought to their attention. One of these stories is the current domination of Activision Blizzard and their dominance over the developer Infinity Ward.

A few months ago, towards the end of the decade, a video game developer unleashed arguably one of the greatest selling pieces of entertainment that the modern world has known – Infinity Ward's Modern Warfare 2, published by Activision Blizzard for the XBox 360 and Playstation 3. The overwhelming success of this game was posted on nearly every corner of the Internet. News blogs were ablaze with Activision Blizzard and Infinity Ward's financial success, while major news sites produced features on the game's disturbing depiction of terrorism in the level entitled "No Russian." Meanwhile, journalists within the industry could not stop talking about just how good the game was despite technical comments of the game engine's wear and the voice-over cut scenes. It is pretty clear that back in Nov. 2009, Modern Warfare 2 was on the tip of everyone's tongue as gamers could not stop playing. On the other hand, newsgroups could not stop talking about it, and parents were trying to find it in stores for the holiday season.

As the first days of 2010 came and went, the numbers in sales for Activision only increased, and once a month the gaming community would see sales reports of the disgusting progression of growth for the number one online shooter. On the multiplayer side of things, news outlets within the industry could not stop reporting on the number of glitches and unbalanced tactics such as the infamous javelin and supply package hiccups. Despite these flaws, gamers could not do anything but watch as the sales numbers just continued to increase. It certainly seemed like the sky was the limit for Infinity Ward and for video game awareness in general, but it seemed that something very dark was lurking around all of this positivity.

On March 1, 2010 the two founders and figureheads for Infinity Ward, Jason West and Vince Zampella, were escorted out of their offices during work hours by a security team that was under contract with Activision. The two men had been fired by their own publisher for reasons of "breach of contract" and "insubordination." This news hit the industry as a complete shock, but the real news followed the next day as Activision revealed their new business model for the Call of Duty brand name. This new model essentially treated the Call of Duty franchise in the same way that Activision tended to the Guitar Hero franchise. In other words, they were going to pump out as many games as possible with multiple development teams to capitalize on the sales of Modern Warfare 2.

The fact that this announcement hit the day after the firing of West and Zampella certainly raised more than a few interested eye brows. However, the plot thickened the next day when West and Zampella declared that they were filing suit against their former publisher for $36 million in royalties owed to them. West and Zampella claimed that their ousting from their offices was part of a pre-ordained "Orwellian" construction which would result in Activision's goal of exploiting the Call of Duty franchise. The lawsuit also mentions a Memorandum of Understanding which was signed in 2008 by West, Zampella and Mike Griffith, the president of Activision Publishing, that gives both Infinity Ward founders power over the Modern Warfare brand and any other first person shooter game that takes place after the Vietnam War. The memorandum, if true, would thus ruin the megapublisher's new plan to reproduce new Call of Duty games in multiple development cycles per year.

The outcome of the lawsuit between the ex-Infinity Ward founders and their former employer is one of utmost importance to the whole video game industry. Much like the various strikes and defining law suits in Hollywood or the music industry, the result of this conflict will present the public with the true state of video games.

If West and Zampella actually take their case to trial for their royalties and the rights to their beloved series and are victorious, then it shows that the real thriving power in the interactive medium is with the developer and not the current money-drunk, investor ruled publisher. With such power in the balance, one would assume that news of these developments would be spread across numerous outlets and not merely discussed and reported within the industry's own exclusive news reporting community. Despite even the spread of the news within industry limits, talk pretty much died down throughout the gaming universe within a week about these monumental events. At the time of this writing, there is still no major support group for either side, showing that gamers do not care, and even worse, Modern Warfare fans do not care.

The important state of action and response from the gaming community to situations such as this are just sad. Very few times does an opportunity arise within a commercial medium where the figureheads of gaming can unleash a war cry to be heard over the sound of money and stock options. Motion pictures have had nearly every riot/strike known to man, while the comics medium has survived strictly on the active participation and promotion from the inside. This is not to say that gamers should be out in the streets rioting and breaking Activision's doors down, but shouldn't something happen? When Left 4 Dead 2's release date was announced to be less than one year after the original, the Internet was on fire with coverage of the petitions from the Valve community. Yes, Valve is known to have one of the most devoted gaming communities in the industry, but it's not like all of these rabid fanboys have not played any of Infinity Ward's games and remotely appreciated it. Again, the lawsuit goes beyond just Infinity Ward and the fate of the Call of Duty brand. Instead what is at stake is the perception of the video game industry as a whole. Either we exist in a world where virtual entertainment is seen solely from an economical point of view or it is looked upon with appreciation for the medium and those who strive to renew, improve, innovate, create, and deliver such an in-depth experience that only video games can streamline to your very being.

Andrew Witts can be reached at andrew@nevernotanerd.com.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.75 • STUDENT $7.50 (WITH ID)
CULT CLASSICS AT THE MOVIES
EVERY FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
TICKETS ONLY $5 EACH!
APRIL 9th and 10th
WAYNE'S WORLD
HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 145 415 645 915
◆ (MIDNIGHT SHOW) - WAYNE'S WORLD [PG13] 1201
◆ DATE NIGHT [PG13] 135 340 445 555 705 815 925 1035
◆ CLASH OF THE TITANS-2D [PG13] 100 215 335 450 610 725 845 1000
◆ THE LAST SONG [PG] 105 425 725 1015
◆ TYLER PERRY'S WHY DID I GET MARRIED TOO? [PG13] 115 410 715 1010
ALICE IN WONDERLAND - 2D [PG] 210 455 740 1020
DIARY OF A WIMPY KID [PG] 120
HOT TUB TIME MACHINE [R] ① 130 440 745 1030
HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - 2D [PG] 1255 325 735
THE BOUNTY HUNTER [PG13] 150 445 730 1025
Cine&Arts
THE GHOST WRITER - [PG13] 125 415 710 1000
SHUTTER ISLAND - [R] ① 1000
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

'Ajami' impactful look at Middle East

By Lily Hicks
Collegian Correspondent

"Ajami" is a film about Israeli-Palestinian tensions directed by one of the unlikeliest pairs Middle Eastern cinema has ever seen. Scandar Copti, a Christian Palestinian from Israel, and Yaron Shani, an Israeli Jew. The result is a film that refuses to pick sides; that instead engages the Israeli-Palestinian conflict on a micro level; it tells the stories of children, families and lovers who are caught, sometimes literally, in the crossfire.

For a news-savvy moviegoer, someone who likely reads about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict nearly everyday in the "World News" section of the paper, Copti's and Shani's sentimentality can make the viewer feel robbed of any substantive context. Grief and suffering, while experienced by Palestinians and Israelis, Muslims, Christians and Jews, has to be largely accounted for by one side and one side only…don't they? Copti and Shani would argue otherwise. Their insight into the universality of human grief and their suggestion of mutual guilt is a statement bold enough, and possibly true enough, to earn "Ajami" a 2010 Oscar nomination for Best Foreign Film.

The movie is told through a series of flashbacks and flash forwards detailing the lives of Israelis and Palestinians living and working, sometimes illegally, in the Jaffa district of greater Tel Aviv, Israel. Nasri, a young Muslim resident of Jaffa's Ajami neighborhood, serves as the film's narrator and begins his story by recounting the killing of his neighbor. The murder, a case of mistaken identity in which Nasri's older brother Omar was the intended victim, was meant to be a punitive action against Omar's uncle, who killed a member of the prominent Arab Abul-Zen clan.

Following the murder, Omar struggles to protect himself and his family, eventually amassing a debt for which he cannot possibly pay by any legal means. In attempts to gather funds, Omar reels in a tangled mass of other characters experiencing their own personal crises. Omar's co-worker Malek, a young Palestinian man who crosses the Israeli border illegally to earn money for his mother's surgery, is one such character. Another cast member enmeshed in the action is Dando, an Israeli cop who grapples with the tasks of work and fatherhood while devastated by the absence of his missing brother, an Israeli soldier.

The majority of the cast are Jaffa locals with no previous acting experience, but their greenness is near-impossible to discern from one compelling performance to the next. Inside each portrayal is a profound authenticity, likely due to the directors' careful casting of actors with backgrounds similar to their corresponding characters. Eran Naim, who plays Dando, is himself a 16-year Israeli police veteran.

Although "Ajami" demonstrates ingenuity on many levels, there are aspects of the film that are disappointingly familiar. For example, Omar has a secret love affair with his boss' daughter, a beautiful young Christian Arab whose father is overbearing and vastly intolerant when it comes to the religion of her potential spouse. Yawn. Yet another Arab character, Banj, falls miraculously in love with a Jewish woman and his friends chide him for it. "Go with her; talk Hebrew to your kids," his friend says mockingly.

Despite some tired romantic subplots, the underlying messages of "Ajami," messages of collective suffering and the tragedy of prejudice, are communicated with power and grace. The acting is moving, the sets are strikingly real, and the various stories are masterfully connected by film's end. At once raw and suspenseful and delicately poignant, there is little wonder as to why "Ajami" has received international acclaim.

Lily Hicks can be reached at lhicks@student.umass.edu.

Local pizza a great deal

LA PIAZZA from page 7

Piazza to quell the munchies. Even with delivery, it's served hot, fresh and delicious. Party pizzas are available as well for that occasional big gathering.

Other offerings that La Piazza serves up are wings, boneless or traditional, fries, onion rings, and hot, crispy, golden mozzarella sticks. Desserts are also available – cheesecake or chocolate cake, also for only five dollars.

La Piazza makes for a perfect date spot on a college budget – it isn't the traditional pick-up or delivery place. Patrons can come in, sit down and eat. For around $10, two can fill up on a couple foot long subs, or a calzone and salad. That's the same price as admission for one into the Golden Corral all-you-can-eat buffet. Capping off dinner with a piece of cheesecake without denting the wallet is a winning formula for a great date.

La Piazza prides itself on its affordable value. The food quality isn't the best in Amherst, but it's spectacular for the price. It's is one of those college-town bargains that simply can't be passed up. La Piazza pizza is located in the Boltwood Walk area just behind Bueno y Sano and Monkey Bar. For the prices alone, La Piazza Pizza is the best bargain eatery in Amherst.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Hampshire College to hold conference addressing women's reproductive rights

By Christiana McDougal
Collegian Staff

Today marks the beginning of a three-day long reproductive rights conference titled: "From Abortion Rights to Social Justice: Building the Movement for Reproductive Freedom" at Hampshire College. It is sponsored by both the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program (CLPP) and the Population and Development Program (PopDev). It is expected that over 1,000 students, activists and a variety of international leaders will attend to discuss strategies for reproductive rights while fostering progressive and accepting attitudes towards all those involved.

At the conference, speakers will discuss reproductive rights and how they are affected or influenced by social inequality, race, violence, health care reform and sexual freedom, among many others. There will also be workshops throughout the weekend which will run today from 4 to 6 p.m., Saturday from 9 a.m. to 6:45 p.m. and Sunday from 9 a.m. to noon.

The conference begins this evening with "Breaking Silences: An Abortion Speak-out," which will be a time for people who have had abortions to communicate their experiences to others.

CLPP was created in 1981 in response to the Reagan administration and the anti-abortion tide that rolled in alongside it. CLPP called attention to the sexual and reproductive injustices that many people faced, and has been doing so actively for the last 29 years by connecting students and activists to knowledge of reproductive rights and activism.

CLPP's website states that their goals are to "inspire, educate, train and support new activists and leadership to secure reproductive freedom, justice and sexual rights for everyone." CLPP achieves these goals through activism, internships, newsletters and annual conferences such as this weekend's. The group puts emphasis on understanding how and why reproductive and sexual injustice can occur. Examples include lack of public knowledge about birth control, prejudice towards LGBTQI people who in turn cannot access reproductive care and can face human trafficking, poverty and domestic violence. Their overall aim is for the advancement of "reproductive freedom, justice, and sexual rights."

PopDev's main goal is "to change conventional thinking and policies about population growth that threaten reproductive rights, social justice and our environment," which the group accomplishes through "research, facts, expert analysis and activist and educational publications," according to its website. The group also aims to debunk views that claim it is solely population growth that has led to environmental degradation, unequal access to food and agriculture and overall poverty and instead emphasize the socioeconomic and political inequalities that create oppression in the first place.

CLPP's website, www.clpp.hampshire.edu has information on classes they offer, conferences, as well as resources to get involved. PopDev is accessible at both www.popdev.hampshire.edu and their Facebook, www.facebook.com/popdevprogram.

Christiana McDougal can be reached at cmcdougal@student.umass.edu.

Don't make your girlfriend mad at you...
WRITE FOR ARTS!
EMAIL
arts@dailycollegian.com

Seventh Annual Dulcy B. Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
In memory of Dulcy Blume Miller, Smith class of 1946
Marion Weiss + Michael Manfredi
WEISS/MANFREDI ARCHITECTS
Sequence/Section

Tuesday, April 6, 2010 7 PM
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

museum Advocate
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
Seattle Olympic Sculpture Park (pavilion and [illegible] photo: Phillip Maloney) by Weiss/Manfredi
www.smith.edu/artmuseum

La Salle tops St. Joseph's in double OT

COURTESY SAINT JOSEPH'S MEDIA RELATIONS

Meghan McDevitt (left) tries to get around UMass sophomore Riley Perry (right) during last year's Atlantic 10 Championship on April 26.

By Kara Deyermenjian
Collegian Staff

Mary Elizabeth Klepper of the Saint Joseph's women's lacrosse team scored the game-tying goal against La Salle with 48 seconds left in regulation to send her team into overtime last Thursday, but the Hawks couldn't pull off the victory, despite battling through two overtimes.

The Explorers (7-10, 3-0 Atlantic 10) gained their third consecutive victory with the 9-8 win. The victory was their third consecutive win and allowed them to remain undefeated in the A-10.

The 3-0 streak in conference play is the best start to a season any La Salle squad has ever achieved in program history.

Scoring began in the 11th minute of the first half with a SJU goal by Julie Mineweaser. The Explorers notched three goals of their own, and took a 3-2 lead going into halftime.

A-10 Lacrosse

The Hawks (2-10, 0-3 A-10) came out strong in the second half as Grace Dinn scored two minutes into the period. La Salle responded almost immediately with two shots to take the biggest lead of the game at 5-3.

The Hawks would not give up that easily, however, and tied it back up. The two teams exchanged goals seven times as the end of regulation approached, neither team managing to pull away. This back-and-forth style affair continued until the final minute of regulation when Klepper tied it up yet again, making the score tied at eight.

Explorer's Melanie Sarcinello came up with the game-winner in overtime.

W&M defeat Richmond

Richmond fell to No. 20 William & Mary, 11-10, on Sunday afternoon at UR Stadium.

The Tribe benefited from impressive scoring by junior Grace Golden, who led offensively with five points, including four goals and one assist. Katie Delaney scored four goals of her own, a career-high for the senior.

Golden also shined in other aspects of the game as she broke a single-game record for W&M with six turnovers. Her impressive play moved her into the Tribe's career top 10 lists for points, goals and draw controls.

Although the Spiders (5-8, 2-1 A-10) scored the first two goals of the game, they didn't hold the lead for long. The Tribe rallied and scored five consecutive goals, making the score 5-2 with six minutes left in the first frame.

Richmond answered with two more goals, but momentum shifted back to the Tribe as halftime neared and Golden drilled a shot past the W&M goalkeeper.

Scoring was relatively even in the second half, bringing the score to 7-6 in W&M's advantage with 22 minutes left to play. The Spiders fought back and came within three goals with under four minutes remaining.

Although Richmond tacked on another two goals, it wasn't enough, as the Tribe walked away with the victory.

SBU downs rival Niagara

St. Bonaventure defeated Big 4 rival Niagara, 17-9, on Tuesday afternoon at Niagara Field after a second half scoring spree.

With the win, the Bonnies continue a three-game winning streak and improve to 7-5 on the season while Niagara falls to 1-5 overall.

SBU senior Molly Hastrich had an impressive showing with six goals and one assist, while junior Christine Hanley and sophomore Danielle Drabin contributed four goals each.

Scoring was even in the first half, and the Bonnies held on to a slim 9-7 lead going into halftime. However, the second half was when SBU came alive and went on a dominating 9-1 scoring streak that lasted a solid 13 minutes. The scoring frenzy gave the Bonnies a 15-8 lead with 10 minutes to play.

SBU added another two goals within the remaining minutes, while keeping the Purple Eagles to one last score.

Bonnie senior goalkeeper Tori Waheibi had eight saves in the victory, bringing her career total to 249 and upping her to third in the program record book.

SBU returns to its home field today at 3 p.m. to host Temple for their first A-10 conference game of the season.

Kara Devermenjian can be reached at kdeverme@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY RICHMOND MEDIA RELATIONS

Richmond's Mary Flowers tries to get past a UMass defender on March 28. Richmond is currently 2-1 in conference play, with its last win coming against George Washington.

Towson wins 2nd straight vs. UMBC

Stratton hat trick makes difference

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

In a classic give-and-take game, Tim Stratton's hat trick proved to be the deciding factor in the Towson men's lacrosse team's second straight win as it beat UMBC, 10-7, on Wednesday evening.

Stratton, a junior attacker for the Tigers (3-5), proved to be the team's best player of the game with a season-high three goals off of five shots on net. Stratton also had an assist on the evening against UMBC.

The Retrievers (1-7) made some threatening runs against the Tigers' defense. UMBC's offense went 2-for-4 on the power play, along with dual two-goal efforts by attackmen Kyle Wimer and Shane Ryznar.

It also saw more saves out of their goaltender Adam Cohen than Towson goalie, Travis Love.

The Tigers, who had a three-game losing streak to deal with not too long ago, won their last two games and are showing significant improvement on the playing field. They led the Retrievers in shots, shots on goal, face offs won and turnovers, while also going 2-for-3 on the power play.

CAA Lacrosse

Manhattan falls to Hofstra

No. 10 Hofstra routed Manhattan, 18-2, on Tuesday afternoon.

The Pride (6-3) dominated the playing field on every aspect. The leading scorer on the day, junior attackman Jamie Lincoln, tallied four goals and two assists against a bewildered Jasper defense. Freshman Aaron Jones also highlighted the scoreboard with his first career hat trick and an assist.

In total, 11 different players scored at least one goal for Hofstra as it outshot Manhattan, 33-27, won faceoffs, 17-6, and was 1-for-4 on the power play, while the Jaspers were 0-for-2.

The Pride, who just days before, lost by a mere two goals to Drexel, quickly established themselves as the dominant team on the field, both offensively and defensively. After the end of the second quarter, Hofstra had scored 12 goals off 21 shots without letting up a goal to an anemic Manhattan offense.

The Pride earned 16 consecutive unanswered goals before Jasper freshman Tyler Jarvis put one past the Hofstra goalie Andrew Gvozden, who left after three periods with 10 saves and allowed one goal.

Dragon's rookie surging

Drexel freshman Robert Church earned the Colonial Athletic Association Player of the Week and Rookie of the Week after his offensive drive in Saturday's game against Hofstra.

Church, a British Colombian native and freshman attackman for the Dragons, earned seven goals in a 13-11 win over the Pride. For Church, this is only one example of how he's helped Drexel be competitive in the CAA.

In a season where it won three times against teams in the top 10 for the first time in the school's history, Church has a team-high 24 goals in 10 games thus far. Church also has three assists, 37 shots on goal and a team-leading .822 shots on goal percentage amongst players who have played at least 10 games.

His ability to adjust comes from his experience in the British Columbia Junior A Lacrosse League where he led the league with 107 points. He was his high school's MVP, played on the provincial championship team, a First Team All-Star, and was the league's Most Valuable Player.

David Martin can be reached at dmartin@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

A Hofstra player chases sophomore Anthony Biscardi during the Pride's game against the Minutemen. Hofstra downed Manhattan, 18-2, on Tuesday.

Become an ADVERTISING
REPRESENTATIVE

Build your resumé
Get business and sales experience

*SOM Students strongly encouraged to apply.

To Apply: Contact Mike Tortorici @ 545-3500
or e-mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Minutewomen set to host Albany

By Kara Deyermenjian
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team is coming off a string of solid victories as it takes on Albany at 2 p.m. this afternoon.

These two squads are on complete opposite sides of spectrum when it comes to recent success. The Minutewomen are on a four-match winning streak with their most recent victory on the road against Sacred Heart last Thursday while the Great Danes are entering today's match with hopes of snapping a four-match losing streak after previously falling to UMBC, Jacksonville, UMKC and Florida Atlantic.

Albany not only can't seem to bring home a win lately, it is also coming off devastating blows, including three 0-7 defeats, while UMass' most recent matches have resulted in dominant 7-0 victories.

In the match against the Owls, the Great Danes' only win of the day came at first doubles, with Laine Mackey and Livia Gherman earning a 6-3 default win over Erika Mrazkova and Dominique Wimmer. FAU came out strong and set the tone by winning the first two doubles matches.

Albany struggled to find some momentum of its own, but couldn't seem to come up with any. The Owls continued to dominate, earning themselves the sweeping 7-0 victory.

UMass freshman Chantal Swiszcz from Rota, Spain, and her teammates feel confident going into today's match-up.

"The team feels strong going into the match against Albany," Swiszcz said. "We feel that we have depth in every position and that we will do really well. We look forward to finishing up the season strong in our next three games at home, especially since we have a great crowd."

After recently losing its No. 1 player Magdalena Ploch, it was unclear whether or not the team would fill the void. Freshman Julia Comas filled the role as the No. 1 singles spot.

"We are over not having Ploch on the team anymore, we are all ready to move on," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "The match is going to be very close but I suspect we have a bit of an edge. We need to come out with passion, work hard, and play from the bottom-up."

Comas continues to make a name for herself with a solid five-match winning streak. Her most recent victory at the No. 1 singles spot came in the match against the Pioneers, where she defeated Kate Donnelly in straight-sets, 6-1, 6-1.

Comas and Tanisha Hodgson were also successful against Elizabeth Harrington and Kristina Chao, winning their third straight doubles match, 8-1. Comas earned the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award for last week's play and continues to have impressive outings.

"I was so happy because it was my first award here at UMass," Comas said. "The first few games I was nervous because I had more pressure on me, but now I'm a lot less nervous." Swiszcz noted Comas's improvements since taking the top singles spot.

"Julia has stepped up into the No. 1 position and has been doing a great job," said Swiszcz, who is currently on the sidelines due to a season-ending hip fracture that occurred in UMass' tournament at Dartmouth in the fall.

The Minutewomen recently improved their overall record to 11-6. UMass gets to wrap up its last three regular season matches at home and after today's match, they take on Boston University and Quinnipiac.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyerme@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Maude Lecluyse looks to help her team to victory today against Albany.

UMass looking for A-10 prep in N.J.

Deitz still finding weekend lineup

By Eric Mansfield
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts rowing team will travel to Camden, N.J., for the Knecht Cup this weekend, a regatta that will include 27 first varsity crews and 50 overall. UMass coach Jim Dietz said of the 27 first varsity crews, his team will be ranked third or fourth, while the second varsity crew will be fourth or fifth out of 18.

All the usual suspects will come out to compete against the Minutewomen, including Atlantic 10 competitors Fordham and Duquesne along with top programs, Buffalo and Duke.

Dietz has not finished the process of sorting the lineups, but knows that some members of the crew will have a heavy workload, racing up to three or four times on Saturday and twice on Sunday. Dietz expects UMass to be competitive and meet the challenge of a regatta that hosts a strong field.

What adds to this regatta is the amount of races that will take place. Instead of including the common boats like the Varsity 8, second Varsity 8 and the Varsity 4, the Knecht Cup will also include the singles, pairs and the quads.

Although the singles, pairs and quads will not be competing for points, these groups are comprised of rowers who may be competing for spots on the 23 and under national team.

Dietz said that his team will learn a lot this weekend. He expects them to learn when to push harder, when to ease up a little and when to maintain a steady pace.

He also believes that among the athletes is a "great team dynamic" that sets the tone for this regatta. The difficult lineup decisions Dietz faces have been made easier as well. Each rower knows that if they are switched from the Varsity 8 to the second Varsity 8 or Varsity 4, it is not a demotion, but a strategy that can make a boat stronger than it was before. Even while being subject to tough decisions, Dietz said the team has a great attitude about the decisions.

Alexandra DiMatteo and Amanda Doolin will be representing the B boat and Elizabeth Euiler and Chelsea Wakeham will take control of the A boat, who Dietz is counting on to win first place.

Only the first and second Varsity 8 boats and the Varsity 4 boat will compete for points. The Single race will include three rowers from UMass, Emily Boucher, Kimberly Patrick and Ellis Brewster.

After this regatta training will diminish gradually as they begin to taper for the Atlantic 10 championships.

Eric Mansfield can be reached at eamansfi@student.umass.edu.

UM hosts 9-way meet

By Michael Counos
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams will host the Nine-Way Meet this weekend in Amherst. UMass will be competing against Albany, Amherst, Holy Cross, Hartford, Trinity, Central Connecticut State University, Boston College, Williams and Yale.

Both the men's and women's teams began the season with third place finishes at the Connecticut Invitational. Each squad will have some tough competition this weekend. Alex Leuchanka, a freshman of Albany won the 10,000-meter run last weekend at the Duke Invitational and won American East conference track honors as did Laura Cummings of Albany, who placed first in the women's 3,000 meter steeplechase.

BC and CCSU bring experienced sprinters to the table as well as Amherst, which has a strong distance team and excels in the field events.

To combat their opponents, the Minutemen will have a variety of athletes of different ages to help the team. Upperclassmen such as Tyler Cotto will lead the sprinting team, after a successful indoor season as well as underclassmen such as freshmen Joe Doyle and Nick Otis who had successful indoor seasons in the mid-distance events and look to continue that success in the spring. Sophomore hurdler and jumper Zachary Koncki qualified for the New England Championships last weekend in the long jump and 110-meter hurdles, and will likely lead the jumping events. Tyler Cotto will lead the sprinting team, coming off a successful indoor season during the winter.

Both the men and women have strong throwing teams. Senior Chris Vercollone, who won the javelin throw last weekend, throwing for the fifth-best distance at UMass, will be a factor. Lisa Wilson, a thrower for the women, excels in the shot put, discus and hammer throw.

The meet begins at 11:30 a.m. on Saturday. UMass will also host the A-10 Championships later in the spring.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Brian Miller completes a vault during a competition last year. The Minutemen are hosting this weekend's nine-way meet, which will feature schools from the Northeast.

UM finishes road trip against Dukes

UMass looking for 4th road win

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

There's no denying that the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has picked up its season while competing on the road.

After obtaining a 3-4 record from their first seven games (five home, two away), the Minutewomen traveled to Stony Brook to begin a six-game road trip. The first five games on the road for UMass produced a 3-2 record with three straight Atlantic 10 conference victories against George Washington, Richmond and Temple.

Even midfielder Merritt Cosgrove noted the effects of being on the road, and the toll it has taken on the team.

"We've been traveling a lot and having really good luck with that. We've been traveling so much it's almost like a routine," Cosgrove said.

But before the Minutewomen return home, they will pass through Pittsburg, Pa., on Friday to take on Duquesne.

"We're going to be in the moment, just take it one game at a time," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We know Friday ... it's going to be important for us to get adjusted to the game and then get refocused for Saturday's practice back here in Amherst."

The game against the Dukes (6-7, 1-2 A-10) is more than just a simple conference game, as Duquesne hosts the A-10 tournament at the end of the month.

"We're excited to have the game up in Duquesne, they have a new field there. It's great to get back home, but we've got to take it one game at a time," Venechanos said.

Statistically, the Dukes lead the way in almost every category. Not only does Duquesne outscore the Minutewomen with unassisted goals (101-90), but also are ahead with assisted goals (50-36).

Against Temple last week, Venechanos witnessed the assisting UMass offense, which she feels will be a key element in the game against Duquesne.

"It was a complete team effort. I was excited to see a lot of assisted goals, and that's going to be important for their upcoming games," Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen also fall behind the Dukes in free-position shots, just by a hair, as the Maroon and White have scored 27 to Duquesne's 30. Both teams attempted the free-position shot on 69 attempts.

The Minutewomen also trail in groundballs, 181-135, in draw-controls by a slim margin of 158-150 and caused turnovers, 99-65.

If there's one guiding light for UMass in the game against Duquesne, it comes from the Minutewomen's ability to clear the ball better than their opponent. Through its first 12 games of the season, UMass cleared 116 of a possible 137 balls, with the Dukes going 92-of-112 in the same category.

Over the past six seasons, the Minutewomen and Duquesne are knotted up in the series, both earning three victories over the other.

Since 2004, all of the games between UMass and the Dukes have been close, featuring a pair of games that resulted with a one goal difference.

"We're looking great. I think we have really good energy, and practices have been going really good this week, so I think it's going to be a really competitive game," Cosgrove said.

Duquesne has won the past two competitions between the two sides, earning an 11-10 win in 2008, and escaping with a 15-14 result in last year's double-overtime thriller.

Once the final whistle sounds in the match against the Dukes, the Minutewomen return to McGuirk Stadium on Sunday to begin its final stretch of games. The final three games before the A-10 postseason are against St. Bonaventure, Saint Joseph's and La Salle.

It still remains in question whether or not the Minutewomen will have better luck for the upcoming home stand than they did earlier in the season. Venechanos, however, is excited regardless of the previous home stand.

"It's great to get back home," Venechanos said.

The game against Duquesne begins at 1 p.m. today.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Riley Perry brings the ball up the field during the March 10 game against Yale. The Minutewomen will play their sixth road game this weekend against Duquesne.

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG
http://dcsports.com/dailycollegiansports

Defense bringing goals to UMass

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Since beginning conference play, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has followed the theory that the best offense is a good defense.

Prior to opening their Atlantic 10 schedule, the Minutewomen (6-6, 3-3 A-10) struggled on offense, failing to reach double-digits in goals in six consecutive games. However, in its last three contests against conference foes, the UMass defense has held its opponents to under 10 scores.

It was on display last weekend when it limited attack opportunities for Temple in a 16-7 win.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos was pleased to see her team continue the strong play on its side of the field.

"It was great to see some our defenders chipping in, scoring some goals, and that's important," Venechanos said. "We've been talking about playing team defense the last few weeks so it was great to see that. Katie Florence back there was holding strong and made some key saves."

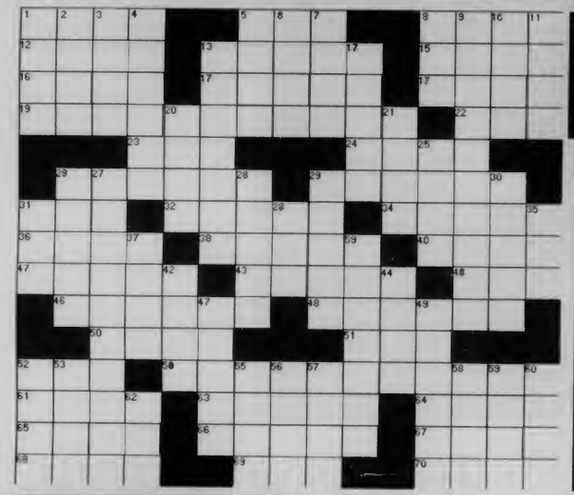
While being ranked in the middle of the pack for offense in the A-10 with 10.5 goals per game, the Minutewomen are at the top of the conference on defense. UMass trails only La Salle in the A-10 in goals against average (9.67), making it the only other team allowing under double digits.

"We put in a new defense at the beginning of the season so we knew it would take some time to get used to it," Venechanos said. "Working on the slide patterns, I think we've got them down pat, and now we're just going out there and taking more chances. We're playing together as a unit, we've been doing some matchups within that, and we've been able to adjust game to game."

On the attack, Venechanos wants to see more passing and assisted goals from the Minutewomen. This season, UMass is tied with Saint Joseph's for sixth in the conference in assists per game with three. The Hawks (2-10, 0-3 A-10), however, average three fewer goals per game than the Minutewomen.

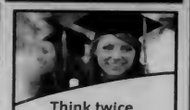
En route to its 16-goal outburst against the Owls, UMass showed the passing that Venechanos has been looking for. The Minutewomen tied a season-high with eight assists, as seven different players scored goals. Jesse O'Donnell and Nina Sarcoria each added three assists, while O'Donnell recorded six points on the day with a hat trick. The first occasion that UMass had as many assists was in an 18-8 victory over Connecticut in the third contest of the season.

"It was another complete team effort, and I was excited to see more assisted goals, and that's going to be important in the upcoming games," Venechanos said.



Rather than taking on defenders 1-on-1, the Minutewomen have made it a priority to distribute the ball. The game plan will be no different this weekend when UMass takes on Duquesne and St. Bonaventure.

"Were going to have a fast-paced passing attack and we'll look more for openings that are not so much on the drive," senior midfielder Merritt Cosgrove said. "We want more of a passing attack to get more assists."



Jay Asser can be reached at jjasser@student.umass.edu.

comics

CROSSWORD

THE CHAMP

Think twice. Borrow once.

Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION

800.852.5886

umassfive.org

StudentChoice

UMass Amherst Quincy?

Take UMass Amherst home with you this Summer

Three Summer Sessions

200+ ONLINE classes

REGISTER NOW!

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST

Continuing & Professional Education

ACROSS

1. Expectorate
5. Possesses
8. Carve in stone
12. Pledge
13. King
15. Story
16. Affirm
17. Muse of love poetry
18. A Freudian stage
19. Rebuke
22. Exercise place
23. Negation of a word
24. Gawk at
26. Acknowledgment
29. Pal
31. Charge
32. Escargot
34. Lustrous fabric
36. Young sheep
38. Gang
40. Flame
41. Normal
43. Cutting this can make you cry
45. How old one is
46. Sign up
48. Twice as much
50. Distinctive flair
51. Registered nursing assistant
52. Tavern
54. Diamondback
61. "Oh, my!"
63. Pandemonium
64. Albacore or bluefin
65. Tardy
66. Not working
67. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
68. Encounter
69. Get married
70. Charge per unit

DOWN

1. Fly high
2. Asphalt
3. Detail
4. King's chair
5. Ache
6. Winged
7. Stiff hair
8. Estimated time of arrival
9. Beside the point
10. A potter's material
11. Steering mechanism
13. Taking a break
14. Turbine part
20. Gestures of acceptance
21. Auspices
25. Green thing on a tree
26. Stop
27. Compensate
28. Fortuneteller's card
29. Liquid
30. Requiem
31. A common virus
33. Charged particle
35. Born
37. Sphere
39. Most destitute
42. Teller of untruths
44. Religious sisters
47. A light informal meal
49. Light teasing repartee
52. Ointment
53. Wings
55. Unfreeze
56. Adhesive strip
57. Not quiet
58. Certain something
59. Make a sweater
60. Lack of difficulty
62. Collection

Yesterday's crossword:
It was clueless, so are we, we apologize

Yesterday's Collegian featured by far our most difficult crossword puzzle of the semester. Though lecturing professors were probably pleasantly perplexed to see a few more students looking at them instead of staring intently at our Comics page, the majority of our puzzle-solving readers were enraged, and for this we are sorry. The puzzle was clueless, and perhaps you think we are too for making this error, but we'd like to apologize and ask that you forgive us. There are no excuses, but in case it helps, yesterday's crossword was not an extension of the theme of our recent April Fool's Day issue; we weren't trying to mess with you - the mistake was accidental. If you need a place to vent, you can contact us, send us a letter to the editor and comment through DailyCollegian.com. We'd love to be able to promise that all of our future issues will be flawless, but odds are that some of them, perhaps including the paper you're reading now, won't be. So, sorry in advance for our future mess-ups, but, hey, there's always Sudoku.

-Collegian Staff

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

SMBC by Zach Weiner — smbc-comics.com

Oopsies!

9	1	5					4
		8		6
6					8		3
3	9			8		7
			1	7
2		1			6			4
						2
8			5	3	2	1

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass

Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!

On site laundry,
off street parking.

Basketball and Tennis Courts.

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffton village.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 -
Life will teach you many lessons but the ability to fly may not be one of them.

pisces Feb. 19 -
Never experiment with the crosswords via "Blue's Clues" formatting.

aries Mar. 21 -
Want an awkward evening? Take the bus tonight and explain what "two dogs in a bath tub" is to a random stranger.

taurus Apr. 20 -
You just lost the game.

gemini May. 21 -
Evacuation plan #142: Hide in the Integrated Science Building. Its made of scientific infallibility.

cancer Jun. 22
You are the reason the clues left us. You never appreciated them so they packed up and left. By the way, you owe alimony.

leo Jul. 23 -
Do you ever wonder if Pauly Shore wants a cracker?

virgo Aug. 23 -
It is kind of fun to think of Arnold Schwarzenegger as the Pope. Correct me if I'm wrong.

libra Sept. 23 -
Is your underwear too restrictive? Bananna hammocks are to wear for both boys and girls.

scorpio Oct. 23 -
Before you engage in your daily meals, do not forget to spill some beverage for Biggie.

sagittarius Nov. 22 -
Alert! Edward Cullen set the bar for slow-motion, sparkly, windy and sexy entrances for males in film.

capricorn Dec. 22
The Care Bears do not just ask you to touch yourself, they make you do it.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

---

www.amherstsales.com
www.AmherstMARentals.com
413.549.1398 Student Rentals

SERVICES

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

---

Pregnant? Want to talk?
Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst-4 Bedroom/2 Bath, 2 car garage. June Occupancy, $2000+. Near bus stop. Skibiski, Realtor. 586-1827

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

SUNNY/HIGH: 61 LOW: 31 | www.DailyCollegian.com | MONDAY, APRIL 12, 2010

'Paper Jam' kicks off Southwest Week

Kicking off 2010's Southwest Week is "Paper Jam," a six-act "battle-of-the-bands" concert event hosted by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Southwest Area Government. The event will take place at 6 p.m. tonight in the Hampden Courtyard.

Southwest Week is hosted annually by the Southwest Area Government. Posters and online event pages advertise the week as a "pseudo road trip." Each day's activities are themed as a different U.S. city.

Today is "Boston, Mass." day. A run will be held around the Southwest Residential Area at 5 p.m., followed by the "Paper Jam" concert an hour later.

The concert features six bands of different music genres playing and competing, "battle-of-the-bands" style. The acts will be judged by hosts from WMUA's radio show, "Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk," and emceed by local duo, Solo Sexx.

Leading off the event is Leisure Colony, a Northampton-based band formed last year.

They'll be followed by Bubonic Souls, an Amherst funk/soul/rock band.

Third up is Darlingside, a string-rock quintet based in Northampton.

Fourth in the lineup is The Telephone Company, an acoustic rock band from Amherst.

On Trak and Malado, a rap/funk band from Springfield, Mass., perform next. The band won the University Programming Council's "Battle of the Bands" last year, receiving the opportunity to open for the annual spring concert.

The event will end with a performance by Bella's Bartok from Amherst, a 13-member outfit who describe themselves as an "acoustic gypsy punk circus band," according to their MySpace.com profile.

Tuesday is "New Orleans, La." day and will begin at 5 p.m. with shirt tie-dying. A comedy night will take place at 7 p.m. in the Hampden Patio with comedian Moody McCarthy headlining. Berkshire Dining Commons will also host their annual spring barbecue.

Wednesday is "Carnival Day" and has an "Austin, Texas" theme. Southwest will have inflatables and activities such as eurobungy, bungee run, pedestal joust, a mechanical bull and a "mega obstacle course" presented by the Residential Leadership Association. A wing-eating contest will also take place with chicken from Berkshire.

Thursday, "Hollywood, Calif.," will have a special showing of "The Hangover" on Southwest Beach starting at 8 p.m.

Friday, "Las Vegas, Nev.," will feature a casino night at Berkshire with table games such as blackjack, roulette, craps and Texas Hold 'Em. There will also be two slot machines and an inflatable money machine. Local establishments have made donations, which will be used as prizes for the casino night.

For full coverage of "Paper Jam," go to page 5.

—Collegian News Staff

Still perfect in A–10

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Senior Carly Normandin swings at a pitch during Friday's 3–0 win over Charlotte. UMass won both games over the weekend over the 49ers, improving its conference record to 6–0.

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team now stands alone atop the Atlantic 10 standings.

Coupled with Fordham's sweep over St. Louis, UMass' weekend sweep over Charlotte leaves the Minutewomen as the only remaining team with a perfect record in A-10 play.

UMass' win (25-7, 8-0 A-10) was led over the weekend by pitcher Sara Plourde, who recorded a no-hitter in Friday's 3-0 win and then won her 24th game of the season in a 5-1 victory on Saturday.

"It's hard for a pitcher to come back and face a pitcher back-to-back, but Sara did a nice job," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said after Saturday's win.

Plourde had a no-hitter through three innings against the 49ers (25-10, 4-2 A-10), until Kendra McCall roped a single into right field. McCall ended the day with two of Charlotte's three hits on the day, and was the only Charlotte batter to not become a strikeout victim of Plourde on the weekend.

UMass	5
Charlotte	1
UMass	3
Charlotte	0

McCall was later stranded at second base as Plourde struck out the side in the inning for three of her 17 strikeouts on the day.

The 49ers took advantage of a few Minutewomen defensive miscues in the sixth inning to score their only run of the weekend. After Lindsey Holloman doubled to start the inning, McCall recorded her second hit of the day on a bunt single that slipped past the grasp of third baseman Teea Rodgers and shortstop Whitney Williams.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Professor receives fellow honor

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

In honor of his contributions to his scientific field, University of Massachusetts professor of polymer science and engineering Thomas Russell has been named a Fellow of the Materials Research Society (MRS).

Russell's recognition as a MRS Fellow, which is a lifetime honor for the UMass professor, stems from his "seminal contributions in the processing of thin-block copolymer films to achieve well-organized nanostructures, and pioneering efforts to implement X-ray and neutron methods for polymer films and interfaces."

In addition to his standing as a professor at the University, Russell is also the director of the Materials Research Science and Engineering Center on the UMass campus.

The Center, which features 40 University faculty members from seven different departments, has research collaborations and outreach programs with over a dozen institutions.

Additionally, the Center has received support over the past 29 years from the National Science Foundation for interdisciplinary research and education in polymer science and engineering in Amherst.

According to the Center's website, an average of 15 percent of all Ph.D. degrees in the United States are awarded to those in field of polymer science.

Russell's MRS honor was recently celebrated at the Society's Spring Meeting in San Francisco over a three-day period last week, where Russell was named a guest at a special reception for the new Fellows.

Of the new Fellows, only 30 were named for 2010, with the total number from all years being less than 100.

According to the organization's website, MRS Fellows may be invited to participate, on occasion, in special Fellows Receptions and in projects which may require their advisory input on important issues of concern for the organization.

In a letter announcing Russell's achievement at being named an MRS Fellow, President David Ginley said, "the title of MRS Fellow honors those MRS members who are notable for their distinguished research accomplishments and their outstanding contributions to the advancement of materials research, worldwide."

He added, "The maximum number of new Fellow appointments each year is limited to 0.2 percent of the current MRS membership. The distinction is thus highly selective."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Outreach department relocated

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

With the reorganization of outreach activities at the University of Massachusetts, the staff of the outreach marketing and technology department has made the offices of University Relations their new home, with all intents and purposes of increasing the access to communication resources.

The move was in response to the University's efforts to strengthen its mission of providing additional communication resources to schools, colleges and the various departments on the UMass campus, according to associate vice chancellor for University Relations Amy Glynn.

"As UMass Amherst works to position itself among the top national public research institutions, our newly expanded team will help meet the communication and marketing needs of the entire campus," Glynn said. "This effort will be collaborative and comprehensive, encompassing print, web, media relations and social media."

The University Relations department at UMass hosts a staff of professionals who provide expertise in the areas of writing and editing, as well as graphic design, media and public relations, social media, photography and event planning, according to their website.

The staff members of University Relations use multimedia to further communication with several different mediums including print, web, video and electronic communications.

With the addition of the outreach marketing and technology department to University Relations, the office will also launch a new unit which, according to Glynn, will pursue additional revenue generating markets.

The marketing and new business development office, as it is known, will focus on Continuing Professional Education (CPE) and non-traditional learners.

"Expanding educational opportunities to others allows the University to meet its core mission while also increasing revenue sources for the campus," Glynn said.

Glynn expressed confidence for the project as a whole, saying she was "pleased" that the effort was being led by the executive director of the new unit, Michael Grabscheid.

"Michael brings a wealth of experience and an understanding of how to position the University competitively," she said.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian presents
PAPER JAM
THE FIRST BAND BATTLE BEGINS

ARTS & LIVING

Local bands jam out

The Collegian profiles the band lineup for this afternoon's "Paper Jam." The bands hail from across the Pioneer Valley, including a number of student acts.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutemen fall to Tigers

In its third one–goal loss of the season, UMass fell at Garber Field to Towson on Saturday, snapping its four–game winning streak.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Over spring break, Collegian columnist Lauren Vincent learned just how much she had come to appreciate the beauty of nature in New England.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, hosted by the Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 9, 2010

Strive '4' perfection

Minutewomen looking to go 4-0 in A-10 vs. Duquesne

TENNIS

The Massachusetts tennis team hopes to win its fifth straight match at home against Albany. The Minutewomen have shut-out their last two opponents.

SEE PAGE 12

ROWING

The Massachusetts rowing team heads to New Jersey for the Knecht Cup. That same water is going to be where UMass competes next week during the Atlantic 10 tournament.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 50

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR Sara Cods
MANAGING WEB EDITOR Pete Rizzo
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Prowse
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rukon-Miller
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently founded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson
COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Campus to Career
Ultimate Money Skills
Tuesday, April 13
5:30 p.m., Memorial Hall
Find out more on the appropriate use of credit, designing your own budget, taking control of student loan debt and how to protect yourself against identity theft!
FREE REFRESHMENTS
To register visit the Alumni Association website at UMassAlumni.com/students.
Enter to win a UStore gift card at all Campus to Career events.
The first 10 students who bring their UMass Amherst Alumni Association coupon from the UMass Amherst coupon book receive a special gift.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 7, 2010
Sponsored by the Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association in partnership with Monster.com and Bank of America.

Peace Corps at UMASS Amherst
Wednesday, April 14
Information Session
3:00 PM
508 Goodell Building
UMASS Amherst
Peace Corps
Life is calling. How far will you go?
www.peacecorps.gov 800.424.8580

Indie-rock group Xiu Xiu to perform at Hampshire College

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM
Xiu Xiu is on tour to promote their latest album "Dear God, I Hate Myself." They will perform at Hampshire College today.

Jamie Stewart's joyfully despairing musical project, Xiu Xiu, will perform at Hampshire College today. Fresh on the heels of their latest release, "Dear God, I Hate Myself," this self-reflexive indie-rock group combines incredible pop hooks with chaotic (but not unnecessary) instrumentation and an ever-present surge of emotion.

Formed in 2000 by IBOPA alumni Jamie Stewart and Cory McCulloch, Xiu Xiu immediately began to receive attention with their 2002 release "Knife Play." But it wasn't until they released their 2004 album, "Fabulous Muscles," that they truly began to receive the acclaim they deserved.

Although from that point on their music was infused with a slightly more pop-oriented bent, there was never a question of compromise. Lineup shifts and changing styles of songwriting meant that the band never stagnated. With the current lineup of Stewart and keyboardist Angela Seo, you can most likely expect a show with a slightly dance-oriented sound. But one can never be sure, due to Xiu Xiu's frequent changing of lineups for shows. It is entirely possible that this will be a personal experience, with just Jamie Stewart on guitar. As of late, a Nintendo DS has been added to the sound. There are many possibilities for what may happen this Monday night. All of them, if you are a Xiu Xiu fan (or think that you could be), will be well worth pursuing.

Xiu Xiu's sound is one of contradiction. Equally speaker-rattlingly dissonant and delicately beautiful, this band's influences range far and wide. One obvious point of reference includes androgynous mope legend, Morrissey. But beyond that, one can surprisingly find traces of everything from Eastern classical to video-game music. It is always fascinating to hear just how Jamie Stewart is going to voice his despair.

One reason for this band's appeal lies with their hook-writing abilities, which have sharpened and improved over time. Off of the latest release, we have what may in fact be Xiu Xiu's catchiest song yet, "Chocolate Makes You Happy." This ode to bulimia layers hook after hook in a consistently enjoyable and memorable manner. The fact that, in this case, the despair does not seem to be that of the lead singer's has led to a bit of backlash from some of the more loyal fan base. A similar thing happened with the release of "Fabulous Muscles," which was their poppiest effort to date at the time. However, this very fact also means that it has the capacity to introduce Xiu Xiu to something resembling the public sphere. "Dear God, I Hate Myself" may be this band's watershed release, if the mainstream has the capacity to deal with music that thematically relates to something like reality.

Xiu Xiu is not a band for everyone. They deal with difficult subject matter, and their music has the capacity to be quite abrasive. But in addition to being a fantastic pop songwriter, Jamie Stewart captures the joy and despair of actual existence in his music. That is no easy task. If this sounds like a show that would appeal to you, be sure to head to the Hampshire College Red Barn on April 12.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

Start here
X Attention off-campus students — the Census needs you to return your form.
There are special programs in place to count students on campus. But if you live off campus, you have to complete your own 2010 Census form that arrived in the mail. By participating, you're helping future students enjoy some of the same benefits and services that you have today. It's just 10 questions and takes about 10 minutes. So fill it out and mail it back.
WE CAN'T MOVE FORWARD UNTIL YOU MAIL IT BACK.
United States Census 2010
IT'S IN OUR HANDS
2010census.gov
Paid for by U.S. Census Bureau

Students walk barefoot, raise awareness of shoe-less societies

The Daily Collegian (PSU)
Via College News Network

A barefoot Jamieson Cox climbed up onto the ledge of the grass island outside the Thomas Building to speak to the 60 shoeless students standing at attention.

"Forty percent isn't a joke," he said. "That's almost half the world's population."

Cox (junior-management) was citing the percentage of people who live without shoes daily, which inspired him and other Penn State students to organize the "Bare Your Soles Awareness Walk" that took place Thursday.

Participants ditched their kicks and marched through the University Park campus to raise awareness of the national "One Day Without Shoes" event and to promote TOMS, a philanthropic organization that sends one pair of shoes to a child in need for every pair it sells.

Organizers hoped to spread awareness of TOMS' movement and encourage students to consider the issue, TOMS member Maggie Stuart (sophomore-marketing) said.

Onlookers stopped in their paths in the HUB-Robeson Center to watch as the barefoot crowd – which swelled to over 100 people – packed together, smiled and raised their filthy feet in the air for a group photo on the main staircase in the HUB.

And though shoes may not seem like a survival necessity, march organizer Olivia Orth (senior-psychology) said they are more important than most people realize.

"Living without shoes causes so many health problems," she said. "It can even lead to infection and amputation."

She also said many schools in such nations require shoes as part of the uniforms and students can not attend class without them.

Morgan Pfeiffer (junior-wildlife and fisheries science) participated in the walk with one bare foot and one shoe on. During a recent trip to South Africa, she got a bad cut on her foot after walking barefoot that became infected. She now needs antibiotics and constant foot protection.

"Just goes to show it's really a problem," Pfeiffer said.

The barefoot march was very uncomfortable despite the nice weather, Lauren Byerly (sophomore-graphic design) said. But she kept walking.

"Every time I hit a rock, I tell myself that there are people dealing with a lot worse every single day," Byerly said.

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
- PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
- PERRY APTS.
- 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
- LANTERN COURT APTS.
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.

400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN PRESENTS
PAPER JAM
★ THE FIRST BAND BATTLE BEGINS ★
Host
Solo Sexx
Featuring
Leisure Colony
Bubonic Souls
Bella's Bartok
The Telephone Company
On Trak & Malado
Darlingside

HAMPDEN COURTYARD
SOUTHWEST
APR. 12 | 6:00
FREE | PRESENTED WITH
UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION Sprint Southwest Area Government

The DAILY COLLEGAIN
IS NOW HIRING
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER
looking for student to manage
COLLEGIAN.COM and our related web for the coming FALL 2010 semester
with relevant
@dailycollegian.com

SUPERCUTS SOCCERFEST
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS SPORT MANAGEMENT DEPARTMENT 2010
May 1, 2010
UMass
Amherst, MA
- 6v6 Tournament Format
- Top-Gun & Just-For-Fun Divisions
- Each team guaranteed at least 3 games
- Registration fee as low as $10/player
- Trophies & great prizes for division winners!
- Registration Deadline: April 21st

www.soccerfest.org
10% of registration fees donated to the Chituka Village Project and additional donations will be collected on-site www.bandabolasportsfoundation.org
Coca-Cola OFF THE WALL GAMES CLIF BAR COUNTRY NISSAN

Nathan's FAMOUS
OFFICIAL Hot Dog Eating Contest
Dear Students,
On April 22, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.
To register, just send us an email to: jtower@mail.aux.umass.edu or sign-up at all DCs and Bluewall, the Hatch, Southwest Café, Whitmore Café, and the Pita Pit.
Best of luck,
Dining Services
UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students
To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, including bun during a specific time.
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
Taste OF UMASS
*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 12, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Skills for real problem solving

The heated nature of contemporary politics has brought out legions of commentators lamenting the lack of a civil discourse in America, that zealous "wackos" have hijacked the political discourse for their own agenda.

Harrison Searles

However, this belief is mistaken, as is the entire concept that political disagreement can be resolved by meeting the opposing side at a table and having a civil discussion that yields a concrete plan is little more than a castle in the sky.

While it is certainly true that American politics tend to be aimed at a moderate, centrist path, individuals have different ideas and theories about how the world works and these underlying differences cannot be mollified through civil discussion.

Whenever the media discusses a problem like the current recession, the topic of discussion is not the events that caused it, but rather what can be done by the government in order to mollify its effects.

Ergo, two professional experts can be brought onto a television program like "Meet the Press," discuss their opposing opinions about policy concerns, but, despite the best intentions of the host, not even touch the ideas that truly create their opposition.

What this leads to is not true dialogue as understood as a means of debating the solutions to problems facing society and as a means of philosophical exposition for ideas, but rather as a means of finding a centrist position that waters down perspectives to make them palatable to enough individuals to gain support for them.

The problem of civil discourse is also acerbated by the fact that it is so often limited to concerns involving practical policy rather than the theoretical perspectives of each ideology.

The emphasis on civil discussion in politics has been placed more on "civil" than on the "discussion" – it is expected that everyone be moderate and willing to compromise at the end of the day, but what this results in is not so much discussion but in a race to the political ideology that most appeals to the majority without any attention on the content of the ideology.

Compromise cannot occur between individuals whose paradigms and traditions are irreconcilable – the best that can happen is a debate regarding which tradition best solves the problems that are facing society. Whenever political commentators from whatever political perspective disparage a faction because they are not participating in the civil dialogue of American politics, a false accusation is made because they fail to consider the paradigmatic differences between different ideologies.

The ideas that we entertain have consequences in the perspective by which we view the world and understand the unfolding of events based on the paradigms our theories shape. For instance, take the comment often heard in economic policy discussions: "We can't do nothing."

To a Keynesian progressive, this assertion makes complete sense, but to an Austrian or Neoclassical conservative or libertarian it does not translate – such a statement is not intelligible according to their understanding of the world. At the same time, when the latter speaks of the benefits of a laissez-faire economic policy, it similarly does not translate into an intelligible concept for the former.

While all may be speaking the same semantics, the ideas that are being expressed are often so diametrically opposed that the level of true communication going on is on the same par as a monolingual English-speaker conversing with a monolingual German-speaker.

The problem of civil discourse is also acerbated by the fact that it is so often limited to concerns involving practical policy rather than the theoretical perspectives of each ideology.

The entire notion of dialogue becomes hijacked by those in the mainstream as a mechanism for ensuring that certain political paradigms remain categorized as "wacko" and that only a certain spectrum is kosher for mass consumption.

Of course, this is not a phenomenon with only negative consequences, no rational individual desires to hear the opinions of a Nazi so a certain amount of discrimination on the part of the media is positive, but it is when the spectrum expands to allow only a couple mainstream paradigms into the fold that such actions have severe consequences.

Much like the two-party system, this results in a race to the center that leaves the interior consistence and truth of the so-called solutions found via civil discourse on the back-burners in favor of finding something that can get 51 percent of the vote. But the true importance of dialogue is that it serves as a means of discerning which paradigm is best suited to providing a solution to the question at hand.

For this to occur American politics needs is radicalism as understood in context of its Latin root: radix; root, foundation; base; paradigms that are both logically consistent with their own principles and refuse to dilute themselves in order to become popular.

In the end, the entire concept of "civil discussion" in contemporary politics has become little more than a synonym for compromising one's beliefs in order to create a set of beliefs that is more acceptable to the majority.

It has become a means for hammering one's opposition into submission by taking away their platform and leaving them with no foundation to stand on. Without a doubt, it is unfruitful and unrealistic to expect that individuals of different political paradigms informed by differing theories of the chain of events will be able to resolve their differences and agree on a substantial policy.

Dialogue in politics must be focused on accepting the fact that sometimes we cannot agree and rather than debating concrete policies that focus their energy on discovering which paradigm is best suited to solve the problem.

Harrison Searles is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at hsearles@student.umass.edu.

Born-again 'nature freak'

Lauren Vincent

I used to be an urban elitist.

From a very young age, I rejected any geographical location that wasn't metropolitan. I grew up in a miniature city with a 20-minute bus ride into downtown Boston, but that wasn't good enough for me. I wanted to be in the heart of the action I wanted to live in a brownstone in Beacon Hill or the Back Bay, and nothing else would do.

I was against the idea of coming to the University of Massachusetts because, as I saw it, it was in the middle of nowhere. If it wasn't in or near a major city, I did not want to inhabit it. I really liked the school, but I wanted it to be in Boston. I didn't want to live next to cornfields and farms.

I didn't care that there was pretty foliage and mountains in the distance, I'd rather have looked at skyscrapers and taxis, listening to sirens and horns as I fell asleep.

I still love the feeling of the city and it would still be my ideal place to live. I love Boston especially, because it feels like home. But I've since learned to appreciate the beauty of rural New England in a way I never thought I would.

It's spring now, that weird combination of the end of winter and an early taste of summer, and we can finally be outside by choice.

We can even lay out in the sun on those weird almost 90-degree days and go inside because it's too hot, not too cold. The trees are starting to look less barren and there are flowers popping up all around us.

For spring break, I drove to Louisiana to do service work. I'd never traveled further than Washington D.C. other than in a plane, so I got to see the changes driving southbound.

I realized I'd sort of been living in a New England box and taking my surroundings for granted.

The land got gradually flatter, and there were less and less trees. It was different, but I didn't really pay much attention because that's what I expected.

It wasn't until we were driving back up north that I took notice of my surroundings. When we hit New York, everything started looking familiar and the familiarity was what struck me.

I realized I'd sort of been living in a New England box and taking my surroundings for granted. Before, if you asked me if I thought the pine trees and the hills were pretty, I'd have blown it off and probably not even answered you.

In the weeks since, I've been looking out the windows of my car and actually seeing what's outside.

I was going over the Calvin Coolidge Bridge from Northampton yesterday and realized there are mountains on both sides – and they're gorgeous. I felt ridiculous. What had I been doing before? Probably changing the radio station or texting, completely ignoring the beauty of nature.

As a college student, I get stressed out often and sometimes close my eyes and imagine I'm somewhere secluded and quiet, like on a beach in the Bahamas or even in a log cabin in the middle of a forest in Maine. I did this even when I shrugged off the concept of nature and held on tight to my dreams of a big city.

I never thought about how nice it was to get away from one and escape into somewhere where there's more land than people. Even now, I can look out my window and see mountains in the distance and realize that there's more to the world than my current problems.

I've been trying to reduce my carbon footprint for a while now, but on the more practical side of preserving the environment for future generations and being sustainable for economic reasons.

It just made sense to me to protect our resources. I never really said "I love the Earth," or considered myself "at one with nature." I simply didn't want to be irresponsible toward others. Obviously that's still a big motivation for "going green," but now I don't want to be irresponsible toward the Earth, either.

I don't want to destroy the beauty around us, now that I'm finally realizing that it's there. I can't believe how long it took me to open my eyes, but I'm glad I finally did.

I'm grateful that I didn't write off living so far outside a big city. I've come to realize that Amherst does not have anything less to offer than Boston.

And it offers a different kind of scenery, one that I'm just now excited to view. I'm a born-again New England lover and nature freak, and I'm proud of the transformation.

Lauren Vincent is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lvincent@student.umass.edu.

Six reasons why you should go to Paper Jam

1) It will rock your world.

2) How can "gypsy-folk-punk" not be good?

3) The Telephone Company will be there in more ways than one.

4) Berkshire DC is right there for your culinary convenience.

5) Finally, Monday is interesting again.

6) This weather is made for concerts.

Changed priorities

Alex Perry

When Barack Obama was elected president of the United States, a lot of people were relieved that George W. Bush's administration was coming to a close. Many believed that we would finally have a president not only interested in solving our nation's problems, but also capable of doing so. Obama successfully inspired hope in the majority of Americans; that he could change the way politics took place in Washington.

Boy, has he ever.

We are all currently living under the most partisan administration of all time.

At one point, I thought that I simply disagreed with Washington liberals about the solutions to the problems that face our country. I truly thought they had the best interests of the country at heart.

I no longer believe that.

The Democrats running the country right now don't care about you or me. All they care about is doing what is best for their party.

I truly believe that, now that I've seen what Democrats have done since Obama took office.

The number one issue facing Americans right now is the economy.

Democrats running the country right now don't care about you or me.

It's extremely simple. States, cities, towns, families and individuals are clamoring for an economic turnaround. The situation is dire for many, and Obama knows that. That should clearly be the President's top priority, but look at what Obama has done this past year. Since passing the stimulus bill, Obama has spent all his time trying to pass a health care bill many Americans did not want to begin with.

The health care bill is not going to solve any of our economic problems. It isn't going to reduce our nation's debt. It isn't going to create jobs and lower unemployment. None of this will happen as a result of the bill. That's reality.

So then why is Obama spending all of his time on a health care bill, that according to a recent CBS news poll, only 34 percent of Americans approve of, at a time when it absolutely should not be a priority? It's about liberal ideals, but even more importantly, it's about winning elections.

When this bill was passed, Obama made it possible for over 30 million Americans who don't currently have health care coverage to get some. I'm sure Obama and his comrades are banking on a couple of things. The first is that those 30 million Americans who will now have access to health care will forever be indebted to Democrats. Imagine if you were suffering with cancer and didn't have insurance because of your circumstances. The financial burden for most in this situation would be too much to bear. Now, suddenly, you are getting insurance because Democrats have forced the passage of an unpopular bill, despite evil Republicans doing all they could to stop it. Your life could be saved as a result of this. Knowing this, who would you vote for in the next election? Who are your family members going to vote for?

Democrats are essentially attempting to buy votes through health care. That's really what this comes down to. It is obvious why they don't care about the polls showing a lack of support because who cares about support at this moment? The polls are irrelevant. Obama getting a second term is irrelevant. This is about the long-term outlook for Democrats.

To make matters worse is the second thing Democrats are banking on – it would be complete political suicide for anyone to try to take health care away from 30 million people by repealing this bill, no matter how terrible it turns out to be. An individual would have to be insane to run on a platform that contains taking healthcare away from that many people. Good luck trying to get those votes. It just would never happen.

Many think Republicans are evil already, imagine if they try to pull the plug on health care for 30 million voters once this bill goes into effect?

It can't happen.

To top it all off, the bill is indeed terrible. It is – as I have written before – a blatant attempt to get us into a government-run health care system. In the interim, this bill will drive up health care costs for everyone and Americans will continue to suffer economically.

I am sure I am going to take a lot of heat for holding a view this cynical. I truly would love to live in a world where everyone could have affordable health care if they wanted it. This bill is not making health care more affordable, though. Just because conservatives oppose this bill does not mean that they are evil or want people to die. We conservatives just want to address the real issues. The real issue with health care is not that people don't have health care – it's why they don't have health care. People don't have health care because they either can't afford it or they just don't want it. I want to see a health care proposal that does something to solve that problem.

I oppose Democrats on this issue because I want quality health care to be affordable for everyone. Obama wants health care to win elections for Democrats. That is the change Obama has brought to Washington – the priority is no longer making America better, the priority is to get more votes for Democrats.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 12, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Local bands to rock Hampden at 'Paper Jam'

Known for their explicit freestyle lyrics and catchy beats, Solo Sexx will emcee "Paper Jam." The University Programming Council battle of the bands veterans also perform at a bi-monthly DJ night at Diva's Nightclub in Northampton.

Solo Sexx

Solo Sexx is the all-female rap and DJ group who will emcee "Paper Jam" tonight. The group is made up of two members, the Velvet Vulture, also known as Julez Sherratt, and the Vulga Vulva, also known as Heather McCormack.

Hailing from Amherst, the rap duo is a self-defined, "big middle finger to a consumerist, male-driven circle jerk of a hip-hop game that's been played against itself for far too long," according to their MySpace profile. Solo Sexx has the attitude to back it up, with rhymes that would make Kanye West blush. And Kanye would have a hard time finding something not to like about the group's beats and rhythm.

McCormack and Sherratt are quite accomplished rappers as well, able to incorporate free-style into their songs with ease. Song topics explore themes such as being broke and white, and even celebrate "being free to perform the self-pleasure their name is shouting," according to their MySpace page. They don't fall into the whole generic beats area of hip-hop, but instead have homebrewed beats.

There isn't anything not to like about Solo Sexx, making them the perfect "Paper Jam" emcees. Plus they're local, and they rap better than some of the big-name artists you might find out there today.

Solo Sexx also hosts a bimonthly Thursday DJ night at Diva's Nightclub, quite an impressive feat for a local rap group. The group does a number of big gigs in the area as well, and will perform at the annual Extravaganja in Amherst this weekend.

Solo Sexx gives the XX chromosomes something to shout about in rap, a largely male-dominated music genre. This is not your average, dime-a-dozen pop group singing about guys and girls in the club. This is Solo Sexx.

— Tappan Parker, Collegian Staff

Leisure Colony

Plaid-clad Hampshire College hipsters Leisure Colony will take to the stage first at tomorrow's "Paper Jam."

They'll play selections from their latest EP titled "Protectorate," as well as some of their older tracks. The album represents a new stage in the band's development, featuring a more accessible sound than their previous material as they continue to progress from a local college act to perhaps something more.

Leisure Colony is a rare example of a college band with a high level of musical maturity in an often disorganized college scene. The band's latest songs, if they had to be categorized, are alternative rock.

Leisure Colony's biggest success is their layered music. Their personalities mimic their music – intelligent, comedic and always musically curious. The bandmates – Paulo Menuez, Henry White, Josh Paul and David Herr – all hail from Hampshire College, with the one exception of the band's fifth member, Martin Zimmermann from Bennington College in Vermont. Together, they travel between the two schools, playing shows in each area.

All of the members exude the laidback quality that permeates the Hampshire College atmosphere, allowing the band's chemistry to remain peaceful and productive. There isn't a weak member of the group. Many of the members live together and their constant conversations about musical theory, note and rhythm choice, and multimedia additions to their performances create a selection of songs that will likely get stuck in your head long after the show.

None of their lyrics are really about anything. According to guitarist David Herr, all of the lyrics are supposed to be fun and some are meant to exude some subtle sexuality.

Leisure Colony has been playing together for a year and a half. They know more about music than you do. Go hear them.

—Michael Phillis, Collegian Staff

Bella's Bartok

Bella's Bartok is hard to define. Luckily, they have done the hard work and defined themselves for their fans. "Sometimes Western Massachusetts' premier Acoustic Gypsy Punk Circus Band, and sometimes Western Massachusetts' premier Gypsy Balkan Rockabilly Fusion Party in a Box (just squeeze)," they write on their MySpace page.

They are what you would expect if Gogol Bordello got drunk one night and was struck with inspiration. That is to say, the band is a combination of awesome, silly and just plain weird.

The Amherst-based band has a number of members, all of whom contribute wholeheartedly to the group. Members include Asher Putnam on vocals and acoustic guitar; Steve 'the Wolfman' Torres on bull fiddle; Amory Drennan on trumpet and banjo; James Bill on lead guitar; Mark Schilling on drums; Sean Klaiber on trombone; Monte Weber on violin, Tony Barone on saxophone; and new members Vashti Poor on vocals, glockenspiel and harmonica; and Doug Wright on accordion.

Bella's Bartok deliver fun live performances, with music that makes anyone want to dance. The band is basically about gathering people together and having a good time. "We are a 10-piece band and so we are basically our own party wherever we go. We are a party cluster of party cells whose raison d'etre is to assimilate and multiply," said James Bill in a profile piece by the Valley Advocate.

Bella's Bartok is like a band of circus clowns who manage to make what may sound like a weird concept work beautifully when pulled together. They are, however, marked by the originality one might expect from a homegrown Amherst gig; their music is anything but generic. They are well worth hearing, and after the initial shock of their peculiar musical style wears off, you may even find yourself dancing.

— Tappan Parker, Collegian Staff

Bubonic Souls

Bubonic Souls is an incredibly versatile and genre-melding outfit from Amherst. Featuring six members, the band channels funk, jazz, R&B, soul and rock into a tight, sultry style that does ample justice to the group's wide array of influences.

Already a well-established name in the area music scene, the flirtatiously funky Bubonic Souls consist of Josh Paul on drums, Willis Kinsley on bass, Maxwell on guitar and vocals, Rachel Weiss on guitar and vocals, Ben Nazzaro on keyboard and vocals and Tim Dietrick on saxophone. With a stacked lineup, they bring a lush yet hard-hitting sound to both their recordings and their energetic live shows.

Unabashedly showing inspiration from the likes of everything from James Brown to Massive Attack, the Souls balance their jam-band energy with soulful sensibility and their oh-so-hard-to-pull-off dual, male-female vocal stylings with deep instrumental prowess.

Since their formation in late 2006, the Bubonic Souls have already made quite a name for themselves in the regional music scene. They've won two Pioneer Valley battle-of-the-bands competitions, and regularly draw in impressive crowds to venues ranging from Five College campuses to NoHo nightclubs. Their skills and reputation have also earned them opening spots for various artists, including Eric Krasno, Plus Move and KRS-ONE. In addition, the Bubonic Souls' track "Like You Do" was featured in an episode of the television show "Californication" in December of 2009.

In Spring 2010, the Bubonic Souls will release their very first studio album, and have released several tracks from the upcoming album on their MySpace and homepage. They have a slew of upcoming shows through April and May leading up to their anticipated debut release, including "Paper Jam." For more information, visit Bubonicsouls.com.

— Dave Coffey, Collegian Staff

Bella's Bartok, a self described "Acoustic Gypsy Punk Circus Band," bring their signature musical stylings to the stage tomorrow, blending a range of instruments including cello, trumpet and accordion.

The Telephone Company

As the self-proclaimed, "Most hygienic band based out of Amherst, Mass.," The Telephone Company fuse a modern-day minimalist twist with grunge and punk undertones. Listening to The Telephone Company (or The Teleco, as they like to colloquially refer to themselves) is not unlike listening to the White Stripes perform a concert out of an Orchard Hill Residential Area dorm room (if, of course, the White Stripes actually had a bassist).

Hailing from the University of Massachusetts, the band has carved out a name for itself as a capable grassroots local act at venues around the area, such as The World War II Club and The Elevens in Northampton, and the El Cid Lounge in Ludlow, Mass. The Telephone Company has also performed live for UMass' radio station, 91.1 WMUA, from which several live cuts of their songs have been made available on their MySpace page.

The band consists of the relatively sparse line-up of Nick Bush on guitar and lead vocals, Isaac Simon on drums and Myles Heffernan on bass guitar. Bush brings a Cobain-meets-Casablanca style to the front-man position, while Simon and Heffernan lay down a solid rhythm section underfoot. Their sound is by all means no-frills in nature, but they don't disappoint, either. Ever the absurdists, the band explains, "we sound like Wilco, if Wilco turned up its guitars, and then got left outside for weeks until the band became all moldy and gross."

In addition to earning themselves a place of their very own in the local music scene, The Telephone Company also released their first EP, "The Better Nutrients of Tomorrow," in August of 2009. The Teleco have been playing out steadily in support of the collection of recordings, and will be playing at "Paper Jam," which begins at 6 p.m. tonight in the Hampden Courtyard in Southwest. They will also be playing live for 91.1 WMUA again on April 29. For more information, please visit Theteleco.com.

— Dave Coffey, Collegian Staff

On Trak & Malado

The hip-hop/R&B funk band, On Trak and Malado, has made their mark on and around Massachusetts, and will be contributing their musical talents to Paper Jam. On Trak and Malado consists of Preetam Sen, Felix Nwaobasi, Ani Sanyal, Alex Cabral, Josh Dodds, Gary Smith, Rhees Williams, Jules Belmont and Keith Blake.

On Trak and Malado made their big debut at last year's spring concert after winning the University Programming Council's battle of the bands. After opening for All Time Low, Girl Talk and Lupe Fiasco, On Trak and Malado made their name recognizable around the University of Massachusetts campus. Kaya Swainson, who attended both the battle of the bands event and the spring concert last year, recalls On Trak and Malado's catchy beats, great onstage presence and unique style.

On Trak and Malado's influences include, J Dilla, DJ Premier, Madlib, A Tribe called Quest, The Roots, Kayne West, Timbaland, Usher and Lupe Fiasco who they opened for at the spring concert.

In a documentary filmed by Marc Pitler about Malado's journey to spring concert 2009, Sen said, "This whole company started when we were in high school, we were doing our little rap thing separately, we decided to put it all together, make a little group." After forming On Trak entertainment in 2004, the band On Trak and Malado was created and in 2006 the group took off. With an eclectic mix of influences, Malado has no restraint on the type of music they produce. "I try not to limit myself as a musician, I don't like people saying I'm a rapper, they put themselves in a box," said Nwaobasi. "I'm more of an artist, if I want to make a pop record I'll make a pop record, if I want to make an R&B record I'll make an R&B record."

— Kaitlyn Bigica, Collegian Staff

Northampton-based band Darlingside pull at your heartstrings with elegantly crafted string components, paired with catchy rhythms and stunning harmonies. Their passion for performing has gained them much acclaim throughout the area.

Darlingside

Darlingside is a string-rock quintet based in Northampton. Their unique sound is born out of Don Mitchell's vocals and guitar; Auyon Mukharji's vocals, violin, mandolin and saz (a Turkish string instrument); David Senft's lead vocals, guitar, bass and keys; Sam Kapala's drums and pennywhistle; and Harris Paseltiner's vocals, guitar and cello.

The Band's sound is characterized by elegantly crafted cello-violin duets, soaring harmonies, catchy hooks and compelling beats. Carefully woven together, their careful pairing of traditional instrumentation and intermingled vocals is sure to pull on the heartstrings of fans.

"Our songs have adopted so many different qualities. There have been lots of unexpected turns from song to song and within each song," Mitchell said. "You'll find yourself in a new place all of the sudden," adds Auyon.

The band formed during their tenure at Williams College, and have since grown to share the stage with such big name acts as Nada Surf, Guster, The Format and The Ken Oak Band. Their musical influences range from Radiohead to Nickel Creek, Beethoven to Phoenix. Their first few months have been spent holed up writing new tunes in their crowded house (reminiscent of the Grateful Dead's 710 Ashbury, except with less substance-abuse and more granola). These five multi-instrumentalists are amped to tour Massachusetts, the greater Northeast and eventually Japan.

If their music isn't a love tap on your heart's left ventricle, then the guys themselves will surely win over the fickle. Their passaon to play is genuine, even though they set the lofty goal of touring Japan. Their aim is to be memorable, much like their band name.

But Darlingside doesn't turn their nose up at any venue as they continue to play around the valley. "We'll play anywhere. If there's a party around here, we'd love to play it. Whether it be the lawn of Baker or Japan, we'll do it," Mitchell said. Their "Paper Jam" performance today should be memorable for UMass fans, while for the band it will be just another stop on their way to Japan.

— Leigh Greaney and Pete Rizzo, Collegian Staff

Freni baffles Spiders

PITCHING from page 8

Gedman struggled mightily on Saturday, taking the loss in the second game of a double-header which ended on Sunday after it was postponed due to darkness on Saturday. Perhaps the squad's most promising pitcher earlier this season, his production has fallen off in his past two starts.

On Saturday, the lefty retired four batters, getting pulled after letting up eight runs, one earned, on six hits after 37 pitches. Two bases-on-balls to leadoff hitters Adam McConnell and Borlek and back-to-back doubles led to four runs given up in the opening frame for Gedman, putting his team in a deep hole and spoiling his start. The second inning got worse as a self-defeating error allowed a run and the Spiders tacked on three more to extend the lead, 8-3.

"Gedman wasn't sharp. He pitched a dominating game against St. Joe's and struggled last week against Charlotte. He just wasn't sharp today," Stone said.

In his first outing of the season, Gedman threw a complete game, putting his team in a one-run game going into the eighth inning against a talented Oklahoma team. After going four innings in a no decision against William & Mary in his next game, Gedman then through his second complete game came against St. Joe's, striking out a career-high 10 batters. Then, in his last start, the inconsistent hurler went four and two-thirds innings, allowing 13 hits and seven runs against Charlotte on April 4.

Stone believes that the success of his team lies in the starting pitching. It is clear that when they can keep their pitchers in the bullpen, the Minutemen are able to contend with their opponents. He believes in letting his starters fight through into late-game situations, as Sermo and Freini logged a combined 276 pitches, but is careful not to overwork them.

"You try and give your team a chance to win by choosing the players who go out there and you have to be confident in what they're doing, but you don't want to go to the point where they're not pitching effectively."

Tuesday's game will likely feature Isaac Oakley (1-1) taking the mound at Chestnut Hill against Boston College.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu

UMass wins in extras

BASEBALL from page 8

take a good short swing and drive the ball into the outfield and we just didn't do that. We could've scored a lot more runs if we executed better in those situations."

The series began on Saturday after Friday's game was postponed. The first game of the doubleheader ended with the Minutemen walking off with the victory in 13 innings.

Senior Mike Donato was hit by a pitch to begin the bottom of the 13th inning. After a walk to Brian Baudinet, junior Peter Copa hit a deep fly ball to left center. The runners tagged up with Donato heading to third base. He was able to score the winning run after the Richmond shortstop mishandled the ball on the relay.

Sophomore Leif Sorenson pitched six effective innings of one-run ball in relief to get the win. His effort followed starting pitcher Nick Serino who went seven strong innings, striking out 10 batters.

"[Serino and Sorenson] pitched very well," Stone said. "That was a good one to win, it made a difference for us. It was a battle all the way through and everyone was pulling for each other, so it was great."

The middle game was played in the span of two days. Action was suspended on Saturday due to darkness, and completed in the early afternoon on Sunday. Despite losing the middle game of the series, the Minutemen earned their first series win of the season.

"To get on the right track, to take a series is really important," Stone said. "It was great the way we responded as a team [after losing the middle game]. We were able to bounce back. I think we can play better. I really do."

Stone hopes his team is able to carry this series victory into what he calls a tough week ahead.

"We played a good home series and came out at the top end of that," Stone said. "That's got to give you a lot of confidence going forward."

Senior Bryan Leigh will start against Boston College on Tuesday. It will be his first start since March 17 against Oklahoma. UMass will then host Northeastern on Wednesday before traveling to Rhode Island for another three-game series.

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

Defense stilfes A-10's top offense in win

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

While the Massachusetts women's lacrosse offense outclassed St. Bonaventure 11-6, including a four-goal run to end the first half, it was the defense that won the game for the Minutewomen on Sunday.

The defensive side for UMass (7-7, 4-1 A-10) held off the Bonnies (7-7, 2-3 A-10), who are at the top of the A-10 with 12.54 goals per game entering the contest, to a single goal at the end of the first half.

The Minutewomen defense held St. Bonaventure to an unassisted goal in the opening minutes, a sure difficulty as the Bonnies lead the A-10 in assists per game as well with five.

"We kept continuing to fight," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

Another accomplishment for the Maroon and White defense was its ability to maintain St. Bonaventure in draw controls, holding it to a pair in the first half, despite the Bonnies topping the A-10 in the same category with just over 13.

In the first half, UMass' defense caused eight turnovers on the Bonnies, who sit dead center in the conference in turnovers per game, with just over 16.

Goalkeeper Katie Florence (seven saves) held her own as a part of the Minutewomen defense. Despite letting up three goals in the opening 11 minutes of the second half, two came from unassisted efforts, with the latter goal, scored by attacker Danielle Drabin, coming from a free-position shot.

Florence had a game-changing stop near the 17 minute mark. After midfielder Merritt Cosgrove shoved a St. Bonaventure defender and received a yellow card, midfielder Christina Hanley took a free-position shot on the sophomore goalkeeper. Florence saved the shot and gave the ball back to the Minutewomen offense resulting in two scores over a span of 30 seconds.

"[Florence] made some great saves in there, kept our defensive confidence up," Venechanos said. "That was important, that was pressed with adjusting to the tempo of the game. They were calling things really tight and we were able to move our feet more and keep them frustrated."

There was a play at nine minutes, 45 seconds to go in the second half that truly defined the defense. The Bonnies earned a free-position opportunity after a foul by midfielder Jordan Renna. Right after the whistle sounded, a triplet of defenders huddled around attacker Molly Hastrich to prevent her from getting anywhere near the net. The hounding resulted in a turnover by St. Bonaventure, and the ball back for UMass.

"They have a great one-two punch with Hanley and Hastrich," Venechanos said. "Both those two girls have 50 percent of the team's points. We made it a conscious effort to stop those two and have other players on their team try and step up and take that crown."

The defensive side of the Minutewomen also produced a physical game against the Bonnies. UMass committed 16 fouls over the entirety of the contest, 13 coming in the first half. St. Bonaventure responded with 23 fouls, 14 coming from the second half alone. Each team received three yellow cards as warnings to their physical contributions to the field.

"We knew going in that their team is really aggressive on the ball and they have fast, athletic players, and [physical play] sometimes is what happens," Venechanos said. "I feel like we did a really good job adjusting to it, [like] protecting, and trying to keep our sticks open, and keep our hands open."

The Minutewomen compete again next Friday when they take on Saint Joseph's at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The game's whistle will sound at 5 p.m.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

Pelletier, Lyons net hat tricks season nearly three minutes into the contest. The UMass defense, however, shut down St. Bonaventure for the rest of the period as the Minutewomen attack scored the remaining four goals to take a 4-1 lead into halftime.

LACROSSE from page 8

After Stephanie Hopkins and Danielle Pelletier scored back-to-back goals, the Bonnies responded with two goals to make it a 6-4 game. UMass continued to push the lead with three scores from Pelletier, Lyons and Nina Sarcona in the span of 71 seconds with 17:08 remaining.

Scoring was limited the rest of the game as the Minutewomen clamped down on defense to earn the 11-6 victory. Florence recorded the win in goal, making seven saves, while Tori Waheibi made 13 stops for St. Bonaventure.

Pelletier and Lyons led the UMass attack with Pelletier scoring four goals, tying a career-high which she set earlier this season. Lyons led all players with seven points on three goals and four assists, placing her sixth all-time at UMass for career assists with 46.

"I'm really proud of the courage our team showed," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said after the game. "They had a couple runs, we had a couple runs, and at the end I thought we did what we needed to win."

The Minutewomen will be at home next weekend with games against Saint Joseph's on Friday and La Salle on Sunday. The contest against the Explorers will be Senior Day for UMass.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Pitcher Sara Plourde throws to the plate in UMass' 3-0 victory on Friday against Charlotte. The sophomore struck out 13 batters while holding the 49ers hitless in the contest.

MAXWELL SPARKS/COLLEGIAN

Minutewomen led by Plourde, no-hit 49ers in Game 1 victory

SOFTBALL from page 1

"The bunt was okay, but we chased our glove instead of going through the ball," Sortino said. "The wind took the [double to the wall]. The first thing is I thought we were too close, basically the pitch hit her bat and the ball goes to the wall. You're in the winds' alley because it's right down the lane."

The bunt advanced Carol Buchan, who pinch ran for Holloman to third base, and she later scored on a bloop hit that Williams appeared to lose in the sun.

"I don't know what happened to Whitney, she must have lost the ball in the sun or something," Sortino said. "Characterstically, we're better on the short game than on that play."

Offensively, the Minutewomen had a stronger day at the plate on Saturday, knocking in five runs on six hits compared to three runs on four hits on Friday. UMass also saw a number of batters reach on Charlotte's three errors in the game.

The damage came against both Katy Hackett (three earned runs on four hits and three walks with two strikeouts) and Emily Jeffery (one earned run on two hits and three walks with five strikeouts) as the two each pitched three innings.

UMass first got on the board with three runs in the third inning. After a Michelle Libby single – who was later pinch ran for by Jordan Storro – and a Carly Normandin walk, Storro would score on a sacrifice fly by Kyllie Magill. Katie Bettencourt drew a walk in the next at-bat and then Meghan Carta hit a two-run double, increasing the score to 3-0.

"I thought we did much better at the plate," Sortino said of the offense. "I thought we had much better at-bats, I thought we looked much more focused and I thought we had a better demeanor, intent. I thought we took better cuts and I think we had a better plan in our head. I think yesterday we lacked a lot of focus."

In the fifth inning, Magill scored on a Sarah Reeves RBI single. Magill later drove in UMass' fifth run of the game in the sixth inning when a grounder she hit to first base made its way through Briana Gwaitney's legs.

Plourde was her usual self as she threw her fourth complete game no-hitter of the season in Friday's victory, but the sophomore had to share the spotlight in the 3-0 victory.

With Plourde and her counterpart Jeffery both holding onto no-hitters through the first three innings – Plourde was perfect until she walked the leadoff hitter of the sixth inning – it was sophomore Bettencourt who got the first hit of the game.

With one out in the bottom of the fourth inning, Bettencourt roped a 3-1 pitch over the 49ers shortstops glove for a stand up double. The hit broke up the bid for a no-hitter for Jeffery, who finished the game giving up four hits and two earned runs in six innings pitched while striking out seven.

After Bettencourt advanced to third base on a passed ball, Carta was the next Minutewomen to get to Jeffery. With a double to left center field, Carta drove in Bettencourt for her 17th RBI of the season.

"Timely hitting is what it is all about," Sortino said after Friday's contest. "We had some other opportunities and came up a little bit short."

Bettencourt got to Jeffery again in the sixth as No. 22 UMass looked for some insurance with only a 1-0 lead. After Magill reached after Gwaitney let a ground ball slip through her legs, Bettencourt battled back from a 0-2 count.

After evening the count at 2-2, Bettencourt hit her fifth home run of the season, taking Jeffery pitch to straight away center field.

"Well yesterday we worked really hard at being on time and getting your foot down and being in a good attacking position," Bettencourt said following Friday's win. "So today I was just trying to get there early and that allowed me to see the ball a lot better and I just took a good hack on a good pitch."

While Bettencourt gave Jeffery trouble, Plourde gave the 49ers lineup headaches as she cruised through seven innings without giving up just one walk and striking out 13 of the 22 batters she faced.

Plourde started out by striking out eight of the first nine batters of the game, including striking out the side in the second and third innings. The sophomore also struck out the side in the sixth after giving up a lead off walk to Lorena Vela.

"We worked in practice on moving pitches and leaving everything else up to the offense," Plourde said after Friday's game. "Our offense getting some runs in the middle of the game was very helpful so it takes a lot of pressure of the pitcher so you just do your job and hopefully they get the runs."

The victory was the 10th in a row for UMass, and the Minutewomen return to the road on Tuesday when the face off with Boston University. UMass beat the Terriers 3-0 last Tuesday in Amherst.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

THEOLOGY ON TAP
ASK THE PRIEST!
How come? Who? Why Is it? When? How?
What have you always wanted to ask a priest?
RENEW INTERNATIONAL'S THEOLOGY ON AP
Tuesday April 13th, 2010 7:30-9:30
Graduate Lounge UMass Campus Center
A relaxed Q and A session with Fr. Tom Schmitt & Fr. Gary Dailey from The Diocese of Springfield.
Sponsored by The Newman Catholic Center UMass, Amherst
ALL ARE WELCOME!

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
MAGIC The Gathering
Rise of the ElDrazi Party Weekend April 24 & 25.
Scan OffTheWallGamesStore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesday
Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

Gilligan's Mudskipper

		3			8
			1				6
	5	1	3
2			5	6
				7	1		3
						5
6		2	4		5
5			2			4	1
		4		9

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike New Era Clarks Timberland Outdoor Performance
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

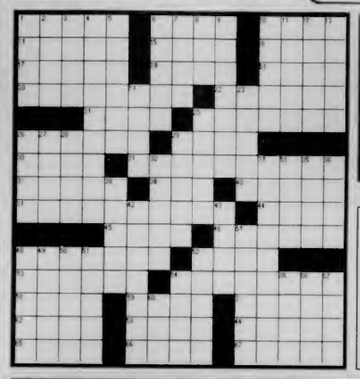
Quote of the Day

"Just because nobody complains doesn't mean all parachutes are perfect."

—Benny Hill

HARK! A VAGRANT By Kate Beaton harkavagrant.com

SATURDAY MORNING BREAKFAST CEREAL By Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com



WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

ACROSS
1. Mixed-blood
6. The Sun
10. Assist
14. Happening
15. Tropical root
16. Measuring device
17. Diacritical mark
18. Countertenor
19. Monster
20. Hypersensitive
22. Road
24. Lascivious look
25. Avoiding detection
26. Activity
29. Away from the wind
30. Association
31. Synagogue
37. Blackbird
39. Born
40. Bobbin
41. Having unsuitable feminine qualities
44. In addition
45. Astringent
46. Empathize
48. Infuse
52. Hindu princess
53. Gentle
54. Mass murder
58. Told an untruth
59. Nerd
61. Labor association
62. Slave
63. Backside
64. Outer or exterior
65. Adjusts
66. Its symbol is Po
67. Beginnings of plants

DOWN
1. Prefix meaning "After" or "Beyond"
2. Wickedness
3. Inform
4. Unerasable
5. Record player
6. Step
7. After-bath powder
8. Paintings
9. Male chicken
10. Ancient Greek marketplace
11. Deli item
12. Everglades bird
13. What we chew with
21. Lady's man
23. Adolescents
25. Ice rain
26. Highest point
27. Musical staff symbol
28. Territory
29. Perpendicular to the keel
32. Cancel
33. Stove or dishwasher
34. Coke or Pepsi
35. Dolt
36. Alternatively
38. Electronic messages
42. Against the law
43. Historical periods
47. Follows
48. Runs in neutral
49. Bing, bang or boom
50. Fragrance
51. The periodic rise and fall of the sea
52. Gathered leaves
54. Tableland
55. Mention
56. Street
57. Concludes
60. Before

Take UMass Amherst home with you this summer
THREE Summer Sessions
200+ online classes
REGISTER NOW!
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
We need slogans to tell it how it is. The U.S one should read, "Land of the free and home of Obama's huge package."

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Sometimes you just need to take a stand and let them know that's just how you roll.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Who cares if its not your birthday, someone was born today who is a bonafied gangster, with heels.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
I got new Pokemonz, let me show you demz.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Fighting pandas to the death in your day dreams says nothing about you other than you are mankind's last hope.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
New XBOX 360 achievement unlocked: silent but sometimes irritable when aroused.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Does anyone ever legitimately "LOL" anymore?

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
For once, can we talk about a REAL epidemic around campus? People who do not zip up their fly – we're watching you.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Grab $10 and spend it the John Edwards way!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
When life gives you limes, express great confusion and shout to the heavens.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Eating food in the grocery store is petty theft. Anyone who complains just wants a bite.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Cover a bald spot with a wig. Don't do the same with a blind spot, because you could die.

WE NEED A NEW COMICS EDITOR
Respond to this ad.
It grants wonderful powers.
I can see my house from here.
Contact The Big Cheese @ comics@dailycollegian.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No expenence necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

FOR RENT

Amherst-4 Bedroom/2 Bath, 2 car garage. June Occupancy. $2000+. Near bus stop. Skibiski, Realtor. 586-1827

PERSONALS

Lax Superstar & Total Hunk Bobby Hayes is on the prowl for love ladies! Limited Time Only! This offer won't last long! Expires 5/15/10 If interested, creepily poke him in facebook.

CONSELING

Alternative off-campus holistic counseling synthesis center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 12, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tigers end 4-game win streak

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team saw their four-game winning streak as well as their undefeated conference record come to an end Saturday afternoon at Garber Field, as the No. 7 Minutemen fell to Towson, 10-9.

"They played with a lot of emotion, they played well, their goalie made saves early in the game, they played great defensively and they really deserved the win," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

Down just one goal with a little over a minute to play in regulation, Cannella called a timeout in order to set up an offensive play.

Towson	10
UMass	9

The Minutemen (7-3, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Conference) got off three shots, two from senior midfielder Christian Ham and two from sophomore attackman Steve D'Amario (one goal), but the Tigers (4-5, 2-0 CAA) scooped up the ground ball and ran the clock out for the victory.

"We had some opportunities, we just wanted to go against a short stick behind, we had some success," Cannella said. "We were just trying to tell our guys [to] get open, go behind the head on some guys, when they show up, and hopefully we'll get a good opportunity to score."

UMass didn't get that opportunity, as they were outshot by the Tigers, 35-30, in the contest, including 11-8 in the first quarter.

"Our offense was getting the looks, they just weren't finishing the ball, so we have to work on that," senior All-American defenseman Diogo Godoi said.

The Minutemen had 19 shots on goal, while the Tigers had 28 and goalkeeper Tim McCormack set a career-high with 18 saves for UMass.

Godoi scored the first goal of his career in the closing minutes of the third quarter, sprinting upfield and bouncing a shot past goalkeeper Travis Love (10 saves).

Along with Godoi, freshman attackman Willy Manny (two goals, one assist) and sophomore midfielder Anthony Biscardi (three goals) led the Minutemen offensively, while senior midfielder Bobby Hayes (two assists), D'Amario, junior midfielder Ryan Hantverk (one goal, one assist) and freshman Kyle Smith (one goal) also contributed.

UMass was also without starting attackman Art Kell, who missed his second-straight game and is likely out for the season with a foot injury.

Kell leads the team with 21 goals and 33 points, as Cannella pointed out how much of an impact not having him was against the Tigers, and will continue to be for future opponents.

"It changes everything, he was getting the number one, so now that all bumps down, so it makes a big difference," Cannella said.

"We're certainly going to have to adjust, some other guys are going to have to play well, and when they get their chances, put them away."

The Minutemen have now lost three one-goal games on the season, including No. 18 Yale and No. 15 Harvard, along with the Tigers. Two of the losses came on Garber Field.

For the Tigers, Will Harrington had three goals, while Carl Iacona, Matt Lamon and Christian Pastirik each had two goals for Towson, who won their third game in a row.

Iacona scored the would-be game-winner with eight minutes, 17 seconds to go in the fourth quarter, as the Tigers' defense buckled down, not allowing a UMass goal for the rest of the game.

In the contest there were seven ties, and the Minutemen turned the ball over 15 times and secured 22 ground balls compared to the Tigers' 26.

"It's not about being discouraged," Cannella said. "You play a hard game, you come back, you score two goals in the fourth quarter, you tie it up, so you can be disappointed, but not discouraged, and we have to move on."

The Minutemen head to Delaware to take on the Blue Hens next Saturday at 1 p.m.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Freshman Will Manny looks for an open teamamte in Saturday's loss to Towson. Manny has played a vital role for UMass since the loss of Art Kell.

Loss of Kell felt on both ends of field

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Attackman Art Kell missed two games and still leads the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team with 21 goals. That's how much offense UMass lacks without Kell on the field.

Since Kell went down with what is presumed to be a season-ending leg injury, the No. 7 Minutemen (7-3, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Association) are 1-1. UMass' average margin of victory is nearly four goals this season and without Kell on the field, the Minutemen won and lost two games decided by two and one goal, respectively.

UMass coach Greg Cannella feels that Kell had so much of an impact on offensive schemes that he'll have to re-work his game strategy entirely.

"It changes everything," Cannella said of UMass' game plan without Kell. "He's getting [opposing team's best defenders] so now that all bumps down. We've played two weeks without him and we still have to adjust."

Freshman Will Manny now starts in place of Kell, but that isn't a major change for Manny, who gets a lot of regular minutes anyway.

In two games as a starter, Manny has five goals and two assists.

Manny's elusiveness, as well as his speed, gives Cannella another legitimate scoring threat, but Manny also exhibits patience and good field-vision. Manny could frequently be seen behind the Towson net, setting up the offense and looking for scoring opportunities instead of bull-rushing the net like a bigger attacker could do.

Another thing about Manny taking the place of Kell is the matchup shift. The 5-foot-7 Manny often drew multiple defenders throughout the game.

Cannella looks for players like Manny to increase their already solid offensive contributions to make up for the loss of Kell's tallies on the scoreboard.

Kell's absence puts added pressure on the defense as well. Kell's ability to take over games and put opposing victories out of reach was a big benefit to an already strong defense led by All-American Diogo Godoi.

The Minutemen are 1-3 in one-goal games this season and in close games, it's crucial that the defense doesn't break down.

"All three of our losses have been one-goal games," said Cannella. "I've always said that you can be disappointed, but you can't be discouraged. You have to move on."

The physicality of the CAA also puts UMass at a disadvantage without Kell because his scoring compensates for the conference-worst 23 goals given up by the Minutemen on the penalty kill.

UMass went 1-for-3 on the penalty kill against Towson (4-5, 1-1 A-10), which has 14 goals on the man-advantage.

The Tigers capitalized on an illegal body-check penalty on defender Casey Rahn late in the first half that carried over to the second half. Godoi left the field twice for the same penalty.

The lone man-up goal for UMass came in a first half that saw no Towson turnovers.

In comparison, the Tigers forced six turnovers before halftime, three of which resulted in scores.

Towson had the edge on loose balls as well, picking up 26 ground balls to the Minutemen's 22, including a 13-9 advantage in the first half.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore Jesse O'Donnell looks to beat a defender in a game earlier this year. O'Donnell scored a goal in UMass' 11-6 victory over St. Bonaventure on Sunday.

UMass rebounds from loss, quiets Bonnies

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Though the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team had a rare slip up against an Atlantic 10 opponent in Duquesne, it responded with a strong defensive effort in a win over St. Bonaventure.

On Friday afternoon, a late comeback attempt by the Minutewomen (7-7, 4-1 A-10) came up short as they fell in a closely-contested game to the Dukes (7-7, 2-2 A-10) at Rooney Field.

Scoring in the first half went back-and-forth with the two teams going on runs to make it a 7-6 game heading into halftime.

To begin the second half, the Dukes extended their lead quickly with another three-goal run. Meghan Frederick tallied a pair of goals while McNish added her third score to give her a hat trick on the day.

In an attempt to even the score, Jackie Lyons scored twice and Jesse O'Donnell chipped in a goal, but goals mixed in by Frederick and Katie Rekart kept the Duquesne lead at 12-9 with fewer than 10 minutes remaining.

Down the stretch, both defenses limited opportunities for the opposition as Duquesne was able to keep the UMass attack at bay. The Minutewomen finally got back on the board with a Riley Perry goal with two minutes, 36 seconds remaining to make it a two-goal game, but were unable to score again despite having five more shots.

UMass	11
SBU	6
Duquesne	12
UMass	10

Dukes goalkeeper Sara Beckstead made three saves in the final 1:48 and stopped eight shots on the day to seal the 12-10 win for Duquesne. Katie Florence also made eight saves and took the loss in goal for UMass.

Lyons led UMass on offense with three goals and two assists for her fifth hat trick of the season. Along with McNish, Rekart tallied three goals while Frederick scored five to round out the Dukes attack.

Despite dropping their first A-10 game against Duquesne, the Minutewomen rebounded on Sunday afternoon to defeat St. Bonaventure, 11-6. The game was the first at McGuirk Alumni Stadium since March 10 against Yale.

The Bonnies (7-7, 2-3 A-10) took an early 1-0 lead as Danielle Drabin scored her 32nd goal of the

See LACROSSE on page 6

Minutemen take 2, win first series of year

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

Just a few hours after losing to Richmond, the Massachusetts baseball team rebounded to win the deciding game of a three-game series, 6-3, on Sunday afternoon at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass	6
Richmond	3
Richmond	10
UMass	5
UMass	7
Richmond	6

Jared Freni got the win for the Minutemen (4-18, 3-6 Atlantic 10), by pitching eight innings in which he struck out 13 Spiders hitters while allowing only three runs.

UMass coach Mike Stone called Freni's outing an outstanding performance. "He just battled through a couple of tough innings and really went a long way," Stone said. He had some great short innings when he needed them to stay in the game.

It was a major accomplishment for the senior and co-captain of the team, who had struggled in his first four starts, allowing a total of 25 runs in 21 innings. However he was able to make adjustments in this game after laboring in his first three innings.

"[Freni] got in a good rhythm and was more fluid," Stone said. "That makes a big difference as far as his command is concerned. It was good to see he made those adjustments."

Glen Misho pitched a scoreless ninth inning to earn the save against Richmond (15-15, 3-6 A-10). It was the first save of the season for the Minutemen.

"[Freni] had thrown a lot of pitches and at a certain point you have to give it to your bullpen," Stone said. "Fortunately, [Misho] came in did a nice job finishing up. He was throwing the ball hard."

The offense collected six runs, all scored by different players. Eight of the nine starters had base hits, and no one had more than one run batted in. Despite a balanced effort, Stone thinks improvements still need to be made.

"We left a lot of people on base and in scoring position," Stone said. "Sometimes, all you need to do is

See BASEBALL on page 6

Mike Gedman is congradtutled as he rounds the bases earlier this year. Gedman pitched Saturday, giving up eight runs (one earned) in a 10-5 loss.

Pitching key in wins

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

Starting pitching, once again, proved to be the difference in the Massachusetts baseball team's first series win of the season.

The three main Minutemen starters took the mound this past weekend, two of which played late into the game, while the other was pulled early. The final scores correlated to each pitcher's productivity, leading UMass to best Richmond for two-out-of-three games concluding with Sunday's 6-3 victory.

During the first game of a doubleheader on Saturday, Nick Serino lasted seven innings in a long affair which saw the Minutemen prevail in extra innings, 7-6.

Serino was strong, but was hurt by misques in the field. He began the first two innings by putting away the first five of six batters. Trouble came in the third, when he walked the first two batters and they later scored on a misplayed bunt by first baseman Mike Gedman.

Serino rolled through the next nine batters but got into trouble again in the sixth. A collision by outfielders Cameron Brown and Chris Cowell in the on a fly ball that would have ended the inning for the southpaw instead turned into two unearned runs.

In his fifth start of the season, the left-hander (0-3) racked up 10 strike-outs in 31 batters faced, throwing a tiring 131 total pitches. Serino left the game ineligible for the win having given up a solo home run in the seventh inning to Richmond's Derek Boilek which tied the game.

Serino made way for Leif Sorenson out of the bullpen, who pitched six innings to tally his first win of the season, redeeming himself from a rocky start in a loss against Connecticut on Tuesday.

Team captain Jared Freini had his best outing of the season on Sunday when the hurler threw 13 strikeouts in eight frames. Despite costly walks during a shaky third inning, the senior recovered to go unblemished the rest of the game, making difficult pitches in key situations. As the pitch count continued to rise over his eight innings to an eventual 145, UMass coach Mike Stone believed his starter was actually improving.

"Jared did a great job today. He went deep into the game and he threw a lot of pitches, but I think he got into a better groove as the game went on," Stone said. "I think he plays better when he's tired, because he doesn't try and overpower balls as much and that was the key today."

Freini (1-3), the Minutemen's opening day starter has not had the ideal season, thus far allowing a 7.04 earned run average and a .307 batting average. This was Freini's longest start this season, having not pitched longer than six innings prior.

See PITCHING on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

PARTLY CLOUDY HIGH: 64 LOW: 31 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 2010

Bair to speak at graduation

A former University of Massachusetts professor who is now the chairwoman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., (FDIC) will be this year's Undergraduate Commencement speaker, according to an announcement made yesterday.

Sheila Bair was named the second most powerful woman in the world by Forbes magazine last year. She was listed as number one in the Wall Street Journal's "50 Women to Watch" list of 2008.

She is noted for her early warnings of the financial lending crisis, for which she won the John F. Kennedy Library Foundation's Profile in Courage Award, according to a UMass press release. In 2008, the FDIC took over 25 failed banks under her watch.

Bair is affiliated with the Isenberg School of Management, according to the release, which states that she is "currently on leave as the Dean's Professor of Regulatory Policy."

At UMass, Bair "examined the structure and policies of the financial regulatory environment" as well as the idea of "expanding access to financial services by low-income groups," said the release.

Sheila Bair, head of FDIC, will speak at Undergraduate Commencement.

The undergraduate commencement ceremony will honor the graduation of 4,200 students, said the release. The average attendance for the ceremony is around 20,000.

The ceremony will take place at 10 a.m. on May 15 at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

- Collegian Staff

Bella's Bartok jams out Southwest

Bella's Bartok was named the winner of the first annual 'Paper Jam' held last night at Hampden Courtyard in Southwest. The event kicked off Southwest Week 2010, which has events occuring through Friday.

UMass reflects on Holocaust

The Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C. serves to remind people about the Holocaust. Yesterday was Holocaust Remembrance Day which was celebrated acorss country, including at UMass.

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Participants reflected on what the Holocaust has meant to society, and the lingering impact it has left, at an event in the Campus Center Reading Room last night to commemorate Holocaust Remembrance Day. The event was sponsored by the Jewish Student Union and UMass Hillel and featured several speakers.

The first speaker was Mordi Kamel, the son of two Holocaust survivors. He related the stories of his parent's experiences,which both illustrated different facets of the tragedy. His mother spent the duration of the Holocaust in hiding after a German officer warned her Polish village that the Schutzstaffel (SS) were coming to her village to liquidate the Jewish population. She then spent two years in hiding with a Catholic Polish family. When she returned to her village at the end of the war, many Jews were deported to displaced persons camps.

Kamel's father served in the Polish army until he was drafted by the Soviet army. After an injury, he became a quartermaster and used his access to luxuries such as vodka to leverage power. With his influence, he organized missions to protect Jews and execute Nazi collaborators in Poland. Kamel's father justified this to his son by stating, "If we didn't kill these people, no one would have done anything to them."

Kamel emphasized during his speech the importance of action in the face of atrocities. He touched on the genocides currently occurring in Darfur, the Eastern Congo and Rwanda.

He ended on the note that, "In a violent world, hope is meaningless, only action counts."

The second speaker was Ben Golden, a photojournalist from Chicago. In August of 1999, he traveled to the concentration camp of Auschwitz-Birkenau photograph the emotional location. He mentioned that in 1945 he saw photos of the camp only in American media publications, but later in life found the need to understand the tragedy deeper.

Golden went through a slideshow of photos that he took of the Jewish neighborhood of Krakow, Poland, Kazimierz, the town surrounding Auschwitz, Oswiecim and the concentration camp of Birkenau. He discussed his experience of touring the camps. He stated that there is a need to remember conflicts with actual historic facts and that when someone actually arrives at Birkenau, and that the reality of the Holocaust is overwhelming.

Following the speakers, Josh Lutch, the leader of STAND, a student group against genocide, spoke about the need to raise awareness and resources about the current conflicts in Burma, the Eastern Congo and Darfur.

The event finished with a candle lighting ceremony to commemorate the Holocaust and a reading of the traditional Jewish prayer, the Mourner's Kaddish.

Noah Hershey, the president of the Jewish Student Union stated about the importance of the event and acting against genocide.

"It is not incumbent upon you to finish the job but neither can you desist from it, in this spirit, we are happy that people fathered here today," he said.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Campus remembers lost prof.

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

On the day University of Massachusetts professor Julie Graham died, a friend formed a blog in her memory. The blog, forjuliegraham.wordpress.com, has over 110 comments from students, colleagues and friends.

"The news of Julie's passing is truly unbearable as we have lost the very best we humans can hope to be," said one contributor. "Julie was tremendously generous of spirit and her immense talent, she was always hopeful and caring, and she was simply brilliant – truly shining more than most of us."

Graham, 64, died on Apr. 4 after losing consciousness on a plane ride home from her three-month sabbatical in Australia. The incident was in response to treatment for her neck cancer, which had caused her difficulty in breathing, said the blog creator on the site. The plane, intended for Dallas, was diverted to Nashville, Tenn., but by then it was too late.

Graham became a full time professor in 1998, after joining the University 14 years earlier, said the e-mail. A page on the UMass Geosciences website said that Graham earned a bachelor's in English from Smith College in 1968 and a doctorate at Clark University in 1984.

"I had the honor of being one of Julie's students," said another blog contributer. "Her reputation reached my ears before I began attending UMass. She inspired me to think more broadly about alternatives and how they can be integrated to form a stronger spectrum of possibility. I had hoped to work with Julie further as I develop ideas and strategies. She will be deeply missed."

A campus-wide e-mail from Chancellor Robert C. Holub yesterday described Graham as a "respected specialist in economic and regional geography [who] traveled the globe to pursue her work and forged many friendships worldwide and close to home."

"As Julie's geosciences colleagues have noted, 'Her gentle spirit, thoughtful discourse, and intellectual vision will be dearly missed,'" said Holub. "Our sympathies and condolences go to her family, friends and colleagues."

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

Julie Graham, professor of geosciences, died last week.

Amherst HS stands up to bullying

By Angela Hilsman
Collegian Staff

In response to South Hadley High School student Phoebe Prince's bullying-prompted suicide on Jan. 14, Amherst Regional High School (ARHS) students and faculty are standing up against bullying and cyber bullying.

ARHS students joined together to remove a Facebook page harassing a peer in January. Principal Mark Jackson noted that the page came down within a day after "students responded very strongly that this needs to come down."

A parent first reported the Facebook page to the school, said Jackson. He then addressed the issue with the student body – which prompted action.

Schools are focused even more on bullying since the suicide of South Hadley High's Phoebe Prince.

Dean of Students for 13 years at ARHS, Mary Custard said, "half of the cases are dealt with students by themselves," because students refuse to tattle.

"Everyone should stand up against harassment," said Custard. "We support them and give punishment to those who refuse to stop bullying."

Jackson defined bullying as "coerciveness" through verbal, physical, or electronic means. Although, he said, the medium through which bullying occurs isn't necessarily important.

The ARHS handbook states "all members of the school community are expected to accept responsibility for their own actions, to express appropriately their own ideas without infringing upon the rights of others, to recognize the effect of their behavior on others; ... to recognize and respect individual differences."

The Code of Conduct adds that "every student should have the opportunity to receive an education in an atmosphere free of physical and psychological disruption. The school staff, students and parents/guardians must work together to create such an environment. This must be a constant, on-going task for our community."

The first bullying offense results in either a two- or three-day suspension, and tighters from there.

Jackson said his staff tries "to respond very quickly" and "take[s] allegations very seriously."

He added that "there are no changes in the rules," but at the end of March he held a faculty meeting and student assembly to "reflect on the rules we have in place."

The faculty discussion will focus on "signs of distress," said Jackson. There will be a "follow-up with the student body reminding them of the rules."

As dean, Custard handles disciplinary action. "Each case is individual," she said, but to investigate, she questions all students involved, staff, and guidance counselors.

"I think our students are pretty aware that there are consequences when they break the rules," said Custard.

"Hopefully all of us have at least one adult in the building that we can trust," added Custard, saying sometimes students can't stop a bully without adult intervention.

Jackson noted that in his six years as principal, he's never encountered a serious case of harassment.

Students know they can turn to any faculty for help, and "it will get relayed to a guidance counselor, a dean, or both," said Jackson.

Custard added that "bullying is an issue everywhere" and that it "doesn't start in the high school. It's found at every level."

"It's horrible that we've lost young people," said Custard,noting that the South Hadley incident and the Springfield death last year will "raise awareness" so that "no one is victimized to the point where they don't want to live anymore."

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING
The Hold Steady hold their own
The group had no 'Rock 'n Roll Problems' when they came to play in concert at Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club on April 6.
SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
Minutewomen take on Terriers
After defeating Boston University in its previous meeting, the Massachusetts softball team looks for similar results tonight when they face the Terriers in Boston.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Nick O'Malley found out how to time travel, how to make it so the big moments last forever and the doldrums of life wash by.
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com
Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, hosted by the Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 51

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor Sara Cody
Managing Web Editor Pete Rizzo
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Sconnell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larrard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Auer
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Cuts make teachers fear for future of education

CUT WATCH

The Rebel Yell
Via College News Network

With recent budget cuts to higher education, future teachers fear they may not get a chance to make a difference.

Because education majors are suffering now, students in K-12 may see the consequences down the road.

"[Teaching is] a career that I've always looked forward to doing," said Kristina Kasten, a sophomore in the college of education who hopes to teach English. "I love helping kids learn and English is something I enjoy."

Often education students at UNLV see themselves giving back to the community they grew up in, which for many is Las Vegas.

"I most look forward to watching students learn throughout the year," Kasten said. "I don't look forward to the changes that will take place due to the budget cuts."

For students in the college of education, the cuts mean they face the same problems students in other colleges face across the UNLV and the state of Nevada.

"It's frustrating that education is always one of the first to be cut," said Alison Chandler, assistant director of the college of education advising center.

"Many students express concern about class availability and the possible cut of certain programs," Chandler said.

Because school districts face cuts in funding to areas like social studies, physical education and fine arts education, new teachers may find it even more difficult to get hired.

Other fields like English, math and science do not promise to be affected as badly in terms of teacher turnover.

"In the long run, students in the education field may be more affected by these cuts because they are affected in their higher education programs and then after graduation in their careers," Chandler said.

Future teachers are finding ways of coping. Some add a second teaching field emphasis to their degree or choose a minor while others consider returning to school after graduation to enter a graduate program.

Some Nevadans may leave the state to find places with fewer education cuts.

"The only alternatives I have thought of are going to school longer or teaching somewhere else," Kasten said.

Like their peers across UNLV, students and faculty in the college of education have ideas about possible solutions or alternatives to the proposed budget cuts. With some students graduating in May and facing the difficult and uncertain times ahead, some maintain a positive outlook on their job possibilities.

"I'm still optimistic about my future as a teacher despite these budget cuts to education," MacLeod said. "I'm determined to become a great teacher no matter what."

(MCT)

Teachers like Beverly Sodeman, 57, of St. Charles, Missouri are concerned about the effects budget cuts will have on the future of education.

Food Science Graduates are in Demand!

Food scientists apply the basic principles of Biology, Chemistry, Physics, Engineering, Biochemistry, Microbiology and Nutrition to generate food products that are shelf stable, safe, healthy and taste good.

The Food Science Department gives:
• 100% Job Placement
• Small Classes
• Individual Attention

Learn more at:
www.umass.edu/foodsci

Food Science at UMass has ranked No. 1 in Student Satisfaction within years in a row!

The Department of Food Science at the UMass is the oldest in the U.S. and one of the most respected departments in the world!

Distinguished Alumni Awards announced

The recipients of the 2010 Distinguished Alumni Awards will be honored at a special luncheon tomorrow at the State House in Boston.

Dr. Dev Gupta is one of five who received an award as announced by the University of Massachusetts Alumni Association last week. Gupta, who earned his doctorate from the University in 1977, is an adjunct professor in the Electrical and Computer Engineering Department. Gupta serves as the CEO of NewLANS, "a company pioneering broadband and wireless technologies," according to a UMass press release.

Also receiving the honor is Dr. Richard H. Holm, a chemistry professor at Harvard University. Holm's research has played an influential role in research in the fields of bioinorganic chemistry and synthetic inorganic chemistry. He earned an honorary degree from UMass in 1979.

Earning the 2010 Distinguished Alumni Service Award is Melvin Howard, class of 1957. Howard helped found the Commonwealth College and has served as chairman of the honors college's advisory board for the past twelve years. He has advanced high in the business latter of major companies, such as Xerox, where he served as Vice Chairman and CEO of Xerox Financial Services.

Psychology professor Dr. Melinda Novak has been named the recipient of the 2010 Distinguished Faculty Award. She serves as the chair of the Department of Psychology and is director of the UMass Primate Laboratory.

Dr. Otto Vogl, referred to in the press release as "a pioneer in the field of polymer science," has been given the 2010 Distinguished Honorary Alumni Award. Vogl is a Professor Emeritus of Polymer Science at UMass.

UMass Chancellor Robert Holub will be on hand at tomorrow's luncheon to honor to the recipients, the release said. UMass President Jack Wilson and Lt. Governor Tim Murray will join the chancellor in giving speeches at the event.

- Collegian News Staff

HPV Fact #16:

It is estimated that each minute in the US, there is a new case of genital warts.

HPV Fact #8:

Guys can't get screened for HPV. So there's no way to know if a guy has the virus or is passing it on.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA

hpv.com
2105000408-01/10-GRD

– Community Clips –

Lecture: "Workplace Flexibility for Low-Wage Workers"
Jennifer Swanberg, Ph.D., presents a lecture titled "Workplace Flexibility for Low-Wage Workers."
Tue Apr. 13, 12:00 p.m. Tobin 423

School of Education Job Fair
The 12th Annual School of Education Job Fair for K-12 School Professionals.
Tue Apr. 13, 3:00 p.m. Student Union Ballroom

Declamation Day
Comedic, dramatic, political... experience a new interpretation of timeless texts as UMass students stand up and make themselves heard – and compete for cash prizes.
Tue Apr. 13, 3:30 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall

Lecture: "Barack Obama, the Presidency and the Enduring Quest for Reform"
Professor Sidney M. Milkis from the University of Virginia will speak as part of the Politics in America Lecture Series.
Tue Apr. 13, 4:00 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

STEM Education Institute Tuesday Seminar
Allan Collins, Professor Emeritus at the School of Education and Social Policy at Northwestern University presents "Rethinking Education in the Age of Technology."
Tue Apr. 13, 4:00 p.m. Hasbrouck 138

Lecture: "Anticipating Financial Stability: What Went Wrong"
A lecture by Rob Parenteau, financial analyst at MacroStrategy Edge, and Research Associate at Levy Economics Institute.
Tue Apr. 13, 4:00 p.m. Gordon Hall Third Floor Conference Room

Entrepreneurship Initiative Executive Summary Competition
Students in the Entrepreneurship Initiative program present summaries of their projects.
Tue Apr. 13, 4:30 p.m. Engineering Lab II auditorium

Alumni Association Event: Ultimate Money Skills
This dynamic and energetic presentation will provide key tips and advice on how to make the right financial decisions and develop smart money management skills in college that will lead to a lifetime of financial independence.
Tue Apr. 13, 5:30 p.m. Memorial Hall

Campus Violence Victim Rights Forum
Learn about your legal rights, protects, and where to go for help and support.
Wed Apr. 14, 12:00 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

The 22nd Annual Virginia A. Beal Lecture and Dinner
The Immune System, Diet and Health: The Power of Good Nutrition
Wed Apr. 14, 4:00 p.m. The Clarion Hotel and Conference Center

Millie Hanas Retirement Celebration
Please join us in celebrating Millie Hanas's retirement after 23 years with the University Store.
Wed Apr. 14, 5:00 p.m. Campus Center Amherst Room, 10th floor

Film: "Fish Out of Water"
A free screening of a film about the Bible and same-sex sexuality. A discussion led by Jewish and Christian religious leaders will follow the screening.
Wed Apr. 14, 7:00 p.m. Campus Center 174

Film: Sunshine and Shadow: NYC in Early Film/The Musketeers of Pig Alley
A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: "Cinematic Cities."
Wed Apr. 14, 7:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137

Rokia Traoré
Along with her feather light vocals, Rokia's music is infused with western pop rhythms and traditional African instruments. The result is a beguiling sound that can claim to be "world music" in the purest sense.
Wed Apr. 14, 7:30 p.m. Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

Not Ready for Bedtime Players
Join us for an evening of side-splitting laughter, informative skits, and free condoms.
Wed Apr. 14, 8:00 p.m. Field Classroom

Panel Discussion: Designing for Sustainability
Stephen Stimson and James Royce of the Stephen Stimson Association, along with Jack Ahern of the Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning discuss rain gardens and stormwater management.
Thu Apr. 15, 3:30 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

Film Screening: How Democracy Works Now
Screening of "The Kids Across the Hill," film in a 12-part series, "How Democracy Works Now," focused on behind-the-scenes negotiations and debates over comprehensive immigration reform.
Thu Apr. 15, 4:30 p.m. Thompson 106

ISCV Lecture: "Does Humanitarian-Military Intervention Save Lives? A Response to Critics"
The Interdisciplinary Seminar on Conflict and Violence is designed to promote interdisciplinary exchanges among faculty and graduate students interested in the topics of conflict, violence, and peace.
Thu Apr. 15, 5:30 p.m. Tobin 423

Part-Time MBA Information Session
Learn more about the Isenberg Part-Time MBA program. Courses offered evenings in Holyoke or Shrewsbury, alternating weekends in Pittsfield or online – anytime.
Thu Apr. 15, 6:00 p.m. Kittredge Center at Holyoke Community College

Take Back The Night
Take Back the Night is a rallying call and protest against sexual assault and domestic violence.
Thu Apr. 15, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Lawn

Panel Discussion: "Sustainable Landscapes: The Greening of our Suburban and Urban Places"
What is sustainable landscape? Can suburbia be green? Panelists discuss these and other issues surrounding the landscapes in our built environment.
Thu Apr. 15, 7:00 p.m. Fine Arts Center - University Gallery

Lecture: "We Want Rebel Music: The Sounds of Crisis and Resistance"
Music journalist Alex Billet talks about the intersections between music and struggles for social and economic justice, past and present.
Thu Apr. 15, 7:30 p.m. Campus Center 904

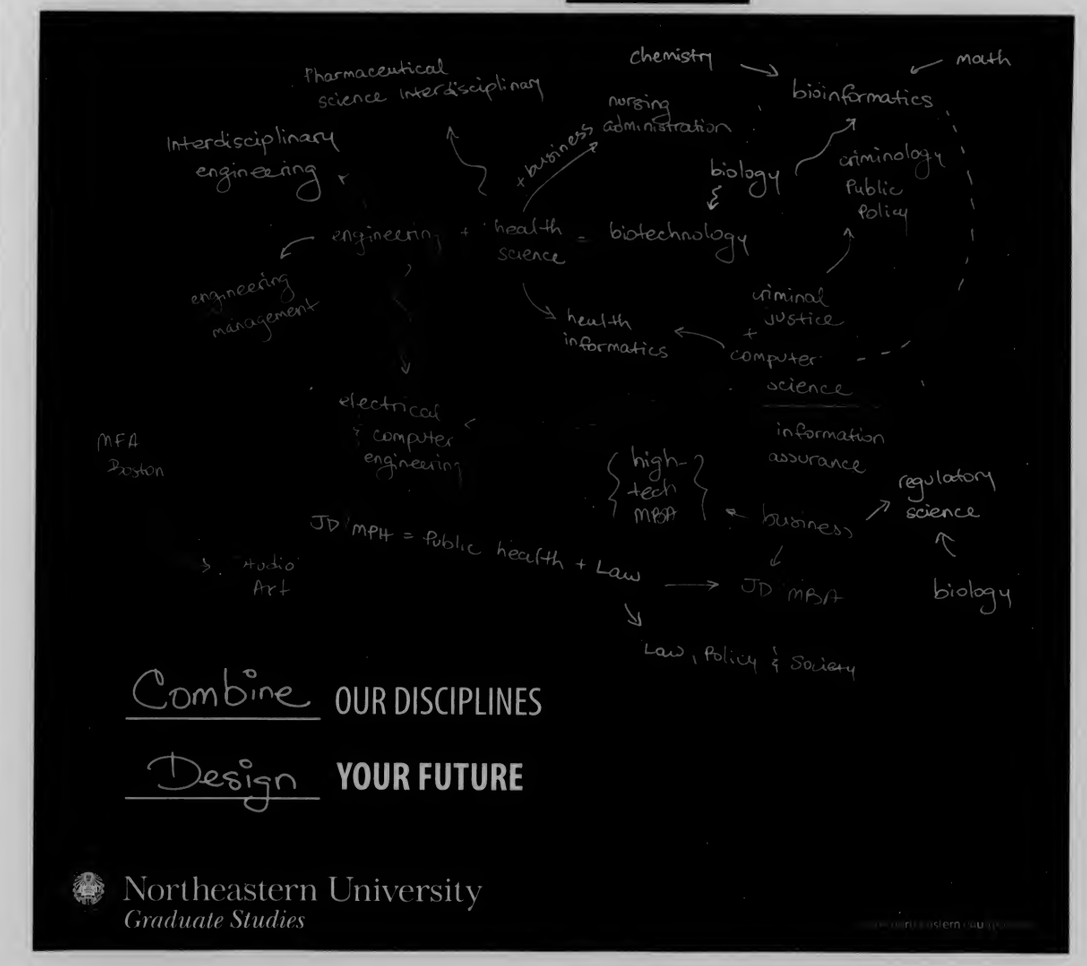
OFFICIAL
Hot Dog Eating Contest

Dear Students,

On April 22, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.

To register, just send us an email to: jtower@mail.aux.umass.edu or sign-up at all DCs and Bluewall, the Hatch, Southwest Café, Whitmore Café, and the Pita Pit.

Best of luck,
Dining Services



UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students

To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, including bun during a specific time.

UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

Taste OF UMASS

*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Time travel across the world

Nick O'Malley

Going by flight times, I was in the city of Barcelona for three days, 14 hours and 40 minutes. Wait, that's not right.

Alright, considering the fact that I got there on April 6 and left April 10, I was there five days. No, I was there longer than that.

That's right, I was there for about two weeks. That equates to 432 pictures (159 of them Facebook worthy), one Canadian hippie and/or teacher, three rotten Spanish potatoes, a pot of cheese and pear ravioli, four bottles of Desperados beer, a Magic Fountain music, light and water show, a dozen human statues and one fancy dinner paid by Meg's mom (Thanks Mama Reid).

Time isn't measured in minutes, hours, days. It's measured in memories, moments in time in which you can place yourself and relive.

It was far, far longer than the episodes of Avatar, The Last Airbender, French exam, Irish religion and myth exam and mornings spent too long in bed that made up the roughly two weeks, five days, six hours and 30 minutes I spent saving money and energy for the trip.

It's something that happens when you travel, when you're doing things: time travel. Something that makes certain moments better, longer, stronger in your memory so that, in the long run, they actually are longer. I mean what's two hours on Facebook compared to your first kiss? What's the spring of fifth grade compared to your first week of college? What's a drunken night of mayhem if you don't remember it?

The thing is, time isn't measured in minutes, hours or days. It's measured in memories, moments in time in which you can place yourself and relive. The more vivid, the more vibrant, the more you think back to look at it, the longer it is.

It's how a good week at summer camp is longer than all the lazy days of August. It's how one good trip to the pub — or an outdoor beer festival — is longer than the longest "Law & Order: SVU" marathon. And those things are long.

They say carpe diem for a reason. If you don't seize it, it vanishes. And at the end of the day, the time disappears and you end up like Adam Sandler in Click, which is about as depressing as it can get.

Time travel is little more than the magic of your own too legs and probably your wallet, since the fun things in life are rarely free.

It doesn't take much to take time, mold it, stretch it and shape it so that a Tuesday isn't just another day. Tuesday's the day you and your friends got a baseball bat, a bag of potatoes and a hamburger-shaped pastry and played Exploding Food Home Run Derby on the field at your old elementary school (Note: Worth it).

Sound pretentious? Of course it does. There's no way to say this all without sounding pretentious.

That's the thing about study abroad, people always act snobby and uptight about "their unforgettable time abroad."

But you know what's always the same? They're glad they did it. I've yet to meet someone that didn't enjoy going abroad.

Why? Because like all good things, you can't be going full tilt every day.

Well, most people can't. I can't. If that's you, go on ahead. The rest of us need our Seinfeld reruns and addictive flash games.

That's the reality of a time machine. You can't be using it constantly. Without a place to lay your head and tell your stories, what's the point of doing it? To possibly write a book in the end?

There's two costs to time travel: energy and money. After a while, it makes you tired. Not from a lack of sleep or fatigue, but from the dull. It's the dead, long periods that make the lively, timeless periods worth it.

No matter how wonderful travelling is, few things beat coming home, seeing what has changed, having double-digit notifications on Facebook and putting your feet up.

Also, travelling is expensive. I mean, really, really expensive. Seriously, unless you're loaded, you can't go to Germany, then Australia, then Ireland. Unless you're the kid here that did that. But he's loaded; proving my point.

Would I love to fulfil the stereotype of living in Ireland by going out to the pubs every night? Of course.

But stuff's expensive. I have to eat Tesco Value brand spaghetti in Cork in order to eat pizza in Rome. It's the trade-off. It's what makes the end result all that sweeter.

What could make standing on a cliff in Spain better than the simple thought of "Man, three days ago, I don't remember putting pants on?" It builds the moment and also presents an excuse to not wear pants.

So, what're you waiting for? Hop in your time machine. What's wrong? You're sitting on it. Just make sure to be lazy — pants or no pants — before you go.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Administration targets students

Raise your hand if you or a friend of yours was punished for an alcohol related incident. Over 5,000 hands should be raised right now, though every year, just under 5,000 citations are issued for alcohol related infractions.

Mike Fox

This number of 5,000 represents just two-thirds of the actual cases brought up for infractions. Additionally, from the period of 2001-2002 to 2006-2007, there has been an increase of 324 percent in residential hall alcohol violations.

So, this is college. People have fun, people party, people drink. It would only seem normal that so many people get caught. If anything, it demonstrates that our system works, that people who break the rules get punished. Right?

The University of Michigan has twice the population than that of the University of Massachusetts and is similar in the stigma attached to student life at UMass. But the University of Michigan only carries 300 to 400 violations a year. UMass' numbers seem a little off.

The statistics cited above are from the Dean of Students office, a body whose responsibilities include discipline. Discipline is, of course, determined by the Code of Student Conduct. Discipline is essential to any institution, especially one as chaotic as a university often is.

For decades UMass has had a reputation of being a party school, notoriously ranked as the ninth best party school by the Princeton Review in 2005.

Over the past few years, UMass hasn't even ranked in the top 20 of national party schools, but that doesn't mean on the weekends you won't find hordes of students migrating around campus, dressed up in their finest, searching for a place to engage in extracurricular social activities.

Most schools have a three-strike system that accounts for mistakes in the system. Our school brings you straight to hearings that often result in punishment and the lingering black mark on one's record.

However, this is no reason for the school to engage sometime draconian or inappropriately severe disciplinary measures. Consider this commonly told hypothetical: A student has a bunch of friends in her dorm room, they make a large deal of noise, the Resident Assistant comes by and busts up the gathering, the RA spots a can of empty beer sitting on a shelf, and everyone gets written up.

The host student is sitting in their disciplinary hearing and luckily is found not responsible, but the citation sits on their record for seven years. The student is now long graduated and applies for a federal job but is rejected because of their citation and the federal government's strict policy with alcohol and records.

This chain of events represents a system of punishment that stands as punitive over educational. Universities exist as institutions dedicated to higher learning, but sadly, and too often, this mission is lost in the name of the institution furiously chasing after a form of systemic stability. When a school loses its ability to consider the personal aspects of each case that comes its way, a student loses their sense of membership of the school.

Most schools have a three-strike system that accounts for mistakes in the system. Our school brings you straight to hearings that often result in punishment and the lingering black mark on one's record.

Many other issues exist in our disciplinary system. Local police departments have sent student infractions that have taken place off campus to the Dean of Student's office. This violates privacy standards as established by Criminal Record Offender Information (CORI) standards.

Students who are caught on campus with a gram of marijuana (a decriminalized amount of the substance) receive greater punishment than those under 21 who are caught with alcohol (a criminal possession). The goals of the Code of Student Conduct are without a doubt beneficial. Standards should exist at a school. Rules are meant to be followed. However, unbending rules that cast disproportionately large shadows over people's lives do no help anyone.

The governing documents of the school give students the responsibility to enforce and review their own code of conduct. This is a cause that every student should be considerably concerned in.

It is something that impacts students every day, and judging by the statistics, it impacts a disproportionate amount.

Perhaps, if students can find the time to get involved with campus rules, it will demonstrate to those in the administration a willingness to take responsibility for one's own actions.

This would make considerable headway in transforming the image of our campus from a chaotic mess to one with responsible young adults that truly understand the impact that their actions have on themselves and others.

With communication and both the administration and students willing to come together to take a close look at the Code of Student Conduct, a truly just system that places proper responsibility on all sides can be achieved.

Mike Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Youth are people too

For most of you, tomorrow will go unmarked just like most any other day. You will go about your normal business you do every other day. But perhaps you will do something unexpected. You will help someone, protect someone and fight for someone.

Lindsey Coley

Tomorrow, April 14, marks the day where everyone of any age can make a stand and fight for youth rights, where anyone can show their support for the youth rights movement. April 14, 2010 is the very first National Youth Rights Day.

What are youth rights? It is the radical notion that the Constitution does not have an age limit on citizenship, as is stated in Section 1 of the 14th Amendment. The youth rights movement seeks to lessen, if not eliminate, unnecessary, unconstitutional and otherwise discriminatory restrictions on the rights of youth that are granted to them in the Constitution without regard to age.

The United States is called the "Land of the Free" and the "Home of the Brave," however, since its inception, the United States has summarily, strategically and intentionally violated the rights of youth.

The United States has allowed the false imprisonment of youth in so-called "Behavior Modification Camps" without charge and without trial. This has gone on for decades where many youth have expressed anecdotally that there has been abuse, rape, torture and even murder.

The United States is called the "Land of the Free" and the "Home of the Brave," however, since its inception, the United States has summarily, strategically and intentionally violated the rights of youth.

Again, there are stories of youth in these camps being forced to abuse their fellow prisoners.

Along with these camps, youth are restricted in their movement at night with unconstitutional and unnecessary curfews where, if caught outside at night — even if not committing a crime or causing a disturbance — can be subject to questioning and arrest. Youth are not allowed to make the most basic medical decisions for themselves without their parental consent, and youth have been denied life-saving needed treatment because of this.

This is just a short list of abuses that continue to be perpetuated against youth solely because of a certain arbitrary age. And contrary to popular belief, the end of childhood doesn't stop when one turns 18.

If you think that just because you're over 18 or over 21 that you need not be concerned with youth rights, just remember that you too were a youth once and had to deal with laws that discriminated against you.

You can change what the youth today have to go through, making a difference in their freedom today and tomorrow.

How can you help? Wear an arm band supporting youth rights, write a letter to your local newspaper, protest a business that discriminates against youth and call and mail your representatives.

Most importantly, tell youth that they have rights.

They do, we just have to respect them.

Harsh restrictions continue until one turns no younger than 21. This is a logical contradiction for which organizations such as Choose Responsibility and the National Youth Rights Association hope to address. As the saying goes, how can one man die and kill for their country yet not be allowed to hold and sip a beer?

Organizations like the National Youth Rights Association, which has partnered with Community Alliance for the Ethical Treatment of Youth and Americans for a Society Free from Age Restrictions, have decided that a National Youth Rights Day, if nothing else, can bring about the smallest of change. And the smallest of change can make the biggest of difference in the lives of youth everyday.

Lindsey Coley is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lcoley@student.umass.edu.

Fed/Up? Ed/Op.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Hold Steady rocks in Northampton

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

The Hold Steady is not a typical band. Its April 6 show at Pearl Street in Northampton was packed to the brim with fans openly discussing not just the band's music but also their personal homemade comic books based on the band's material, often while debating such topics as whether or not the band's 2005 album "Separation Sunday" would make a better book or movie.

In case you missed it, over the group's four-album career, The Hold Steady has become one of those bands. Manna for the kind of nerds that can follow overarching character arcs about hood-rat American teenagers coming to terms with drugs, friendship and religion while taking wild joy rides across the Midwest. Minneapolis to be specific, in most cases, although lead singer Craig Finn name drops western Massachusetts in more than one number. A homage to his Massachusetts roots was more firmly stated when Finn openly addressed family members within Tuesday's crowd and referenced his baptism in Northampton's own St. Mary's church.

Looking around the crowd, one of the more interesting sights was the varying demographics the band attracts. Young professionals in three-piece suits and sandal-clad college kids are staples, but upon looking around was a noticeable change of the usual attendees. But the people had one thing in common, the mutual worship of Finn and his five-piece backing band. And with the kind of back catalog that can churn out multiple satisfying set lists, The Hold Steady made sure to mix it up just right for their fickle fans.

Opening band, The Oranges Band, had its fair share of trouble appeasing the fickle fans. Sonically the band reveled in the sort of power pop that The Hold Steady has always used as the base ingredient for its tunes, however without much variation the songs and energy provided felt almost mechanical. Leading off with opening song "White" and continuing on through a block of songs dubbed by the band as "Are Invisible rock block," in reference one of the band's albums which focuses on "obscure Baltimore music history." However by the end of the set the crowd had already grown restless for the main attraction.

Beginning with "Hornets! Hornets!" The Hold Steady needed no warm-up time. By the middle of the tune Finn was already hopping around the stage, animating his movements wildly with arm flailing and pogo dancing. Finn made sure that his facial expressions sent a message, turning his vocals into a sort of method acting that made him a magnetic figure onstage. Rendering the backdrop of keyboardists, guitarists and amps emblazoned with white stencils bearing the band's moniker were almost unnecessary. By the time the song's protagonists got to "Southern Minneapolis" the crowd was fist-pumping along while Finn foamed at the mouth, the spit dripping down his chin and onto the microphone and occasionally on a lucky fan.

The Hold Steady then segued into "Hurricane J," one of the singles off their forthcoming fifth album, "Heaven Whenever" due out later this year. The song's opening riff reeked of classic Hold Steady Americana rock but fans were soon taken out of their comfort zone when the song swirled around and slowed down near the bridge.

With overlapping guitars and an emphasis on layering, the song both revels in the band's past while giving a glimpse of their direction for the future. If songs like "Hurricane J" and "Weekenders" are any indication, "Heaven Whenever" may be the token sophomore album the band never quite slowed down to make.

The Hold Steady demonstrates what few younger bands possess, a comfort and knowledge of its own material. The proof lay in the members' confident use of back tracks to buoy the set, which ran the gamut between newer tracks like Stay Positive's "Navy Sheets" and "Magazines" and obscure older cuts such as Almost Killed Me's "The Swish." Thus, by the time the band hit its stride with big tracks like "Stuck Between Stations" and "Sequestered in Memphis" the choice for their new album cover became clear.

A pumping fist in the midst of a blurred-out crowd is one of the only things the band sees these days.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Lead singer of The Hold Steady Craig Finn interacts with the enthusiastic crowd at the group's recent stop at Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club on April 6. Finn mentioned western Massachusetts often during the show, as it is the area where he grew up.

Comedy royalty Tina Fey and Steve Carell work to turn a hardly-believable plot line into a side-splitting experience in 'Date Night', directed by Shawn Levy.

Make time for a 'Date Night' with comedic duo Fey, Carell

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

Tina Fey and Steve Carell, known for their hilarious comedic hi-jinks, don't disappoint in "Date Night," the newest Shawn Levy flick.

Though not exactly an innovative plot, thanks to the leads, the costars and a ridiculous pole dancing scene, the movie is sure to keep its audience in stitches for nearly the full 88 minutes it graces screens.

Fey and Carell play Claire and Phil Foster, a middle-aged couple with two young children, who, at this point in their relationship are just going through the motions. For the realtor and the lawyer, everything has become stagnant. So, when friends in a similar situation decide to get divorced, the Fosters must try something new — a fancy date night in Manhattan.

They decide to spice things up by taking someone else's reservation at a swanky restaurant. Everything goes well until they find out that criminals are after the couple whose reservation they took, the Tripplehorns, who are in big trouble with a mob boss.

Hilarity ensues when things get very tense for this boring, normal couple (prompting Carell's "kill shot" scene from the previews). Though, it's a pretty cliché-ridden plot featuring out-of-touch adults who have to become sly and savvy.

Director Shawn Levy is known for creating movies in which parents save the day. He directed both "Night at the Museum" movies, as well as "Cheaper By the Dozen," and had relative success trying to make parents seem like cool super heroes to kids. Levy could have an ulterior motive, being a father of three, but he sure achieves this in "Date Night."

The only glaring problem with this movie is its believability. Of course it's a far-fetched plot line, but the storyline about nearly the whole New York Police Department being corrupt, Phil's ability to hotwire a car and speed off in it and the hardened criminals who can't seem to hit their mark, despite shooting at the Fosters from a short distance are a little ridiculous.

Then, there's the fact that this pair could outsmart and outrun the bad guys, all the while trying to figure out their marital problems. However, the basic premise of the film coupled with the spot-on comedic timing of Fey and Carell save "Date Night."

It's a wonder that these comedic giants haven't been paired up before. Tina Fey may be one of the most popular comedians of this century, with her time spent on "Saturday Night Live," and roles in "Baby Mama" and "Mean Girls." Steve Carell, too, is hilarious as dim-witted Michael Scott on "The Office," and amusing parts in "The 40-Year Old Virgin," and "Anchorman." They have great chemistry together and easily fall into their roles as a boring married couple.

Even the costars, though not always thought of for their funnier sides, will cause a few giggles from the audience. James Franco and Mila Kunis amuse as the low life criminals, the real Tripplehorns (though that was just an alias). Ray Liotta is featured as the mob boss, while Mark Ruffalo and Kristen Wiig make short appearances. The cast simply blends well together.

"Date Night" is full of dry humor, as well as obvious slapstick moments. It's a testament to the talents of Fey and Carell that they don't take the more action-packed scenes too seriously, which keeps the film fresh. For instance, when they find themselves in a tense moment, the Fosters must decipher the difference of "getting bumped off" and "getting whacked off," keeping the perpetual grin on their audience's faces.

Though, in keeping with many movies today, "Date Night," doesn't bring many new things to the realm of cinema, the film is able to keep viewers interested and full of emotion, whether it's due to cringe-worthy awkwardness, amusement or even the somewhat cheesy moments. It's sort of like Mr. and Mrs. Smith, if they were a droll, awkward couple from New Jersey.

"Date Night" is filled to the brim with laughs, fun, a good cast and a dashing, shirtless Mark Wahlberg. What's not to enjoy?

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Annual Comedy Jam brings much for UM to laugh about

Students and professionals alike bring humor to showcase with improv, stand-up and sketch

By Dave Coffey
Collegian Staff

This past weekend, Student Valley Productions hosted their 14th annual Comedy Jam, aptly titled "Comedy Bowl XIV." With a total of 15 performers over a span of two night showings, this year's Comedy Jam was surely one to be remembered. With acts ranging from stand-up to musical comedy and everything in between, each piece managed to draw raucous laughs from a packed crowd two nights in a row.

Both evenings started out with a musical opener. On Friday night, it was, Ryan and that guy, a duo of acoustic guitar and sparse percussion. On Saturday night, "Doo Wop Shop," UMass Amherst's only all male a capella group, opened the show. While both musical acts were entertaining, Doo Wop Shop's performance was perhaps the most impressive, featuring a stunning version of the Beatles' classic "Come Together" as well as an original number in their three-song set.

Student Valley Productions consists of three comedy groups. Improv With Attitude, Mission Improvable and Sketch-22. As would be expected, all three groups performed at the comedy outing, with IWA performing on Friday and Mission Improvable and Sketch-22 performing on Saturday.

Improv With Attitude, UMass' only long form improv group, delivered as per usual with a batch of off-the-cuff yet hilarious scenes with seemingly endless energy and wit. Notable scenes include one in which two fathers pit their sons against each other in competition, and a scene in which two scientists create a "quadropus" that kills people upon sight. While one's initial reaction might be to say, "You can't make this kind of stuff up," Improv With Attitude did just that, with side splitting results.

Mission Improvable also brought their own brand of improvised antics through short-form improv comedy games. The result was somewhat akin to the once highly popular "Whose Line Is It, Anyway?" television show in which the participants enact short comedic scenes with various "rules", the subjects of which are shouted out by the audience. Perhaps the most notable thing about Mission Improvable's performance (besides the arguably funniest scene with the "Vietnam War Musical With No Music") was that Mission Improvable, who announced themselves as a "family-friendly" comedy troupe, was able to draw just as many laughs as the other performers without once resorting to cursing or sexual innuendo, which didn't seem to stifle their appeal whatsoever — even to a college audience.

Sketch-22, however, went in the other direction, with several edgy and off the wall prepared scenes that left the crowd in stitches every time. With great writing and near-perfect execution, their sketches, including a dynamite opener satirically showcasing, "How Billy Mays really died," absolutely killed every time.

In addition to the three Student Valley Productions comedy troupes, SVP invited several other performers, both collegiate and professional, to join them on the stage over the two nights of comedy.

Two other improv comedy acts were invited, namely BOOT and Los Dos Dudes. BOOT, billed as, "The Valley's newest long-form improvisation troupe," brought a solid improv performance despite only having half of their four-man lineup on duty. While their premises were perhaps a little limited ("Name a movie with the words, "Star Wars" in it"), scenes such as one discussing how Princess Leia "hit it" with Chewbacca garnered a good deal of laughs. Los Dos Dudes, who closed out the first night, are an improv duo based out of Chicago. Their high energy scenes, such as one about two kids at a laser-tag party gone wrong, left the audience still laughing as they exited the auditorium.

Several sketch comedy groups were also invited to the jam. Aaron & Dave: Kings Among Men were the only sketch comedy group to perform the first night, and sported several irreverent yet tightly written and performed sketches, both in person and on film. For a two-man team, their performance was highly varied from sketch to sketch, with the best being the live "Bees In My Hair" sketch, and the hilarious "Twilight: Moon Bites" video about emo-vampire breakfast cereal.

Pangea 3000, a professional sketch comedy group who performed second to last on Saturday, was arguably the funniest act of the entire event. Comprised of writers and performers who regularly contribute to The Onion and College Humor, Pangea 3000's sketches were unanimously well-written, well-rehearsed scenes about premises that one might not think were that funny if not acted out in such a precise and clever manner, such as a scene about a spelling bee in which all the words were flatulence noises, which left the entire audience in tears and uncontrollable laughter.

While stand-up comedy was slightly under-represented at the jam, two performers with two very different deliveries drew significant laughs with their stand-up stylings. Spencer Fredericks, a UMass Amherst student who performed on Friday evening, nailed college stand-up comedy perfectly, with raunchy and no-punches-pulled material about sex and killing his siblings. Team Submarine, a New York based professional comedy duo, employed an unusual-yet-effective variety of two-man stand-up, which closed the event with roars of laughter over discussions of the perfect pizza jingle.

Several performers brought to the event their very own brand of unique musical comedy Kinda Fancy, a.k.a. Carolyn Drzik, performed gentle, sweet-sounding songs with just ukulele and voice, which juxtaposed perfectly with hilariously outrageous topics, such as wishing she had more casual sex and did more drugs in college. McClelland U, a comedy boy-band from the Amherst area, presented two music videos that featured hilarious auto-tuned musings about Shia LaBeouf and their love for Wings Over Amherst.

One of the most notable performances of the entire event, however, belonged to MC Mr. Napkins, a.k.a. Zach Sherwin. Sherwin, a comedy-rapper, showcased his clever absurdity as well as his fortuitous rhythmic and rhyming abilities by spitting ferociously humorous lines about random topics, including his lack of "street cred" and trivia about Benito Mussolini. The highlight of his act, however, was a song in which he rapidly references several famous YouTube videos, including "Charlie Bit Me" and "Dramatic Prairie Dog," while sampling audio from the videos referenced.

As usual, this year's comedy jam attracted sell-out crowds both nights, and hopes to continue to do so for years to come. For more information, visit studentvalleyproductions.com.

Dave Coffey can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu

Minutewomen meet BU again in Boston

SOFTBALL from page 8

two outs – to do all the damage they would need, but had other opportunities in the game.

In the first and the fifth inning, UMass recorded two hits, but failed to score in each inning. In both innings the Minutewomen ran into issues on the base paths as they reached base with singles, but were were thrown out on the ensuing plays.

Plourde keeps plowing

Sara Plourde showed how scary it could be to face her in the batter's box last year as a freshman when she posted a 1.83 earned run average with a 6-1 record while striking out 67 batters in 49 and two-thirds innings.

Now in her sophomore year as the Minutewomen's ace with the departure of Brandice Balschmiter, Plourde is posting even stronger numbers.

With a 0.96 ERA and a nation's best 367 strikeouts, Plourde is leading the way for UMass in the circle. A closer look at the pitcher's numbers brings a better understanding of how dominant she has been so far this season.

Plourde's 367 strikeouts in 189 innings equates to her striking out an average of 13.58 batters per game or 1.94 batters each inning. All together, the sophomore has faced 733 batters and has struck out just over 50 percent of them.

A week ago today, Plourde got 20 of the possible 21 outs against Boston College by way of strikeout as she set a new UMass record for strikeouts in a seven-inning game. Earlier in the year, Plourde struck out 22 batters in a nine-inning game against Texas A&M.

With Plourde striking out the majority of the batters she faces, few reach base. So far this season she has surrendered has surrendered just .83 walks and hits per inning pitched.

Even more impressive is Plourde's numbers in conference play as she leads the conference with a .60 ERA for pitchers who have pitched more than 10 innings and is 8-0 in as many as many starts. In the 47 innings pitched in A-10 play, Plourde has struck out 96 batters, good for 2.04 per inning pitched.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@daily-collegian.com

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Saturday's win over Charlotte saw the Minutewomen use timely hitting. In three innings where the Minutewomen registered a hit, they scored at least one run to earn a 5-1 win over the 49ers.

Peace Corps at UMASS Amherst
Wednesday, April 14
Information Session
3:00 PM
508 Goodell Building
UMASS Amherst
Peace Corps
Life is calling. How far will you go?
www.peacecorps.gov 800.424.8580

UMass wins in final tuneup before A-10 championships

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

Emily Boucher's first-place finish in the Singles Final helped make sure the Massachusetts rowing team was able to stack up well against the likes of Duke, Connecticut, West Virginia and others in this past weekend's Knecht Cup regatta in Camden, N.J.

The Minutewomen competed in over a dozen races in the regatta, including the Varsity 8, Junior Varsity 8, Varsity 4, Second Varsity 4, Lightweight 4 and the Lightweight 8.

This weekend saw UMass' biggest challenge of the season thus far, as the crew had to go up against top-rate competition in their first multi-day regatta of the year. Crew teams from over 50 schools were on the water vying for victory. Atlantic 10 rivals Duquesne, Fordham, Temple and La Salle were also in attendance looking to improve their marks and prepare themselves for the upcoming A-10 championship.

It was Boucher who shined brightest for the Minutewomen, as she finished first in the Singles Final on Sunday, with a time of 8:37.15. Boucher's performance was masterful, as she finished the race with more than four seconds between herself and second-place Duke. In order to qualify for Sunday's event, it took a strong second-place finish in Saturday's semifinals, in which Boucher clocked in at 8:49.37. Teammate Amy Nash also raced in Sunday's Singles Final, which she finished with a time of 9:10.58.

The Minutewomen were also able to come up with first-place finishes in the Pair, Varsity 4, and Second Varsity 8 in Saturday's preliminary heats to propel them into three of the seven Grand Final races. The other three races they made were the Lightweight 4, Lightweight 8 and Novice 8.

At Sunday's end, UMass racked up third and fourth-place finishes in the Pair Grand Final, fourth in the Lightweight 4 Grand Final, second in the Novice 4 Third Level Final, third in the Third Level Final of the Varsity 4 and second in the Petite Final of the Varsity 4, in addition to Boucher's win.

Though the Minutewomen started to struggle later on in the afternoon with a fifth-place finish in the Lightweight 8 and a sixth place finish in the Novice 8, they were able to rebound and finish strong with second-place finishes in the Grand Final of the Second Varsity 8 and the Petite Final of the First Varsity 8.

Senior rower Samantha Smith saw this weekend as an opportunity to continue building on the strong core abilities and skills necessary to take the A-10 championship next weekend.

"People have been switched in and out of boats, the speed has been getting faster and the crew has been getting more efficient," Smith said.

Some key things that Smith feels need improving are to be quicker through the water, to keep from being outstroked as they had been in the past couple of races and to make it harder for their opponents to keep pace with them.

In looking ahead to the upcoming A-10 championship, Smith sees this past weekend as a means to work out the necessary tweaks to ensure UMass will have a promising outcome in Camden.

"We need to work as hard as we can and make sure everything is perfectly in tune [for the A-10 championship]."

The Minutewomen will be looking to win their 14th A-10 title in 15 years this upcoming weekend.

David Martin can be reached at dmmartin@student.umass.edu.

Summer @ Emmanuel College
Take courses on campus or online, and discover all that Boston has to offer.
Learn more about summer undergraduate and graduate courses at www.emmanuel.edu/summer.
Emmanuel College | 400 The Fenway | Boston, Massachusetts 02115
www.emmanuel.edu

Minutewomen beat out eight teams to finish first in meet record from 2009 with a distance of 45 feet, 10 inches. She also placed first in the hammer throw, where she recorded a distance of 166 feet, two inches, as well as second in the discus throw. She has now qualified for the Eastern College Athletic Conference championship in the shot put and the discus.

TRACK from page 8

A-10 champion Stephanie Aguguo qualified for NECs in the triple jump, reaching a distance of 38-01.25 meters and taking first place. Also winning their events was 800-meter specialist Gina Perno crossing the finish line in 2:16.61 minutes and star sophomore Karen Roa, winning with 17:55.60 minutes. The freshman crop of athletes has not disappointed for the Minutewomen yet this year, and that trend seems to be continuing into the outdoor season. Nalis Mbianda was right behind Wilson in the shot put, setting her own record of 42 feet, 11 inches and taking second place.

In the javelin throw, Rachelle Bourque set the second-highest mark in UMass history, reaching a distance of 137 feet, two inches and came in first place. Stefanie Danehy followed her by setting her own school record and taking third place in the event.

Both teams face a quick turnaround this week as they head to Holy Cross in Worcester for a meet tomorrow.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
Sugarloaf Estates Apartment Homes
28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons
133 Belchertown Road, Rt 9, Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
FREE
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Select Units!
On the Bus Route, Salt Water Swimming Pool, Fitness Center, Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

The DAILY COLLEGIAN
IS NOW HIRING
WEBMASTER / IT MANAGER
We are looking for a student to manage DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM and our related web presences for the upcoming FALL 2010 semester and beyond!
Some web tools: Analytics, and (multi-)Hadras, JavaScript, PHP, backend Cover letter with relevant
dailycollegian.com

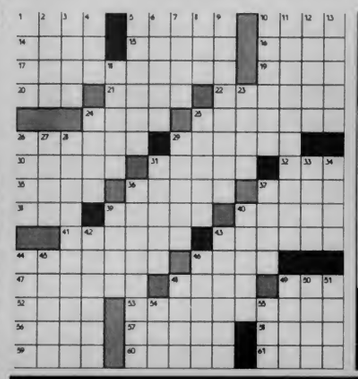
COMICS

PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

Stagnetti's Revenge

9	8		5			6	4
								9
			6		4
			7			1	5
1
		6			3		7
				2		9
	7						8
	5		9	1		4	2

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner SMBC-COMICS.COM



WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

ACROSS
1. Count upon
5. Expenditures
10. Annoyance
14. Operatic solo
15. Bother
16. Countertenor
17. Delegation
19. Not fat
20. Sixth sense
21. Song for two
22. Soothsayer
24. Strip of wood
25. Spot, splash, or soil
26. Dissipate
29. Not Missus
30. He plays roles
31. Any habitation at a high altitude
32. Month of ___ober
35. Civil wrong
36. Units of distance
37. Dwarf buffalo
38. No particular one
39. Beauty parlor
40. Overflow
41. Split
43. Involving financial matters
44. Humiliated
46. Solitary
47. Not a borrower
48. Celebration
49. One thousandth of an inch
52. Dry
53. Excessive
56. Sound
57. Sculpt
58. Arch type
59. Pitcher
60. Work dough
61. Precious stones

DOWN
1. Competition involving speed
2. Cupid, to the Greeks
3. Flaccid
4. Sweet potato
5. Not formal
6. Beginning
7. Agitated state
8. As well
9. A sketchy summary
10. Roof of the mouth
11. Powered by electricity
12. Not fresh
13. Laser printers need this
18. Do-nothing
23. Charge per unit
24. Blemish
25. Femme fatale
26. Information
27. Religious figure
28. An alkaloid plant toxin
29. Cantaloupe or honeydew
31. Suffered
33. Coke or Pepsi
34. Not short
36. Unorthodox
37. Basilica area
39. Several
40. A peninsula in northeastern Egypt
42. Tool used for climbing
43. Ceased to operate (business)
44. Winged
45. Short-horned goat antelope
46. Stage between egg and pupa
48. Former vice-president Al
49. Magician
50. Detail
51. Bottom of the barrel
54. ___ Grandmother (British)
55. Holiday drink

The Daily Collegian is now accepting applications for COMICS EDITOR.

Contact the Crossword Kidnapper
comics@dailycollegian.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You better watch yourself, or else you are going to figure out why they call him, "Dude Huge."

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Your love life is not looking too good. Have you tried reading, "The Tron Guy's Tips to Making Awful Nerd Love?"

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
According to CNN, China is rising up in the financial world. This is proof that Viagra also stimulates economics.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
I want to know what you put in that chicken tetrazzini!

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Every day is a sad one when you are listening to Coldplay.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
The word "headshot" should never be used while you are in the bedroom, regardless of present company.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Show your child-like angst off by creating an environment of hate with Legos.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
I know the name of the alien that kidnapped your weird uncle. His name is John Tesh.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Sacrifice the size of your earlobes so that Kenny Chesney can have actual skin on his eyelids.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
The smog over Los Angeles is almost natural in comparison to the composition of Heidi Montag's "figure".

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
This horoscope is based off of true events. There once was a man from Nantucket.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your not the only person who compares sex to the one eyed green monster. Fox News totally digs it too!

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus holistic counseling synthesis center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MACKENZIE SPARKS / COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Sara Plourde has recorded a 0.96 ERA and is leading the nation with 367 strikeouts. Her 367 strikeouts in 189 innings equates to her striking out an average of 13.58 batters per game.

Win streak at stake on road against Terriers

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

While at times the Massachusetts softball team did not look its best at the plate this past weekend against Charlotte, one thing stood out: When UMass got a hit, it strung together hits.

Besides the first inning of Saturday's 5-1 victory when Carly Normandin led off with a single but the Minutewomen (25-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) failed to drive her in, UMass came up with timely hits.

In the other three innings that the Minutewomen registered a hit against the 49ers, they scored at least one run.

It was the same story it was the same story in Friday's 3-0 win. After Katie Bettencourt doubled in the fourth inning to break up Charlotte's Emily Jeffery's bid for a no-hitter, it was Meghhan Carta who got to Jeffery next with an anRBI double to drive in Bettencourt.

Bettencourt came through for UMass again in the sixth inning after Kyllie Magill reached on aman error. The sophomore took a 2-2 pitch in a 1-0 game and drove it over the centerfield wall, cashing in on Charlotte's mistake.

"Timely hitting is what it's all about," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said after Friday's game.

Today,, the Minutewomen will square off at Boston University in a rematch of last week's matchup which UMass took 3-0 in Amherst. In that contest, the Minutewomen put together a three-run third inning off of four hits – all coming with

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Timely hitting, strong pitching helping UM

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

After shutting out Boston University in its home opener, the Massachusetts softball team will face the Terriers again tonight in their second match-up of the season.

In the first meeting, UMass (25-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) had a strong third inning to take a 3-0 lead that the Terriers (20-13, 5-1 American East) could not recover from. Whitney Williams singled followed by Kyllie Magill's fifth home run of the season to put the Minutewomen up by two. Sarah Reeves came through with a single to drive in Katie Bettencourt, who scored the final run for her team.

Sara Plourde also contributed to the 3-0 victory, holding the No. 1 hitter in the nation, April Setterlund, to one single in the seventh inning. Plourde struck out Setterlund in the first inning and forced a fly out in the fourth. Setterlund came into the game leading the AE in numerous categories, including a batting average of .595 and an on base percentage of .663.

Since going 1-for-3 against Plourde, Setterlund had four hits and two RBIs against Connecticut last Thursday. Despite the 10-9 loss, Setterlund played a crucial role for her team as she singled to send home teammate Erica Casacci for the potential tying run. However, Casacci was called out at home despite Setterlund's efforts.

Earlier in the game, Setterlund singled twice and scored twice. Overall, the offense previously shutout by UMass recorded a home run, two doubles and 13 hits against UConn.

More recently, the Terriers went 2-1 in a series against AE opponent Albany. In the first two games, BU racked up 15 runs off of 17 hits as they defeated Albany 4-3 and 11-0.

Casacci had a strong showing for the Terriers, going 4-for-7 and improving her batting average to .306 for the season. Fellow sophomore Emily Roesch, who brings a .282 batting average, had four RBIs and a home run over the two games.

In Game 3, BU fell to the Great Danes 4-3 despite Setterlund's record-tying game. She drove in her 44th RBI of the season in the first inning, which tied Chiya Louie's record set in 2007. Senior Rachel Moeller was the only other batter to hit an RBI for the Terriers in the game.

In the past four games, BU's pitchers have pitched consistently despite the two losses. In the loss to Albany, Cassidi Hardy and Whitney Tuthill combined to strike out seven batters and allowed six hits.

Hardy carried a no-hitter in Game 1 up until the fourth inning and earned her 12th victory of the season, while Tuthill struck out six batters in Game 2 and allowed one hit.

In the loss to UMass, Hardy gave up three runs off of six hits. Tuthill pitched the final two innings and allowed two hits. The two pitchers come into Tuesday's game with a 2.62 and 2.54 earned run average, respectively.

The Minutewomen come into the game off of a weekend sweep against A-10 opponent Charlotte. The 49ers fell to UMass 3-0 in Game 1 and 5-1 in Game 2.

Plourde continued her strong pitching as she completed her fourth no-hitter of the season in Game 1 against Charlotte. Game 2 had similar results, with Plourde allowing three hits and striking out 17 batters. The one hit allowed by Plourde came from a single by Serena Smith and served as the first run Plourde has allowed in 26 innings.

The maroon and white offense also looks consistent coming into the BU game. Magill recorded her fifth home run of the season in Game 1 against the 49ers, along with scoring a run in Game 2. Bettencourt helped out with a two-run home run, along with Reeves hitting her team-leading 22nd RBI of the season.

Meghan Carta, who leads UMass in home runs, had two key doubles during the series and feels confident in her team as they face the Terriers for a second time.

"We feel like we can pretty much handle anyone," Carta said. "Our offense, our defense, our pitching; we really feel like it's all coming together now and hopefully it carries onto the rest of the season."

The Minutewomen begin play at 5 p.m. at BU and look for their 11th straight victory of the season.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

Leigh looks for first victory

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

Bryan Leigh will get a chance to pitch under his own circumstances today against Boston College, vying for his first win as a pitcher for the Massachusetts baseball team in two years.

Leigh has been moved back and forth from the starting mound to the bullpen in his three seasons as a Minuteman. With observably more success coming as a starter, UMass coach Mike Stone has found tomorrow's game as a perfect opportunity to play him where he feels most at ease.

"He's had more success in the past as a starting pitcher," Stone said. "We've been wanting to give him a start, but it has not worked out, as far as rest is concerned, so he has an opportunity to do that [today]."

In five appearances in 2010, Leigh (0-4) started one game and was charged with a loss in his last four appearances. The senior looks to regain a confidence that he played with during his sophomore year.

In 2008, Leigh was utilized as a starter, going 3-4 with a 4.93 earned run average. Since then, he has been primarily a relief man, starting just three games his junior year while garnering four saves in 16 bullpen appearances with a 4.07 ERA.

"He's got command of four pitches, he's got good velocity, throws a lot of strikes and he's an experienced pitcher," Stone said. "We're hoping he's going to give us a real good outing."

Leigh's last win came as a starter against St. Bonaventure when he threw a career-high nine innings and fanned seven batters in a complete game three-hit performance two years ago yesterday. Since then, Leigh has been unable to record a win.

Leigh comes into today's contest with an 11.74 ERA in 15.1 innings pitched (8.1 out of the bullpen).

In his last three outings, he blew leads of five runs against William & Mary and three runs against Connecticut. In between those games, Leigh pitched 3.1 innings of relief, keeping Charlotte off the board in a tied game until his final frame when he allowed three runs.

He started his only game this season against Oklahoma, recording a career-best nine strikeouts in seven innings. Leigh led the Minutemen into the bottom-half of the seventh with a 4-2 lead, but could not hold on. After getting the leadoff hitter to fly-out, he put the next two men on with a walk and a hit-batter and then threw a wild-pitch to allow them to advance. A groundout by the next batter cut into the lead and a home-run followed that to put the Sooners up for good.

Despite picking up the loss, Stone was pleased with his pitcher's effort and hopes that the added rest will help when the starter takes the mound for the 3 p.m. game at Chestnut Hill.

"He didn't pitch over the weekend," Stone said. "It works out perfectly because he had a tune up on Sunday and a day of rest before his start."

Leigh faces the BC team that has talented hitters, but seems inconsistent in its run productivity. Six Eagles have hit .290 or better and their team average is .282, yet, they average just fewer than six runs per game and have been hot and cold at times.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen are coming off their first series win this season, defeating Charlotte 2–1 over the weekend.

BC has registered 11 runs in its last three games, winning two against Maryland. Prior to that, the Eagles knocked in 31 runs in three contests against Clemson and Bryant and managed just 18 runs in five games before that.

"We expect to see a good ball club tomorrow and a real test," Stone said. "We're going with the pitcher that we feel has got the best chance of winning right now."

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen trying to use momentum

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team hopes it can further erase its poor start to the 2010 season.

After beginning the year 2-16, UMass (4-17, 3-6 Atlantic 10) won a crucial series, 2-1, against conference rival Richmond last weekend at Earl Lorden Field. It was a step in the right direction for the Minutemen, who are slated to play Boston College at 3 p.m. today in Chestnut Hill.

"It gives us a lot of confidence," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We won our first conference series and we played really well in our second game – it gives us a lot of confidence going forward."

Even with loads of confidence, beating the Eagles (15-16, 6-9 Atlantic Coast Conference) should be no easy task. With wins in three of their previous four contests, the Eagles have newfound confidence of their own. Luckily for UMass, it will most likely not have to face BC pitcher Mike Dennhardt, who threw a complete game shutout against Maryland on Saturday. The performance earned him ACC Pitcher of the Week honors.

Starting for UMass will be senior right-hander Bryan Leigh. Leigh owns an 11.74 ERA and an 0-4 record to this point, but was very effective in his only start of the season when he threw seven innings, giving up five runs (three earned) while striking out nine.

"We expect that he'll pitch well and give us some solid innings," Stone said.

One player Leigh will have to watch out for is junior infielder Mickey Wiswall, whose .271 average is greatly overshadowed by his power numbers. Wiswall has started all 31 games for the Eagles this season and he leads the team in home runs with nine, and runs batted in with 35.

"Wiswall's good," Stone said. "[BC] is a good team playing in the ACC so they have to have good players. A lot of their players are friends with our players so it should be a good match-up."

UMass will also have to watch out for senior outfielder Robbie Anston, who is widely recognized as one of the best lead-off hitters in the conference. Coming off a year where he set the BC single-season hits record with 85, Anston continues to perform both at the plate and on the base paths, where he displays invaluable speed. In 31 games, Anston leads the team in hits (41), runs (30), and stolen bases (9).

Although the game will undoubtedly be difficult, Stone likes what he sees from his team as of late.

"I think we've had a better, more positive attitude lately," Stone said. "When you're successful then you feel better about yourselves and then you get on a roll. It is [having] confidence, playing well, and being successful that makes all the difference in the world."

Although it is not a conference game, UMass cannot afford to sit back. After another non-conference game against Northeastern tomorrow, UMass will travel to Rhode Island where it opens a three-game set against a strong Rams team on Friday.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Wilson breaks own record in shot put

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

In the second meet of the outdoor season, the Massachusetts track and field teams were impressive on their home turf.

The UMass Nine-Way meet, featuring 10 teams on the men's side and nine on the women's side, was anticipated to be a competitive event and it did not disappoint.

The Minutemen qualified two members for the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America championship and seven more athletes for the New England Championship in two weeks en route to an impressive second-place finish.

The day started off quickly for the Minutemen, who saw Jonathon Pierce, Nicolai Naranjo and Jason Ayr finish one-two-three in the longest event of the day, the 10,000-meter run. Pierce notched the first-place finish with Naranjo close behind in second and Ayr crossed the finish line less than a minute later.

UMass notched several other first-place finishes, including Brian Miller in the high jump and Zachary Koncki in the long jump. Miller jumped to a height of 6-07.00 meters and missed the school's top-five historical mark by a mere one inch. Regardless, it was good enough to qualify him for the NECs. Koncki also took first place, leaping a distance of 22 feet, 11 inches.

Sonny Gamble, who competed in the steeple chase event, placed second with his time of 9:34.06 minutes. The steeple chase is typically an event exclusive to the outdoor season. With his second place time, Gamble qualified for the NECs in two weeks. Junior indoor Atlantic 10 champion Sean Buseh also came in second place in the pole vault, reaching a height of 14 feet, 9 inches.

As the Minutemen qualified seven athletes for the NECs in their second-place finish, the Minutewomen recorded four top five all-time records and won the UMass Nine-Way meet.

As she has all year long, senior thrower Lisa Wilson got UMass off to a great start. She set a new school record in the shot put, breaking her own

See TRACK on page 6

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Lisa Wilson set a new school record in the shot put to help the Minutewomen earn first place in the UMass Nine-Way Meet.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 68 LOW: 34

www.DailyCollegian.com

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 2010

PVLSI expands research lab in Springfield

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

The Pioneer Valley Life Sciences Institute (PVLSI) announced the beginning of a $4.3 million project on April 13, to expand the research space of the former engineering manufacturing building in Springfield thus making way for a state-of-the-art biomedical research facility.

As the latest in a series of collaborations between the University of Massachusetts and the city of Springfield, the PVLSI project will add approximately 8,000 square feet of space to the Springfield-based research laboratory.

Established in 2002 in order to remodel the former building into a modernized research facility, the Springfield laboratory will be expanded from its already existing 17,000 square feet to its location at 3601 Main St. in the city.

The construction scheduled for the PVLSI research laboratory will begin with internal alterations to the building which will, in effect, expand the wet lab, core facilities, as well as offices and conference room spaces.

A joint venture of the Bay State Medical Center and UMass, the PVLSI was established in 2002 with the purpose of furthering biomedical research and economic development.

The overall mission of the PVLSI, according to their website, is to improve human health by developing new approaches to the diagnosis and the treatment of diseases.

The PVLSI brings together the resources of each of its founding institutions, as well as its own researchers, to collaborate with physicians, scientists and engineers.

Altogether, the researchers work to create both interdisciplinary and multidisciplinary teams which will focus on the molecular mechanisms of disease as well as the development of new diagnostic and therapeutic tools.

According to Paul Friedmann, executive director of the PVLSI, the project seeks to further the economic development throughout the region but initially met with some obstacles in its early stages due to the organization's own financial challenges.

"We are very happy to get this project under way," Friedmann said.

"Of course, financing has been a challenge in the current economy and we are especially grateful for the support of the late Sen. Ted Kennedy, Congressman Richard Neal and Baystate Health's CEO, Mark Tolosky, in securing the necessary funding," he added.

"In addition to the jobs we anticipate creating directly, our plan calls for this facility to support biomedically-based opportunities that will indirectly lead to more businesses and jobs in Springfield, throughout the western Massachusetts region and beyond."

According to the PVLSI's science director and UMass biology professor member, Lawrence Schwartz, the project will also serve to position the University in the competitive field of medical research.

"The much-needed space created by this project will enable us to enhance and expand our research team as well as our microscopy, imaging and research core facilities," Schwartz said. "This will increase our research capacity, allowing us to compete even more effectively for federal research grant funding and to accelerate our work with industry collaborators."

Both Friedmann and Schwartz said that they expect the expansion to completed later this year, which, when finished, will hopefully allow them to create 40 new job opportunities in addition to the already 45 currently employed at the facility.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

The late Massachusetts senator, Edward Kennedy, proved to be a key advocator for the financial backing of the project.

Neal has helped several UMass-Springfield collaborations come to fruition, including last week's visit from the Irish muralists.

Illustration of a photovoltaic device

hv

COURTESY UMASS REL

Inspired by the energy-harnessing process of plants, Thayumanavan and his team of scientists experimented in the lab with natural materials to convert sunlight into electricity.

University chemists develop new method for electricity

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

Chemists at the University of Massachusetts have developed a new polymer-based method for converting sunlight into electricity.

Using the new method, the UMass chemists have created photovoltaic devices which are responsible for the conversion of sunlight into electricity, something they hope will lead to more efficient power production than possible by the current generation of semi-conductors.

Featured in the current issue of the "Journal of the American Chemical Society" (JACS), the work of harnessing solar energy has been accomplished by UMass professor of chemistry Sankaran Thayumanavan and colleagues, including collaborations with others at the University of California-Riverside.

The article, titled "Dendritic and linear macromolecular architectures for photovoltaics: A photo induced charge transfer investigation," was selected by the journal's editors to be featured in a special series, "Harnessing Energy for a Sustainable World."

According to the editors of JACS, the research by Thayumanavan and his colleagues will transform the way engineers design future photovoltaic devices.

"Innovation through scientific discovery is a necessary component of much societal advancement," the editors added.

"To truly implement sustainable practices, energy must be harnessed more cleanly and stored for efficient distribution and use. This systems-level change sometimes referred to as the New Industrial Revolution, will require novel materials as well as savvy analysis and modeling to ensure success."

According to Thayumanavan, the method used by all of the collaborators on this project originated in nature with experimentation on various plants with the use of organic molecules to mimic the photosynthetic machinery of the plants.

"Our method is inspired by an energy-harnessing process that plants use in nature, which evolved over millions of years to be efficient in terms of capturing a lot of energy and transporting it short distances without power loss," Thayumanavan said.

In addition to his standing position as a professor of the University, Thayumanavan is also the director of the UMass Fueling the Future Center for Chemical Innovation.

The mission of the Fueling for the Future Center for Chemical Innovation, according to their web site, is to discover and apply the chemical design principles needed for making organic charge-conducting materials with tunable transport properties for renewable energy applications.

The Center also educates students in the skills they may require to provide a well-informed and highly trained workforce for future technological developments, as well as how to translate such discoveries to the scientific industry for increased job opportunities.

The students also conduct public outreach activities to inform the general public in the latest developments of the chemical sciences and stimulate participation in future endeavors.

"In the future, photovoltaic devices may no longer rely on slower, less efficient human-made semi-conductors," Thayumanavan added. "Our work should lead to lighter, more efficient and sustainable photovoltaics."

"The hope," Thayumanavan said, "is that such a bio-inspired design could approach the conversion efficiency that plants achieve naturally."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Dining Services welcomes back 'Taste of UMass' to campus

For the 16th year in a row, UMass dining services will host their annual "Taste of UMass" event April 22 at the Mullins Center.

The event, which is free for all UMass students who have a campus meal plan, will be held from 4:30 to 8:00 p.m. next Thursday.

Featuring 75 different food booths, the "Taste of UMass" will include cuisine from Home Comfort Foods plus entertainment such as "UMass Idol," a 40-foot giant UMass sushi roll, a student iron chef competition, as well as a Nathan's Hot Dog eating contest, according to the director of dining services, Ken Toong.

Additionally, the event will welcome different guests, including celebrity chef Jet Tila and Food Network personality, Kevin Brauch.

Due to the event, University dining commons will close at 3:00 p.m., though the Bluewall Café, the Pita Pit at the Worcester Dining Commons and the Southwest Café will remain open.

The Worcester and Berkshire Dining Commons will re-open at 9:00 p.m.

Admissions fees for all non-meal plan students and staff at the "Taste of UMass" will be $10, with tickets being $12 for the public.

According to Toong, buses will be available to the Mullins Center next Thursday beginning at 4:00 p.m.

Collegian News Staff

Hillside Salon with the Holubs

Tuesday, April 20, Sabine Holub will again serve as the host for the Hillside Salon monthly gathering at her home, which features presentations and discussions led by several local artists.

ARTS & LIVING

Paper Jam works itself out

The Collegian hosted a nearly four hour concert in Southwest's Hampden Courtyard Monday night, which drew a large crowd and lots of booty shaking.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen sweep BU

Number 21 UMass beats Terriers, two homeruns behind from Sarah Reeves, the Minutewomen swept BU in a season series and will play UConn Friday at 4 p.m

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Nick Milano thinks that David Brooks needs to put in an honest days's work before saying that the poor don't work hard.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, hosted by the Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 52
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR Sara Cody
MANAGING WEB EDITOR Pete Rizzo
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witta
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Prousut
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rubin-Miller
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Aser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life; became the College Signal in 1901; the Weekly Collegian in 1914; and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Alyssa Creamer

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

– UM Crime Log –

APRIL 6

Alex Obasohan of Amherst, Mass. was arrested for disturbing a classroom on the University of Massachusetts campus.

Though he's not a student, Obasohan had been allowed to sit in on a class held in Arnold House. After numerous disruptions, the professor asked Obasohan to leave.

Obasohan refused and notified the University's police department (UMPD) who had responded to the professor's call at approximately 10:20 a.m. Obasohan was removed from campus and arrested on the charge of disturbing a school.

APRIL 7

Alex Obasohan of Amherst, Mass. was arrested for trespassing on the UMass campus. After previously being banned from returning to the campus, the UMPD received a call in which an unidentified person reported to having seen him on University's grounds. Obasohan was arrested on charges of trespassing on campus.

APRIL 8

Alex Obasohan of Amherst, Mass. was arrested for trespassing on the UMass campus. After previously being arrested for trespassing and for disrupting a class, the UMPD were informed that he had returned to campus again. Obasohan was arrested on charges of trespassing.

APRIL 9

Daniel Joseph Pasquale of Abington, Mass. and Kirsten Lena Braun of Milford, Mass. were arrested for liquor law violations. A black Ford Mustang was pulled over in lot 22 due to suspicion for underage possession of alcohol.

Alcohol was found in the car, and Braun was found to have false identification in her possession. Pasquale was arrested on the charge of possession of alcohol while under the age of 21. Braun was arrested on the charges of false and missive of a driver's license, as well as possession of alcohol while under 21.

APRIL 10

Christopher Terrance Shelton of Boston, Mass. was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. A UMPD officer pulled over a black Ford Explorer after seeing the car drive onto the sidewalk.

The driver, later identified as Shelton, refused to identify himself to the officer or provide registration information for the vehicle. After speaking with the officer for some time, the driver gave the officer a false name.

After searching the police database, the arresting officer identified Shelton and found that his driver's license was suspended.

Shelton was arrested on the charges of operating a vehicle on the sidewalk, operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, refusing to identify himself to the officer on the scene and for providing the officer with a false name.

Sarah Bree Miller of Canton, Mass. was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. An officer on patrol viewed a black Jeep driving on Massachusetts Ave. without its lights on.

When pulled over, the officer smelled alcohol on Miller. The officer asked Miller to perform numerous field sobriety tests, all of which she failed. Miller was arrested on the charges of a liquor OUI and a motor vehicle lights violation.

Christopher Shelton of Waltham, Mass. was arrested for assault charges. Shelton was arrested on the charge of domestic assault and battery.

APRIL 11

James P. Duane of Bourne, Mass. was arrested for liquor law violations. While in Lot 32, an officer suspected Duane of underage possession of alcohol, which was later found with. Duane was arrested on the charges of possession of alcohol while under 21.

Anthony Michaels of Southborough, Mass. was arrested for disorderly conduct. The UMPD received a complaint from Fearing St.

Upon arrival, the responding officer found Michaels to be acting in an inappropriate manner. Michaels was arrested on the charge of disorderly conduct.

Katherine Cleary of Brewster, Mass. was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. An officer on patrol viewed a black Honda Civic driving erratically, and asked the driver to pull over on McClure Street.

While speaking with the driver, the officer noticed she had slurred speech and bloodshot eyes. The officer asked Cleary to perform numerous field sobriety tests which were failed.

Cleary was arrested on the charges of a liquor OUI, possession of alcohol while under 21 and negligent operation of a motor vehicle.

Collegian News Staff

Pulitzer Prize Administrator Sig Gissler announced the most recent award recipients last Monday, April 12, at Columbia's Journalism School.

Online news source receives Pulitzer Prize

THE COLUMBIA SPECTATOR
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

The Internet secured itself a prevailing role in news media on Monday, reeling in one of journalism's most coveted prizes for the very first time.

ProPublica, an independent, non-profit online newsroom, was the first online organization to win a Pulitzer Prize, which was announced at Columbia's Journalism School on Monday afternoon at a ceremony for the 94th annual Pulitzer Prizes in Journalism, Letters, Drama and Music.

There were 1,103 newspaper entries, up from a total of 1,028 entries last year.

Pulitzer Prize administrator Sig Gissler, who commenced the announcements and later elaborated on the winners, said that ProPublica's model represents a mode of journalism that will become increasingly influential, as fewer resources for investigative journalism remain available at the disposal of news outlets.

"This is something we're going to see more of in the years ahead because there's going to be more and more collaboration of news entities when it comes to enterprise journalism," he said, referring to the collaboration between ProPublica and the New York Times Magazine.

In addition to ProPublica's online win, an entirely online entry won in the category of cartooning for the first time.

The award was given to Mark Fiore, for his self-syndicated animated cartoons that appeared on the San Francisco Chronicle web site.

But while the Internet did score a victory this year, up from zero awards last year, it still lags behind its more conventional counterpart – newsprint.

The Washington Post racked up the most Pulitzers, amassing four for its work in Feature Writing, Commentary, Criticism and International Reporting. It won double the number that the New York Times won, not counting the Times award won in conjunction with ProPublica.

Though winning multiple awards is considered an impressive feat in journalistic circles, some consider this a slight upset to the publication, which won five last year and had a record-setting seven in 2002 for its 9/11 coverage.

From a thematic standpoint, articles about natural disasters did not dominate the awards this year, as they tend to do, but rather dealt with more "down-to-earth matters," Gissler said.

Other news publications that won Pulitzers included the Seattle Times, the Philadelphia Daily News, the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, the Dallas Morning News, the Des Moines Register, and the Denver Post.

Gissler said that, despite journalism's continuously shifting ways as new models are explored and older ones are revamped, traditional newspapers still remain a shining beacon for reporting.

"It's been a tough time for newspapers the last few years, but amid the gloomy talk, I think the winners and finalists are encouraging examples of the high quality of journalism across the nation," Gissler said.

And though journalistic modes change and adapt to the times, watchdog journalism—a form of investigative reporting intended to hold public officials and institutions accountable—continues to pervade reporting, Gissler said, as evidenced by the many winners this year who produced content in this category.

Among those he cited were articles produced about the contamination of hamburgers, the hazardous use of cell phones while driving, and parents who accidentally killed their children by leaving them in their cars.

He added, "Watchdog journalism is still a vibrant force in the United States that would make Joseph Pulitzer proud."

IMPORTANT NOTICE
REGARDING YOUR STUDENT REFUND

THE STUDENT REFUND PROCESS IS CHANGING!

The Bursar's Office is Going Green Again! Beginning in MAY 2010, student refunds will ONLY be automatically distributed to students who are enrolled in the University's Excess Express (direct deposit) service. This is the final phase of our office's paper-less processing initiative to provide faster service, sustainable business practices, and elimination of long lines at the office!

Students who are eligible for a refund (i.e., have a credit balance on their student account that is refundable) will automatically receive a student refund ONLY if they have signed up for Excess Express (direct deposit). Students who do not have an active Excess Express enrollment will have their balances remain as a credit toward subsequent charges.

Students who need a paper check will need to complete a request form for each refund available on their account. This form and accompanying instructions will be available on the Bursar's website.

Sign up today for Excess Express through your SPIRE access to expedite your future student refunds. More information on Excess Express can be found on the Bursar's website at www.umass.edu/bursar/.

NOW HIRING for Night Graphics

- Must be free to work at night
- Experience in Photoshop or InDesign preferred
- This is one of the only PAID jobs for the Daily Collegian!!!

Contact: NGuarino@student.umass.edu

EDITORIAL OPINION

"If we don't believe in freedom of expression for people we despise, we don't believe in it at all." - Noam Chomsky

Conservative to a 'tea'

Charlie Felder

On December 16 1773, colonial protesters boarded British ships moored in Boston Harbor.

The ships were carrying shipments of tea that had been taxed and were set to return to England. The protesters, dressed in Native American garb, emptied the tea stores overboard and into the harbor water. The action, taken in response to what the protesters believed to be unfair taxation of colonists by the British government rather than by their own representatives, served to spur the colonies towards their ultimate revolution. This was an act of defiance in the face of unfair government action against its own citizens. It was an act of independence.

Today, the Tea Party returns to Boston. The enraged crowds, the racial epithets, the ill-informed, misguided and redirected anger, the picket signs that make no sense; it will all be prominently displayed on the Boston Common, as ten thousand people are expected to descend upon on our state capital.

The movement, which gained national steam as a collection of citizens angered by what they have perceived to be the Obama administration's wanton and reckless spending spree throughout its first several months in office, has grown in size over the past year.

The people gathering today on Boston Commons have little, if nothing in common the colonists who dumped those boxes of Tea into Boston Harbor.

Among the Tea Party faithful are the birthers (a group of conspiracy theorists who believe that Barack Obama was not born in the United States, which would in turn disqualify his eligibility for the presidency), the don't-tread-on-me factions (those who believe that any federal action – healthcare, stimulus package, et al. –with any direct or indirect effect on citizens' lives is illegal and worse, tyrannical), anti-gun control neurotics, anti-gay marriage bigots and an assortment of people with "Just Say No" fever. This latter group has taken it upon themselves to oppose absolutely anything and everything to come out of the White House. Constructive, don't you think?

At the Tea Partiers' helm, scheduled to give the keynote address tomorrow afternoon to the plaudits of the troops and for the amusement of the children, will be none other than America's rogue princess. That's right. The political darling of all the Joe Six-packs out there. The defender of American freedoms, whatever she considers them to be. The enemy of socialism, that scourge of western civilization.

The woman with eyesight so strong, she can see Russia from her porch. Ladies and gentleman, boys and girls, angry uninformed white people and more angry uninformed white people, may I present to you, fresh off signing her new reality TV show deal with TLC, the next aspiring lamb to the sacrificial presidential election altar, the one, the only, the incomparable Sarah Palin.

Wait. What? Sarah Palin? The Tea Party comes home to Boston, and this is the best they could do? Better believe it, kids. No one with any true conception of what they have to lose by speaking at a gathering like this would place themselves within 50 miles of Boston Common.

Indeed, even freshman GOP Senator Scott Brown, whose special election victory in January is considered by Tea Partiers to be their most forceful victory to date, will be conspicuously out of sight.

Can't say I blame the guy.

Would you align yourself with the same people who spit on black congressmen and taunted them with racial epithets as they set out from their congressional offices to cast the landmark healthcare vote last month?

On what might seem like a less important note, I'm not sure that anyone has bothered to mention to them that their moniker is slightly misplaced. As I mentioned before, the original Tea Party was carried out by people who were enraged at the unfair and indirect taxation levied upon them by the British government.

The people gathering today on Boston Common have little, if nothing in common with the colonists who dumped those boxes of tea into Boston Harbor.

The grievances they lodge (Obama's ineligibility for the presidency, the healthcare and stimulus bills' erosion of American freedom, Obama's baby-killing agenda, etc.) mirror absolutely none of the colonists' grievances, but are rather a collection of ignorant and overheated claims by people who wouldn't know it if reality shook their hand and bought them a Ferrari.

The reason we have the FDIC is because of a situation most commonly associated with the 19th century: the bank run. At the time the official currency of the United States was gold with $1 usually being defined as about 5 percent of an ounce of gold. In other words, an ounce of gold was worth $20. By comparison, "the price of gold has changed" as they say in those cheesy commercials: it's currently around $1000 an ounce.

However, not only is gold very valuable, but it's also very dense. So carrying it around in your pocket has never been practical and keeping it in your home was an invitation for thieves to take it. Thus, the bank was created as a place where you could safely store your gold. When you made a deposit they gave you a certificate you could exchange later for the gold you deposited. In places where banks became more established, the certificates came to supplant the gold and just be used as money as people came to trust the banks to always be able to come up with the metal.

The same kind of commitment was made with cash. Essentially, you had to be able to walk into your bank and demand to see all your asse s held by them. If your life savings were in the Bank of America downtown, you had to be able to go withdraw all that money at a moment's notice without a penny missing.

If we based our system of currency off autographed glamour shots of the Jonas Brothers, for example, then if you deposited your Kevin you'd want your Kevin back and not somebody else's Nick, even if their values were the same.

In a bank run, people come to believe that the bank won't be able to come up with the money they deposited, so they all go to the bank and demand their certificates be honored. If the bank can't honor them, it goes out of business and the people have to accumulate capital for major projects the hard way, and not to mention, protect their own money. So a bank run and collapse was disruptive to local economics.

Congress created the FDIC during the Great Depression to provide a certain amount of insurance for depositors so that they would not be wiped out by bank runs as so many were. A good and necessary measure by the federal government to protect the ordinary people from a capricious market failure, right?

Nope.

It's pretty fair to say that they were completely missing the point when they created the FDIC. Think about it. You deposit some gold, get some certificates that can be used at any time to redeem that gold and then it's not there all of a sudden. Your money, the money you worked hard to own and put in a bank for safekeeping has for all intents and purposes simply vanished off the face of the Earth.

You'd understand if there had been a robbery, but there hasn't. Or, at least, not a robbery with guns and bandits.

Gold has a very interesting property: it's fungible. That means that as far as we're concerned every piece of gold is exactly like every other piece.

If you deposit an ounce of gold in a bank, it only matters that you get back an ounce of gold. It doesn't have to be the exact same gold you put in. If we based our system of currency off autographed glamour shots of the Jonas Brothers, for example, then if you deposited your Kevin, you'd want your Kevin back and not somebody else's Nick, even if their values were the same (but we all know Kevin's not worth anything).

Because there could be so little gold in circulation at any one time once the certificates started being accepted as money in a community and the gold being withdrawn didn't have to be the exact same gold as was deposited, an unscrupulous banker could take advantage of the situation in two ways. First, he or she could print more certificates than could be supported by the amount of gold, and second, they could take the amount of gold you had deposited and lend it out to someone else.

Either way, they stole your money.

You can see the flaw: any time lots of people wanted hard money, the bank needed to have it all on hand or fail hard. This tended to happen with some regularity throughout the 19th century because of the number of banks throughout the country and the fact that they didn't necessarily trust one another. They had good reason not to be trusting, since one bad bank screws everything up. It's like intentionally writing bad checks.

That brings us back to FDIC. The institution exists to protect us depositors from bank runs by insuring our deposits. A bank run is only a bad thing if the bank has been stealing money from its customers and therefore can't come up with their cash when they want it.

But the FDIC never addresses the root causes of the bank run and failure. They are only concerned when the banks actually become insolvent and not with what make them insolvent. I suppose they're not really to blame any more than anybody else, since most economists are content to chalk the whole thing up to "market failure" and not worry about why the market failed. Interestingly, the FDIC doesn't insure losses due to fraud or theft.

And stay away from my mattress.

Matthew M Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Fed Up? Ed/Op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Butlers work harder than dukes

Nick Milano

Last week, Duke beat Butler to win the Men's Basketball National Championship.

The win and the game itself may not have much to do with politics, but in a country where people will relate anything to politics, it can be thrust into the national political narrative. For David Brooks, a New York Times columnist, the game was the perfect illustration of how poor and middle class people do not work as hard as rich people. As an intellectual and elitist columnist, Brooks' stance on the matter is disgusting, out of touch and emblematic of bigger problems.

Brooks develops this point in an online discussion with fellow Times columnist Gail Collins. He says that the game was "widely cast as a class conflict – the upper crust Dukies against the humble Midwestern farm boys." Since Duke prevailed, Brooks attributes their win to "hard work on defense" and says this shows how "the rich are not always spoiled. Their success does not always derive from privilege."

That is all he had to say; it is true, Duke is regarded as top private school for people of means. This is true; it is the Boston College of the south. If he had finished there, he would not have ignited a controversy, but being a columnist, he had to make some grander point. Namely, he said the Duke players' willingness to play hard and tough on defense is emblematic of "how for the first time in human history, rich people work longer hours than middle class or poor people. How do you construct a rich versus poor narrative when the rich are more industrious?"

It is almost too easy to laugh at this statement, if only because Brooks says that he was cheering against Butler because they are poor. More interestingly, Brooks is saying that rich people are rich because they work harder. He does not even limit this to a rich versus poor argument. Instead, he divides it into rich versus the poor and the middle class. This statement is so horrifying, not just because it is an old worn out cliché, but because it is what fuels the conservative, small government mindset.

This statement is so horrifying, not just because it is an old worn out cliché, but because it is what fuels the conservative, small government mindset.

The poor and middle class do not work hard; therefore, there is no need to have successful government programs like food stamps to help families buy food. In short, the poor and middle class do not work hard; therefore, there is no need whatsoever for the government to play any kind of a helping role.

Obviously most sane people would disagree. Monica Potts wrote a blog at the American Prospect and made several important points. First, Potts did some research and could not find proof that the rich work more than the poor.

Second, what kind of jobs is Brooks talking about? Sure, accountants may work 80 stressful hours a week, but it is a profession they chose, went through extensive education for, and they probably drive to their beautiful home in a nice car.

It is nothing compared to, as Matt Taibbi put it, "working 80 hours a week digging ditches for a septic-tank company, or listening to impatient assholes scream at you at some airport ticket counter all day long, or even teaching disinterested, uncontrollable kids in some crappy school district with metal detectors on every door."

Third, Potts writes "I suspect that low-wage earners just aren't allowed to work as much as they might want to ... their bosses aren't going to let them work overtime just because they need more money."

I think this is the most important point. I work at Roche Bros. in Eastern Massachusetts, where the company recently instituted a 32 hour cap on part-time workers to escape paying employees benefits.

We now have our hours, as Potts writes, "Intensely managed by [our] superiors just so [we] don't get more money or qualify for benefits."

At Roche Bros., one part-time co-worker who does the same amount of work as a full-timer and who used to work 48 hours a week saw 16 hours of pay go out the window – money he sends back home to Guatemala.

Another coworker skipped his three vacations to get the money lumped into on pay-check because he is Haitian and had to send money home after January's earthquake.

Now he has to work straight through until next January or he has to take unpaid vacations. Think he is going to get bailed out by the bosses? Think again.

Everyone has a hard-working friend who has climbed the ladder quickly and achieved a high-paying job, but more often than not, poor and middle class people are mired in low-pay, low-reward jobs – not because they do not work hard, but because of the American economic system.

Their hopes lie in their children. For his stupidity, Brooks should go work a full 48-plus hour work week of a middle class plumber – suddenly a two-day weekend might seem glorious. Send him out to a low wage job, force him to pick mushrooms, work as a janitor or cut grass for a week.

I'm sure any of his co-workers would trade their easy jobs for the hard life of a New York Times columnist.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

FDIC head will bore us instead of helping

Matthew M. Robare

So, Sheila Bair, chairwoman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and University of Massachusetts Amherst professor, has been announced as the commencement speaker for the Class of 2010.

As a quick aside, it should be interesting seeing if the ceremony draws more people than the all-but-inevitable protest over the University once again choosing to honor a Bush administration appointee who played a controversial role in an ongoing disaster.

Honestly, I don't care. Unless the 2011 speaker is Stephen Colbert I know I will neither attend nor miss my graduation.

Anyways, I've been on a bit of an economics kick as of late, and I thought I'd take this unique opportunity of pointing out why the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is a perfect example of what's wrong with the foundations of our entire economy.

The Local Music Project

Collegian Paper Jam works itself out

By Dave Coffey
Collegian Staff

As the Monday sun descended behind the monolithic Southwest towers, long shadows cast themselves over the Hampden courtyard, glancing rays of fading sunlight off of the lacquered finishes and shiny surfaces of electric guitars and cymbals. The waning of daylight and the creeping approach of dusk was the perfect curtain call for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's Paper Jam, a six-act battle-of-the-bands style concert.

Kicking off the first day of festivities of Southwest Week, Paper Jam was not only a heavily attended success, but a rocking good time as well.

Local hip-hop duo Solo Sexx hosted and emceed the four-hour-long event. In addition to performing between the featured acts and providing occasional comic relief, Solo Sexx got the crowd pumped and ready to roll with party-style raps and frequent interaction with the audience.

The first band to play was Leisure Colony, a Noho based alt-indie style band with a sound that features jangly lead guitar, airy vocals and quirky melodies delivered in a somewhat ambient, synth-laden aura. Leisure Colony sounds like the Beatles if they were playing in a big top carnival, with poppy and catchy hooks resonating through tripped-out sounding keyboards and guitar. For a band with a somewhat diligent approach to melody, their dynamic song structures and impressive mid-song meter changes have a sense of rhythm lacking in most modern indie bands. They closed with a jammed-out spacey number called "Letters From Mars" with perfect timing just as the setting sun slipped below the low hanging clouds.

Second up were the ever-funky Bubonic Souls hailing from Amherst. They sported a brilliant style complete with fiery sax solos, ankle-snapping rhythmic breakdowns and sublime dual male-female vocals. Somehow, the seven-piece outfit managed an incredibly tight live performance while keeping a sweet and sultry sway about them, as if a cool summer breeze seemed to pour straight off the stage. Combining uber-sexy funk with jazzy keyboard interludes and soulful, horn-dominated middle eights, the Souls music was more danceable than a 50's sock hop, causing more than a few people to bust a move during their performance. With their laid-back funk approach and up-tempo crescendo grooves, watching the Bubonic Souls play a live set is about as close as one could get to living through an episode of the television show "Shaft."

Third to play were natives

This Monday night, The Collegian hosted Paper Jam, a music festival featuring popular local bands including Bella's Bartok (above), The Telephone Company, Leisure Colony, On Trak and Malado, Bubonic Souls and Darlingside.

The Telephone Company, a sparse power trio that combined the enigmatic dissonance of grunge mixed with a no-strings-attached punk rock mentality If Nirvana and the Strokes made sweet bromance love with each other in Jack White's basement, you'd most likely get some incarnation of The Telephone Company (or Tele Co., as colloquially referred to). Front man Nick Bush vocally delivers like Cobain channeling Dylan with a poetic, almost bluesy harshness rounding out Tele Co.'s raw, no frills sounds perfectly.

Fourth in the lineup was the insanely talented string-rock quintet Darlingside from Northampton. One of the more unique acts of the night, Darlingside, while containing only five members, produced a fantastically lush, layered sound, mostly due to their interesting relatively unheard-of instrumentation in rock music. In addition to drums, bass, guitar and vocals, Darlingside also featured various string instruments, such as violin, mandolin and electric cello. With their distinctive instrument choices, Darlingside seamlessly melded hook-drenched classical-rock melody lines with substantially infectious grooves, thanks in no small part to arguably the meatiest drums one has ever heard played under a string section. Even more impressive is that despite the overwhelming instrumental presence, the vocals were, if anything, even more noteworthy, as they resonated clearly and truly without being buried by the amazing instrumental skills. Arguably, Hampden Courtyard has never heard such serene and well executed harmonized vocals, much less from a quintet of string rockers. While Jethro Tull first comes to mind in terms of potential inspiration, Darlingside shared some of their more modern influences, closing their set with a bang with a blistering jam-funk Ke$ha/Lady Gaga cover medley.

Number five on the bill was rapper On Trak, backed by three-piece band Malado. Winner of the University Programming Council's 2009 Battle of the Bands, On Trak delivered as usual with a batch of crowd-pleasing, super-groovy instrumental hip-hop. Malado delivered where most live rap acts seldom do - instrumentally. In addition to competent keyboard and heavy synth work, killer bass and drum work made for an amazing overall performance. On Trak was everything live hip-hop should be: fist-pumping, foot-stomping rhythmically hard-hitting music that features spitfire verses over rhythms too nasty for an R rating, leaving the crowd begging for more.

If Darlingside was one of the evening's most unique acts, Bella's Bartok, the self-described Western Massachusetts premier Gypsy Balkan Rockabilly Fusion Party in a box was easily the most unique. Imagine Serbian pirates singing up-tempo sea shanties. That is, if Serbian pirates liked blazing electric blues guitar and almost-too-catchy brass section lines. Oh, and the lead singer pirate also looks strangely like Borat. That's pretty much Bella's Bartok in a nutshell. Bella's Bartok may have had a rather strange approach, but it's hard to say that it didn't work, by the end of the first speed-polka tune about a city in Poland, nearly the entire audience was dancing a merry jig. If that's not a proper musical aspiration, then what is?

By the end of the night, Paper Jam proved to be a huge hit, with basically the entire crowd sporting looks of exhausted satisfaction. Featuring everything from instrumental hip-hop to rock string quintets to Balkan rockabilly, the audience certainly got a little taste of everything, and Southwest could hardly ask for a better start to their week of festivities.

Dave Coffey can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

One of the highlights of the concert was a surprise appearance from Amherst celebrity Motown Benny. Sporting a fresh cape and his signature bucket and kazoo, Motown electrified the crowd.

Political thriller to be screened in Amherst

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Staff

Amherst Cinema is screening a new print of the seminal political thriller "Z" tonight at 7 p.m.

Directed by Costa Gavras, the film is based on the 1966 novel of the same name by Greek author Vassilis Vassilikos.

A French-language film released in 1969, "Z" is a minimally fictionalized account of the political turmoil in Greece following the 1963 assassination of peace-activist and democratic politician Gregoris Lambrakis. His death, perpetrated by right wing extremists, ignited a surge of popular protests against the government who was suspected of being involved. Gavras used actual transcripts of the ensuing trial and investigation following Lambrakis assassination, whose death exposed a conspiracy by the right-wing government.

The film features a respected international cast, with Jean-Louis Trintignant staring as le judge d'instruction, an investigative magistrate presiding over the assassination trial of a scientist named Zei. Played by Yves Montand, Zei is intended to represent Lambrakis, and is killed while giving a speech against the use of the atomic bomb. Also appearing in the film is Irene Papas and Jacques Perrin. Papas is cast in a supporting role as Zei's wife, but Perrin plays one of the principle characters. He is a photojournalist who uncovers evidence revealing the government's role in the conspiracy.

Since its inception, "Z" has been credited for making a bold political statement against the evils of government oppression. The film depicts the heavy restrictions on freedom imposed by the military dictatorship that took power in a coup shortly after Lambrakis assassination. The new government banned peaceful protests, strikes, labor unions, the free press, international encyclopedias, Jean-Paul Sartre, long hair on men and popular music such as the Beatles. It even banned the letter Z, which became a protest slogan meaning "he (Lambrakis) lives." This slogan is also the origin of the films title.

The film was received well by critics. In 1969, it was declared Best Film at the New York Film Critics Circle Awards, where Gavras was named Best Director. That same year, Trintignant won Best Actor at the Cannes Film Festival. In 1970, the National Society of Film Critics gave it the Best Film Award. "Z" also won a Golden Globe for Best Foreign Language Film, and an Oscar for Best Film Editing. It was the first film ever nominated for Academy Awards for both Best Foreign Language Film and Best Picture.

Film critic Roger Ebert is a proponent of the film. He wrote, "['Z'] is a film of our time. It is about how even moral victories are corrupted. It will make you weep and will make you angry. It will tear your guts out ... These would seem to be completely political events, but the young director Gavras has told them in a style that is almost unbearably exciting. 'Z' is at the same time a political cry of rage and a brilliant suspense thriller."

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu.

Amherst Cinema will screen French 1969 landmark political thriller "Z" tonight at 7 p.m. Directed by Costa Gavras, the film has won a handful of awards including Best Director and Best Foreign Language Film.

'Titans' not exactly larger than life in 3-D

By Nora Drapalski
Collegian Staff

"One day, somebody's got to make a stand. One day, somebody's got to say enough."

That day is now. Enough with the Greek mythology adaptations. It's not about how true to the story its film remake will be; it is simply a matter of money.

"Clash of the Titans," the 2010 remake of the 1981 film starring Harry Hamlin, falls into place among historically inaccurate, but highly entertaining action films.

"Clash of the Titans" focuses on the idea that the gods are angry with the profound lack of love shown by the mortals who serve them. In order to teach them a lesson, the gods have decided to give them 10 days to save themselves before they unleash the kraken to destroy all of Argos.

Of course, what type of remake would the film be if it didn't at least butcher the story it is based upon?

For those who aren't Classics scholars, Perseus was sent to kill the Gorgon Medusa as a host gift for the brother of the fisherman who saved him when he was a baby. And, like all heroes, he makes sure to pick up the princess of a neighboring state on his way back home.

However, Director Louis Leterrier thought that this story, which has been passed down thousands of years, was a bit too boring for modern audiences. So, instead of Perseus being a nice guy journeying to get a gift, the character is thrown into a series of most unfortunate events.

Over the course of the movie, Danae, Perseus' mother, dies due to their adventure at sea, Perseus' adoptive family drowns, he has to head to the Underworld, decapitate Medusa, petrify the Kraken right before it kills the girl, and then finally live happily ever after, not with Andromeda (the woman for whom he went on this trip to save), but instead with the immortal woman who has been watching him secretly since birth.

For the sake of artistic license, let us pretend for a second that the Kraken was a Greek mythological monster, not the Norse marine beast it actually was.

And having an almighty father is handy in the occasional circumstance that the woman you love is killed minutes before you save the day.

Moving beyond the ridiculous things that these filmmakers inserted (frankly, if the great Greek poets did not even include it, why should these people?), "Clash of the Titans" is quite an enjoyable film that audiences of all ages would enjoy. It is family-friendly, and would certainly be fun for those unfamiliar with Greek mythology – maybe even more so than for those who are familiar with it. The filmmakers made sure to include short explanations of mythological elements in the film that not all members of the audience would recognize in order to clear up any points of confusion.

According to the latest version of "Clash of the Titans," Perseus was raised by the fisherman Spyros, who discovered him as a baby, cradled in the arms of his dead mother. When tragedy meets his adoptive family, Perseus decides that he must make a stand against the self-centered gods who caused their death.

Yet, Perseus is hesitant to use the unfair advantage that being of divine descent supplies him with. Sam Worthington effectively portrays Perseus as a man struggling to find the right path after being thrown into great adversity. Worthington lacks the plastic, overly-affected air that the majority of action stars now bare. He brings a freshness and sense of reality to the character that an actor like Channing Tatum or Brad Pitt could never hope to achieve.

What makes "Clash of the Titans" a refreshing change is its portrayal of a hero who is not defined by his inhuman strength; rather, Perseus is just the average fisherman whose personal strength and intellect allow him to persevere. Of course, being the son of the King of Gods makes him slightly different from your normal Joe-Schmo, but if you consider his humble origins, Perseus is quite unlike most of the action film stars seen nowadays.

"Clash of the Titans" is your typical action movie, with the nice twist of having a hero you can actually relate to. Seeing the movie in 3-D is unnecessary, so pocket the few extra bucks when you go check it out. Remember, the only thing better than watching a good action movie is watching one that actually has a story.

Nora Drapalski can be reached at ndrapalski@student.umass.edu.

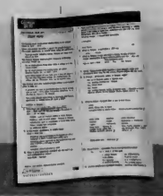
Don't make your girlfriend mad at you... WRITE FOR ARTS!

EMAIL arts@dailycollegian.com

GRADUATE STUDIES OPEN HOUSE

THURSDAY, APRIL 22 • 3 - 7 PM
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY

- Meet with graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study, including many programs that may lead to Connecticut teacher certification
- Find out about financial aid and graduate assistantships
- Get details on career services and living on campus



Southern Connecticut State University
SCSU SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES

To register for the open house, call 800-448-0661 / 203-392-5240 or visit www.SouthernCT.edu/grad

SCHOOLS OF BUSINESS · EDUCATION · HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
ARTS & SCIENCES · COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE

Start here

X Live off campus? The Census needs you to return your form.

There are special programs in place to count students on campus. But if you live off campus, you have to complete your own 2010 Census form that arrived in the mail. By participating, you're helping future students enjoy some of the same benefits and services that you have today. It's just 10 questions and takes about 10 minutes. So fill it out and mail it back.

WE CAN'T MOVE FORWARD UNTIL YOU MAIL IT BACK.

United States Census 2010
IT'S IN OUR HANDS

2010census.gov

Paid for by U.S. Census Bureau.

Pitcher Plourde strikes out nine

SORTINO from page 8

end the inning.

After going 1-for-3 in her first meeting with Plourde, April Setterlund hit a grand slam over the right field wall to bring the score within a run. Two batters walked to start the fifth inning and a single up the middle loaded the bases for the Terriers. Setterlund came up to bat and hit her 11th home run of the season to cut the Minutewomen's lead to 6-5.

UMass recovered in the top of the sixth inning, as Reeves hit her second home run of the game and sixth of the season. The senior is batting .296 on the season and increased her team-leading RBIs to 24 for the season with two in today's game.

"I felt comfortable all day at the plate," Reeves said. "We worked on a couple different things in pregame and it showed up all throughout the lineup."

The Terriers looked to make a comeback in the seventh inning, as Erica Casasco singled to get on base and advanced to second on a wild pitch. Setterlund stepped up to bat and hit a fly ball to centerfield, but Carly Normandin was there to make the out.

Plourde allowed eight hits for the day, along with walking four batters and striking out nine.

"I thought it was a great game for her because it forced her late in the game to start throwing alternate pitches that she hasn't been fond of using but were very effective, so I think it just makes her a better pitcher," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said of Plourde.

UMass will travel next to Storrs, Conn. to face UConn Friday afternoon.

Gevyn Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu

JEFF ROSSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Sarah Plourde allowed eight hits against the Terriers while walking four batters and striking out nine in the 7-5 win over BU. The Minutewomen take on UConn on Friday afternoon.

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst

PLAY THE HILL UMASS MONDAY MADNESS

9 Holes Just $12

With Your UMass ID & by mentioning this AD

Located In North Amherst, Just Minutes from UMASS on RT. 63

TUES-SUN Twilight Rates Just $13 After 5 P.M.

Cherryhillgolf.org
413.256.4071

JEFF ROSSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Whitney Williams, and Sarah Reeves have provided veteran leadership for UMass.

Reeves shows off power

REEVES from page 8

not been that go-to player her teammates were used to relying on in the bottom of the lineup. UMass coach Elaine Sortino believed the reason for her struggles was when she was swinging, and believed the extra practice paid off.

"We did a couple things, made a few adjustments in her timing, and it affected her tremendously," Sortino said. "She's a good hitter."

Over the past two seasons, Reeves was one of the Minutewomen's best power hitters, as she finished with 10 home runs in both years. She led the team in 2008, and was second behind Samantha Salato (19) in 2009.

Reeves improvement is especially important because Sortino saw Tuesday's matchup as a playoff-type game. Both teams are No. 1 in their respective conferences, made it to the NCAA Regional's, and UMass was on the road.

While the top of the lineup wasn't nearly as potent as it has been in previous games, Reeves led the rest of the offense to a win, even when the Terriers adjusted their offense and scored five runs off of pitcher Sara Plourde.

After a solid showing of Reeves's strength, Sortino hopes her senior put the worst of her hitting woes behind her and can continue to be the power hitter who gives the Minutewomen runs when needed.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Lecluyse leads UM to victory

By Kara Deyermenjian
Collegian Staff

The Canadian flag was displayed at Monday's tennis match, recognizing UMass senior captain and Canadian native Maude Lecluyse on Senior Day. Following an emotional ceremony to recognize Lecluyse's talent and accomplishments, Lecluyse played in her 109th career match, as the Massachusetts tennis team reclaimed its dominance at home, with a 5-2 victory over Quinnipiac.

"It felt really good and meant a lot to the team to put together a win for Maude on Senior Day," said UMass coach Judy Dixon.

The squad was coming off a disappointing 5-2 loss last Saturday at the Mullins Courts against Boston University, which hailed its four-match winning streak. The loss was a surprising one for the squad, who isn't used to losing at home. The defeat brought the Minutewomen's a 6-2 home record.

"We gave BU a little more respect than they deserved," said Dixon. "I feel like we held back a little and it made them feel like they could win it. It definitely wasn't the greatest game for us."

The Bobcats came out strong on Monday, as Adrienne Markison and Mary Wilson defeated Candyrace Boney and Lecluyse, 8-4, at No. 1 doubles.

The Minutewomen wasted no time responding, however, and took the two following doubles matches to claim the point. Tanisha Hodgson and Julia Comas defeated Rachel Canter and Sarah Viebrock, 8-4, at second doubles and Kaitlyn Carpenter and Jocelyn Providence topped Natalie Duckor and Shawna Sarson, winning 8-4 at third doubles.

After securing the doubles point, UMass easily clinched the victory after going up 4-0 with impressive singles play. Freshman Julia Comas continued to show prowess, as she knocked off Wilson 6-4, 6-2, at No. 1 singles after losing the first two games of the first set and coming back to win 12 of the following 15 contests.

"Comas continues to come up with big wins, including the one today, where she came back to shut down Wilson at No. 1 singles," Dixon said.

Boney also dominated No. 2, as she topped Canter 6-1, 6-4 and claimed her sixth-straight singles win. After Carpenter defeated Duckor at No 3., 6-2, 6-1, Lecluyse took the court at No. 4 in hopes of taking the win on her special day.

Lecluyse topped Viebrock in three sets, as she unleashed a hard-fought comeback after losing in a first set tie-break. Lecluyse's team was waiting anxiously to embrace their captain with a group hug after she claimed the victory.

"Maude went out today and won it. She played like a champ," Dixon said. "The other girl didn't lose the match; Maude had to win it."

The senior has played in the second-most matches of any UMass tennis player in history, and the win was Lecluyse's 51st career singles victory.

When asked how it felt to pull out the singles victory on senior day, Lecluyse summed up her emotions.

"It felt amazing, there's really no better feeling in the world. I was really nervous towards the end, but I was so happy to get the win with everyone watching," Lecluyse said.

With the win, UMass improves to 12-6 on the season, while the Bobcats fall to 8-6.

The Minutewomen's regular season will come to an end on Friday afternoon when they host Albany. The Atlantic 10 Conference Championships will begin April 22 in St. Louis, MO.

"After we did so well today, there's no doubt in my mind we can continue winning. I think our chances are just as good as anybody else's in the upcoming tournament," Lecluyse said.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyerme@student.umass.edu.

Pierce, Aguguo pace UMass

PIERCE from page 8

named Co-Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week for his performance, sharing the award with Darius Law of Charlotte.

Pierce won the 10,000-meter run when he crossed the finish line in 30 minutes, 43 seconds. His time was good enough to qualify him for both the NECs, as well as the IC4A Championships later in the season. This award is the second of the year for Pierce, who won Performer of the Week honors back in October during the cross country season.

Other top performers for the Minutemen included pole vaulter Sean Busch, who placed second in his signature event, as well as Sonny Gamble, who also took second in the steeple chase event.

Brian Miller and Zachary Koneki capped off the meet for UMass by winning the high jump and long jump events, respectively. Miller reached a height of 6-07.00 meters, and barely missed the school's top-five record. Knocki leaped a distance of 22 feet, 11 inches, as he beat out the competition.

The Minutemen, like their female counterparts, are getting used to outdoor weather and conditions each week, and the men have shown steady improvement all season long. They look to contend this week before moving on to the A-10 championship in just two weeks.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu

THE AMHERST COLLEGE PROGRAM BOARD AND AAS PRESENT:

THE ROOTS

FEATURING jason derülo

SATURDAY, APRIL 24TH

DOORS OPEN AT 7, SHOW STARTS AT 8

LE FRAK GYM, AMHERST COLLEGE

FREE FOR AC STUDENTS: TICKETS GUARANTEED MARCH 29th- APRIL 9TH
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL AUDIENCE TICKETS AVAILABLE APRIL 9TH
FIVE COLLEGE: $15
GENERAL ADMISSION: $25
NO CAMERAS OR LARGE BAGS
AC TICKETS AVAILABLE IN ROOM 114 KEEFE CAMPUS CENTER
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL ADMISSION AVAILABLE ON
https://www.amherst.edu/campuslife/keefe/calendar

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

www.kaminsrealestate.com

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
- PERRY APTS.
- 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
- LANTERN COURT APTS.
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.

400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

Off The Wall Games

Rise of the ElDrazi Party Weekend April 24 & 25.
Scan OffTheWallGameStore.com for details.

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!

Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesday [illegible] Russell St (next to Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

PUFFTON VILLAGE

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

I Love Yo Mama?

4					2		3
	3		6				7
				1	5
		7					9
	9				7	1
		2		9			4
			1		4	8	2
	5		2	8	3
		1		7

The Daily Collegian is now accepting applications for COMICS EDITOR.

Contact the Crossword Kidnapper
comics@dailycollegian.com

SATURDAY MORNING BREAKFAST CEREAL BY ZACH WEINER SMBC-COMICS.COM

"LIVE EVERY DAY LIKE IT'S YOUR LAST"

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.

Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
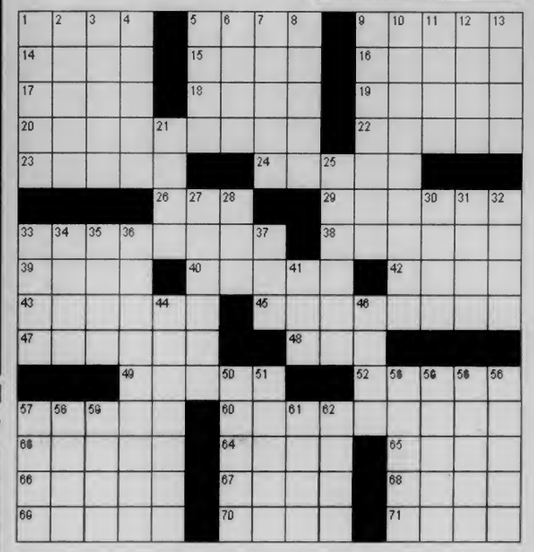
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

ACROSS
1. Secure against leakage
5. Not a spoon or knife
9. Classical music theatre
14. Border
15. Arch type
16. Danger
17. Harvest
18. Flair
19. Grain disease
20. To an exceedingly great extent
22. Violent disturbances
23. Nigerian monetary unit
24. A woman of refinement
26. Sort
29. Womb
33. Haughty disregard of others
38. Stop working
39. Verbal
40. Unsophisticated
42. Very imposing or impressive
43. Took five
45. Abuse
47. Indigenous
48. East southeast
49. Ore digger
52. Andean animal
57. Helped
60. Ravaged
63. Dish
64. Religious figure
65. Means
66. Spermal fluid
67. Doozy
68. A radar echo
69. Bring to bear
70. Greek god of love
71. Strip of wood

DOWN
1. Small finch
2. Swelling under the skin
3. A South American bird
4. A pariah
5. Enemies
6. Look at flirtatiously
7. Domain
8. Country in Africa
9. Perform surgery on
10. Circumference
11. Therefore
12. Violent disturbance
13. Anagram of "Salt"
21. Wood fastener
25. Coercion
27. Lime tree
28. New Zealand parrot
30. Pickable
31. Murres
32. Religious offshoot
33. Maize
34. District
35. Gigantic
36. An important airplane instrument
37. Edge
41. Compete
44. Clear
46. Inform
50. Ancient Roman magistrate
51. Happen again
53. Young sheep
54. Coral island
55. TV, radio, etc.
56. Highly skilled
57. Basilica area
58. Holly
59. Lady's title
61. Alone
62. Burden



Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!

NEW! 3 Sessions:
- Session I: May 17 - June 7
- Session II: June 8 - July 13
- Session III: July 14 - August 17

Classes fill up quickly...REGISTER NOW

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I know that you believe you understand what you think I said, but I'm not sure you realize that what you heard is not what I meant.

—Robert McCloskey

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
If you are calling the left one "George" then you need to call the right one "Costanza."

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Cucumber defiling is illegal in this town. Why don't you head to L.A with the rest of those sickos?

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Tie your shoes or else you get no Christmas present from the unmarked van.

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
The stars only fulfill your wishes if you have tattooed eyebrows and your name rhymes with "Mamba."

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Even Tony Montana was once called a "little monkey."

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
Who knew you were the world's greatest duelist? No one! and that is why I slap you with my glove!

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
My name is Inigo Montoya, you killed my father. Prepare to die!

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Would you let Kathy Lee Gifford next to your fresh homemade pies? I don't think so!

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
1,000,000 starving journalists care about Tiger Woods.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
You should learn some self respect and appreciate the awkwardly shaped moles that god gave you!

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
Everything will be alright once you start rolling mad blunts with stacks of Benjamins.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
No one is looking, go ahead. Be careful though, stealing a child's candy is still punishable by law. Barney the Dinosaur's laws!.

TRIATHLON FRIDAY

Get Ready and Get Psyched for UMASS Triathlon Club's TRI-FRI!
Every Friday at Totman Entrance
Race Begins at 1:30 ~ Registration begins at 12:30
$5 for Non-Members ~ Free for Members
¼ Mile Swim~8 Mile Bike~5K Run
Feel free to contact us for more information at: umasstri@stuaf.umass.edu

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No expenence necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No. 21 Minutewomen sweep BU

Reeves timely hitting produces two home runs in 7-5 win

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – Part of being a nationally ranked team means having people in the lineup who can step up, even when its best hitters are struggling.

First baseman Sarah Reeves was that player for the Massachusetts softball team.

Despite scoring seven runs in Tuesday's win against Boston University, the Minutewomen wouldn't have kept up with the Terriers' offense if not for Reeves's timely hitting. The first four batters, who average a combined .329, finished the game 0-for-14.

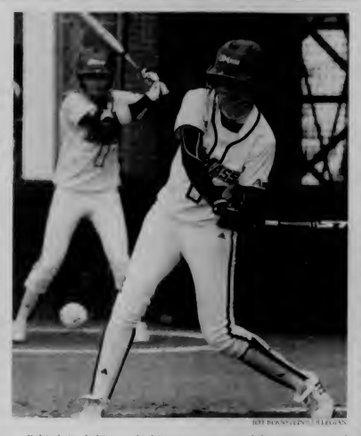
However, Reeves did nothing to ease the comfort of BU's pitching.

She finished the game 3-for-3 with two home runs to give her a team-high of six on the season. She is tied with catcher Meghan Carta (1-for-3) and left fielder Michelle Libby (2-for-3), who each hit home runs during the game.

"The great thing about our team is that anyone in the lineup can have a great day and you know maybe if the top of the lineup can't get it done, the middle of the order or end of the lineup is going to get it done," Reeves said, regarding the bottom of the lineup, who hit four home runs.

Reeves's second home run in the sixth inning gave her 26 career home runs, which tied her with Brandi Cross and Scooter Wheeler for fifth all-time at UMass.

"I was just trying to stay aggressive at the plate and the ball was right there and I was able to hit it," Reeves said.



During the first two months of the season, the senior gave the Minutewomen (26-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) a strong bat in the middle of the lineup with three home runs in the first three weeks of the season.

Even when she wasn't hitting home runs, Reeves was still delivering timely hitting for the team. On March 20 against Oregon State, she drove in two runs with a double in the Minutewomen's 6-1 win.

A little over a week later, she tied the school record in hits with a 5-for-5 game on March 28 in Game 1 against George Washington, and then hit a grand slam in Game 2.

In the first part of April, Reeves had

See REEVES on page 6

Behind timely hitting, the Minutewomen earned the season sweep of the Terriers Tuesday afternoon, 7-5.

Complete team effort helps in ninth-straight victory for UM

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – The Massachusetts softball team defeated Boston University for the second time this season, 7-5, led by two home runs from senior Sarah Reeves.

UMass	7
BU	5

The game was a slugfest on both sides, with the Minutewomen (26-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) recording four home runs for the day, and the Terriers (20-14, 5-1 America East) with two, including a grand slam.

"It was a great win for us against a non-conference opponent," Reeves said. "They're a tough opponent, always, so they gave us a run for our money, and it was a good win."

UMass came alive in the second inning, started off by a Meghan Carta single towards centerfield. Jessica Serio followed with the third single of the inning to get on base and moved Carta forward to second. After a long 10-pitch at bat, freshman Teea Rogers pulled through for UMass and singled to center field, allowing Carta to score from second base.

With Rogers at first base and Serio at second, Michelle Libby swung at the first pitch she saw and hit a three-run home run to put the Minutewomen up by four runs.

The Minutewomen's offense was just as strong in the fourth; Reeves started out the inning with a solo home run to centerfield. Carta wasted no time, swinging at the very next pitch and hitting UMass' third home run of the day. The junior increased her home runs for the season to six and slugging percentage to .584.

"The second home run I was 2-2 in the count and just tried to battle, and the ball was there so I just took a nice cut at it," Reeves said.

BU's first run of the game came in the bottom of the fourth inning, when Whitney Tuthill hit a solo home run to put BU on the board. Pitcher Sara Plourde recovered from the home run, which was her fourth hit of the game allowed, and struck out the final batter to

See SORTINO on page 6

Leigh goes the distance for UM

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team continued its recent hot streak by going on the road and beating Boston College, 8-4, Tuesday afternoon with another stellar outing by the pitching staff.

Senior Bryan Leigh pitched a complete game, giving up two runs and eight hits to earn his first victory of the season. He scattered his five strikeouts appropriately, getting hitters to swing and miss with a runner on third base and less than two outs on multiple occasions.

"He did a great job," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "He threw a lot of pitches but finished the game. He kept them off balance and got out of some jams. [Boston College has] seven lefties in their order, and that's tough for a right-hander to face that many lefties."

UMass	8
BC	4

The Minutemen (4-17, 3-6 Atlantic 10) were coming off their first series win of the season against Richmond over the weekend. They have now won three of their last four games.

Prior to this game, Leigh was 0-4 with an 11.74 earned run average. His nine innings of work yesterday nearly matched his previous 15.1 total innings for the season.

The Minutemen put together eight runs, with all of the runs being scored by the bottom half of the lineup. Seven of the nine starters had hits to highlight an offense that has, in the past few games, become more balanced.

"We had some timely hitting today," Stone said. "We had some extra-base hits that were key early in the ball game and some real clutch hits at the end. It was more timely today than it had been any other day."

Catcher Tom Conley went 4-for-4 at the plate while stationed in the No. 7 spot in the lineup. He also picked off a runner at first base and threw out another runner trying to steal.

"[Conley's] got some friends who play on the [Boston College] team, and he wanted to show them what kind of ballplayer he is. He played a good game defensively, threw out a [runner] trying to take an extra base on a ball in the dirt, and I thought he swung the bat well."

UMass will face Northeastern Wednesday night in Brockton, Mass., in the first round of the annual Beanpot Tournament. The Beanpot involves four major colleges in the state, including Boston College, Harvard University, Northeastern University and UMass.

When asked if his team looks forward to the tournament, Stone expressed his team's excitement.

"Absolutely. It's a tradition, and we're excited about going down to Brockton tomorrow and playing against Northeastern," Stone said.

The two winners of the UMass-Northeastern and Boston College-Harvard matchups will square off on Thursday night for the tournament championship.

Sophomore Isaac Oakley will get the start for the Minutemen against a Northeastern team that has been stumbling of late.

The Huskies (6-14, 0-6 Colonial Athletic Association) have lost 11 games in a row, including their latest defeat against the Crimson yesterday afternoon. Five of those losses have come with a score difference of three or less runs.

The Beanpot Tournament is the only time these two teams will meet during the season. On April 13th of last year, the two teams met in the Beanpot Championship at Fenway Park, with Northeastern getting the victory, 5-3.

"It's great to see in the last four games us playing like we can," Stone said. "I think that if we play like we can, that we'll have a good chance to win most of the games that we're involved with."

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

The Minutemen defeated the Eagles 8-4 Tuesday afternoon behind senior Bryan Leigh and timely hitting. Leigh pitched nine innings, as Mike Gedman went 1-for-4 at the plate.

Former UMass basketball player Tony Gaffney, seen here last season, signed a contract with the Boston Celetics Tuesday afternoon. The Mass. native was playing in Israel before breaking his foot.

Former Minuteman Gaffney inks deal with Boston Celtics

By Jeffrey R. Larnard and David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Former Massachusetts men's basketball player Tony Gaffney's dream has finally come true.

Gaffney signed a nonguaranteed contract with the Boston Celtics Tuesday afternoon, and it is possible that he could be with the team in Chicago when they take on the Bulls Tuesday night.

Gaffney was signed along with Oliver Lafayette, and both players will be around for the Celtics season finale Wednesday against the Milwaukee Bucks, as well as the playoffs.

After leaving UMass, Gaffney – a lifelong Celtics fan from Somerset, MA. – signed a free agent contract with the Los Angeles Lakers.

With Los Angeles being the first team to offer him a contract, Gaffney said it was easy to switch his allegiances.

"I immediately went from a die-hard Celtics fan to a die-hard Lakers fan," Gaffney said last August.

"That part was easy," Gaffney later added. "They were the first team to give me the opportunity to play in the NBA, and it was easy falling in love with the Lakers organization."

After playing for their summer league team after not getting drafted, Gaffney was offered an invitation to the Lakers preseason camp, but he was later cut. Gaffney then went to play overseas in Israel before breaking his foot.

Now, Gaffney will have to switch his allegiances back to where they all began, with the Celtics being the first NBA team to give him a legitimate shot at actually playing in an NBA game. Gaffney will most likely see more time with the team this summer, with the Celtics joining the Orlando Summer League.

As a senior for the Minutemen, Gaffney averaged a double-double with 11.5 points and 10.2 rebounds per game while also ranking third in the country with and 3.8 blocks per game.

Gaffney's younger brother, Bud is a junior walk-on guard for UMass who transferred from Wheaton College, and has two years of eligibility left with the Minutemen.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Track and Field head to Holy Cross for tune-up after last weekend's home meet

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

After a successful home meet last weekend, the Massachusetts track and field teams are back in action Wednesday when they travel to Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass.

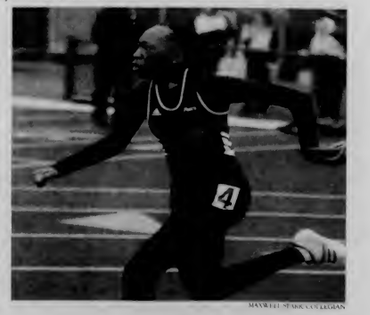
The quick turn-around from last weekend's meet is an unusual one for UMass, which typically has about a week in between events, which will test the mental and physical toughness of its athletes. UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere said that she was pleased with the performance of her team members in the UMass Nine-Way meet, but that they are not used to outdoor conditions and need to tune-up

"The kids are not fresh," said LaFreniere. "We are pushing through all these meets, and there are places where we need to be tougher mentally and physically. We're going to keep working hard through April and ease up a bit when we get ready for [the Atlantic 10 championship]."

The meet at HC gives UMass a chance to get used to outdoor competition one more time before heading into a bigger event on Friday in New Jersey, the Larry Ellis Invitational. Both teams will look to continue the momentum of their top finishes and qualify more members for the New England and A-10 championships.

"We have Princeton next weekend, and that's a top end meet," LaFreniere said. "We want to be ready for that, and in order to do that, we have to sharpen up."

The Minutewomen certainly looked sharp this past weekend, combining to take first place in their home opener, the UMass Nine-Way meet.



Senior Lisa Wilson paced the Minutewomen, as she broke her own school record from 2009 in the shot-put, and taking first place in the hammer throw, as well as second place in the discus.

Fellow upperclassman Stephanie Aguguo also recorded a first-place finish, winning the triple jump and qualifying for NECs in the process.

Like the Minutewomen, the men's team recorded a satisfying finish in the meet, taking second place overall.

The Minutemen turned in a strong performance in several events, but none were as impressive as the 10,000-meter distance run. UMass recorded a one-two-three finish in the event, with each runner finishing within a minute of each other. The winner, Jonathan Pierce, was

See PIERCE on page 6

Junior Stephanie Aguguo finished first in the triple jump while qualifying for the New England Championships on May 5.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

MOSTLY SUNNY / HIGH: 68 LOW: 37 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 2010

Admin relocated after controversy

Former asst. dean Willenbrock leaves Dean of Students office

By Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

The assistant dean of students at the University of Massachusetts who reportedly handed down the wrong sanction allowing a student who allegedly confessed to a rape to remain on campus no longer works in the Dean of Students' office and instead is working for the school's housing office.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim confirmed former dean Christina Willenbrock "is now working as the Selection, Training & Development Specialist in the Residence Life department in Housing."

Campus officials continue to refuse to confirm reports that Willenbrock handled the case and also declined to disclose whether or not her relocation was the result of the alleged mishandling.

That information, "is considered to be personal data protected by the FIPPA [Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act] statute and we are prohibited from disclosing it," Kim said in an e-mail.

Willenbrock was not able to be reached Wednesday for comment.

In early March, she reluctantly declined to comment on her reported handling of the case to Collegian reporters who visited her South Hadley home.

"The University won't let me speak about it," said Willenbrock at the time. "I would love to tell you all my opinions and thoughts on the matter, but I really can't."

University officials have thus far declined to comment on Willenbrock's statement.

A male University of Massachusetts student confessed to raping a female friend and 2009 alum in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension, according to an investigative report published in late February.

University officials allowed the alleged offender to stay on campus, a move that now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures.

University officials have since revealed that the accused student is no longer living on campus, but is still enrolled in classes. However, UMass declined to disclose when the student moved off campus, and if he did so on his own or if it was the University's decision, but has said the move is permanent

The incident occurred in the early morning of October 16, the Friday during homecoming weekend, in North Apartments Building C, according to the New England Center for Investigative Reporting's (NECIR) story published in The Boston Globe.

The victim reported the incident to the Dean of Students' office the following month, said NECIR's report; however, then assistant dean Willenbrock gave the accused student a deferred suspension – a decision UMass officials have since said was too lenient, and have called the situation regrettable.

Willenbrock, according to prior reports, did not properly report her decision to her superior, Dean Jo-Anne T. Vanin, for approval, and gave the deferred suspension sanction which notifies students that a subsequent violation of the University's con-

See ASSAULT on page 2

The University of Massachusetts hosted the Campus Violence Victim Rights Forum Wednesday in the Cape Cod Lounge. The forum came in the weeks after UMass administrators faced intense scrutiny for allowing a confessed rapist to remain enrolled at the University.

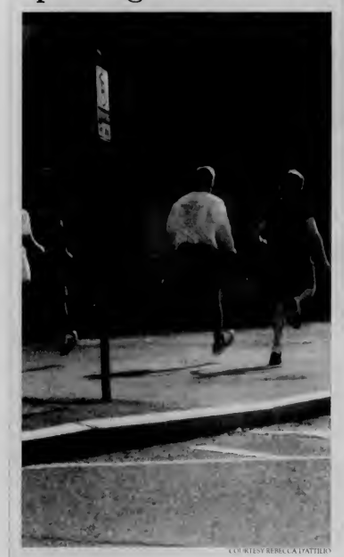
Former president of UMass system Knapp dies at age 82

Former University of Massachusetts president David C. Knapp led the system through a period of growth. He died Tuesday at 82.

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Former University of Massachusetts president Dr. David C. Knapp died on Tuesday at the age of 82. Knapp forged the direction of the University for more than 12 years, serving as president from 1978 to 1990 – a critical time of growth for the UMass system.

In a statement yesterday, current UMass president Jack Wilson paid tribute to Knapp as one of the great presidents in the history of UMass, and attributed the expansion of the UMass system (from its then-borders of Boston, Worcester and Amherst into the cities of Dartmouth and Lowell) to his vision.



"It was David Knapp's vision to create an outstanding University of Massachusetts system that would serve students from across the Commonwealth and strive to bring economic prosperity and vitality to every region of the state," said Wilson.

Born in Syracuse, N.Y. in 1927, Knapp received his bachelor's degree from Syracuse University in 1947. At that point he entered the University of Chicago, going on to earn his master's degree in 1948 and his PhD in 1953. In 1953, Knapp joined the faculty of the University of New Hampshire as an assistant professor of government. From 1955 to 1961, he assumed the duties of assistant to the president in addition to that of associate professor. Knapp served as University of New Hampshire's dean of the College of Liberal Arts from 1961 to 1962.

In 1963, Knapp became associate director of the Study of American Colleges of Agriculture. The study was financed by the Carnegie Corp., and was centered at the University of Maryland. While still working on the study, Knapp became director of the Institute of College & University Administrators of the American Council on Education. He left both posts in 1968 to accept an appointment as dean of the New York State College of Human Ecology at Cornell University, a position he held until being appointed provost of Cornell in 1974. Four years later, in 1978, Knapp was elected president by the UMass Board of Trustees.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

Speeding in Southwest

UMass junior Scott Blumenthal (right) maintained a narrow lead to win the Southwest Marathon on Monday afternoon.

'Rebel Music' set for tonight

Journalist Billet explores the ties between politics and music

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

From classical to reggae, music has been a form of social protest for centuries. The University of Massachusetts campus, no stranger to social protest itself, will host journalist Alexander Billet tonight as he explores the connection between rebellion and music in the event "We Want Rebel Music: The Sounds of Crisis and Resistance."

Named after a song and album by Bob Marley, "Rebel Music" is more than a catchy title, according to Marah DeFlavia, an organizer of the event.

"Rebel music is music made by the people on a grassroots level," said DeFlavia. "It is used to express our anger and frustration. It allows ordinary people to start a revolution."

DeFlavia said the event, being organized by the International Socialist Organization, will show the links between music and politics, and what this means for the youth of today. It will begin with Billet giving an hour-long presentation, followed by a question-and-answer session. The event will be held in Campus Center room 904 from 7:30 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. this evening.

Billet is a writer for Z Magazine and The Socialist Worker. According to DeFlavia, Billet was asked to speak because of his experience and expertise writing about the connection between two groups which each exert social and politi-

See REBEL on page 3

Reggae artist Bob Marley has become a symbol of musical protest, which is the topic of tonight's speech by journalist Alexander Billet.

ARTS & LIVING
Solo Sexx raps with girl power
Female rappers Solo Sexx know that hip-hop is a man's world, but they won't let that last for long.
SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
UMass takes on Delaware
After getting upset by a goal against Towson, the Minutemen hope to come back strong against the Blue Hens.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Jack Ho thinks you should know the truth of the world. Nothing matters. So, why not live without limits? Why not live without fear?
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com
Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, hosted by the Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 53

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor N.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Jonson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elise Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Auser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

UMass Dean of Students Dean Jo-Anne T. Vanin spoke to the Campus Violence Victim Rights Forum Wednesday. Vanin and other administrators have been under fire recently for allowing a confessed rapist to remain enrolled in classes.

Air Act and drug task forces affect cannibis use at Iowa State

IOWA STATE DAILY
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

It's a simple movement – lifting the hand, listening to flint strike, seeing the flame, pressing lips to the glass and feeling the acrid smoke seep into lungs. You inhale deeply, hold it until the tickle becomes unbearable and then exhale in a great gust of breath and marijuana and the occasional dry cough.

Soon enough you are stoned.

But if you live in the residence halls on campus, you have a strong chance of being caught.

The distinctive smell of burning marijuana is hard to hide, especially since the passage of the Smoke Free Air Act in Iowa, said Jerry Stewart, director of public safety.

"We have wondered whether the Smoke Free Air Act has driven some people off-campus," he said.

The residence halls also banned the use of marijuana-scented incense, according to the 2009-10 policy handbook. Sally Deters, residence life coordinator, said the policy was meant to counter instances when students had used incense as an explanation for a suspicious smell.

Depending on the housing, it can be more difficult to mask illegal drug use due to the close quarters of other residents, and monitoring by community advisors.

Thomas, whose name has been changed to protect his identity, said when he lived in Birch Hall his sophomore year, he didn't smoke inside.

"You almost never smoke in the room because it reeks of it, and it's very distinctive, and so you'd almost always smoke outside," Thomas said. "There was this bench outside where all of the smokers went, and they didn't mind if you smoked pot there."

There are several levels of sanctions through the ISU Department of Residence and the ISU Department of Public Safety for students who are caught using illegal drugs in the residence halls.

In 2009, there were 36 arrests for illegal drug usage in the residence halls. This number doesn't count students who might live in the residence halls and were arrested off-campus, who still may be subject to sanctions through their residence.

Deters said the process for sanctioning students for violating the law and residence hall policy can be subjective. A student caught using an illegal drug will immediately be referred to ISU DPS, while a student caught violating drinking policy will not necessarily be reported to law enforcement officials.

"Only 5 to 10 percent of the time are the police ever involved in alcohol violations," Deters said. "For [illegal drugs like] marijuana it's 100 percent of the time."

There is no special policy between the department of residence and ISU Police regarding reporting, Stewart said.

"When their staff calls to report an issue, we respond," Stewart said. "Generally speaking, as the seriousness of the offense increases, discretion is usually reduced."

There are seven levels of sanctions that can be imposed upon a student who violates the rules of the department of residence. The sanctions range from a warning, which is a written notice, all the way to a termination of a housing contract.

Deters said in the years that she has been here, there have never been more than 10 contracts terminated in any given year.

Yet there isn't a tried and true

See SMOKE on page 3

Willenbrock moves after mishandling

ASSAULT from page 1

duct code will result in suspension.

"Personally, I do not believe the sanction matched the misconduct," said Kim previously.

However, campus officials said the University cannot change or add to the sanctions already handed down through the student judicial system because there is no appeal process allowed to any person other than the accused.

Kim said previously there was no one individual to blame for the mishandling. She said the blame instead goes to the set up of the administrative process, which University officials have since moved to correct by instituting a formal, written policy that mandates serious cases be reviewed by the Dean of Students before they are finalized.

Additionally, a 12-person special commission has been formed as a result of the mishandling, which will review the entire Code of Student Conduct (CSC) – something that has not been done since the mid-1990s.

Recommendations from the commission are expected by November; any recommended changes to the student conduct code would ultimately have to gain the Board of Trustees' approval before implementation.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmgoldr@student.umass.edu.

The air may be a little cleaner in Iowa since the state's passage of the Smoke Free Air Act, but illegal cannibis consumption is still an issue at ISU.

GARDASIL.
[Human Papillomavirus Quadrivalent (Types 6, 11, 16, and 18) Vaccine, Recombinant]

INTERESTED IN GARDASIL?
GARDASIL IS WIDELY AVAILABLE AND MANY PRIVATE INSURANCE PLANS* COVER IT.

TALK TO YOUR CAMPUS HEALTH CENTER OR OTHER HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONAL.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

MERCK

While your insurance company may reimburse for GARDASIL, your eligibility for coverage and reimbursement for GARDASIL depends on your individual insurance benefit. You can contact your insurance company for details on coverage for GARDASIL.

'Rebel Music' demands to be heard loud and clear tonight

REBEL from page 1

cal influence in their own ways musicians and politicians.

"Alex has been writing about the links between music and politics for almost a decade," said DeFlavia. "He was willing to pay his own travel expenses to come speak, and we're really excited to have him."

While growing up, Billet said his political views were influenced by musicians.

"I remember the effect that groups like The Clash, Rage Against the Machine, Public Enemy and countless others had in shaping my world-view," said Billet.

Unimpressed by many writers in the entertainment industry, Billet said that "after a while, I got sick of how drab and uninspiring most music journalism was, and how few writers actually questioned what was going on in the entertainment industry … So I started writing music articles that have now been in a variety of publications."

Billet has written hundreds of articles on the topic since graduating from Syracuse University in 2006, and hopes to publish a book in the future.

Billet views music as a way of making politics more accessible to everyday people.

"The problem is that most folks are told that their only role in politics is to go into a voting booth every few years," he said, "when actually our role in them is every day in the streets, the workplace and on our campuses."

"Music – good or bad – always tells us something about our time and place," said Billet.

Organizers from the International Socialist Organization said they hope the stories of musicians standing up against racism and oppression will inspire others to take action.

"I hope that people come out of the event understanding that music, art, and human creativity itself has a role to play in making the world a better place – but that it doesn't just end there," said Billet.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

Cannibis in question at ISU

SMOKE from page 2

method for determining what sanction will be deemed appropriate for a given situation, Deters said. She trains her hall directors to consider several factors, including the number of previous violations and whether the violations were related.

"There's not a recipe that says, 'If this happens then this happens,' but for me, something like a single empty beer can has less of a negative impact on the community then a loud, out-of-control party," Deters said.

Once an officer becomes involved in a drug-related investigation on campus, there are two directions the investigation can go.

If there is an officer from the Story Country Drug Task Force on duty, then the case is most often referred to that officer. Otherwise, ISU DPS officers will respond to a call, take down all of the information and refer the case to the drug task force, said Lt. Jeff Dodds, field services commander for the Story County Sheriff's Office.

The result is that the majority of drug-related investigations in Story, Boone and Greene counties go through the drug task force as opposed to the normal channels of investigation.

Dodds said there has been a tangible need for a special unit devoted specifically to drug related investigations.

"The drug task force has been around since the early '90s, and we are not lacking for things to do," he said.

He said the task force sees all types of drugs being used by students, both on- and off-campus.

"You name it, they're seeing it coming out of there — cocaine, ecstasy, mushrooms, marijuana," Dodds said.

Marijuana is the most commonly used drug in the United States, according to the National Institute on Drug Abuse. It's also the most commonly used illegal drug in the residence halls on the ISU campus, both Deters and Stewart said.

Stewart maintained that while the drug-related arrests weren't high, of those, marijuana was definitely the one that officers see most often.

He said officers try to be discerning when considering what to charge someone with when they are found in possession of an illegal drug.

It's not just determined by quantity, he said. He added that they wouldn't automatically charge someone with possession with intent to deliver, a more serious charge than a simple possession, based on the quantity of the drug, explaining that some students bring large quantities of marijuana to campus with them from their hometowns because they don't know any dealers around Iowa State or aren't comfortable buying it from anyone else.

Thomas said he and the person who introduced him to weed had multiple dealers in the Ames area, but he wasn't sure where their pot actually came from when he first started smoking.

"He would buy it, and I would just throw down for it," Thomas said.

Thomas said he thought the community advisers in the residence halls were much more tolerant of alcohol use than what the official department of residence policies implied.

"You just have to hide the booze, and all the CA ever does is look for glass clinking, metal clinking and the words, 'party foul,' and as long as you avoid those things, you never get caught," Thomas said. "The problem comes when you start bringing it into the halls or come out from a different party and, like, puke in the hallway."

From his experience, Thomas said every CA outlines specifically what they would be looking for at parties and thus made it easier to keep from getting caught.

"There's a whole lot of working around the rules – it's almost exclusively working around the rules," he said. "The unplied message is very clear: 'If you are going to party, don't do this thing or this thing, because it's my job to watch out for that.'"

Summer sessions begin May 24

160 Courses Served All Summer Long

Framingham STATE COLLEGE | Graduate and Continuing Education

Choose between hundreds of undergraduate and graduate courses this summer, offered in ten sessions. Classes take place on-campus, online, or hybrid.

Visit www.framingham.edu/dgce or call 508 626 4550.

Coca-Cola CLIF BAR OFF THE WALL GAMES COUNTRY NISSAN

SUPERCUTS SOCCERFEST
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS SPORT MANAGEMENT DEPARTMENT 2010

May 1, 2010
UMass * Amherst, MA

* 6v6 (Adult) Tournament Format
* Top-Gun & Just-For-Fun Divisions
* Each team guaranteed at least 3 games
* Registration fee as low as $10/player
* Registration Deadline: April 21st

Information and Registration at:
www.soccerfest.org

10% of registration fees will be donated to the Chituka Village Project and additional donations will be collected on-site
www.bandabolasportsfoundation.org
Chituka Village Project

Happy Birthday Israel

Israel Independence Day Celebration

All Welcome!

Israeli Food, Live Israeli Music, Israeli Dancing, Bedouin Tent, Hookah, Henna, Massages, Yoga, Vendors and Crafts, Bounce House, Games...

Kosher BBQ - $3
(look for discount coupon in the Collegian, on comics page!)

Tuesday, April 20, 4-7pm
Campus Pond Lawn

Sponsored by Student Alliance for Israel, UMass Hillel, The UMass Democrats, Jewish Student Union, Harold Grinspoon Foundation, + MASA, Housendesk, Legacy Heritage Fund, David Project, Combined Jewish Philanthropies
Rain location will be at Hillel House – 388 North Pleasant St

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Why nothing really matters

Jack Ho

Do not confuse "nothing matters" with "we don't care anymore." No. It means we should stop letting petty, fear based social structures constrain our lives.

We have come to live in an age where people have replaced "friendly" with "awkward," where we can't walk into a room and introduce ourselves without feeling intimidated.

Everyone is so afraid of one another, and I do not understand why. If nothing matters, what possible harm can stem from meeting someone at random? Do we think just because something bad "can" happen, it "will" happen? I can tell you honestly that there are more good people worth meeting out there than there are evil people.

I think if you made an oath to speak to one random person a day, you would be surprised at how many decent people there are. Some of them have crazy hair, really interesting pants or just a pleasant voice when they say hello.

I understand. News organizations, movies, video games, magazines, any commercial entity, really – they all focus on expanding one aspect of human life, and that aspect just so happens to be death, violence, rape and all things unharmonious.

When 'nothing matters,' everything is possible. At any moment we can change into someone else.

So we are given a worldview where there is hostility around every corner, and as a result we are puckered up real tight.

We are given enough information now. We should know better and we should question the validity of a statement. When nothing matters, everything is possible. At any moment, we can change into someone else. A traumatic event, a rousing editorial piece, a great love, will change us in ways we cannot control and should not be ashamed of. I am saying we are free to do whatever we want, within whatever context we want.

For instance, if you want to go to France and live in France – then just go. Buy a one way ticket and don't look back. You will survive because it is human nature to form a pattern of behavior and thus provide for anything else one needs to live.

I state this largely because of essay writing, which is entirely useless, but I found it applicable to many existential quandaries. If you think about it, facts, the ones which stick with a society for, well – ever – are in fact subject to investigation which would render them non-fact.

So we live in a world with an over-abundance of information – of facts streaming from here, the opposite facts streaming there, and no clear answer to be provided. So we must look to our individual interpretations to have any sort of foundation for how we understand the world.

I make this claim because I want everyone around me to change. Immediately. Now. Today. This second.

I want people to stop using the word awkward. I want people to understand that at any given moment, a million different things could happen. I want people to understand that at the drop of a hat, we could become someone or something else.

Our generation needs to realize our entire existence is only important to us, and there is no greater judge of our actions. Morality is supposed to be the greatest judge – a self-gauging barometer – to help us decide appropriate actions.

Over time, our moral compasses have gone from meters of good and bad to social shame indicators. I don't know when we became so shameful and afraid of each other. Maybe it's all the commercialism, but that is a much longer rant about the destruction of the self-image that doesn't really matter, anyway.

Either way, the shame has essentially melded into fear. The people of this country are all bred to be fearful of something, whether it be ugly clothes or how someone thinks of them – or peanuts. Be reassured that everyone around you is just as scared of themselves and each other as you are.

We need to eliminate fear from our lives; we need to stop pretending there are rules on how to talk to one another or how to 'behave.' We need honesty and bravery.

I don't mean going into battle to fight for the damsel's honor. No, I mean the courage to look at yourself from an outside perspective and allow that to be challenged. Challenges can range from winning a baseball game to simply speaking your mind to a group of strangers.

I don't mean to be disparaging. In fact, I mean the opposite. The fact that nothing matters is a good thing; it equates to being totally free. If 'nothing matters,' then why shouldn't we get up in front of strangers and sing karaoke. Why can't we go into a room and introduce ourselves to everyone. Why don't people laugh anymore?

By what barometer, are we judging everyone? There are bad things out there – terrible things – but what can we do? I say, don't let the few bad eggs ruin the batch. Let's try new things.

Try everything. Don't stick to routine all the time. To quote a friend, "you do what you love, and forget the rest," to which I respond, "how can we know what to love when everything runs away?"

Jack Ho is a UMass student. He can be reached at jwho@student.umass.edu.

Picking peace for both Israel and Palestine

Roy Ribitzky

"If the alarm sounds, run to the basement," my father told me before bed in my grandmother's apartment in Ashqelon, Israel – located fifteen minutes from Gaza.

I didn't feel scared, though. I knew I was in a war state. Since its inception, Israel has been fighting with its neighbors over a land the size of New Jersey and an ideological following of less than 15 million. I know what it is like to feel the ground shake and to see the ditches made by Qassam rockets.

But I also know what it is like to have the luxury of the world's best Air Force take out the terrorist insurgents. In other words, I am protected. The Palestinians – on the other hand – are not.

I've heard comments such as "the IDF (Israeli Defense Forces) is a terrorist organization," seen posters that equate the Nazi Swastika with the Jewish Star of David; seen bumper stickers with "End the Occupation" and "Free Palestine."

I always had one question for them: have any of you ever been to the Middle East?

I have yet to meet someone who has.

Yes, Israel gets a lot of criticism for killing terrorist arm dealers in foreign nations, but it is also one of the reasons why jets don't get hijacked and smashed into buildings so easily.

In reality, the IDF is the only organization with the nerve to fight terrorism the harsh way. Sometimes you have to fight fire with fire. Yes, Israel gets a lot of criticism for killing terrorist arm dealers in foreign nations, but it is also one of the reasons why jets don't get hijacked and smashed into buildings so easily.

Still, the situation for the Palestinians in Gaza and the West Bank is deteriorating to the point of no return. Palestinians are living under deplorable circumstances. Their land is underdeveloped, their education system is virtually non-existent, their homes are tiny boxes made from scrap material, and the people live in constant fear of Hamas (the terrorist organization which controls Gaza) and bombing runs by the IDF.

Through fear, propaganda and brainwashing, it should be no surprise why there is so much hatred in the region.

The Middle East conflict is complicated. It is a history rich with triumph, failure, confusion, and culture. I will try to just give a taste of how things are and spare you the religious rhetoric as a self-identifying secular-Israeli. In dealing with social issues, we have to look at how they arose.

Long before the Holocaust, Palestine was occupied under the British Empire. In the early 20th century, the Zionist movement, a movement to return Jews to the "homeland," began. Both Jews and Palestinians formed alliances to take care of the land. Then the Holocaust wiped out six million Jews – as well five million others – and another calling to return to the biblical Israel ensued. Once there, Jews and Palestinians fought against a common enemy: the British Empire. In 1948 Israel gained independence. That very day, the surrounding Arab nations declared war on the State of Israel. The war still rages.

This is where it gets complicated, so here's a little secret that many do not know: the Arab nations dislike the Palestinians as much as the Jews.

Have you ever wondered how ridiculous it sounds that a few million people were blowing themselves up over a tiny piece of land when fellow worshippers of over 1.5 billion people had multiple, massive nations right next door? It's because the Arab states don't want Palestinians in their country.

Israel, too, is to blame. Before the reign of Prime Minister Golda Meir – who governed during the time of the Munich Massacre – Israel's greatest general, Moshe Dayan, predicted rising tensions among the Jews and Arabs. He said: feed the Palestinians, clothe them, build their homes, and treat them as equals.

Golda Meir ignored him as she threw a huge terrorist blanket over the Palestinians. To put it into perspective, how many Americans felt towards Arabs after 9/11 is very similar to what a few Israeli government officials felt towards the Palestinians.

It is no surprise why so many children in Gaza hate Israel. They have no support, and Hamas teaches them Israel is evil. It is exactly how Al Qaeda brainwashes its adherents.

Imagine: your home and parents get bombed because a terrorist was building weapons there. A Hamas official tells you, "See, look what Israel did to your home!" Instead of, "Sorry for purposefully using your parents as civilian shields." Are we so surprised then, why young teenagers become suicide bombers?

Israel is right to defend itself, but the innocent children have neither support from the United Nations nor any Arab state.

Settlements are a whole other issue. Personally, I despise the idea of them. If Israel wants peace, it needs to stop building those horrid settlements. There are plenty of beautiful apartments in Tel Aviv.

The U.S. and Israel need to assist the Palestinians in rebuilding their infrastructure. Build schools, build hospitals. Israel has some of the best medical technology in the world – develop the rich agriculture.

Unfortunately, Hamas gets in the way.

When food shipments come in, Hamas takes them, hides them, and then blames Israel for not allowing food into the region – just like the corrupt Haitian government before and after the earthquake. We have to think long term.

Yes, all this will be extremely difficult, it might even seem impossible, to do this now. But we must start. Israeli children and Palestinian children go through the same thing every day: fear of dying. No person should live in fear.

It is one of the things many Americans take for granted. Do not pick sides. Pick peace.

Roy Ribitzky is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ribitzky.roy@gmail.com.

They are always watching.
And waiting for you to write for ed/op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

A request for the Amherst community to digest

Matthew M. Robare

I used to live in Sylvan, a short walk away from Worcester Dining Commons. I had breakfast there every day, either in Worcester itself or I got it from the 'Grab and Go.' But I could always have eggs, a bagel, coffee and a pastry or a muffin every single morning. For dining hall food, it was always fine.

But then, I moved off-campus last summer and I started to notice something interesting: we can eat as much as we want virtually any time we want on campus – with meal plans; but off campus, food is expensive.

I'm not even talking about Antonio's, which is technically gourmet pizza, or Wings, which is an awful lot of food.

I'm talking about groceries.

Foods like bagels, bread, mayonnaise, lettuce, carrots, fish, chicken, sandwich meats and milk. The basic, ordinary, everyday foods that anyone ought to be able to find for reasonable prices at any grocery store.

Except in an Amherst grocery store.

My Mom regularly buys two or three times as much food as I do and spends half as much. Around New Year's I went on a shopping trip to get food for a party in Philadelphia and I think $300 was spent on food for an expected 60 or so people. At Wal-Mart, the same shopping that cost me $40 at Big Y now costs me $20. The situation is no better when compared to Stop & Shop either, except that I have been to one in New York with much better prices.

Good for some, but I die a little when I see students shopping at either Trader Joes or Whole Foods Market. I like to go in and look at the prices to give myself something to complain to my grandchildren about when I'm a crotchety old man.

There's an even bigger mystery involved: my hometown, Rutland, Vt., has a population of 16,000 and three full-blown grocery stores, plus a Wal-Mart. There's also a Shaw's about twenty minutes away. Yet Amherst, with a population of about 35,000 people, has just two grocery stores and a Wal-Mart.

I'm not even counting Hadley here. We can forget about places that are already really expensive, like Trader Joe's or Whole Foods Market; I can't believe anyone making less than $70,000 a year would get their groceries from either of those places.

They're both basically the grocery store equivalents of Starbucks – places for gourmand Yuppies to spend their Clinton-era disposable income without being too ridiculous.

Good for some, but I die a little when I see students shopping at either Trader Joes or Whole Foods Market. I like to go in and look at the prices to give myself something to complain to my grandchildren about when I'm a crotchety old man.

A quick look at Google maps reveals only a few more Big Y's and a Super Stop & Shop in Northampton. Hardly competitive.

Amherst could easily support another grocery store, especially one with prices more in line with the rest of New England. A better grocery store would be advantageous for everyone in the area: us off-campus students would be able to save more money, keeping us out of debt; the 20 percent of Amherst residents living below the poverty line would see their standards of living go up with greater savings on their groceries; and most importantly, it would bring some new jobs to the area.

We're in the middle of a recession right now and it's important to note that the only reason it's not a depression is because prices haven't fallen and probably won't.

Saving money however possible, especially as college students and especially on necessities in life, is more important than ever.

The fact that Amherst has so few grocery stores and that all of them are expensive is a serious issue for the community. It's not like there isn't space, it's not like there isn't a market for one. But there are people out here whose lives would be improved immensely by a grocery store they can afford to shop at.

I don't know how anyone could object to a better life for everyone.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lady lionesses Solo Sexx dominate

Female hip-hop duo seek to shake up male-dominated scene

By Leigh Greaney
Collegian Staff

Heather McCormack and Julia Sherratt see no need to waffle around. They'll call they're music feminist. However, they're not so quick to call it hip-hop. Both of the lady lionesses will call their rhymes rap, but they don't consider themselves part of the hip-hop scene.

For Solo Sexx, the hip-hop scene as it stands is "stale and male." After playing hip-hop shows in Springfield, they left the metal detectors, see-through glares and elbows-up attitudes for an audience which could respect what they represent – female empowerment that will get you up and shaking.

The duo planted their musical roots into the same ground over two and a half years ago after meeting at the University of Massachusetts' Cannabis Reform Coalition – an organization close to their hearts and the gust of inspiration that helped lift their musical ambitions. They started as a group called Inner Circle of Hate that split once some members started to do what Sherratt calls "their guitar thing." Being a rap group and not so much a rock group, the ladies decided it was time for the female part of Inner Circle of Hate to go, well. Solo Sexx. The guitar guys became Anti-Tank Dog and the word-stress women became invested in making beats and raps.

After some time of collaboration and exploration, they were taken under the wing of DJ Megha, another local musician, after meeting at Amherst's Extravaganja. DJ Megha has since become a mentor and more for Solo Sexx after hooking them up with a gig at Diva's nightclub in Northampton. Their show, "dubwhut?!" is every other Thursday, including tonight.

It's been a long journey. Before the ladies started hosting "dubwhut?!" and playing on radio shows, such as WMUA's Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk, they were ticking bombs waiting to be set off. McCormack remembers when Sherratt's went off. She said, "The best experience was watching her explode as a musical genius." She smiled with nostalgia as she described a CRC event called "Cabin Trip" – the name is implicit to what they do there, according to McCormack. Sherratt was new to the group and community of the CRC and came on the trip because "she needed to be."

She remembers it well and said, "I had a renaissance. I had unlocked a part of brain that I didn't know existed before – total artist expression that I had suppressed for my whole life. After that, I started to become really involved with music. I started to think about writing songs and writing raps."

McCormack laughed, clarifying that this explosion all happened "through an Optimus Prime vocoder mask."

She said, "She put it on and started inhabiting this alternate persona of party music. She just started rapping and singing through this vocoder thing and it was great. We were all like, 'where did this girl come from?' It was intense."

After the "rainbows oozed out of her orifices" as she lovingly puts it, Sherratt started on another resurgence – making beats. She taught herself how to make beats after downloading what she not-so-lovingly calls a "cracked, illegal version" of Adobe's Audition. She watched Greg Gillis from Girl Talk as he mapped out his beat making skills on YouTube, where he uses the program Audition. That "cracked, illegal version" of Audition became the bane of Solo Sexx's act when it crashed. Since the tragic loss, Sherratt said, "I've just been wallowing – treading water. I'm not spending $400 dollars on a program!"

Audition or not – they've been making music, just not all with self-made beats. They've been emceeing with DJ Megha as a collaboration and rapping over her beats – which has given them a chance to practice their free-styling. For radio shows and other events, they simply hodgepodge different raps over beats they've cultivated either from their old self-made beats, DJ Megha's beats, or simply beats they've borrowed from artists who inspire them. Artists such as Yo Majesty, Ry Ry, Kid Sister, Santigold, and M.I.A. have all sent sparks of inspirational power in Solo Sexx's direction. However, the ladies feel their place in music is still a small fraction of the business.

Local all-female hip-hop act Solo Sexx has been making a splash in the Pioneer Valley. The group, consisting of Heather McCormack and Julia Sherratt, challenge what they call a "stale and male" hip-hop scene.

The bulk of their genre is male dominated. Their female counterparts are few and far between. Moreover, the females who are rapping are almost always women of color. Solo Sexx is breaking down not only gender barriers in the hip-hop scene – but also barriers of race. Aside from Lady Sovereign, Solo Sexx couldn't think of another white, female rapper who has become mainstream. Although Lady Sovereign is definitely a craftswoman of words, she isn't up on the social commentary level.

McCormack said, "The thing is – I don't want to be typecast as political rappers. I like to have fun. Not to say that politics aren't fun, but I have fun with my politics. I say things like, "get out the leather and pleasure me," and "I want to sink my teeth into his rice and beans." It's about sexual agency. I'm going to sink my teeth into his rice and beans. You better get that out and pleasure me. It's making fun of itself, but at the same time – that's what the name Solo Sexx is about. It's about our whole persona. We don't take ourselves too seriously."

They are serious about representing and voicing something, though. How they get their message across may not seem elevated, but their message is of the highest impor-

See SOLO SEXX on page 6

'Prophet' earns acclaim

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Writer-director Jacques Audiard's 2009 crime thriller "Un Prophète" ("A Prophet"), currently playing at Amherst Cinema, follows 19-year-old Malik El Djebena (Tahar Rahim) through his six year prison sentence. He is a blank slate – illiterate and aloof, with neither family on the outside nor friends on the inside – which makes him the perfect target for exploitation by the Corsican mob, which runs the prison at every level.

The outline is familiar: innocent youth is trapped by desperate circumstances and forced to get his hands dirty, climbs the ranks of a criminal outfit and ultimately surprise everyone somehow. The difference here is that his ascent from invisibility to criminal confidence actually surprises the audience, as well.

The criminal-with-a-conscience trope has at this point been so overused and stripped of meaning that an on-screen criminal with a truly believable conscience feels like a breath of fresh air. Rahim's Malik is a disarmingly sympathetic character, starting his prison sentence utterly vulnerable and alone. His first encounter with Corsican mob boss Luciani (Niels Arestrup) plays like a child soldier recruitment video: Malik is given the choice to murder someone or be killed himself. When he staggers breathlessly away from this encounter, mumbling "I can't kill a man," you know he means it.

But fear – not "Scarface" disciples – "Un Prophète" may have a conscience, but it does not dance around the thrills and spills which have made the crime movie so popular. Right off the bat, Malik's criminal boot camp puts a razor blade in his mouth, a plastic bag over his face, and an impatient mobster's crotch repeatedly at eye level.

All of this builds up to his first mission, whacking a prisoner named Reyeb – a witness in a mob case. The scene plays beautifully on the tension between moral ambivalence, brutal necessity, and Malik's relative amateurishness – heightened to nauseating extremes by the intimacy of the killing itself. Add that to the bevy of haunting images packed into this film, and you have an experience which will be difficult to forget.

"Un Prophète" has earned high honors from various film institutions: the Grand Prix at the 2009 Cannes Film Festival, nine César Awards (the French Oscar equivalent) including Best Film, Best Director, Best Actor and a nomination for the Best Foreign Language film at the 82nd Academy Awards. It currently holds a remarkable 97 percent rating on Rotten Tomatoes.

The film certainly earns the acclaim: Audiard delicately balances the real and the surreal, the coolness and the conscience. As Malik's jail time progresses, his network of allies expands beyond the Corsicans, and even beyond the prison walls. Before long, he is no longer lying when he insists, "I work for myself."

The moment in the film, about halfway in, when this becomes true – or at least when Malik seems to realize it – cues a musical montage which gives the movie some of its only out-and-out swagger. The song is "Bridging the Gap" by Nas, featuring his father, jazz musician Olu Dara. It starts slow, with a simple blues stomp and no hint of hip-hop, before blasting into Nas' bombastic proclamation of musical independence – all while citing his father's blues and gospel contemporaries.

It could be said that Nas' "God's Son" tattoo mirrors Malik's as-of-yet unexplained role as "Prophet," and that his musical superseding of his father mirrors Malik's gradual turning of the tables on Luciani. But mostly, the heat is just completely off the chain, and Malik is completely on top of his game; it is the perfect musical payoff for a film filled with quiet uncertainty and alienation, not to mention a (fantastic) score that up to that point is restricted to orchestral motifs.

The movie never stops being refreshing, especially if you have grown jaded with its genre. "Un Prophète" is playing at Amherst Cinema through next Thursday; see it while you have the chance.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

Jacques Audiard's "A Prophet" tells the tale of a young man's involvement with the mob. The film has won a number of awards, and is currently playing at Amherst Cinema.

Xiu Xiu brings energy

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Experimental band Xiu Xiu performed at Hampshire College's dining commons on April 12. The group created synergy with their audience and added a hint of sexuality, keeping things interesting all evening.

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

It was the night the outsiders came out to play.

It was a crowd full of people wearing flannel, making jokes about other people wearing flannel; it was a crowd full of people making jokes about the pronunciation of the headlining band's name, and then making jokes about people making such jokes.

But none of that mattered, due to the fact everyone was at SAGA, Hampshire's dining commons, Monday, simply to enjoy beautiful music delivered by Xiu Xiu and Tune-Yards.

Xiu Xiu have been around for 12 years now, and it's no surprise their turnout last night was as successful as it was. In their current incarnation, which consists of core member and songwriter Jamie Stewart and Angela Seo, the band pursued a slightly more dance-oriented sound, occasionally even using a Nintendo DS as an instrument.

With the loss of live drummer Ches Smith, the band has of late been using electronic percussion. Despite this apparent handicap, Xiu Xiu played an admirably energetic and engaging show. In addition to this, recent sensations Tune-Yards made a splash with their tribal soul loop-based music, which, it turned out, almost half the crowd was there to see.

The show began with a brief piece of what could possibly be described as performance art from Luminous Mario and Dieglow. Essentially, concert-goers were treated to a half-naked gentlemen dancing around to remixed versions of club hits. Folks who were unsure of what to make of this had little to worry about, as the performance didn't last more than about ten minutes. Following this, Tune-Yards took the stage.

With a combination of spunky charm, tribal loops and alternately crooned and shouted vocals, Tune-Yards frontwoman and former Smith College alumni Merrill Garbus exuded an energy rarely seen last Monday. Her passionate and grotesque facial expressions and constant pounding on a drum to create loops meant that every moment she was on stage she was creating some kind of synergy with the crowd. In addition to playing a fantastically dynamic set, she provided what proved to be one of two moments of sheer transcendence that evening. During her set closer, Garbus ordered the entire crowd, which had already been almost fully engaged with her performance, to jump into the air at the same time. Every single member of the crowd did so, in beautiful harmony.

Tune-Yards' energetic set proved to be a perfect prelude to the thunderstorm of a set provided by Xiu Xiu.

Although Jamie Stewart remained taciturn for the most part, the music spoke for itself. Playing a combination of old favorites like "Poe Poe" and energetic renditions of new songs off the still-fresh release "Dear God I Hate Myself," seasoned veterans and new fans alike of this beautifully desparing band all had a wonderful time. Jamie Stewart was in excellent form, contorting his face and body in perfect emotional time to his music.

This emphasis on the musical aspect of the performance, rather than actual verbal interaction with the audience, allowed for the second moment of transcendence to occur naturally and beautifully. Halfway through the performance of what has been called one of Xiu Xiu's defining songs, "I Luv the Valley," the ultimate moment of catharsis occurred, and Jamie Stewart cried at the top of his lungs (for that is the only way this song can be sung): "Je t'aime the valley Je t'aime the valley OH!!!!" In that moment, the audience achieved a moment of pure connection with the artist. Every fist was in the air, and the piercing and yes, sexual cry of "OH!!!!" was on everyone's lips.

On April 12, an energy was tapped into that one doesn't usually feel at a rock show. It was something primal, yet at the same time highly developed and sophisticated. The Hampshire College Experimental Music Collective – which oversaw the event – should be commended for bringing such excellent acts to the Valley.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffer@student.umass.edu.

Solo Sexx defies the mainstream

SOLO SEXX from page 5

tance. The highest importance as a musical being — is to be different. They want to present something that makes people stop and think, 'Oh, wait a second. I don't think I've heard that before.' From their identity to their product, Solo Sexx aims to single out female empowerment in a light that many have not been brought into.

They very much look up to the group Yo Majesty — a lesbian African-American Christian group from Tampa, Fla.

Sherratt said, "They were totally underground and really obscure, and then suddenly they're stuff got leaked on the internet somehow in the upper echelons of the internet and now they're getting remixed by European DJs. They blew up insane. That's the level I would love to be on. I feel like we could so easily fill a niche for an awesome female group."

They want to fill the slot that Yo Majesty opened up in terms of empowerment and then show that hey, white girls can do it too. McCormack is the product of a love for old school rap and hip-hop, but noticed it was mainly women of color who were using rap as a vehicle to get their message out. She's noticed that the glory days of female rap — the days of Queen Latifah, Salt-n-Peppa and TLC — are fading. There are fewer and fewer female rappers out there — women of color, or otherwise.

Although the genre has been dominated by women of color, McCormack explained that although women of color were heard in the genre through rap, she's not using it as an appropriation of their experience.

"I'm not repping anything that isn't intimate with my life. That's why I mostly rap about gender and sexuality because it's something that affects me and is imposed on me."

Solo Sexx feels the mainstream idea of female hip-hop is objectified. When they started out, Sherratt found herself rapping about Prada and other things which she said, "doesn't really make sense or have an actual grip on reality. But then, as I started to evolve, I saw it as a form of resistance. I didn't need any of the other stuff."

That resistance has become empowerment. After spitting raps at parties and proving girls can do it too, they've found this thing that they're doing — this musical escapade — was more than that.

McCormack explains, "It's not a completely alternate persona. It's furthering the image of who I am. I get into this mode of complete delirious power. I can say whatever I want. I can do whatever I want and no matter what I do, it's going to be the right thing, as long as I'm just going off what is flowing through my body and my system. To have that connection to your own synapses and your own trains of thoughts is a cool thing that doesn't really happen that often and I don't think I've found it in anything else besides singing, where you sort of lose yourself and lose your ego. With rap, it's almost like you lose your ego to replace it with something more powerful than an ego. An ego is a defensive mechanism, like saying I don't want to be hurt or I don't want to be scared. But when you're in that zone, you don't have any of that."

To see and feel that power and watch Solo Sexx love their ego to the beat, be sure to check out "dubwhat?!" every other Thursday at Diva's in Northampton to see some girl power without the sass of Spice Girl pop, or at this year's Extravaganja. To hear some first, go to www.myspace.com/solosexx.

Leigh Greaney can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Stewart, Fanning give accurate portrayal of 'Runaways' in film

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

If you ask people about the 1970s girl band The Runaways, you might get a few lines from their hit "Cherry Bomb" or a Joan Jett reference, but chances are, most people these days don't know them too well. They will, namely because of Floria Sigismondi's new film starring Kristen Stewart and Dakota Fanning, also titled "The Runaways."

"The Runaways" tells the story of five girls trying to make it big in the male-dominated world of 70s rock. They fall under the tutelage of Kim Fowler (played extremely well by Michael Shannon), who not only gathers the girls together, but becomes the band's manager and producer.

Under Fowler, the band is formed, with Joan Jett on rhythm guitar, Cherie Currie as lead vocalist, Sandy West on drums, Lita Ford as lead guitarist, and Robin, the bassist. Robin represented Jackie Fox, who did not want to be seen in the movie adaptation of the band's lives.

Sigismondi really plunged the audience into the 70s underground world of grunge during some of the scenes with Fowler and the girls practicing. For instance, Fowler had to teach the girls to toughen up. This was necessary after Currie, played by not-so-nice girl Dakota Fanning, brought in a slow love song to sing in their first practice. Viewers may find it amusing to see young kids (bribed by the manager) at practices heckling the girls. To even more laughter, Jett seems to be thrilled when she finds she can hit trash chucked on stage with her guitar, swinging like a baseball player.

What is very clear, though, is that the laughs are few and far between in "The Runaways." The audience must watch as Currie goes from being a good girl from a broken home to becoming a full-on drug addict. Though she's clearly portrayed as the worst of the lot, the whole group experiments with drugs and sex. It also features some lesbian scenes between Jett and Currie.

It's almost surprising to see the transformation of Dakota Fanning from the ultimate cute, good girl to Currie, a bombshell and addict. The star, known for playing sweethearts in "Charlotte's Web" and "The Secret Life of Bees," however, seems like a natural in "The Runaways."

Kristen Stewart, however, steals the show. Known around the world for her portrayal of "Bella" in "Twilight," many people put her in the waif category, as her most well-known character is a lovesick, obsessed teenager. In "The Runaways," though, Stewart really proves her talent. She is Joan Jett, no question about it. There is the fact they bear a striking resemblance, but her mannerisms and harsh, aggressive attitude mimic the real-life 70s rocker, who had no use for boys.

There's almost no concrete plot line to the film, other than to show the band's formation and ultimate demise and how they handled everything thrown at them in between — be it fame, sex or drugs. Interestingly, though, it's not boring. From Currie's first performance lip-synching David Bowie to Jett's aggressive meeting with Fowler, the audience won't be able to look away.

The film hits its peak, though, when the girls go on their first tour. It may be worth it only to watch how their fame made them nearly as popular as The Beatles in Japan. This culminates in the scene where they perform "Cherry Bomb," sung well by Fanning. It's nearly impossible to tell which songs on the soundtrack to "The Runaways" were sung by Fanning and Stewart apart from the Currie and Jett hits.

The only real downfall to the movie is the fact that other actresses playing band members, Stella Maeve, Scout Taylor-Compton and Alia Shawkat, did not get a chance to shine. "The Runaways" was almost entirely about the path Currie and Jett took, which makes sense, given their relationship and the fact that Jett was an executive producer of the film.

The basic story of the tough all-girl band was told pretty quickly and wrapped up even faster. "The Runaways," though, is the type of movie which will probably inspire girls and maybe even guys to research further the past of the band. This movie will probably give The Runaways a few more fans, at least.

Chances are many girls around the country will see "The Runaways" purely because the "Twilight" star is a lead. Maybe it's just wishful thinking to assume they'll be exposed to more culture after seeing the story of this epic band. But, as The Runaways paved the way for girl bands today, perhaps Sigismondi's film will be an inspiration for girls in the future.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu

Kristen Stewart, known for her starring role in the "Twilight" series, shines in her role as tough-as-nails rocker Joan Jett in "The Runaways."

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off-campus living experience
24-hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com
How about NOW.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3, and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
Sugarloaf Estates Apartments & Homes
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
FREE
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Selected Units
On the Bus Route • Free Water Softening Pools • Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Open 'till 11pm everyday!
Four Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
584-8174
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

BEER * All beer prices plus deposit
Stella Artois 24 pk btl $22.99*
Miller Lite 30 pk can $20.49*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl $16.99*
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl $12.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl $11.99*
Ops Ops Light Lager 12 pk btl $10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can $9.99*
Molson 12 pk btl $9.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl $9.99*

LIQUOR
Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml $59.99
Patron Anejo 750 ml $52.99
Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L $25.99
Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml $20.99
Svedka Vodka 1.75 L $19.99
Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L $17.99
Johnnie Walker Red Label 750 ml $20.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $16.99

WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties $19.99
Bogle Vineyards Phantom Red Blend $18.99
Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon $14.99
Layer Cake Malbec $13.99
The Velvet Devil Merlot $10.99
Blackstone Merlot $10.99
Mark West Pinot Noir $10.99
Santi Pinot Grigio $10.99
Millbrandt Vineyards Riesling $10.99
Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon $9.99
Callia Alta Malbec $8.99

Off The Wall Games
Rise of the ElDrazi Party Weekend April 24 & 25.
Scan OffTheWallGameStore.com for details.
Warhammer 40,000
Magic The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesday 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

UMass looking to fix turnover difficulties

M. LACROSSE from page 10

Six Minutemen have 10 or more goals, while seven different players have at least 10 points.

Against the Tigers, UMass could not set up its offensive sets, relying on offense more in transition, rather than on 6-on-6 play.

"We turned the ball over a bunch of times, particularly in the third and fourth quarter," Cannella said.

The Minutemen had 15 turnovers throughout the game, with nine in the second half.

Sophomore Anthony Biscardi led UMass with three goals, while freshman attackman Will Manny had two goals. Ryan Hantverk, Steve D'Amario, Kyle Smith and Diogo Godoi each had a goal in the game.

Delaware is coming off a 12-11 overtime loss to the Hofstra Pride last Saturday in the Big City Classic, the first game ever played at the new Meadowlands Stadium. The Blue Hens also lost to the Tigers, 9-7, back on April 3, and have lost five of their last six contests.

"They're a very athletic team, you love the way they play, they're an up-and-down team that will run-and-gun on you," Cannella said. "It's a fun style of play for them, and we're going to have to do our best to slow that down a little bit, so it is a challenge for us."

The Blue Hens are led on the offensive end by attackman Curtis Dickson, who leads the team in goals and is second in the country with 42 scores, while Massachusetts native Martin Cahill leads the midfield line with 25 goals.

UMass' defense will have its hands full with the duo, and currently ranks fourth in the country in caused turnovers (10.4).

"Unfortunately, that's just the way it is, hopefully our guys can bounce back, we've done well with that this year, and for the most part, our focus has been pretty solid win or lose," Cannella said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Goalkeeper Tim McCormack saves a shot against Towson on route to the Minutemen's 10-9 loss on Saturday. UMass will travel to Delaware this weekend, a week removed from the loss against Towson.

Manny, Biscardi stepping up

Maxwell Stark/Collegian

UMass will look to exploit Delaware's inconsistent defense this weekend.

SCORER from page 10

ball. His 11 turnovers are a team-high along with defender Tim Langmaid.

If UMass contains Dickson on the attack line, All-American midfielder Martin Cahill has 25 goals this season for the Blue Hens. Cahill's goal total is higher than anyone on the Minutemen.

Doubtful defense

While Delaware has a potent offensive attack, the Blue Hens give up nearly as many goals per game as they score.

Opponents average just under 10.5 goals per game, including 20 goals on the man advantage.

The 20 man-up goals come from a conference-high 57 penalties this season, including a combined 15 between defenders Pat Dowling and Matt Stefurak.

The penalty total bodes well for freshman Kyle Smith, who leads UMass with five man-up goals.

Offensive woes

The Minutemen come into this weekend's game having scored 10 goals per game in their two games without Art Kell. Before his injury, UMass averaged nearly 14.

Attackman Will Manny and Anthony Biscardi remained consistent throughout the last two games, combining for nine goals, three assists.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Iowa hopes to 'Badger' UW

By Ian Martin
The Daily Iowan (Iowa)

The Iowa softball team is looking to put a tally in the win column after its first Big Ten loss on Sunday.

Wisconsin may be the perfect supplier today when Iowa (20-14-1, 6-1) plays a double-header against the sub-.500 Badgers (10-22, 0-6) in Madison.

While Wisconsin's record may seemingly make the Hawkeyes the clear favorite, last weekend's series with Purdue proved to be tough on Iowa's offense.

Prior to the Hawkeyes' 2-0 home loss to the Boilermakers, the squad only mustered one run in a 1-0 shutout on April 10. On Tuesday, Iowa coaches and players addressed the lack of offense.

While mechanics may have been off over the two-game stretch, it seems the biggest thing the team faces is overcoming a mental hurdle in the batter's box.

"The first place to start is to change your mindset," outfielder Jenny Schuelke said. "You just need to take control."

Head coach Gayle Blevins agreed. On Sunday, she said she saw her hitters "guessing" at the plate.

The 23rd-year coach said she felt as though her Hawkeyes have "been aggressive" and had "been dictating what was going to happen [at the plate]." Of course, every team can have an off-day at the plate, she noted.

But after an off-weekend, the team owns an overall team batting average of .278, with five women hitting .299 or higher. The more staggering numbers have come on defense, where Iowa has only allowed five runs in as many games.

Schuelke said today against Wisconsin — a team that has scored only one run in its last four Big Ten games — she and her teammates will focus on one defensive aspect in particular: managing mistakes.

The junior said the team's biggest emphasis on the field has been on getting out of jams when runners are on base — a mindset likely stemming from the Hawkeyes' last game, in which both Purdue runs came in the top of the second as a result of a misplayed ground ball.

"Even though we lost the game on Sunday, that was really just one inning and two hits," Blevins said.

Pitcher Chelsea Lyon, who will start one of the games today against the Badgers, didn't allow an earned run during the Purdue game but came away with the loss. Aside from the error, which she contributed to, the freshman couldn't find any fault with her fielders.

"We shut them down defensively," Lyon said. "You just have to learn from [the error], put it behind you, and keep going."

And despite a young pitcher taking her first Big Ten loss, Blevins appeared confident that the game would be a rewritten story in today's start.

"She knows that the ball she didn't handle opened that inning up," she said. "And [she'll] learn from that mistake."

Mount Holyoke College's THE NETWORK brings you...
MICKEY AVALON AND BLACKLIGHT AFTER-PARTY
SPUN BY DJ FLO & JONESY
SATURDAY 04.24.10
9:00PM–2:00AM
CHAPIN AUDITORIUM
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE
PRE-SALE
TICKETS AVAILABLE NOW @ UMass (Tix Unlimited)
$15 General Admission Pre-sale
$20 General Admission @ door
NetworkMHC@gmail.com

NOW HIRING for Night Graphics
- Must be free to work at night
- Experience in Photoshop or InDesign preferred
- This is one of the only PAID jobs for the Daily Collegian!!!
Contact: NGuarino@student.umass.edu

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

50 Best Places to Launch a Career BusinessWeek
IDEAL
Day one
and you've set your sights
At Ernst & Young, even day one is a chance to focus on your next step. To set your goals and make plans to get there. In fact, we've developed a unique framework with your career development in mind. It's called EYU – and it offers formal learning, experiences and coaching so you can jump right in. Find a mentor. And discover future opportunities. It's everything you need to grow and succeed.
Explore your career options in assurance, tax, transaction or advisory services.
What's next for your future?
To learn more, visit ey.com/us/dayone and find us on Facebook.
Ernst & Young
Quality In Everything We Do

The Minutemen are 5-18 this season and hope to turn their luck around despite losing to Northeastern, 8-5. Rhode Island hosts UMass for a three-game series this upcoming weekend.

NU ruins solid start

BASEBALL from page 10

lost 11 in a row. I thought we would have been aggressive and taken advantage of that."

With the loss, UMass ended its two-game, non-conference road trip at 1-1. The Minutemen defeated Boston College, 8-4, on Tuesday.

"It was two completely different days," Stone said. "We played a pretty good ballgame against a pretty good team [on Tuesday] and today, we played a poor game against a bad team."

UMASS HEADS TO URI

The Minutemen will compete against conference rival Rhode Island in a three-game set in Kingston, R.I. The Rams (16-4, 6-3 Atlantic 10) have won six of their last seven, including a 2-1 series win over conference-leading Charlotte.

Rhode Island's potent offense features multiple players with at least a .300 batting average. Leading the way is junior infielder Tom Coulombe, who leads the team with a .420 average in 30 games. Coulombe's 27 RBIs also leads the team while his three home runs leave him tied for second. The impressive infielder also shows speed on the diamond, registering a team-leading 11 steals in 16 attempts.

UMass also have to look out for sophomore infielder Mike LeBel, who similarly boasts impressive statistics. LeBel's .384 average is second to Coulombe, and he leads the team with 36 runs scored, perhaps a direct result from his 11 steals in 14 attempts.

"Rhode Island traditionally has always been aggressive; they like to steal third in addition to stealing second," Stone said. "We need our pitchers to pay attention to the runners to give our catchers a better chance at throwing them out."

UMass is looking to continue its hot conference play after a pair of victories over Richmond in a three-game series.

"We need to play well," Stone said. "They have good players and a good record. We need to rise to the occasion because it's a big weekend for us."

UMass pitcher Nick Serino will start on Friday despite a rough outing against Charlotte, as he gave up five runs on seven hits and five walks in just over four innings. It remains uncertain whether or not Serino will deliver a start similar to the one he had on March 27th against Saint Joseph's, when he pitched eight innings, giving up one run and three hits to go along with 13 strikeouts.

The probable starters for the rest of the series are senior pitchers Jared Freni and Bryan Leigh.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Senior Week 2010

Thursday, April 22 – Thursday, April 29

Shovel & Scoop
Night at the Movies
Wine & Cheese at Hillside
Six Flags Bus Trip ($15 pp)
Senior Fair
Wieners for Seniors
Photo Scavenger Hunt
Campus Pond Mini-Golf

Don't miss this week of activities celebrating your upcoming graduation!

For more information and to register, visit UMassAlumni.com/students/seniors

Sponsored by the Alumni Association & the Student Alumni Association

UMass Amherst Alumni Association | Student Alumni Association

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG
http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports

Penn State outshoots Drexel, 40–35 in win

CAA LACROSSE from page 10

his first goal of the game to make it 8-3.

After Penn State managed to score a couple of goals, the third quarter ended with a score of 10-5. Both teams added a pair of goals in the fourth quarter, the last of which came from the Nittany Lions' Matt Shankoff with one minute, eight seconds remaining in the game.

Penn State goalkeeper David Baker ended the game with 11 saves. The Nittany Lions outshot the Dragons, 40-35.

BLUE HENS FALL IN CLASSIC

Delaware dropped a tight one to conference foe No. 10 Hofstra, 12-11, on Saturday.

Senior All-American Curtis Dickson led the Blue Hens with five points on four goals and one assist. This marks his 20th-straight game with a goal and his 51st with at least one point.

Although it controlled face-offs, winning 19-of-27, Delaware could not overcome a third quarter which included five straight goals by the Pride. Down 11-7, the Blue Hens battled back with a goal which Hofstra erased. The Pride's Dan Stein added another goal to push the lead to 12-8, a lead that they kept despite a late three-goal rally from the Blue Hens.

Eric Mansfield can be reached at eamansfi@student.umass.edu.

Flyers take 2 games in series vs. Colonials

Xavier lefty earns 3rd ROW honor after shut-out, 5th win

BY SCOTT COURNOYER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Dayton baseball team took two of its three-games in a series against George Washington over the weekend which featured plenty of solid hitting.

The series generated a staggering 41 combined runs, which allowed several players to earn weekly awards. Senior Aaron Dunsmore set the tone early in the first game with three hits and two runs batted in, as the Flyers upset the Colonials, 7-2, on Friday to put them above .500.

Dunsmore won Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors with a .643 batting average and five stolen bases. He collected seven hits over the series, helping Dayton outscore GW, 27-5, in the series' first two games.

Despite scoring another 16 runs on Saturday, the top performance of the game went to Flyers' pitcher, Cameron Hobson, who hurled seven innings of one-run ball, striking out 11, as the bullpen secured Hobson's second win of the season during Game 2 of the series.

In Game 3, Eric Cantrell delivered his Colonials the win with 16 strikeouts in seven innings of work. He also collected his second pitching award of the season, as he earned the Atlantic 10 Co-Pitcher of the Week.

Cantrell's 16 strikeouts came within two of tying the school's record for a single game, set by Jodie Wampler in 1970. With the win, GW improved to 7-2 in the A-10, gearing up for another non-conference game this week.

A-10 Baseball

EXPLORERS ROLL PAST XAVIER

La Salle was originally predicted to finish at the bottom of the basement once again this season, but surprised critics with two conference victories over the weekend against Xavier, including a comeback win on Saturday.

The Explorers trailed 3-0 going into the seventh frame and needed to find their offense quickly. They capitalized on timely hitting, driving home three runs in the seventh and eighth innings, adding six more in the top of the ninth.

La Salle's John Malloy saw his on-base streak of 48 games and his 24-game A-10 hitting streak come to an end Sunday. Malloy (241 hits), who collected two RBIs in the win Saturday, is currently fifth all-time at La Salle in hits.

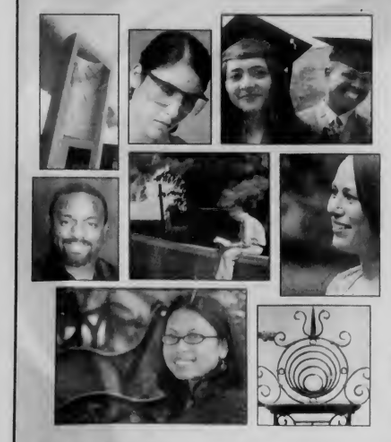
RICHARD EARNS ROW HONOR

For his third time this season, XU left-hander Jon Richard earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors Monday. Richard has become a leader of the Musketeer pitching staff, leading the team in wins (five), and placing second on the team in innings pitched (46) while giving up fewer hits this season so far than innings pitched.

In Xavier's only win in the series, Richard tossed seven innings of shut-out ball as it improved to four wins on the season in conference play.

Scott Cournoyer can be reached at scournoy@student.umass.edu.

REGISTER NOW FOR SUMMER CLASSES



SUMMER SESSION I BEGINS MAY 24

SUMMER SESSION II BEGINS JULY 12

Get ahead with over 100 week-long intensive classes

Visit salemstate.edu/ce for details and to register

Salem State College

GRADUATE STUDIES OPEN HOUSE

THURSDAY, APRIL 22 • 3 - 7 PM
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY

- Meet with graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study, including many programs that may lead to Connecticut teacher certification
- Find out about financial aid and graduate assistantships
- Get details on career services and living on campus

Southern Connecticut State University
SCSU SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES

To register for the open house, call 800-448-0661 / 203-392-5240 or visit www.SouthernCT.edu/grad

SCHOOLS OF BUSINESS · EDUCATION · HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
ARTS & SCIENCES · COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst

PLAY THE HILL UMASS MONDAY MADNESS
9 Holes Just $12
With Your UMass ID & by mentioning this AD

Located In North Amherst, Just Minutes from UMASS on RT. 63

TUES-SUN Twilight Rates Just $13 After 5 P.M.

Cherryhillgolf.org
413.256.4071

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

amherst cinema
Fri Apr 16 - Thu Apr 22
THE GIRL WITH THE DRAGON TATTOO
2:30 6:30 9:30 +11:30 Sat & Sun
A PROPHET 4:00 9:15 (9:45 Wed)
CREATION
1:45 7:00 +11:15am Sat & Sun
*NO 7:00 Wed & Thu
GREENBERG
*2:00 *4:30 (5:15 Sun) *7:30 9:45 +11:45am Sat & Sun
*NO 2:00 Sun NO 4:30 Tue NO 7:30 Thu
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Apr 16 - Thu Apr 22
THE JONESES 5:00 7:15 9:30
+2:45 Sat & Sun +2:45 10:30am Wed
THE RUNAWAYS 4:30 6:45 9:00
+2:15 Sat & Sun +2:15 10:00am Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton
www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

So Sufoku

		8	3		1		6
7	4		8			1
1				9		2	5
6					5
	8			1		9
3		2	4	8		7	1
	3			2	7
		9	6		8		3	2
	1	6			5		4

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour - 1/2 Price Appetizers
8 P.M. - Close Sun. - Wed.
9 P.M. - Close Thurs. - Sat.
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

My job at the premature ejaculation clinic was short-lived.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I got a pet monkey called Charlie Chan."

—Jimi Hendrix

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

COUPON
Israeli Independence Day - Yom Haatzma'ut Celebration
Tuesday, April 20, 4-7pm - Campus Pond Lawn
Rain location will be at Hillel House – 388 North Pleasant St
BRING THIS COUPON FOR YOUR
SPECIAL DISCOUNT - BBQ $1.00 only!

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
Don't blame Little Debbie, blame capitalism.!

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Who knows what will happen in the future. I hope that yours will involve a lot of questionable gelatin.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Pink shoes can be worn for nearly every occasion. Except when you go up against Rizzo and the Pink Ladies.

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
25 more days until the blow-outs return from their hibernation.

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Warning! This horoscope can be used for fuel if combined with a combustible agent. Only a small residue of humor shall remain.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
Did you know that the fancier you get with those twinkle toes, the more lumberjacks will hate you?

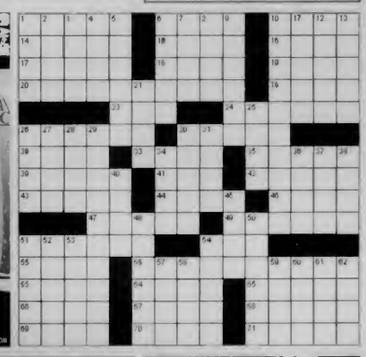
leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Your dorm room needs its own C.S.I spin off with all that DNA evidence.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Things just are not working out for you. Try to immerse yourself in the essence of your inner OG Kushmaster.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
You better start to take responbsibility for your actions or else you are going to be a gas man's assistant. Stinks, huh?

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
You are the first third wheel to actually hook up with itself. Big Pee Wee Herman fan, are we?

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
Creepy is when you start telling other people about your dreams of polar bear massacres and John Wilkes Booth.



capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
You stop that right now or else you'll acquire rosacea in awkward places that will make riding a bike impossible.

ACROSS
1. Nobleman
6. Holds up
10. Agreement
14. Muse of love poetry
15. Sheltered, at sea
16. A river in Spain
17. Throttle
18. A leguminous plant
19. Horse color
20. Driven by lust
22. Speechless
23. Something that is temporarily popular
24. Jubilant
26. Extremity
30. Indian antelope
32. Dwarf buffalo
33. Apiece
35. Triangular formation
39. Paraguayan tea
41. Fish eggs
42. Contemptuous look
43. Expand abnormally
44. It's like a brush
46. Walking stick
47. Discharge
49. Order of business
51. A jazz or swing performer (1940's slang)
54. What a knight is called
55. A Freudian stage
56. Until now
63. Nil
64. Chilled
65. Male singing range
66. Radiate
67. Rugged rock
68. Bridge support
69. Whip
70. Certain
71. Beginning

DOWN
1. It rings every hour
2. Operatic solo
3. Male sheep (plural)
4. Auditory
5. Advise
6. Fanatical
7. Margarine
8. Boyfriend
9. Feels
10. Immortality
11. Approximately
12. Box
13. In shape
21. Sheltered spot
25. Tops of jars
26. Not nights
27. Once again
28. Center
29. Table linen
30. Skedaddle
31. Throat-clearing sound
34. Circle fragments
36. Not fat
37. Be inclined
38. District
40. Seaweed
45. Entcement
48. Morals
50. Cave
51. Light brown
52. Bowel cleasing
53. City in France
54. Marsh plant
57. Beige
58. Backside
59. Nonflowering plant
60. Burden
61. A thorny flower
62. At one time (archaic)

Sundays Open at NOON
LA PIAZZA
Best Deals in Town!!
ALL CALZONES $4.99
ALL 12" SUBS $4.99
ALL SALADS $4.99
ALL ENTREES $5.99
10" CHEESE PIZZA $4.99
Each X-Tra topping .75
12" CHEESE PIZZA $5.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1
16" CHEESE PIZZA $6.99
Each X-Tra Topping $1.25
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 10 WINGS (BONE) $11.50
16" CHEESE PIZZA + 1/2lb WINGS (BONELESS) $11.50
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY?
Every Thursday
JOHN SHELDON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
Every Tuesday
LOST IN HD UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
Thursday, April 15th
SIERRA NEVADA BEER TASTING 6PM
CHANCE TO WIN RED SOX TIX!
Saturday, April 17th
ROOTS REGGAE DANCEHALL & PUB WITH I-GANIC SOUNDSYSTEM AFTER EXTRAVAGANZA 10PM
Keep updated on ABC events on facebook
BOOK YOUR GRADUATION PARTY NOW!
24 N. PLEASANT AMHERST MA
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

The Daily Collegian is now accepting applications for COMICS EDITOR.

Contact the Crossword Kidnapper
comics@dailycollegian.com

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs 4/15 DJ HOTT SIZZLE
Dance, House, Techno, Top 40, Hip-Hop
Fri 4/9 DJ CONSTRUC
Hip-Hop Mash-Ups, Techno, Dance, House
Sat 4/10 SPECIAL GUEST DJ
Drop off your DJ Demo to be considered for the Line-Up
Tues 4/13 UV PROMO
Giveway Drink Specicals
NO COVER FOR THE LADIES
DJ HOTT SIZZLE at the CONTROLS!
HAMMERED FOR HAITI SPONSORED BY UV VODKA - LADIES NIGHT SPECIAL
413-253-1809
83 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

Pictures for Sad Children by John Campbell picturesforsadchildren.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst-4 Bedroom/2 Bath, 2 car garage. June Occupancy, $2000+ Near bus stop. Skibiski, Realtor. 586-1827

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. 413-256-0772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthnght 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthnight.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM on the defensive

Minutemen hope GK can fend off Blue Hens

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

For the first time since 1996, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will take on Delaware Saturday afternoon in hopes of rebounding after its first conference defeat last Saturday at Garber Field.

No. 12 UMass (8-3, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Association) fell to Towson, 10-9, and with three games left to go in the regular season, coach Greg Cannella wants his team to stay positive, despite the setback last weekend.

"There might be a different mindset, but hopefully it's the same mindset that you have each week, and we try to talk to our guys about that," Cannella said. "But, there's probably more of a sense of urgency when you lose, and you have a little bit greater focus because the guys want to rebound."

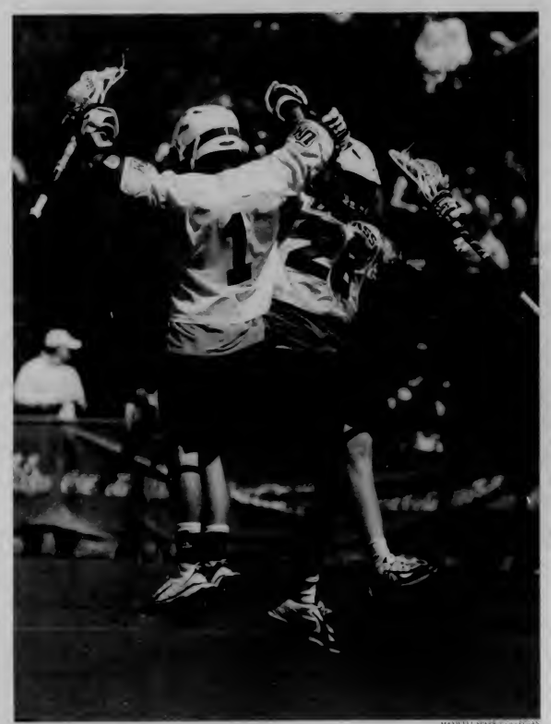
In the loss, redshirt sophomore goalkeeper Tim McCormack continued to gain momentum since the 11-10 victory over No. 18 Brown on March 23, where he made 17 saves.

McCormack made 18 stops against the Tigers, a career-high, and made 12 saves each in victories over No. 11 Hofstra and Penn State.

In his past four games, McCormack has a 61.5 save percentage, and has a 9.51 goals against average in nine starts this season.

Over the course of 2010, McCormack has a 54.3 save percentage, after sitting out all last season.

"Hopefully for us, if your goalie makes 18 saves, you can win the game, but unfortunately, we didn't, but he's been very consistent for us," Cannella said. "It's the middle of the year, so we are happy to see that."



The Minutemen beat the Blue Hens, 13-11, the last time the two teams met in 1996, and hold a 7-2 all-time record against Delaware (5-6, 0-2 CAA).

Between the 1985-1996 seasons, the teams met in 10 of the 11 seasons, which were usually high-scoring games.

In the last three meetings between the teams, there were 27 combined goals, with the Blue Hens winning by one goal in 1994 and 1995.

UMass continues to generate offense, and is eighth in the NCAA in goals per game (12.9), while Delaware (11.2) is 16th.

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Freshmen Will Manny (1) and Colin Fleming (28) congratulate each other after a play during UMass' loss to Towson. The Minutemen will face Delaware on Saturday.

Cannella & Co. look to slow down Dickson

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

While the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team approaches Saturday's game against Delaware with a plus-three margin of victory, its inability to successfully shut out some of the nation's top scorers is cause for concern.

In each of No. 12 UMass' three games against top 10 Division 1 scoring threats, the Minutemen gave up five goals and two assists to their opponent's leading scorer.

The Minutemen's hyper-focus on covering the lead scorers opens a large amount of scoring opportunities for other players, as well.

In a 20-10 win against Hartford (3-8), UMass (7-3, 2-1 CAA) gave up two goals to the nation's No. 2 scorer Aidan Genik (31 goals), but also allowed Jared Frenze (17) to come off the bench and score four goals for the Hawks.

The physicality in that game led to 15 penalties between the two teams.

Against No. 16 Yale (8-2), UMass gave up two goals and one assist to the nation's No. 8 scorer in Brian Douglass (26), and the coverage on Douglass opened up the field for Matt Gibson (22) to score five on the Minutemen, along with two assists.

Defenders Diogo Godoi and Tom Celentani each had three caused turnovers for UMass, but it's difficult for two players to cover four players with multi-point games.

The other top-scorer UMass has faced was Hofstra's Jamie Lincoln (29), who the Minutemen held to one goal, one assist. However, Kevin Ford notched a hat trick to go along with an assist for the Pride (7-3, 1-2 CAA).

The Minutemen had seven penalties in that game, leading to four man-up goals by Hofstra.

Stopping the No. 2 goal-scorer in the nation in the Blue Hens' Curtis Dickson (42 goals, 12 assists) won't be easy for UMass, either.

Dickson had goals in all of Delaware's 11 games this season, including six games of at least four goals. Only two teams held Dickson to one goal in that span.

Dickson is also a ball hawk, grabbing 31 ground balls this season, second only to faceoff man Dan Cooney's 39. However his stick-handling is a weak point. His team-leading 24 turnovers is a statistic UMass should look to exploit as one of the top defensive teams in the conference.

The Minutemen lead the CAA with over 10 caused turnovers per game.

Dickson is also active on the defensive side of the

See SCORER on page 7

Three Minutemen congratulate each other after a play during their 14-6 victory over Hartford on March 24, 2010. UMass heads to Rhode Island for three-game series this weekend.

Husky hitting tops UMass, Oakley in win

Maroon & White ready for 3-game meeting against URI

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team's recent surge was slowed by Northeastern yesterday, as the Huskies downed the Minutemen, 8-5, in the annual Beanpot tournament.

UMass (5-18, 3-6 Atlantic 10) had won three of four going into the game, but could not overcome the Huskies' (7-14, 0-6 Colonial Athletic Association) early 5-2 lead. With the win, NU broke an 11-game losing streak.

NU	8
UMass	5

Poor defensive play cost the Minutemen, who committed two errors, one by third baseman Peter Copa and the other by starting pitcher Isaac Oakley, who suffered the loss. The errors led to four unearned runs for Oakley, who finished with five innings pitched, allowing six runs (two earned) on six hits and the same amount of strikeouts.

Oakley was the beneficiary of two quick runs that the UMass offense put together in the top of the first, courtesy of senior Brian Baudinet's two-run triple.

However, Oakley and the UMass defense crumbled in the bottom half, relinquishing four runs on three hits and two errors.

"We got off to a decent start and then got sloppy on defense," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We weren't as sharp as we should have been, especially in an important [inning] like that."

Errors aside, Stone thought Oakley's start could have been better.

"[Oakley] was okay," Stone said. "He had better velocity than his last time out but he got hurt a few times because he left [the ball] up a little bit." Northeastern tacked on a pair of runs in the second, fifth and sixth innings to guide starter JT Ross to a cushy win. Ross finished the game with six innings pitched, allowing three runs (zero earned) on four hits and two strikeouts.

"Ross' results were good but I was still surprised at his line," Stone said. "I thought we hit him better than [his line] showed."

UMass' best inning came in the seventh, when it cut NU's lead to 7-5. The Minutemen scored two runs on a Husky error and a hit from senior Mike Donato, who was UMass' top performer with three hits, two runs scored and a run batted in.

"We had a little bit of a comeback in the seventh inning," Stone said. "But overall, it was disappointing, especially against a team that had

See BASEBALL on page 8

Love, Card earn Co-POWs

Solid offense from attackers crucial in victories for team

By Eric Mansfield
Collegian Correspondent

The Colonial Athletic Association awarded Hofstra attackman Jay Card and Towson goalkeeper Travis Love with men's lacrosse co-Player of the Week honors on Monday.

In an 18-2 victory over Manhattan last Tuesday, Card produced two goals and three assists. As part of the Konica-Minolta Big City Classic in the New Meadowlands Stadium, the No. 10 Pride took on conference foe Delaware. The game was highly contested, with Hofstra coming out on top 12-11. Card chipped in with a hat trick and three assists.

Love helped secure a pair of victories for Towson last week, over UMBC and Massachusetts, with a combined 21 saves. Love (.583 save percentage) is second in the CAA in that category and third in goals against average at 9.06.

Thomas secured 60 percent of his face-offs in the games against the Retrievers and UMass last week and earned seven ground balls. In the win over UMass, Thomas went 9-for-16 on face-offs and retrieved three ground balls. In the win over UMBC, he went 9-for-14 on face-offs and added four ground balls.

CAA Lacrosse

Nittany Lions fall to Drexel

Despite efforts made by freshman Kyle VanThof and sophomore Matthew Mackrides, each with a pair of goals, Penn State fell, 12-7, at Drexel Saturday afternoon.

The Nittany Lions started the game by taking an early lead with an unassisted goal from VanThof at the 11:51 mark in the first quarter. Drexel responded with three unanswered goals in one minute, with two of the scores coming from Drexel attackman Colin Ambler.

The remainder of the first quarter was a back-and-forth affair. Ambler scored his third goal, while Mackrides nabbed his second of the game. He now leads the team with 27. Two more goals by the Dragons secured a 6-3 lead going into the second period. In the second quarter, Ambler got his fourth and final goal of the game. Junior Kevin Stockel also added

See CAA LACROSSE on page 8

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

A Towson player chases after sophomore Steve D'Amario during the Tigers' 12-11 upset over the Minutemen.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM APRIL 16, 2010

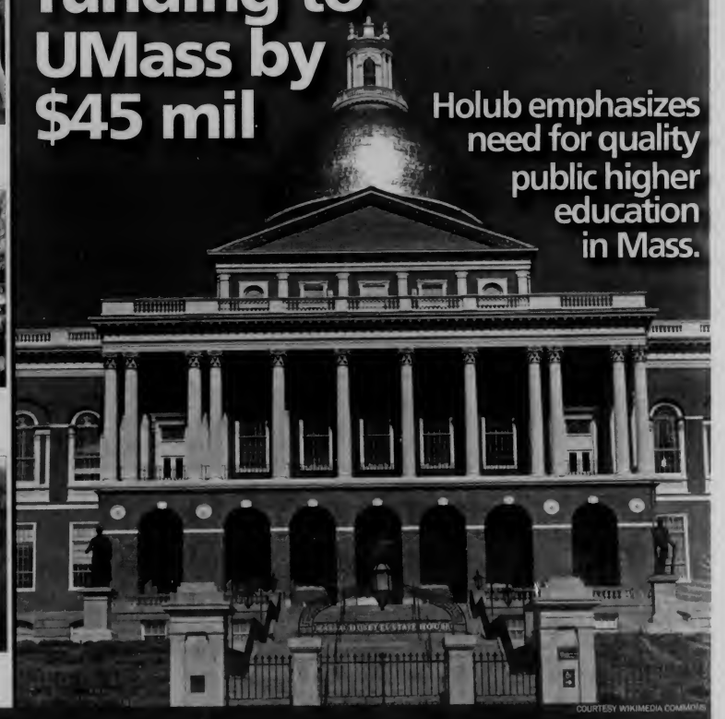
inside this issue:

Hunting Huskies

SEE PAGE 12

The sound of music

SEE PAGE 7



Prized alum

SEE PAGE 3

House proposal could cut funding to UMass by $45 mil

Holub emphasizes need for quality public higher education in Mass.

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 54

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Johnson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Elle Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Monarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Bnnch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH
COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Budget calls for $45 mil cut

House proposal would slash UM funding in '11

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts House Ways and Means Committee released its recommended state budget for fiscal year 2011 Thursday, and the University of Massachusetts could stand to take a big hit.

In a tough economic climate with once plentiful federal stimulus funds rapidly drying up, the House budget recommendation would slash funding to UMass by some $45 million next year. The proposal comes some two-and-a-half months after Gov. Deval Patrick proposed a total budget of $500,590,365 for the five-campus University system, which he said in a Jan. 27 release "reflects the simple notion that we must continue moving forward."

Patrick's budget proposal included $451,272,589 in state funds and $49,317,776 in federal stimulus funds for the five-campus system. With Patrick's plan, UMass would have received $229.1 million in state subsidies, including an additional $24.4 million in stimulus money, according to a Wednesday press release from UMass' Office of News and Media Relations. The governor's recommendation would also have sent a $3.6 million funding line to the Commonwealth Honors College, which the Committee rejected.

Thursday's Ways and Means Committee budget would deliver $190.9 million to the Amherst campus, an actual increase from FY2010 in state funding of about $19 million. However, if the Committee's budget proposal is to pass the chambers of Beacon Hill, UMass' share of federal stimulus revenue next year would fall to $5.3 million, a decrease of $67.6 million. Though the increase in state funding provides fringe benefit costs of about $3.8 million, the cut in stimulus funds would place overall net at a loss of $44.8 million next year.

The Committee's overall budget recommendation for the Commonwealth next year is $27.8 billion, a 3.2 percent increase from 2010. That figure, though, draws on an estimated $1.5 billion in one-time stimulus dollars.

The House is expected to take up debate on the proposal April 26, with the Senate slated to address the budget later in May. A final budget must be ratified by July 1, the start of fiscal year 2011.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The budget proposal Gov. Deval Patrick outlined would have allocated $38.3 million more for UMass than the one proposed by the House.

In a statement addressed to the Campus Community Thursday, Chancellor Robert Holub said the proposal represents Mass. legislators wrestling with tough decisions in a dire fiscal climate.

"The Commonwealth is grappling with a major budget shortfall, and legislators must make difficult choices," said Holub.

Rather than lament the announcement of the proposed cuts as a reflection of a downward trend in educational financing, Holub used the release of the budget details as an opportunity to reemphasize the need for continued support of public higher education in Massachusetts.

"We believe, however, that investment in public higher education provides the best path for creating a prosperous and sustainable future for the citizens of

See BUDGET on page 3

Res Life tabs Eddie Hull as new executive director

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

Eddie Hull will take over in May as the new executive director of housing and residence life.

There is a new man presiding over the floors and dorms of the University of Massachusetts' residential life system.

Eddie Hull, former dean of residential life and executive director of housing services at Duke University in Durham, N.C., will be taking over as the new executive director of housing and residence life. Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim announced last Friday in a release.

"Eddie has been in housing management for a long time and comes to us with significant achievements most recently at Duke University and also at Southern Methodist University and the University of Arizona," said Kim.

Despite Kim's rave review, The Chronicle, the student newspaper at Duke, had less glowing things to say about Hull.

"Housing at Duke is a mess," a 2005 editorial titled "Paging Eddie Hull" reads. "This condition has little to do with the nature of housing, even less to do with the fantastic staff of Residence Life and Housing Services, and a great deal to do with the leadership style of RLHS Dean Eddie Hull."

Hull is a graduate of the University of Arizona-Tucson, where he also received a master's in counseling and guidance.

Hull will start in his new role at UMass May 1.

–Collegian News Staff

Editor's Note:

Yesterday's article about the relocation of the assistant dean of students involved in the sexual assault controversy mistakenly cited the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act (FIPPA) as why the University said it could not comment further on the former dean's move to the campus housing office. The cited law was actually the Fair Information Practices Act (FIPA), (Mass. General Laws Chapter 66 A).

Collegian Staff

UMass is a BIG campus,
and we need your help
covering it.

Know of something that's happening?
Want to see an event get news coverage?
Let us know!

Go online and head to
DailyCollegian.com
and click "Submit a Tip."

Tinkering with fame

UM grad wins fiction Pulitzer

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

It sounds too good to be true: A largely unheard of first-time author (published by an obscure, upstart, non-profit press founded by a university's medical school in 2005) wins a Pulitzer Prize for fiction with his first work, and only receives the good news indirectly via his publisher, who suddenly fields a deluge of media inquiries regarding the prize when the Pulitzer winners are announced.

It turns out that was the case on Monday, when University of Massachusetts alumnus Paul Harding, a 1992 English graduate from the north shore town of Wenham, found out he had won a Pulitzer. His debut novel, "Tinkers," revolves around a severe old New England man, George Washington Crosby, as he retraces his life backwards from his death bed to his trying childhood in Maine.

"Tinkers" was published on the new publishing imprint Bellevue Literary Press, a publishing house started in 2005 by New York University's School of Medicine specializing in books examining the junction of science and the arts.

Bellevue is the first small press to produce a Pulitzer in fiction since the Louisiana State University Press produced "A Confederacy of Dunces" in 1981, wrote Marion Maneker of the Web site thebigmoney.com, a finance site, Thursday.

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

1992 UMass graduate Paul Harding won a Pulitzer Prize for his debut novel, "Tinkers."

Harding studied at UMass from 1986 to 1992 while drumming in the grunge band Cold Water Flat, which also formed at the University. The band formed in 1990 and enjoyed brief success, touring around the northeast before being offered a record deal with the European label Play it Again Sam. The band disbanded in 1996.

Harding has also studied at the prestigious Iowa Writers Workshop. According to information provided by the UMass Office of News and Media Relations Tuesday, he presently lives in Georgetown, Mass., with his wife and two children.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

Proposed budget would nix most stimulus funds

BUDGET from page 2

Massachusetts," he said. "We must redouble our efforts to make that case in the coming weeks as the House membership and later the Senate determine spending priorities."

Holub said he was in Boston Wednesday working with lawmakers to develop strategies to avert potential funding cuts and would be making trips to the gold-domed State House throughout the crucial spring legislative period leading up to ratification of the final budget.

"To that end, I was in the State House yesterday, meeting with lawmakers and legislative staff, working to deter the severe cuts proposed in the House," the Chancellor stated. "In this vitally important period, I urge faculty, staff, students and alumni to contact their legislators and make it known that UMass needs and deserves their support."

Holub asked concerned campus community members to stay informed on developments as they become available, and said his administration would remain transparent about its efforts to combat budget cuts throughout the decisive budgetary process.

"Further details on budget developments will be available on the 'In the Loop website (umass.edu/loop)," Holub said. "Much remains to be determined in Boston, so please stay informed and play your part in the coming debate," he concluded.

Holub's calls for advocacy are a far cry from the tone University administration struck in late January upon news of the Governor's proposal.

Back then, University system spokesman Robert Connolly said in a release that system president Jack M. Wilson found "hope and opportunity" in Gov. Patrick's recommendation, adding that the Patrick proposal is "a strong expression of support for the UMass system and provides hope and opportunity for students all across the Commonwealth."

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY MASSDOMINGUEZ.ORG

Ways and Means Committee Chair Charley Murphy was instrumental in shaping the proposal.

3 PhD candidates win NSF grad research fellowships

The National Science Foundation has awarded three first-year PhD students in the Department of Linguistics Graduate Research Fellowships.

The Foundation awarded a total of 10 students the competitive fellowship, and no other university had more than two students represented.

Linguistics department head John McCarthy said in a Thursday release that the Graduate Research Fellowships are one of the most prestigious, noteworthy forms of recognition for students early in their graduate careers.

Each fellow will receive an annual stipend of $30,000 for three years, with an additional $10,500 cost-of-education allowance to the campus and $1,000 for international travel.

The three awardees include: Elizabeth Bogal-Allbritten, a 2009 Swarthmore College graduate who originally hails from Murray, Ky., and is focusing on syntax and semantics with a focus on Navajo language in her doctoral work; Claire Moore-Cantwell, an Oakhurst, Calif. native who graduated last year from the University of California, Los Angeles, and is specializing in phonetics and phonology, concentrating specifically on the Semitic languages; and Robert Staubs, a computational phonology doctoral candidate who graduated last year from the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Va.

Collegian News Staff

COURTESY FACEBOOK.COM

Claire Moore-Cantwell (top) and Elizabeth Bogal-Allbritten (bottom) won NSF Fellowships.

THE AMHERST COLLEGE PROGRAM BOARD AND AAS PRESENT:
THE ROOTS
FEATURING jason derülo
SATURDAY, APRIL 24TH
DOORS OPEN AT 7, SHOW STARTS AT 8
LE FRAK GYM, AMHERST COLLEGE
FREE FOR AC STUDENTS; TICKETS GUARANTEED MARCH 29th- APRIL 9TH
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL AUDIENCE TICKETS AVAILABLE APRIL 9TH
FIVE COLLEGE $15
GENERAL ADMISSION $25
NO CAMERAS OR LARGE BAGS
AC TICKETS AVAILABLE IN ROOM 114 KEEFE CAMPUS CENTER
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL ADMISSION AVAILABLE ON
https://www.amherst.edu/campuslife/board/calendar

Happy Birthday Israel

Israel Independence Day Celebration

All Welcome!

Israeli Food, Live Israeli Music, Israeli Dancing,
Bedouin Tent, Hookah, Henna, Massages, Yoga,
Vendors and Crafts, Bounce House, Games...

Kosher BBQ - $3
(look for discount coupon in the Collegian, on comics page!)

Tuesday, April 20, 4-7pm
Campus Pond Lawn

Sponsored by Student Alliance for Israel, UMass Hillel, The UMass Democrats, Jewish Student Union, Harold Grinspoon Foundation, MASA, Housendesk, Legacy Heritage Fund, David Project, Combined Jewish Philanthropies

Rain location will be at Hillel House – 388 North Pleasant St

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A tea party isn't a tea party without any tea

Ben Moriarty

On Wednesday I went to Boston for a job interview. The interview was at two in the afternoon, and I arrived in Boston shortly before one. I am neurotic about being late for things I care about, and I believe this is because I care about so little in general that I put a lot into the few things I do care about.

When I start to think, I start to worry. This is a problem for me, because I think all the time. So, instead of worrying for an hour, I walked to the Commons, sat on a bench a little bit away from Frog Pond since I nearly fell through the ice this past winter, and watched people go by me. I figured this would not make me think, and I could space out under the blue skies.

Earlier that day, there was a Tea Party in the Commons. No, not something that actually signified and meant something like the Boston Tea Party did on December 16, 1773. Nor was it the type of tea party where, as I found out from a flamboyant and cheerful man when I was venturing in Provincetown two years ago, an underground party where homosexuals met up and had tea, or something or another.

This was a real tea party. People had teabags in their faces while they hung off the brims of their hats, it had people waving their Gadsden flags, shouting about how the United States of America was going to hell, and rubbing each other's red necks and backs. Surprisingly, there was a wide range of ages, peoples and sexes. Both sexes were present.

In fact, Sarah Palin was present. The man who sat next to me on the bench was very pleased by her presence at the rally. He was not pleased from the couple that walked in front of us. The woman verbally and physically attacked her boyfriend as they passed because he supposedly accused her of sleeping with the landlord, which, for all I know, may have been true. He also smoked all of her cigarettes. They continued walking past us, the bickering causing him to have enough and to take her phone, where then a childish altercation occurred.

This was a real tea party. People had teabags in their faces while they hung off the brims of their hats, it had people waving their Gadsden flags, shouting about how the United States of America was going to hell, and rubbing each other's red necks and backs.

I took my Lord's name in vain at the sight. The guy sitting next to me said aloud, "See? Every day society keeps getting worse and worse. And it all starts down in Washington." He apparently was talking to me. I asked him why that was.

"It was when we elected that Obama. I knew we made a mistake the moment he was being inducted and his two little daughters kept tugging on his pants saying they wanted to get out of there. I saw him smiling; he knew he pulled a fast one on us. He isn't a real American." I could see that an inch to the side of his head rested the golden dome of our Massachusetts State House. I said my Lord's name in my head again. I am, after all, Catholic. That's what Catholics do.

There was, of course, more. According to my new friend, if some of our founding fathers and Revolutionary War heroes were alive today, like Revere, Franklin, Adams, Jefferson, they'd hang themselves.

He didn't like Ted Kennedy, that was for sure. He said Scott Brown was one of the only three people he trusted to be president, after Palin and Mitt Romney. He was glad Kennedy was gone. Whether that meant out of the Senate or out of life and into the palm of God, I can't be sure.

But, he did like Ted's brother John.

"When I was younger, I wasn't so conservative. I was against Vietnam, and I liked JFK. But if JFK were around today, he'd be a conservative."

I can't imagine many liberals would be happy to admit or hear that.

"But it's different now, with Iraq. We can't let them rob us blind with their prices on oil."

"That's the thing about Palin, she wants us to use our resources here. If we drill for oil, we won't have to rely on anyone else. We can support ourselves."

And that was that. It was about support, about self-reliance, about keeping to yourself, and about keeping the government out of your nose, sometimes, that is.

"If people fall through the cracks of society, there should be a safety net, but people shouldn't be allowed to stay there and just leach off our government's funds."

He had a point. And, despite being in the heart of Boston, being blocks away from the Financial District, blocks away from Fenway Park, a walk away from some of the best colleges in the country, I felt like I was in the heart of Dixie.

Here they were, this grassroots movement, filling the Common with thousands and thousands of people, most of whom think we are Socialist country now.

And I noticed that despite how crazy these people are they have some good points.

"Those bigwig politicians who went to Harvard and Yale think they know everything – and they might know everything. But they don't know some stuff."

Well, if that isn't the damndest and truest thing I've ever heard, I don't know what is. I don't see the difference between the Tea Party people and most Democrats and Republicans. They all think they know what's going on and what they're talking about.

"God bless you, good luck at your interview." A lot of them might be off the deep end, but at least they aren't snobby.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Last week's online results for best Residential Area:

Southwest - 58%
Orchard Hill - 42%
DuBois library - 0%

Total votes: 96

This means:
The Ugg wearers win!
The jocks love to vote in online polls!

VOTE FOR CENTRAL OR SYLVAN ONLINE. NOW.

Point-Counter-Point

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Residential areas: The quest to be the best

Sylvan doesn't suck

Amanda Joinson

I'm sure you have heard all the rumors about "suicide Sylvan." There is no doubt about it, Sylvan does not have a good reputation, but get rid of all of your assumptions, start with a clean slate, and redevelop your opinion. Have you got rid of them yet?

Good. Despite what you are told, Sylvan has its advantages. Sylvan is the only residential area on campus that offers suite style living, and this is actually better than a dorm room. Suite style living closely resembles that of an apartment such as the North Apartments, or even off-campus housing like Pufflon or the Townhouses.

Sylvan's suites are possibly the best place to live as an undergraduate, especially if you are not prepared yet to move off-campus. You are able to arrange the suite full of your friends, and some are even available for co-ed living. There are a mix of single rooms and doubles allowing for a total of eight people to live together. Instead of having your best friends downstairs or on the opposite side of the hall, you are in the same area and can leave the door to your personal room open to allow the flow of conversation.

But the great thing about Sylvan is you have a common room, and this is basically a furnished living room to do what you want with. You do not have to sit in your room with the door open to talk to your friends, and there is no need to make your bed in the morning because no one will ever need to use it as a seat. The common room is there to bring everyone together. There are internet connections and cable jacks, and if you and your roommates put in the time and decorated a bit, this space becomes a great area to watch movies, play games and drink hot chocolate in the midst of the winter.

Even more importantly, on weekends when friends come up and visit, the common room is a great place to let them crash too. They are out of your way, in their own part of the suite, and you don't have to listen to them snore. And if you don't have friends or use the common room as an area to hang out in, it is a great place for storage. Throw your bikes and rain boots in there.

Suites also give you the advantage of sharing a bathroom with the people you are living with rather than an entire floor of strangers like in Central or Southwest. Students just have to wander down their private hallway to the showers, not down the very public hallways of other dorms where there could be visitors. Another bonus is there are little cubbies in the bathroom for all of your stuff.

Unlike having an apartment, all the public areas in the suite are cleaned by the maintainers, meaning less work for you. The hallway and common room is vacuumed every week. Bathrooms are cleaned multiple times, the floor, the mirrors and sinks, are all scrubbed. The showers are sprayed down. One less thing you have to worry about as a busy college student.

Besides the living advantages, there are academic benefits. Sylvan has the ability to be quiet, but it is not necessarily a bad thing. Sylvan allows the opportunity to hideout when there are major midterms coming up all in the same week or seven-page term papers.

There is also a great courtyard covered by the trees out in the center of the three Sylvan buildings. It is a great place to get work done in the fall and spring. It is also a great place to play. There are always people outside whether it is to smoke or to play football. Sylvan is not much different than the atmosphere in Southwest. People are actually more friendly and more of a close-knit community in Sylvan because there is a smaller amount of students that live in the area.

From that close-knit community students can make friends that last forever. I know I have. I lived in Sylvan my freshman year. I have had the same friends since. We have the same memories of crazy weekend shenanigans that I got from living in Southwest a year later.

Oh did I forget to mention, instead of silly dorm parties, students in Sylvan can easily make their way to Pufflon or the Townhouses for they are only about a mile down the road. Sure that seems like a lot, but Southwest and Orchard Hill are twice as far.

Have I changed your mind yet?

Sylvan doesn't deserve the reputation it has. It isn't bad, and in fact, it's quite good. It may be up a hill, but not as big as Central's, and once you get past the small things, you'll realize it's a really nice place to live.

Amanda Joinson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ajoinson@student.umass.edu.

Central is essential

Dave Coffey

Just like Highlander, in the war of the residential areas, there can only be one. And that one, ladies and gentlemen, is Central.

The reasoning behind this almost obvious choice does not necessarily have to do with the resonating merits Central has over the other residential areas, but rather the fact that Central, in the end, simply sucks the least out of all.

So what exactly is Central going up against in these circumstances? Obviously, the other residential areas are none other than Southwest, Orchard Hill, Northeast, North and Sylvan.

Let's start with Southwest. Albeit a reasonably popular – as well as populous – area, I simply fail to see the appeal for a few reasons. First off, in all the low rises, which are the majority of the dorm buildings in Southwest, one is forced to live in what is basically a furnished cave, colloquially known as a Z-room. I remember staying in one for only a few nights during freshman orientation and vowing I would accept harakiri before I ever spent another night in one of those puppies. The dreaded Z-room can be avoided by living in the towers, but then again, you'd have to live in the towers.

Aside from these residence specific discrepancies, living in Southwest obviously puts you in a huge space that is still packed with a ton of people. I can't imagine enjoying an extra five to ten minutes tacked on to my morning commute to class because of the fact that I'm wedged somewhere beyond Berkshire dining (which, to its credit, is most likely the best on campus). Additionally, try getting some sleep before a morning you have an 8 or 9 a.m. class when a Massachusetts team wins a championship or, really, any similar televised event occurs. When it does, expect the courtyards to fill wall to wall with bodies and incessant noise and, if the air is just right, a cacophony of police sirens and drunks resisting arrest. I suppose this isn't terrible if you're looking for a good time, but it's at the very least a nuisance when you're trying to do anything else.

How about Orchard Hill? While the list of negatives is somewhat smaller than that of Southwest, it is also smaller and less exciting. The dorms aren't terrible, but the room sizes and layouts leave a little to be desired, at least in my opinion. O-Hill also has a similar problem to the back corners of Southwest, in that it's separated from the main part of the campus just enough that it forces you to set your alarm earlier to make up for the added distance it takes to make it to class. Not to mention walking back to Orchard Hill from anywhere else on campus on a late Friday night feels like a Hobbit's journey through Mordor.

Who doesn't love same-sex dorms and constant scenery of ugly, unending and unneeessary construction? If you're the kind of person that digs these types of things, then I suppose you'd probably enjoy Northeast. Sure, they've got Worcester, but that's hardly worth it. Honestly, aside from the fact that it's on the outer edge of campus (the slightly cooler but still pretty lame cousin of Sylvan) and that it sits right upon the noisy, unaesthetic and relatively heavily traveled North Pleasant Street, the worst part about Northeast is that it's simply horribly boring. This can be confirmed by anyone who's lived there for an extended period of time (myself included).

Do I really need to go over Sylvan? Discussing Sylvan is like discussing the Los Angeles Clippers when projecting analyses regarding the NBA postseason.

Once again, I posit that Central is superior to all of these residential areas simply because it just sucks less than all of them. As its name alludes, it is central in location in relation to the campus. You're about as close as you can be to everything at once, including classroom buildings, administrative buildings, other dorms and so on. And, in my opinion, it just looks nicer.

Instead of the urban jungle vibe one tends to get from the other residential areas, Central is much more au natural, so to speak. There's plenty of lush grass, a few tall trees here and there for shade, and the dorms with arguably the best rooms set neatly into a rolling hillside horizon. There's a dining common right at the bottom of the hill, but even if one doesn't like Franklin, even though it won the Dining Commons contest last year in the Collegian, it's not that far of a stroll to Worcester, or even the superior dining of Southwest. Visiting friends from any other residential areas is a cinch since, once again, it's called Central for a reason.

Let's say you live in Central, and you visit Southwest for one Thursday evening with some friends who live in Southwest, O-Hill and Northeast. When you all retire for the night, you'll have reached your dorm and gone to bed by the time your friends from O-Hill and Northeast are even halfway back to their respective Mt. Everest and sausage-fest dorms.

You'll actually be able to sleep in relative peace, unlike your friend in Southwest, who is either being kept awake all night by endless noise, the insufferable life of a Z-roomer, or both. And, of course, you don't have any friends from Sylvan, because no one has seen anyone from Sylvan since 1984.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

Vote online at dailycollegian.com

Next week: Northeast vs. a loser dorm area

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COURTESY RATIFIED.ORG

Extravaganja 2010, organized by the Cannibis Reform Coalition, will feature Pioneer Valley band Primate Fiasco as headliners.

HANNAH CLINE/COLLEGIAN

This year's Patriot's Day concert on Orchard Hill promises to delight ... As long as the Weather cooperates.

Extravaganja ready to roll

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

That time of year has come once again. Spring is in full bloom, the campus ducks have begun their mating rituals, 4/20 is on the horizon and Extravaganja prepares to descend upon the town of Amherst.

Tomorrow will mark the nineteenth consecutive year of the hemp-fest known around the valley as Extravaganja. Organized by the University of Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition, the event centers around the celebration of cannabis culture, as well as protest of what they view as the "marijuana prohibition" that exists in the United States.

From noon until dusk Amherst Common will be transformed, lined with vendors, student organizations, and activist groups. The main attraction of the event, besides the liberal cannabois which make their perennial appearance, will be the central stage featuring musicians and performers from across all genres. Reggae artists, rappers and acoustic guitarists are among the artists booked, but the headlining group of the event will be local band Primate Fiasco. Performing at the much-coveted 4:20 p.m. spot, Primate Fiasco is described as a "psychedelic Dixieland jazz-funk experience" which, by all accounts, should not be missed.

Several speakers will be featured throughout the day as well, including state representative Dick Evans, who is currently backing legislation before the Massachusetts legislature to legalize the production and sale of marijuana.

The Cannabis Reform Coalition is a student organization dedicated to ending the "war on drugs," and reforming the way that our legal system deals with marijuana. While Extravaganja is their largest annual event, they are active throughout the year. The CRC worked directly with Evans in crafting the wording of his proposed bill, and in the past have launched campaigns to both petition for and raise awareness of cannabis usage rights.

Attractions provided by the CRC themselves include a DJ tent, as well as a free tie-dye station for attendees interested in leaving more colorfully than they arrived.

While possessions of small amounts of marijuana no longer carry criminal charges in this state, its possession and use are still illegal, making the large quantities typically smoked at Extravaganja a serious legal question. Yet for nearly two decades, pot enthusiasts have been smoking freely at this public event with relative impunity. Mollie Mumane, a senior officer in the CRC, explained the accord that the group has reached with the local police department.

"Every year we meet with the chief of police a few weeks prior to talk about it," said Mumane. "We smoke as an effort of passive protest, and we are only allowed to smoke on the common." She reminds celebrants, however, that the one-day peace treaty applies only to the use of marijuana. Attempts to sell any drugs of any kind will not be tolerated, and drinking at the event has often led to arrests.

Aside from attractions on the official agenda, festival-goers can expect to find exotic foods, purveyors of various legal herbs, and droves upon droves of colorful, crunchy characters. But above all, at this classic kick-off to the 4/20 weekend, expect the unexpected.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheri1@student.umass.edu.

Orchard Hill to be filled Sun.

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

This Sunday marks the annual return of the Patriot's Day Hill Concert. The concert kicks off at 11:45 a.m. on Sunday, April 18 and goes till 6 p.m. by the Van Meter basketball courts in Central. Food will be available for purchase as well from Greeno and Sweets and More.

Last year's event was one for the books with 4,000 students attending. Event coordinator, Dave Robertson explains that aside from the Spring Concert and the sports games, this is one of the biggest UMass events. "I want to see 5,000 people this year" he said.

There are currently seven bands playing for the event including Kids on a Hill, Nihility, Roots in Stereo, High and Mighty, The Dads, Orange Television, Viada, and solo artist Alex Erickson, who will be playing in between sets.

The opening band, Kids on a Hill, is a jazz, soul and funk band that loosely covers various classic songs including "Crosstown Traffic" by Jimi Hendrix and "Could You Be Loved" by Bob Marley. But the band does play some of their own material and they bring their own flair to the covers they do play. Kids on a Hill also has an uncanny ability to get crowds moving and grooving to the funk. This is definitely a band worth checking out. Bring your breakfast and dance!

Nihility, a rock band hailing from Tewksbury, MA, will be taking the stage later in the day as the event continues. The all student band sounds decent enough and is certainly worth a listen.

The Dads is another band originating in Van Meter. Similar to Nihility, the two bands have previously played shows together as well. Citing their influences as KISS and Bill Cosby on their MySpace page, hillsters can expect the band to deliver a good time for all.

Orange Television is a 90s-inspired rock and funk band. While these are the main sounds in the band, there is a definite jazz influence that can be heard in their music. Their songs tend to have many unusual rhythms and some of their riffs can be quite involved. With a definite emphasis on instrumental songs and improvisation, the band will be quite a fun band to rock out to on Sunday.

Roots in Stereo, another Amherst band, is a hip-hop, reggae jam band featuring guitars, drums and turntables. Many of the band members also come from the New England area and seem to have a considerable amount of groove to them.

Alex Erickson is a UMass student and acoustic artist whose sound can be compared to artists like John Mayer and Jason Mraz. Erickson is quite an accomplished artist with a fantastic voice. Erickson will provide musical interludes between acts so as to keep the crowd moving.

Attendees can also expect the best from High and Mighty, returning to play the coveted 4:20 p.m. spot for a second straight year, this time with members of Amherst's own The Telephone Company.

The Fill the Hill concert should be an easy going way to spend a Sunday afternoon... provided the weather cooperates. So come out to experience a day of food and music on the Van Meter hill. Check out the bands ... and relax.

Tappan Parker can be reached at tmparker@student.umass.edu.

Talk looks at beating eating disorders

By Kaitlyn Bigica
Collegian Staff

Each year, on Nov. 11, the date of their daughter Tara's birthday, John and Maureen Sheehan hold "Run For Tara," an event to raise money for eating disorder awareness in memory of Tara's death from anorexia. Money raised from this event goes towards bringing doctors to schools in order to educate students on eating disorders.

On April 14, 2010, the Sheehan's brought Dr. Anita Johnston to the University of Massachusetts Amherst to share her specialized knowledge on eating disorders with Dr. Daniel Gerber's Public Health class.

After working with a student on her eating disorder thesis in the 1980s, Johnston realized there were not many places for people with eating disorders to find help. She soon after created the "At Peno Eating Disorders Program in Hawaii and joined the clinical therapy staff at the center for eating disorders in Tennessee to work with and treat those who need help. After working with and researching eating disorders, Johnston wrote the book "Eating In the Light of the Moon: How women can transform their relationships with food through myths, metaphors and storytelling."

Johnston stressed that people who struggle with eating disorders have an uncanny ability to find what is wrong in many situations, even when others do not notice the issue. This translates to eating disorders as women begin to feel there is something wrong with their own body. Once they discover the issue may be their appearance, they begin to diet in order to fix that problem. They focus on food, fat and the number on the scale instead of listening to their bodies' signals of when they are actually hungry and when they are not.

One metaphor Johnston used from her book to help students understand their hunger scale was that we all have two tanks: Tank A (physical hunger), and Tank B (emotional hunger). In many cases people think they only have one tank, and will fill it completely with either food or emotion – but have not satisfied each hunger completely, or have overindulged one. Johnston stressed the importance of finding the right balance between these tanks by recognizing your physical and emotional cues. Once you realize when you are truly eating because you are satisfying hunger or emotions you can find why you overeat. Johnston said in many cases if you are full and still want to eat sweet food, it is because you feel you are not sweet enough or there is not enough sweetness coming into your life while chocolate shows a craving for romance or sex.

When reaching for warm foods like a bowl of soup it is because there is not enough warmth surrounding you. Crunchy and salty foods can mean unexpressed anger and spicy foods show a desire for excitement. Johnston said if you are thinking to yourself, "I want chocolate chip cookies because they are sweet and soft and I want them to be oozy," it means you want sweetness without frustration. By listening to yourself and the reasons you want to continue to eat when you are full, you can recognize what suppressed emotion you may be feeling.

Another metaphor Johnston used referred to the recovery process of eating disorders. "I truly believe that people can fully recover from an eating disorder" said Johnston, but it is imperative that they seek help, "I have never seen someone recover from an eating disorder without some type of emotional recovery." It is not expected that someone who is suffering from an eating disorder immediately stop, in fact it is not possible. Johnston used another metaphor from her book, which expresses the need of someone who is suffering to hold on to their eating disorder. Johnston set an image in students' minds that they are in a river drowning when a log comes along, they grab onto that log and it keeps them from drowning, but it gets to a certain part in the river where they need to let go of the log that had up until that point saved their life.

The log is like an eating disorder, people use it in order to suppress and deal with other emotions. If they were to immediately let go of their eating disorders they would be overcome with those emotional issues the eating disorder had helped suppress, just as if you were to let go of the log, you may get halfway to land and begin to drown again. The only way you can deal with both problems is to fix each one a little at a time. Johnston said it is like letting go of the log and just floating until you begin to sink, and the log is still there to grab hold of, eventually you will find yourself treading water and then swimming to land. If you work on the emotional issues that caused the eating disorder, then you can safely leave it without feeling the need to hold on to it.

Although the steps to recovering from an eating disorder may seem difficult and out of reach, it is important to know there are places and people who are ready to help. According to the South Carolina Center for Mental Health, only 1 in 10 women receive treatment for their eating disorder and "the mortality rate associated with anorexia nervosa is 12 times higher than the death rate of all causes of death for females 15 – 24 years old." If you think you or a friend may have an eating disorder whether it be anorexia, bulimia or simply obsessing over body image (which is an eating disorder) it is crucial to find help.

You can contact Maureen and John Sheehan at 413-527-3305 or maureenjohn@gmail.com for referrals to healthcare centers like Walden Center for Eating Disorders in Northampton. You can also contact them to get involved in Run For Tara, which continues to raise awareness for this generally under-recognized issue. Also, you can check out www.DrAnitaJohnston.com for more information about her book "Eating in the Light of the Moon.

Kaitlyn Bigica can be reached at kbigica@student.umass.edu.

'Greenberg' a winner

By Nick Cotello
Collegian Correspondent

In 2010's "Greenberg," director Noah Baumbach doesn't wander far from his comfort zone, producing a character-driven study of the odd and unlikeable Greenberg. Upon receiving mixed reviews for 2007's "Margot At the Wedding," Baumbach returned to form with his exceptional development of main characters in this latest release. Baumbach takes a delicate approach to molding the characters in "Greenberg" and returns to the basis that he created with his 2005 film "The Squid and the Whale" in the sense that the audience is not quite sure whether to celebrate the characters for their uniqueness and sympathize with their personal dilemmas, or to look down upon them for their delusional, rude and rather improper behavior.

Set in present day Los Angeles, the film revolves around Roger Greenberg, played by Ben Stiller, who is fresh out of a mental hospital and residing in his brother's house while he vacations with his family in Vietnam. It doesn't take long to catch on to the fact that Greenberg is awkward in almost every way possible: physically, sexually and above all, socially.

Greenberg tries to avoid social gatherings like the plague. Even the relationships that Greenberg does have in his life are rocky. There's a considerable amount of awkward tension between him and his best friend, Ivan (Rhys Ifans); likewise with his own brother. Greenberg also attempts to awkwardly woo his brother's personal assistant, a woman named Florence (Greta Gerwig), who is still searching for what she wants out of life. Similar, but not all that similar, Greenberg and Florence connect. The characters are brought together, separated, reunited and separated, keeping the viewer entertained, albeit frustrated.

While it can be dissected as a multiple character study, Greenberg is the obvious focus. It's not hard to observe that Greenberg and Florence have a strange, enthralling, yet at the same time boring relationship. However, Greenberg seems to give it an edge. Quite simply, Florence is just an average woman. Greenberg, on the other hand, is quite a complex figure. Unlike the Hollywood mold, Baumbach's hero of the story is rather unlikeable to say the least. Besides being a social nightmare, Greenberg thinks only for himself. Throughout the movie, he showcases a need to be in control of situations and dislikes when others take the lead.

Underlining it all is the clear fact that he dislike drawing attention to himself. He often ignores social invitations and becomes enraged when Ivan arranges to have the wait staff sing to him at his birthday dinner. Greenberg

See GREENBERG on page 9

COURTESY ODDSAC.COM

Animal Collective premiered its new "visual album," 'ODDSAC,' at this year's Sundance Film Festival. The group will be showing the film at Hampshire College on April 19.

Animal Collective getting 'odd' Mon.

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

Animal Collective has released eight full length albums, four EPs and two live collections. If you don't know about them by now – well, you should probably know about them by now – but for those of you who aren't familiar with those shape-shifting experimental musicians from Baltimore, you're about to have a great chance to get acquainted.

This Monday, April 19, Animal Collective and filmic collaborator Danny Perez are bringing "ODDSAC," their 54-minute "visual album" to Hampshire College's Franklin Patterson Hall. They'll be showing the film twice that night – at 9:15 and 11:15.

If the only thing you've heard from Animal Collective is last year's summer jam "My Girls," this should be quite an eye-opener. Described in the Sundance Film Festival notes as "a glittering mix of pop rock, experimental noise and horror-movie soundtrack," Animal Collective's otherworldly soundscapes are matched by Danny Perez's "intense scenes of vampires, campfires, and screaming prophets."

This is exciting news for Animal Collective fans, not only because "vainpires, campfires and screaming prophets," would make a killer band name, but because the prospect of experimental noise and campfires recalls the golden era of Animal Collective. Namely the "Campfire Songs" era, when instead of Grateful Dead samples and click tracks, they relied on lush natural field recordings and a lot of pedals.

That was back in the first few years after they formed, in 2000, since then, their noisy warmth has gradually given way to pop friendliness. Not that musical evolution is to be discouraged, nor that their pure pop moments are anything but preposterously satisfying – but it will be refreshing to see the band tinkering away again on an intimate, sensory experience.

Danny Perez has collaborated with Animal Collective in the past, once on the 2004 video for "Who Could Win a Rabbit," and again, earlier this year at New York's Guggenheim Museum, for the audacious audio-visual installation "Transverse Temporal Gyrus." The former told the old "tortoise and the hare" fable in a wild bit of musical-visual storytelling reminiscent of Spike Jonze, with an eerie and brutal twist. The latter turned the museum's central spiral into an ambient sound and light wonderland.

If the 30-second trailer is any indicator, "ODDSAC" should fall somewhere in between – offering both deep-dye projections to emulate pressure phosphenes (what you see when you rub your closed eyes) and frighteningly surreal forest scenes (in one shot, a cloaked figure stumbles around in a clearing, his head aflame). Millennial psychedelia has been waiting for an answer to "The Wall," and with any luck, we'll have found it in "ODDSAC." Generational generic pretensions aside, it looks like an overwhelming sensory experience – and a timely little trip before finals.

Tickets are on sale today at Hampshire in the Campus Leadership and Activities Office attached to the Dakin House from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. They are $15, and available only to Five College students with a valid Hampshire, Smith, Amherst, Mt Holyoke or UMass ID.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

'Greenberg' proves rude and thoughtful describes himself as a "brutally honest person" and not even Greenberg himself can escape this honesty. Unaware of the fragility of his personal relationships, Greenberg comes to resent the general dislike and ridicule he attracts, thus distancing himself from new company and struggling with casual everyday interactions.

GREENBERG from page 8

Based on Baumbach's direction and production style it appears he has fallen under the influence of Wes Anderson to a certain extent. "Greenberg" features Anderson-like editing that strongly supports the uncomfortable feeling of the story. For example, many scenes of dialogue between Greenberg and Florence are cut abruptly just as Greenberg begins to ramble on. In so doing, Baumbach conveys the awkwardness between the characters. The unexpected edits enforce the gracelessness of the conversation. Through this cinematic technique, Baumbach makes the content of his film incredibly relatable.

Dealing with comedies for the better part of a decade, Stiller has mainly been showcased in major productions and though Greenberg is a somewhat comedic character, there's no denying that the dramatic, independent role was a change of tune. Regardless, Stiller has little trouble bringing the self-centered, aggravating Greenberg to life and creates further complications for the audience as such a likable actor plays such an unlikable character. However, Stiller doesn't deserve all the credit as he plays alongside exceptionally strong supporting actors, Gerwig and Ifans; both portraying completely normal individuals in contrast the peculiar Greenberg.

As an independent release, "Greenberg," like the title character, may not get the attention it deserves. Frustrating, humorous, rude, realistic and thought-provoking, "Greenberg" is made successful due in large part to the foundation set by the tremendous writing, producing and directing of the ever improving Noah Baumbach. But it's the actors that truly bring the story of "Greenberg" to life. At one point, Greenberg ironically describes his talent: "I build things." One can't help but think that Baumbach and crew have built a quiet winner out of loser-like elements. With its subtle and at times uncannily funny dialogue, "Greenberg" is a breath of fresh air in the genre of character study and is sure to pave the way for similar stories in the future.

Nick Cotello can be reached at ncotello@student.umass.edu.

Mount Holyoke College's
THE NETWORK brings you...
MICKEY AVALON
AND BLACKLIGHT AFTER-PARTY
SPUN BY DJ FLO & JONESY
SATURDAY
04.24.10
9:00PM–2:00AM
CHAPIN AUDITORIUM
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE
PRE–SALE
TICKETS AVAILABLE NOW
@ UMass (Tix Unlimited)
$15 General Admission Pre-sale
$20 General Admission @ door
NetworkMHC@gmail.com

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Lyons looks to score in a game against Yale earlier this season at McGuirk. The Minutewomen will use home-field advantage this weekend against SJU and the Explorers.

Defense and home–field advantage to benefit UM

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

With the regular season coming to a close, and the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team at the head of the Atlantic 10 conference, the Minutewomen should have a good chance at making the A-10 tournament.

"We worked hard at the beginning of the A-10 to put us in a situation where we could control our own destiny," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We talked about how if we win Friday, we're in definitely. We don't have to worry about other teams, and in the past we didn't have that, we had to wait for a couple of teams."

But before it can even start thinking about the tournament, UMass (7-7, 4-1 A-10) has a pair of games this weekend against Saint Joseph's and La Salle. In order to win these two contests, the Minutewomen will be relying on their defense, home-field advantage, and overall team morale.

Defensive Triumphs

Over the entirety of the season, UMass has relied on its heavy defensive side in order to win. This will be no different against the Hawks (2-12, 0-5 A-10) and the Explorers (7-6, 3-2 A-10).

For the game against St. Joseph's, the Minutewomen might have an easier time defending the back of the net, as the Hawks rank eighth in the conference in goals per game.

"Their attack is more emotion based," Venechanos said. "So if it's not one person in the spot, it's somebody else. We've been working with getting comfortable with that, not being surprised when they do things, and hopefully reacting before they will."

Coupled with that is SJU's also last-place standing in draw controls, which UMass has always stressed as a key component to its offense.

While defending the Hawks' offense may seem like a simple task for the defending A-10 champions, the Explorers are a different story, as they rank above the Minutewomen in goals and groundballs in the conference.

Physical play was evident in UMass' 11-6 victory over St. Bonaventure last Saturday, as the Minutewomen committed 16 infractions and earned three yellow cards. UMass will meet its match in the game against La Salle, as the Explorers rank second in the conference in fouls per game.

The Minutewomen will also have to be careful of La Salle's scoring ability, as it ranks two spots above the Maroon and White in the A-10 in total goals.

"We need individual stops, but as a whole, we're going to need our defense on the same page," Venechanos said.

Home-Field Advantage

After a four-game home stint followed by a six game road affair, UMass returned home with a victory this past Saturday as part of its concluding three-game series in Amherst.

"Coming off the road, I'm happy with 3-1," Venechanos said. "Starting the season, you don't know how it's going to be."

The Minutewomen are 4-4 at home this season, with one win coming in conference. Last season, UMass went 5-2 while playing at McGuirk Stadium, which included a victory over then ranked No. 13 Dartmouth.

Venechanos is excited to be finishing out the season in Amherst.

"We're happy to be home," Venechanos said. "We're going to have to do everything we can. We know St. Joseph's is going to be coming after us with everything they have."

Team Morale

With the Minutewomen at the head of the A-10 conference, a sure target has formed on the back of each player that wears a UMass uniform. But these targets don't seem to be bothering the team, according to Venechanos.

"Some of the girls are realizing [the season's ending], some of the other girls are playing with a bit more urgency," Venechanos said. "I think we're getting a lot more excited towards the end of the season."

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

SJU, Explorers come to Amherst

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Heading into the postseason, ideally teams want to be peaking and playing their best.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will get an opportunity to do just that, when they closes out their regular season this weekend with two games at McGuirk Stadium against Saint Joseph's and La Salle.

After losing their first Atlantic 10 matchup of the spring to Duquesne last Friday, the Minutewomen rebounded (7-7, 4-1 A-10) with a victory over Saint Bonaventure at home on Sunday.

Danielle Pelletier scored four goals, while Jackie Lyons led all players with seven points on three goals and four assists. Goalkeeper Katie Florence made seven saves in the cage to help UMass claim the 11-6 win.

"We're coming into a situation where we're happy to be home and happy the way we bounced back from the loss to Duquesne, so we're hoping to use that momentum," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

First on the schedule are the Hawks, who enter Friday's matchup with the Minutewomen having struggled all season.

After winning two of its first three games this spring, SJU has dropped 11 consecutive games, including five losses in A-10 play. The Hawk's currently sit in dead last in the conference in both their overall win total and A-10 record.

During its losing streak, Saint Joseph's reached double digits in goals scored only twice. In the A-10, the Hawks rank last in several offensive categories, including goals per game (7.57), points per game (10.64), draw controls per game (9.00), shot percentage (.362) and shots on goal per game (15.43).

On the defensive side, Saint Joseph's hasn't fared any better, ranking last in caused turnovers per game (5.57), saves per game (6.50) and save percentage (.376).

"We played Saint Joseph's twice last year, so we're familiar with what they're going to be doing," Venechanos said. "They play a zone defense, which we worked on in practice this week, and half the teams in our conference do that and half don't. Their attack runs a motion that we've been preparing for."

The last meeting between UMass and the Hawks was in the A-10 championship game last year. In a thriller, the Minutewomen prevailed 15-14 in overtime to earn a berth in the NCAA Tournament.

Lyons scored the overtime game-winner for UMass and was named the A-10 Tournament Most Valuable Player after she recorded five goals and three assists for eight points.

La Salle, meanwhile, is tied for third in the conference standings with Temple, despite dropping its last two A-10 contests.

The Explorers (7-6, 3-2 A-10) began their conference schedule with three impressive wins against the Bonnies, Dukes and Hawks. After losing to Richmond and George Washington in its last two outings, La Salle plays Temple before wrapping up its regular season against the Minutewomen.

In the game against the Colonials, the Explorers celebrated Senior Day (4-10, 2-3 A-10) in a nail biter which lasted into the fourth overtime.

La Salle scored three goals in the final 17 minutes of regulation to tie the game and send it into an extra period. It would be GW that scored the game-winning goal in sudden death, however, to defeat the Explorers 7-6.

"La Salle is a much improved team from past years, and they have a lot of athletic players on their attack and defense and a goalie that's playing great right now," Venechanos said.

Though UMass is close to securing a high berth in the upcoming A-10 tournament, the Minutewomen aren't worrying about possible scenarios.

"We're not even talking about the tournament," Venechanos said. "We're worried about winning on Friday. We know if we win on Friday, we're in a pretty good situation, and depending on what happens Friday, it will determine what we're going to do on Sunday."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Hayley Smith and the rest of the Minutewomen hope to secure a bid to the A–10 tournament this weekend with a pair of wins at McGuirk Stadium.

National championship in sight for Minutemen

By Scott Cournoyer
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's rugby team looks to capture a national championship this weekend when they face the best 16 teams in the country.

Coach Al Baker is anxious to see how his team's style of play will translate this weekend, as they play Saturday against the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater.

"We like to stick with basic fundamentals," Baker said. "Once in awhile, we'll put a couple new plays in, but mostly we stick with what works for us."

The team uses a style of offense that is similar to what is a "run and gun" offense in basketball, moving quickly and trying to push the ball up the field while using a lot of support behind it. If they want to be successful this weekend, according to Baker, the Minutemen must believe in each other and continue to play their style of game.

"We rely on close support, and good offloading of the ball…our forwards need to be in support at every point of contact. Scrum-half needs to control the pace of the game."

Winning the New England Division II Championship in the fall, UMass showcased their talent at the Cherry Blossom Tournament in Washington, D.C. last weekend. The Minutemen not only faced the best collegiate team in the nation in Georgetown, they were able to bring home the trophy in a 23-20 win.

The game went back and forth for all 40 minutes of play, as both teams traded two penalty kicks each in the first half. A penalty kick early in the second half eventually was the difference in the game, as UMass and the Hoyas went point for point from then on for the rest of the game.

"The Georgetown game really helped us ease our intensity," Baker said. "It's the kind of game you look forward to, and they certainly gave it to us."

Like the game against the Hoyas, UMass will look to continue using their style of grinding the ball up the middle of the field. The choice has proven to be a successful one, as the Minutemen combined to outscore their opponents 77-34 over four games in the tournament.

Captains Dan Doherty and Eduan Pickholz will help to carry the team deep into the national tournament.

"Now that we've been playing in knockout competition since early spring, not only do we have to be in top shape, but we needed to also seek out those leaders that will help reproduce that feeling of success," said Baker.

The Warhawks won the Midwest Region Championship in the fall, and is a team who knows how to close out its opponents, winning four out of five playoffs game in the fall by four points or less, including a 13-12 championship win.

This weekend is a great chance for the program to take even another step forward, further getting their program out to the rest of the rugby community.

"[The national championship] gets people outside of our bubble to realize that we are a serious program," said Baker.

UMass will face the best of the best in Division II over the weekend, competing against top teams such as Vermont and Middlebury College, who come from the northeast region along with the Minutemen.

Baker says that this opportunity, along with advancing back to Division I play this fall has been a tremendous achievement.

"When I first got here, [the alumni] had a big problem with us not being in Division I," Baker said. "They never demanded for us to win a national title, or a New England championship. All they wanted was for us to get back to Division I, the best of the best, and now we're back."

Scott Cournoyer can be reached at scournoy@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY WWW.UMASSRUGBY.COM

The UMass rugby team will compete this weekend in the national tournament against northeast foes such as UVM and Middlebury College.

Minutewomen to defend A–10 title

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts woman's crew team is looking to defend their Atlantic 10 championship title in the 15th annual A-10 Conference Championship this weekend in Camden, N.J.

In the nine team regatta, the Minutewomen will be going against the likes of Dayton, Duquesne, Fordham, George Washington, La Salle, Rhode Island, Saint Joseph's and Temple. Of the nine crews rowing the Camden River, UMass, URI, and the Hawks are the three favorites heading into the weekend.

On the weekend, the three races that will be counted for points towards the championship total are the Varsity Eight, Second Varsity Eight and Varsity Four events. As a result, Coach Jim Dietz is putting all available focus on these three events.

"We are going to have a lot of hard racing ahead of us," Dietz said. "We have made some big lineup changes to try to get the most speed out of our boats as possible. Some freshmen rowers have been moved to the first and second boats based on their great progress."

The team is going for its 14th conference title in 15 years. Along with history being on their side, Dietz also feels that the skill level coming out of the previous regattas in the season, especially in the previous Knecht Cup, will be huge factors in the team's overall performance.

"They train extremely hard all season for this kind of moment," Dietz said. "Though it's too early to tell whether or not another title is on the way, we are all very excited about the upcoming events, [and] we feel very confident in our abilities and in our speed."

One of the biggest challenges of the season so far for the Minutewomen is their lack of time on the water in comparison to previous years. With the bad weather early on and the sporadic flooding throughout the first part of the season, the crews were unable to get as much field training in as were other schools. Though their practicing and training show great strides and results, nothing can be measured for sure unless it is on the water.

Another factor that will come into play this weekend for UMass is the competition. Because there has been so little time early on to really get to see the opposition in action, the overall ability and endurance of the other crews will be tough to gauge.

A huge incentive in this weekend's events is that, for the first time, the winner of the A-10 Championships will be allowed to go directly to the NCAA Championship in New Jersey this year. This development, though not entirely popular by many colleges in more athletically prestigious divisions, is more fuel to the fire for UMass to compete at the top of their game, as Dietz is very confident in what his crew can do.

"Our biggest strength for this weekend, by far, is the comradery of the team," Dietz said. This group is so excited to work together and take home the crown, and that is essential in making a good crew great."

David Martin can be reached at dmmartin@

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.75 • STUDENT $7.50 (WITH ID)
CITY CLASSICS FILM SERIES
EVERY FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
TICKETS ONLY $5 EACH!
APRIL 16th and17th
The Big Lebowski
HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 145 415 645 915
◆ DEATH AT A FUNERAL [R] CC
110 450 735 955
◆ KICK-ASS [R] CC
130 255 420 545 710 835 1005 1125
◆ DATE NIGHT [PG13]
135 340 445 555 705 815 925 1035
ALICE IN WONDERLAND - 2D [PG]
210 455 740 1020
CLASH OF THE TITANS 2D [PG13]
100 335 610 725 845 1000
DIARY OF A WIMPY KID [PG]120PM
HOT TUB TIME MACHINE [R] CC
150 440 745 1030
HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - 2D [PG]1255 325
THE BOUNTY HUNTER [PG13]730 1025
THE LAST SONG [PG]105 425 725 1015
CinéArts
THE GHOST WRITER [PG13]125 415
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Sortino and Co. take on Huskies

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

An 11-game winning streak while having one of the top pitchers in the country is never a good enough reason for the Massachusetts softball team to take an opponent lightly.

Despite the Minutewomen (26-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) traveling to Connecticut to face a Huskies (18-19, 4-5 Big East) team that is under .500, UMass coach Elaine Sortino won't let her team look past their opponent on Friday.

Since the beginning of the season, Sortino has noted how her team has a target on its back. From playing its conference opponents (who are trying to knock down the five-time defending A-10 champions) to out of conference foes (who see UMass and its No. 21 ranking in the USA Today/NFCA Division I NFCA Top 25 Poll), many of the Minutewomen's games are like championship games for their opponents.

Most teams seem to play their best against UMass for this reason, and it will likely be the same when the Minutewomen square off with the Huskies in the first of two matchups this season between the two schools.

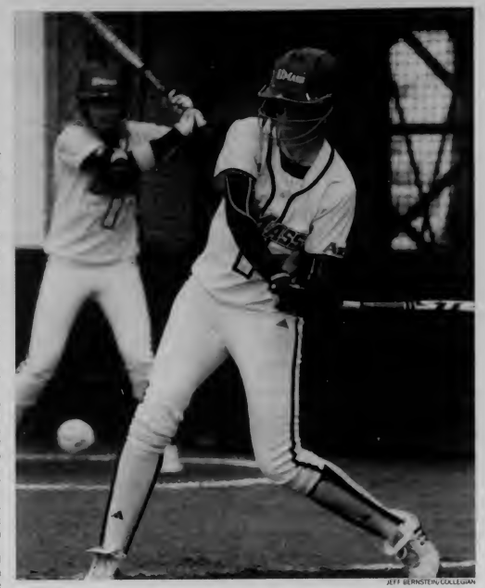
To top it off, UMass and UConn have a long-standing rivalry, and always play hard against one another. Last season, the Minutewomen took both games the teams played, winning 6-4 in Storrs, Conn. on a Carly Normandin seventh inning grand slam with two outs before shutting out the Huskies 9-0 in Amherst a week later.

UMass will deal with a balanced UConn team that boasts a solid offense as well as pitching staff.

Led by Kiki Saveriano (10-8 record, 2.28 earned run average), the Huskies pitching staff has held batters to a .257 average, while posting a combined 2.84 ERA. Saveriano has proven she can strikeout batters – she strikes out nearly a quarter of the batters she faces – but also has been prone to giving up home runs (eight).

On offense, UConn will depend on Julianne Towers (team leading .357 batting average, nine home runs and 25 RBIs) and Amy Deluca (.355 average and 19 RBIs).

The Huskies will likely face off against UMass' ace Sara Plourde, who gave up five earned runs to Boston University on Tuesday. The offense, led by Sarah Reeves two home runs, helped Plourde out however, as UMass won 7-5.



The five runs given up by Plourde were the same amount the sophomore had given up in her previous 11 appearances.

While Plourde's performance was not up to par with what UMass has come to expect from her, the victory saw more offense from the Minutewomen than they've showed over the past couple of weeks. Beyond Reeves' two home runs, Meghan Carta and Michelle Libby also went deep to provide some offense for UMass.

UMass will return to its A-10 schedule following its tilt with UConn on Friday when it travels to St. Bonaventure for two games on Sunday.

The Huskies will return to Amherst on April 29, for the second matchup of the season between the two schools in the middle of UMass' 10-game home stand to end the regular season.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

Behind timely hitting, the No. 21 Minutewomen roll into Storrs to take on a UConn team that is below .500, while UMass is coming off a 7-5 victory over BU.

Balanced offense, pitching keys to success for UMass

Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

Pitcher Sarah Plourde will likely get the start at UConn on Friday.

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Coming into Friday's game, the Massachusetts' softball team's balanced offense will face off against two of the University of Connecticut's strongest hitters.

Since returning from the San Diego Classic II at the end of March, the Minutewomen (26-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) have batted in an average of 7.5 runs per game. The Maroon and White also boasts four batters batting over .300, along with six players having a slugging percentage of .500 or more.

In UMass' most recent game against Boston University, six out of seven runs scored came from home runs. First baseman Sarah Reeves had two solo home runs on the day to help out her team. Michelle Libby's home run brought in three runs for the Minutewomen, along with a Meghan Carta solo home run.

Carta, Reeves and Libby also lead the Minutewomen in home runs, with six a piece. Despite hitting one home run for the season, Carly Normandin leads UMass with a .400 batting average, and her grand slam against La Salle increased her slugging percentage to .507.

Kyllie Magill and Katie Bettencourt are also not far behind with five home runs for the season. The two sophomores come into the UConn game with a .524 and .602 slugging percentage. Bettencourt is second to Normandin with a batting average of .366, but leads the Minutewomen in slugging percentage.

As UMass faces the Huskies (18-19, 4-5 Big East) for the first time this season, it will compete against a team similar to itself in terms of hitting and numerous offensive threats, mainly in the form of Julianne Towers and Amy DeLuca.

The junior and sophomore have led UConn all year offensively and remain close in numbers. Towers is currently leading her team with a .357 batting average and .683 slugging percentage, helped out by nine home runs for the season. DeLuca is not far behind, with a .355 batting average and .495 slugging percentage. She also comes into the game with three home runs. Marissa Guches has also helped out with home runs for the Huskies with four on the season.

Home runs are not the only category the pair lead in. They have 45 of UConn's 121 runs batted in on the season, along with a combined 49 runs scored. Towers also leads in the RBI category with 25 for the season compared to DeLuca's 19.

Brittany Duclos will face the Minutewomen after registering five RBIs and three runs scored in her most recent game against Dartmouth. The freshman has proved herself so far this season with a .275 batting average and .383 slugging percentage. She has hit three home runs along with 14 RBIs for the season.

Rounding out the strong batters that UMass pitcher Sara Plourde will meet is Justyne Roy. The senior comes in batting .293 and has a slugging percentage of .374, along with 16 RBIs.

Towers went 4-for-5 against Dartmouth with two singles, a triple and a home run, while DeLuca scored a run and drove in a run by a fielder's choice in that same game.

Plourde faced a power hitter similar to Towers in her most recent game against BU in the form of April Setterlund. After going 1-for-3 in their first meeting, Setterlund came through for the Terrier's in Game 2 with a grand slam.

Plourde gave up an uncharacteristic eight hits and five runs scored against the strong-hitting BU. Despite struggling at some points in the game, UMass coach Elaine Sortino felt as though going up against strong batters only helps Plourde's alternate pitches, something she will look to use against UConn.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombardi@student.umass.edu

Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

The Great Danes fell to UMass back on March 9, 11-6, defeated UVM 9-4 on Sunday to stay undefeated in America East.

Great Danes get by Catamounts

Albany Student Press
via College News Network

The University at Albany men's lacrosse team scored six unanswered goals in the second half to beat Vermont, 9-4, at John Fallon Field on Sunday. With the win, the Great Danes improved to 2-0 in America East play after completing their non-conference schedule with a dismal 1-8 mark.

But the Great Danes lost another offensive starter to injury after junior attackman Brian Caufield was knocked out of the game with a probable concussion and a laceration to his chin after he was hit with a body check in front of the Vermont net that broke his stick early in the second quarter. Sophomore attack Joe Resetarits broke his foot earlier this year and is out for the season.

UAlbany junior attack Matt Johnson came off of the bench to score two goals after Caufield's departure, with one coming during the Danes' six-goal streak that put the game out of reach for the Catamounts (2-9, AE 1-1).

"Matt's a hustler," UAlbany coach Scott Marr said. "When you have kids like that on your team, you know you're going to be okay when you have guys coming off the bench like that."

Sophomore midfielder Jack Reynolds tallied two goals and an assist for the Danes, all in the second half.

After a scoreless first quarter marked by a number of tough saves by both UAlbany's John Carroll and Vermont's David Barton, Vermont opened the scoring with a goal just over one minute into the second quarter. Vermont junior attackman Liam Thomas took a pass from freshman Garrett Virtue and beat Carroll low with a point-blank blast from 10 yards out.

The Danes answered six minutes later, when junior Johnson scored from in close on the left side of the crease to even the score at one, just seconds after replacing Caufield.

After the teams traded a pair of goals to close out the half, Reynolds started the Danes' second-half run just 3:49 into the third quarter when he drove past a defender at the top of the box before beating Barton with a shot from 15 yards out.

"I think my teammates got everybody fired up," Reynolds said. "I was just playing hard and everything worked out."

Johnson struck again four minutes later, this time taking the ball from the left side of the net, driving in front and beating Barton to the top right corner of the net to give the Danes their first two-goal lead of the game.

The Danes' barrage continued at the end of the third quarter, with senior attack Dave Brock and Reynolds scoring to give the Danes a 7-3 lead at the end of the third. Brock and sophomore midfielder Luke Cometti scored to close out the scoring for UAlbany in the fourth quarter.

The win came after a 19-7 loss at the hands of No. 17 Johns Hopkins in Baltimore on Saturday. It was the first time UAlbany has played on back-to-back days since 2000.

"We got home last night at about midnight from Baltimore," Marr said. "We had a tough game in Baltimore. We played hard, so our legs weren't really under us (in the first half against Vermont)."

Carroll finished with 11 saves for the Danes, including four in the first quarter.

The Danes head back to Baltimore for a Saturday night tilt with UMBC (3-8, AE 1-1), the two-time defending America East champions. Marr said his team is starting to put the ball in the net and that his team has what it takes to make a run at the conference title.

"We're starting to get some other guys scoring, and that's what we needed," Marr said. "We've been struggling putting the ball in the goal, and it's nice to get some other guys on the board. If we continue to do that, we'll be okay."

Caufield's status for the game against UMBC on Saturday was unknown following the game. The attackman was taken off the sidelines in a golf cart holding a cloth against the cut on his chin, which would require stitches, UAlbany spokesman Brian DePasquale said.

"It looked like he got kneed in the head on the way down," Marr said. "Hopefully Brian will be okay by next weekend."

The Danes will also be without junior attack and midfielder Joe Pompo and sophomore goalkeeper Drew DiCioccio. Marr said Pompo will be held out of the lineup for the rest of the season because of a coach's decision, while DePasquale said DiCioccio left the program to focus on his academics.

Valencia throws perfect game, Huskies still No. 1

By Daniel Giardina
Collegian Correspondent

Michigan right hand pitcher and junior Jordan Valencia claimed her first perfect game on Saturday against Minnesota. The No. 2 Wolverines beat the Gophers by scoring 10 runs in five innings, which is the mercy rule in Divison I softball.

Valencia had struck out 10 out of 15 batters in just five innings, and has improved her overall record to 16-2. Valencia received the Big Ten Pitcher of the Week Award for the fourth time this season.

Contributing to the win was senior left handed pitcher Nikki Nemitz, who sealed the win with her 10th consecutive win, improving her record to 13-3.

First baseman Dorian Shaw drove in three runs for the Wolverines and lengthened her hitting streak to nine games. Furthermore, senior catcher Roya St. Clair drove in the game-winning run to seal the deal against the Gophers. The Wolverines have won five in a row and are undefeated in conference play, while the Gophers are 15-25 and have a five-game losing streak.

Georgia Tech rebounds

After coming off a loss against No. 11 Georgia, the No.7 Yellow Jackets rebounded against Virginia by completing a 3-0 sweep against the Cavaliers. On Sunday, the Yellow Jackets won 8-0 in just five innings.

Sophomore Pitcher Jessica Coan had six strikeouts that held off the UVA batters. Sophomore outfielder Kate Kuzma was 2-for-3 in the game, with one home run and four runs batter in.

Junior catcher Kristine Priebe, had a two run home run in the game that capped off the win for the Yellow Jackets, who outhit the Cavilers 8-2. Freshman pitcher, Melanie Mitchell for Virginia allowed six runs on four hits. Sophomore pitcher Stephen Coates took over for Mitchell, but also gave up two runs and four hits. UVA moves to 27-13 on the year and sits third in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

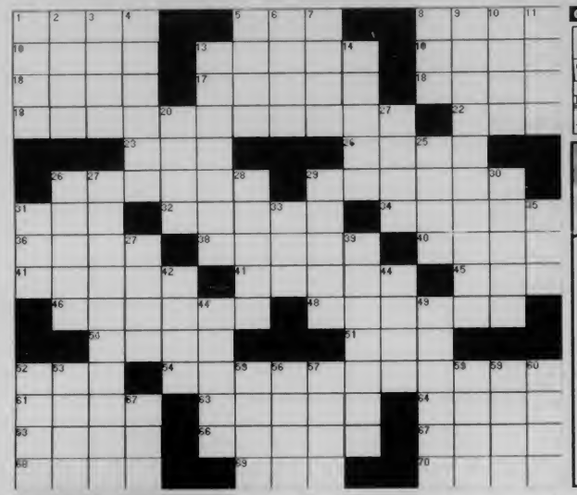
The Yellow Jackets sit at No.7 in the rankings, and first in the ACC.

No.1 Huskies led by Lawrie

Washington senior pitcher Danielle Lawrie threw 39 strikeouts and has an earned run average of 1.33 in just 21 innings in the three games she has started. Over the past weekend, Arizona threatened to take the No.1 spot from UW, but the Huskies beat them in a three-game series. Lawrie, was named Pacific 10 Pitcher of the Week for the second time in two weeks, and earned USA Softball National Player of the Week honors.

Freshman catcher Shawna Wright hit a two run home in the second, and then a RBI single, while senior outfielder Bailey Stetson brought home two more runs to give the Huskies 4-0 lead in just two innings. The Wildcat offense, which is the top offense in the country, was stopped by Lawrie, who gave up two runs in a 7-0 victory. Washington improved its record to 33-3, and sits No.1 in the country and in the Pac-10. The Wildcats record dropped to 32-7, and is No.3 in the rankings but fifth in the Pac-10.

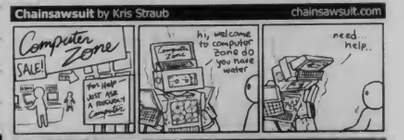
Daniel Giardina can be reached at giardina@student.umass.edu.



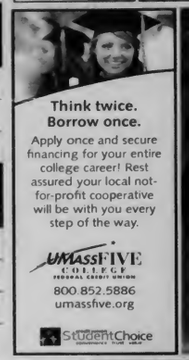
Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

Great Danes goalkeeper John Carroll makes a stop against the Minutemen this season. Carroll made 11 saves in a 9-4 win over the Cattamounts Sunday.

comics



CROSSWORD



ACROSS
1. Bucket
5. Chop down
8. Urban haze
12. Ancient Peruvian
13. Prohibit
15. Stiff hair
16. A natural satellite
17. Wear away
18. Modify written material
19. Bedlam
22. Frozen water
23. Female sheep
24. Sodium chloride
26. Contemporary
29. Antenna
31. Back talk
32. Violent disturbances
34. Egyptian water lily
36. Cobras
38. Engagement
40. A city in France
41. Special Forces cap
43. Flannel
45. By way of
46. Really enjoy
48. Elevated
50. Killed
51. Representative (abbrev.)
52. Not bro
54. Unfortunate
61. Chief Norse god
63. An electrode
64. Crucifix
65. Passion
66. Black bird
67. Found on most beaches
68. Margarine
69. Half a score
70. Therefore

DOWN
1. Panderer
2. Dwarf buffalo
3. Computer symbol
4. Arrived
5. Protagonist
6. Black, in poetry
7. Dry riverbed
8. 180° from NNW
9. Pensive
10. Auditory
11. Box office take
13. Mark for misconduct
14. Utilize again
20. Pitcher
21. An earthy deposit rich in lime
25. King of the jungle
26. Hoarder
27. Tyrannical
28. Direction of the Pole Star
29. Flower with a showy head
30. Having a clear mind
31. A scientific workplace
33. Haul
35. Ocean
37. Peddle
39. Give encouragement to
42. Level
44. Meal plan for weight loss
47. Affirm
49. Scant
52. Alone
53. Graven image
55. Small annoying insect
56. Wander
57. Biblical garden
58. Wild hog
59. Not short
60. Cocoyam
62. Prefix meaning "New"

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Think twice. Borrow once.

Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION
800.852.5886
umassfive.org
StudentChoice

UMass ~~Amherst~~ Quincy?

Take UMass Amherst home with you this Summer

Three Summer Sessions

200+ ONLINE classes

REGISTER NOW!

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

The Daily Collegian is now accepting applications for COMICS EDITOR.

Contact the Crossword Kidnapper
comics at dailycollegian.com

HARK! a Vagrant by K. Beaton — harkavagrant.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner — smbc-comics.com

Itchy Wenus

8			1
		1				9	2	5
			6	2		7
						2	5
		3		4
	4		5	1				6
		5		9			3	8
1				7	4
9	3

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY,
OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 -
How many times in life are you going to be able to stick a Twizzler down there?

pisces FEB. 19 -
Under no circumstances should you sacrifice your underwear during a bank heist.

aries MAR. 21 -
There are many things that can cure a broken heart. Chatroulette is not one of them.

taurus APR. 20 -
One can always enjoy the shape of an apple but tattooing it on your eye sockets is just crazy.

gemini MAY. 21 -
Your time should be better spent pondering tragic uses for Jergen's handcream.

cancer JUN. 22
You can look but you should not touch Hulk Hogan while he is sleeping.

leo JUL. 23 -
Things will always be good when you aren't living at Sylvan.

virgo AUG. 23 -
Still looking for something to do on the weekends? Have you tried LARPing as an underpant gnome?

libra SEPT. 23 -
You will ponder the life span of the common Burger King hamburger as you walk through the dark valley of Hadley.

scorpio OCT. 23 -
Lazy, drunk and stupid is no way to live your life. Only Rush Limbaugh can do that.

sagittarius NOV. 22 -
It is 10 a.m. do you know where your pocket book and shoes are from last night?

capricorn DEC. 22
People are going to start asking about why you are wearing man-panties over your trousers. Actually, I take that back.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors, study in basement. Cable & Phone in all bedrooms & study. NOW SHOWING for June & September. NO FEES www. amherstlincolnrealty.com 413-253-7879

www.amherstsales.com
www.AmherstMARentals.com
413.549.1398 Student Rentals

SERVICES

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst-4 Bedroom/2 Bath, 2 car garage. June Occupancy, $2000+. Near bus stop. Skibiski, Realtor. 586-1827

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

Team effort needed for victory at UConn

SOFTBALL

Riding an 11-game winning streak, the Minutewomen go for number 12 this Friday in the first of two games against the Huskies in Storrs.

SEE PAGE 12

WOMEN'S LAX

UMass looks to earn a spot in the A-10 tournament this weekend, when it closes out it's conference schedule against the Explorers and Hawks at McGuirk Stadium.

SEE PAGE 13

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

Not Published

Holiday

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SUNNY HIGH: 70 LOW: 36 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 2010

Lecturer discusses ethics of sexual consent

By Ashley Berger
Collegian Staff

Dr. Harry Brod, a philosophy professor at the University of Northern Iowa delivered his presentation yesterday entitled "The Ethics and Erotics of Sexual Consent: Beyond 'But We Were Both Drinking'" at the University of Massachusetts.

The purpose of the lecture was to deliver an anti-sexual assault message without preaching an anti-sex message; a message that in our society often misunderstood according to Brod.

His claim was that consent is needed and that even though consent can sometimes come as an awkward or clumsy gesture, it opens the doors for relationships and sexual activity to be more erotic and fulfilling for all parties involved.

Brod opened his lecture in the Mahar auditorium with a series of questions posed to the audience. He opened the lecture with the statement "No means 'no' and yes means 'yes'."

This provoked the question initially posed by Brod of when does yes mean yes and when does no mean no in regards to consent in a sexual encounter.

The audience responded to both these questions before Brod continued his lecture by asking the question "What if there is no "no" and no "yes"? How do we then determine consent?"

One audience member answered that body language was a determinant of consent in a situation where there is a lack of direct consent.

However, as a result of his studies, Brod argued that "The only thing that means yes is a 'yes'. Just because there is not a 'no' does not mean that there is a 'yes'."

Brod further went on to explain the affirmative consent standard, meaning that consent must be given in a specific, explicit manner, basically that sexual activity requires a blatant verbal statement of consent.

Brod explained that relying on body language is too ambiguous in a situation where consent is required.

These reasons may be such as emotions, or a situation that is "hot and heavy."

While Brod acknowledged sometimes body language can be interpreted, he argued that unless an action was crystal clear, body language is too vague to assume that a partner is consenting to any further sexual activity.

According to Brod, "Consent is not something you have. It is something the other person gives you, regardless of what you think the rules and regulations are."

Brod added, "Body language must be so assertive that it will give consent… and cause us to question the other person's consent."

As a philosopher, Dr. Brod discusses the importance of epistemology, an age-old question of how we know what we know, both collectively and individually.

He claims that every initiator must have epistemological responsibility, or the responsibility to have the knowledge of the other person's consent.

In most situations, Brod argued we are held accountable for having a basic knowledge of the situation around us.

Brod provided the example of driving a car and knowing the speed limit.

Some in attendance blatantly voiced their opinions throughout the lecture, as well as in the discussion following the lecture.

There was much debate over vocabulary used within the lecture as well as definitions that Brod provided to clarify the vocabulary of his choice. Some audience

See CONSENT on page 2

MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN

Last week, on April 15, students protested against sexual assault and domestic violence with the annual "Take Back the Night" walk from the Student Union to the lawn by the Van Meter dormitory.

PD: Armed man tried to run over another

COURTESY AMHERST POLICE DEPARTMENT

Chea, who is facing four charges, plead not guilty last Friday.

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

An Amherst man pleaded not guilty to multiple charges stemming from an incident Thursday in which police said he intentionally drove a car into another man before pulling out a gun and chasing the man into the woods where he punched and kicked him in a dispute over a young woman.

Driving in a gray Honda Civic on Thursday afternoon, police said Jyming Chea, 27, of 266 East Hadley Road #97C in Amherst, arrived at 120 Belchertown Rd. (Route 9) in Amherst across from the Alpine Commons apartment complex and recognized an unnamed 23-year-old Springfield man standing outside the home. The two men "had become embroiled in a dispute over a young woman," according to a press release from Amherst police.

Chea then drove the vehicle into the other man, knocking him to the ground, before Chea got out of the car, pulled out a 9MM handgun and chased the fleeing man into the woods behind the home where Chea punched and kicked the other man while he was on the ground, officials said.

The Springfield man was treated and released from Baystate Medical Center in Springfield.

State and town police responded around 4:45 p.m., later found the gun and arrested Chea on four charges: two counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (a car and a shod foot) and single counts of assault and battery and assault with a dangerous weapon (handgun), according to Assistant District Attorney Michael A. Cahillane.

He pleaded not guilty to the charges at an arraignment Friday in Eastern Hampshire District Court. He was ordered held on $2,000 cash bail with electronic and GPS monitoring and ordered to have no contact with the alleged victims, Cahillane said.

The Commonwealth requested Chea be held without the right to bail based on dangerousness, which the judge denied along with prosecutors' request that he be held on $25,000 bail.

Officials were not immediately available to comment further on whether or not Chea fired the gun, as multiple area residents said they had heard.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Student injured in hit-and-run

While riding a bicycle downtown, a University of Massachusetts senior was struck by a car and injured in an alleged hit-and-run accident Saturday night.

The cyclist, Matthew Oliverio, a 22-year-old biology major originally from Braintree, Mass. and now living in Amherst, was seriously injured and transported to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield after the incident, according to police.

Hospital officials have since upgraded his condition to fair, according to MassLive.com.

Police responded to a report of a bicyclist being struck by a car on Main Street near the roadway's intersection with Gray Street at 10:22 p.m., said Amherst Detective Gregory Wise in a press release Sunday.

Witnesses told police the car involved – which is described as a dark-colored sedan – drove away from the scene.

Information relating to the accident may be reported to the town police department's detective bureau at (413) 259-3015.

-Collegian News Staff

UMass powwow celebrates Native American traditions

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

Honoring Native American cultural traditions in dance, music, crafts and food, the University of Massachusetts will host a powwow on Saturday in conjunction with Thursday's scheduled symposium, "Indigenous Peoples, Cultural Survival through Art Education and Health."

The symposium, which is sponsored by the UMass certificate program in Native American Indian studies, the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center, Native American student services and the Native American Student Association, will kick-off April 22 from 9:15 a.m. until 5 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union on campus and continue on Friday place from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. in the Marriott Center on the 11th floor of the Campus Center.

Following the symposium, the powwow will be held Saturday at the Curry Hicks Cage.

According to Joyce W. Vincent, associate director of the UMass Native American student services, the powwow has been a significant cultural event on campus since the 1980s.

"The powwow is a means of sharing part of our diverse cultures with the campus and the Pioneer Valley communities," Vincent said.

"There are dancers and singers coming from a variety of tribal backgrounds."

Vincent added that the ceremonies to be featured during the powwow will include the blessing of the circle, a grand entry by the participants and a veterans' dance and flag song, as well as various exhibitions of specific dance styles of different tribal regions and intertribal dancing.

About 60 dancers are expected to take part in the Saturday's celebrations, according to Vincent, who added that eastern social dances and songs specific to tribes of the Northeast will be featured throughout the day.

Vincent also hinted there may be additional cultural dances performed by UMass students from some of the student cultural organizations on campus.

In addition to the Native American craft and food vendors at the event, those in attendance will also be able to purchase beadwork, baskets and silver jewelry, as well as sample foods such as buffalo, venison, corn soup and vegetarian cuisine.

The powwow will be open to the public from 10:30 a.m. until 6 p.m., with admission being a donation to help with the cost of the event.

The suggested donations are $5 for an individual in attendance and $10 for a family.

For those who cannot afford a donation to the powwow, Vincent suggests supporting the vendors instead.

"No one will be turned away if they cannot donate," she said.

"Everyone is feeling the impact of the recession and the goal of the event is making diversity engagement accessible."

Vincent added that there will also be a bone marrow donation information table and bone marrow drive during the powwow, which is sponsored by the Native American student organizations from throughout the Five College area.

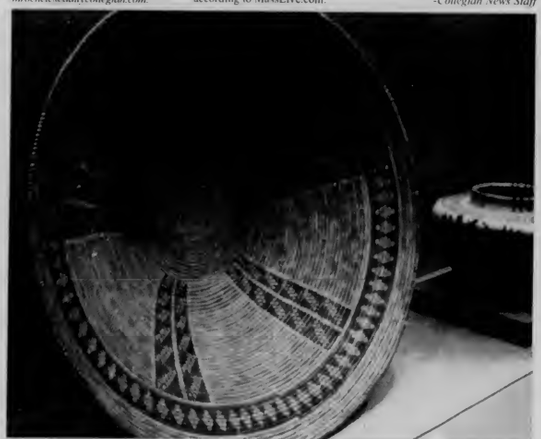
Donation tables to aid the earthquake victims in Haiti and in Chile are also scheduled to be present.

This week's symposium, Vincent said, is expected to attract 15 to 20 undergraduate and graduate scholars from the Five Colleges as well as two indigenous elders.

Paula Dove-Jennings, of the Narragansett tribal nation, will speak on "Interpreting History," on Thursday at 2:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge, and Reuben "Butch" Phillips of the Penobscot tribal nation will discuss "Penobscot River Restoration" on Friday from 5 to 6 p.m. in the Campus Center.

The undergraduate and graduate students will present a discussion from 10 a.m. until noon on both days of the symposium.

The discussion will be focused on a variety of topics ranging from film, art, music, domestic matters, cultural identity and bicultural teaching methodologies.



The presentation sessions of the symposium are free and open to the public.

According to Vincent the event, along with the powwow, is the result of collaborative support from the offices of the deputy provost and the dean of undergraduate advising and academics, the graduate school, the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, the College of Behavioral and Social Sciences and the Commonwealth Honors College.

"This type of collegiate collaboration, coupled with cultural engagement and outreach to the communities of our students, is an example of the best practice for expanding our concepts of diversity, community outreach and service learning as inclusive within academic affairs," Vincent said.

She added, "I am so proud to work with students, academic deans and community leaders in a manner that allows the campus to host such an exciting and innovative means of intergenerational, cross-disciplinary and community service learning."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

(MCT)

During Saturday's powwow, guests will be able to purchase the artwork of various Native American vendors, including beadwork, basketry and silver jewelery.

ARTS & LIVING

Pass the joint...

Pioneer Valley residents participated in the peaceful protest of pot prohibition on Amherst Commons Saturday in the 19th annual Extravaganja festival.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

Men's lacrosse falls short

Despite having a late-game scoring surge, the men's lacrosse team fell short to Delaware 9 to 6 on the road Saturday.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Ben Moriarty discusses the good and the bad of the 4/20 holiday.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, hosted by the Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 55

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Jonson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Watts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Javek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamiho
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elise Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillo
Assistant Editorial Matthew St. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heisbun
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Auser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Starr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Philosopher talks ethics, sexual assault

CONSENT from page 1

members were so frustrated that they left Mahar.

However, Brod thanked the audience for their criticism and also invited anyone to speak with him after the lecture to further discuss their concerns.

Brod explained the situations when sexual assault is gender neutral, stating that the principles are always the same. But he addressed that it is more likely to report a male perpetrator.

One of the major points in the lecture was the dilemma of how alcohol affects the ability to ask for and gain consent. He compared impaired judgment to driving a motor vehicle, in the sense that even if you are driving inebriated but have not killed or hurt anyone yet, you are not smart just simply lucky.

In comparison, he said, if you have not explicitly gained a partner's consent, you have not committed a sexual assault, but are simply lucky that it has not been reported yet.

"If you're too drunk or high to know if you have consent or not and you initiate sexual activity, then you don't know if you have committed a sexual assault. The only honest answer you can give when asked is 'I don't know'," Brod said.

He adamantly explained that the initiator has the responsibility to know.

In order for his viewpoints to be put into action, Brod addressed that their needs to be a change of the way masculinity is viewed, presented and performed in society. According to Brod, men have generally been seen as the more dominant and powerful of the genders because of our historical societal structure.

He added that throughout history, there has been a known power balance between males and females as well as distinct cultural subordination of women.

He said that this is not the only instance of sexual assault, but is known most often in history.

Brod presented his personal opinion, believing that men have more of an obligation to gain a woman's consent. He also offered that for social and legal safety, it should be assumed that everyone wants their consent to be acknowledged.

Brod made a series of philosophical remarks rather than providing statistical information to support his points.

Consent is a very delicate thing according to Brod, but it must be obtained before assuming, starting or continuing sexual activity.

Whether it is clumsy or awkward, he said, "When you ask, you don't know what will happen but you know that there won't be a rape or sexual assault. You know you are much safer."

Ashley Berger can be reached at aberger@student.umass.edu.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road Rt 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Heat, Water, Hot Water & Basic Internet
Electricity in Select Units
On the Bus Route - Just Metro Smithsonian Hospital Area - Cable/Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

One family enters the Pi Kappa Alpha Mom's Day Party, last Saturday, at the FuBar in Champaign, during which guests had the chance to purchase from a variety of margeritas and martinis.

Illinois moms boost bar sales

By The Daily Illini
U-WIRE COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

University moms took over the campus bars this past weekend.

With an increase in business, campus bars catered to the influx of moms by altering drink menus and raising prices.

Josh Flahaven, general manager of The Clybourne, 706 S. Sixth St., and Firehaus, 708 S. Sixth St., said the bars housed many moms throughout the weekend and had a t-shirt giveaway for the event.

"There were plenty of moms dancing and drinking and having a good time," Flahaven said.

The bars kept their specials the same, he said, but added a Bud Light Lime special geared towards mothers' tastes.

Flahaven said he noticed the crowd was very polite and he didn't have any problems with students getting too rowdy.

"I think students were on their best behavior with their moms around," he said.

The cover price for both bars varied between $5 to $10 throughout the night, he said.

He added that the bars were more busy during the day than usual, with students and their moms hanging out and having lunch.

However, the amount of people in the bars at night was typical because they reached capacity, he added.

Neil Vohra, freshman in Business, said his mom accompanied him to Firehaus and The Clybourne.

He said his mom spent over $200 on drinks for him and his friends.

Derek Athy, sophomore in LAS, attended FuBar, 306-1/2 E. Green St., with his mother Gene Athy on Saturday night.

"My favorite part of Moms Weekend is drinking and hanging out with my mom," he said.

Derek said his fraternity rented out the back room of the bar for Moms Weekend.

His mom bought him a Guinness, he said, which he usually doesn't purchase himself because it is more costly.

Gene enjoyed going to the bars as well, she said. "My favorite part is spending time with my son," she said.

Gene said the drink of choice for the duo was beer, and added that the drink prices at the bar were reasonable.

Efren McKissick, FuBar employee, said the bar saw an increase in crowd size and revenue compared to the average weekend.

However, he added crowds were smaller this year.

"I think it's a bit slower this year than last year," McKissick added.

He said the bar had a list of specials in honor of Moms Weekend, including different types of margaritas and martinis.

The bar, which usually has a $5 cover price on weekends, increased the fee to $10 due to the anticipated larger crowds, he said.

UA student journeys in protest of violence

By The Arkansas Traveller
U-WIRE COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

It was during his second tour in Afghanistan that Jacob George began to question his role as a paratrooper in the U.S. Army and his views on war in general.

"I got lucky enough to hurt my back during my third tour and I couldn't jump out of airplanes anymore," George said. "I would have had to work a desk job if I wanted to stay in the military and this drove me to get out."

George will speak tonight at the Union Theater at 7:00 p.m. on the University of Arizona campus. He will be showing the film "Arlington West" in association with the group Veterans for Peace and will also outline his bicycle tour, dubbed "A Ride 'Till the End." The lecture will be from his perspective as a war veteran, but other veterans may also speak at the event.

Leaving the military is something George said he is still trying to articulate and probably will be for the rest of his life. "I rarely do anything for just one reason," he said.

At the beginning of next month, George will embark on a bicycle trip across the United States along with his brother and six other cyclists in an attempt to spread awareness of creative non-violent alternatives to war, and to educate communities which George feels are the most uninformed about the conflicts. He and his brother have vowed not to return until the wars end.

"This ride is something that's built to grow. I planned on doing this by myself, but as I tried to find couches to sleep on, people asked if they could come and what they could do to help," George said.

"These people helped transform this entire thing into more of a movement, with multiple tiers of participation."

George, his brother, and other cyclists will ride from city to city where they will host "peace rides" and lecture using music as a tool for communication. The group will kick off their tour in Fayetteville on May 1. The ride is outlined on their website www.operationawareness.org their stop in Memphis, Tenn. The team is still discussing where next move as different veterans' organizations have asked them to travel both north and south from Memphis.

George wants to travel through the southern states where he believes he'll find his target demographic. "It's very much engrained in the South that war is the solution. I often find that people who support this are the most uninformed," George said, "It hasn't been explained exactly why we're in Afghanistan and what happens over there is largely hidden."

In order to embark on his indefinite journey, George decided to quit his job at the UA and drop out of school, abandoning his social work major. George also said he lacks any support from his family, who refuse to give interviews or be exposed to the media, though no members of his family, excluding his brother, have actually served in the military. Being unaware of the distance and time span of his trip, George says he's prepared to have to beg for change.

"Fill the Hill" returns to UM

UMass students took to the lawn between Orchard Hill and Central over the weekend for the annual "Fill the Hill" concert.

Group creates media for Hispanic district

The Venture's staff of 18 hopes to expand to additional Houston campuses, beginning the process of becoming a national collegiate newspaper, according to El Gato director Ray Ruiz

By The Daily Cougar
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

El Gato, a multidisciplinary student news organization, has been delivering the news for the Hispanic community for more than two years. Recently, El Gato Media Network announced the launch of its first print newspaper, The Venture, for April 26.

The newspaper seeks to provide news, opinion and variety to the growing Latino collegiate community.

El Gato Director Ray Ruiz is part of the original founding team and decided that it was necessary for the University of Houston campus to have its own Latino publication on campus.

"What we are implementing has never been done before on the scale we are doing it," Ruiz said.

"A large collegiate news organization dedicated to Hispanic students that produces quality publications is a risky undertaking, but we press on and hope that our community profits from it."

For Giselle Bueno, editor of El Gato and project manager of The Venture, the main motive to join the network was the opportunity to write in Spanish. Bueno will be in charge of the Spanish section of The Venture.

"The Spanish section will be called El Pulso, and after a year, we want our own Spanish newspaper," Bueno said. "Right now, we are having four stories in Spanish."

Photographer Ivan Castillo joined the organization in fall 2009 and is anxiously awaiting The Venture's debut.

"I have been photographing since I was 12," he said.

"I am getting my camera ready. I want to get out there and take pictures of the people picking up and reading the newspaper."

Castillo also came up with the idea of the masthead and logo.

"With the masthead, I was drawing the logo and then I liked the idea of an enlarged 'v' for The Venture, and I colored it red for University of Houston," Castillo said.

"The arrow on the masthead is taking us somewhere, but we don't know where. It is like an adventure and that is what we are."

The Venture is like a dream come true for its members.

"The definition of 'venture' pretty much sums up what our organization has been about from the beginning," Ruiz said.

"Venture means to take the risk, brave the dangers of, dare to go."

Bueno said she mostly likes the name of the newspaper because of its definition.

"We are a venture because we don't know what is going to happen," she said.

Going into print has been part of a strategic plan from the very beginning for El Gato members.

"We need an avenue for our print journalists to gain necessary experience, and we want to engage our readers on a level that is not possible with the Internet alone," Ruiz said.

"When someone sees a story about themselves or their organization in an actual newspaper, it has more impact then seeing it online.

Plus, print is warm and personal (whereas) Internet is cold and distant."

The newspaper staff includes 18 Hispanic UH students who all have the same goals and objectives.

"We want to expand to other Houston campuses and then start the process to becoming a national collegiate newspaper," Ruiz said.

Bueno said that the main objective is to get the community, students, faculty and different colleges in Houston to become aware of The Venture.

"We want to reach out to the Hispanic community and deliver them the news, so we can let them know who we are," Castillo said.

The Venture will differ from The Daily Cougar, which has been the official student newspaper at UH since 1934.

"The main difference is that we are not going to concentrate on campus stories, more like stories about the Hispanic community," Bueno said.

"We are going to be a multicultural newspaper and cover cultural stories."

Comments and responses are very important according to the members.

THE AMHERST COLLEGE PROGRAM BOARD AND AAS PRESENT:
THE ROOTS
FEATURING jason derülo
SATURDAY, APRIL 24TH
DOORS OPEN AT 7, SHOW STARTS AT 8
LE FRAK GYM, AMHERST COLLEGE
FREE FOR AC STUDENTS: TICKETS GUARANTEED MARCH 29th- APRIL 9TH
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL AUDIENCE TICKETS AVAILABLE APRIL 9TH
FIVE COLLEGE $15
GENERAL ADMISSION $25
NO CAMERAS OR LARGE BAGS
AC TICKETS AVAILABLE IN ROOM 114 KEEFE CAMPUS CENTER
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL ADMISSION AVAILABLE ON
" https://www.amherst.edu/campuslife/keefe/calendar

SHOWCASE DEBATE
Student Perspectives from Across the Political Spectrum
From the Right Mr. Brad DeFlumeri
>Affirmative Action<
>Gay Marriage<
>Abortion<
>Racism<
From the Left Mr. Will Syldor

WE VOTE PRO-LIFE
HOST MODERATORS:
Attorney Corey M. Carvalho, Associate Director, Student Legal Services Office
&
Charlie Felder, President, University Democrats
TOMORROW — Wed., April 21, 2010 @ 5pm — TOMORROW
CAPE COD LOUNGE
UMass Amherst
Apple Cider, Coffee, and Sandwiches will be available at 4:45pm
Co-Sponsored by: The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Student Legal Services Office, The Silent Majority & The Radical Student Union
Question-and-Answer Session to Follow Debate
contact: slittlecrow-russell@stuaf.umass.edu for more information
Student Legal Services Office
Free and Open to the General Public
DailyCollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 2010 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Smoking once a year isn't hip

Ben Moriarty

There are many things that are [illegible] than smoking marijuana. These [illegible] are things such as [illegible] because it [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Extravaganja sparks despite rainy weather

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Amherst Common once again played host to the annual cannabis celebration known as Extravaganja on Saturday. For the 19th consecutive year, the common was flooded with people, unwashed masses milling, moving and dancing under a thick haze of marijuana smoke.

The weather for this year's Extravaganja was less than optimal; dark clouds and light drizzles dominated the skies for most of the day. That did not deter the crowd, however, as marijuana enthusiasts from the Pioneer Valley and beyond were in full force. Sleeper tents of all sizes peppered the common to provide festival-goers with temporary relief, as well as to shelter the hard-core who camped out for the event.

The biggest single attraction at Extravaganja was the main stage, which hosted a wide range of artists throughout the day. From 12 p.m. to 7 p.m., a steady stream of rappers, instrumentalists and experimental musicians performed for the crowd. A disc jockey tent was set up at the opposite end of the common which attracted a small core of enthusiastic dancers.

While some small pockets of moshing could be spotted, the crowd at Extravaganja was largely self-involved. The bulk of the assembled crowd was kept busy with Hacky Sack games, hula hoops and smoking circles. Local band, Primate Fiasco, was slotted for the 4:20 p.m. spot, but missed the opportunity to really rile up attendees by starting their set late. The band put on a good show, but the potential energy of the hour was lost under an uncoordinated deluge of sparking Bic lighters and smoking pipes.

The main purpose of Extravaganja, put on by the University of Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition, is to protest against what they consider the "marijuana prohibition" that exists in this country, as well as to rally around the cause of legalization. The use of marijuana on the commons is permitted during the event by the Amherst Police Department, as per an agreement reached between the police and the CRC. Under the agreement, smoking is viewed as an act of peaceful protest, and no effort is made to penalize those simply using or possessing marijuana within the confines of the event.

Despite the accord, however, eight people were arrested in the area of the commons Saturday. According to a police press release, they were charged not with cannabis possession, but with "various offenses including alcohol violations, motor vehicle offenses and violation of the Amherst open container by-law." In addition, two individuals were issued civil citations for possession under one ounce, but it is unclear if they were in fact within the boundaries of the event.

As per tradition, the entirety of Amherst Common was ringed with carts and tables, with the all-natural and the far-out selling their wares to the public. Blown glass pipes were by far the most popular item, but vendors on site carried a wide variety of goods including clothing, flags, posters, herbs and vegetarian cuisine. Student-run business, The People's Market, also had a stand, selling drinks and snacks to their prime customers.

Unfazed by the questionable weather, this year's Extravaganja went off with hardly a hitch. During the late afternoon the sun even made a brief appearance, warming up the chilly festivities and visibly lifting the mood.

As Abraham Lincoln once said, "Prohibition goes beyond the bounds of reason in that it attempts to control a man's appetite by legislation and makes a crime out of things that are not crimes. A prohibition law strikes a blow at the very principles upon ... which our government was founded."

Through their use of peaceful assembly and not-so-silent protest, the attendees of Extravaganja reminded the town of Amherst that the prohibition against cannabis does not go unopposed, and that the people's appetites will not be controlled.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher1@student.umass.edu.

HANNAH COHEN/COLLEGIAN

Extravaganja participants flooded Amherst commons on Saturday to engage in all things marijuana, including music, food, and the peaceful protest of pot prohibition.

MATTHEW MURPHY/COLLEGIAN

Cast members of Andrew Lloyd Webber's Tony Award winning musical 'Cats' came to perform at the Mullins Center on April 19. The show chronicles the lives of unusual felines, and is one of the first Broadway hits to attract children.

Beloved musical 'Cats' screeches into MC

By Alissa Mesibov
Collegian Staff

The national tour of 'Cats' arrived at the Mullins Center yesterday for one show only.

The 1982 show features music by mega-composer Andrew Lloyd Webber. Webber has been won 11 Tony Awards, including best original score for 'Cats' in 1983. 'Cats' won seven Tony Awards overall, including Best Musical. The lyrics are mainly from poems by T.S. Eliot, with additional lyrics by Richard Stilgoe.

'Cats' tells the story of a group of London felines, known as Jellicle cats. Once a year, they gather to celebrate as their elderly leader, Old Deuteronomy selects one of them to go to the Heaviside Layer, after which they are reborn as a new, young Jellicle. The most deserving is the elderly Grizabella, who was a revered beauty in her youth, but is now rejected by the majority of the Jellicles. Meanwhile, they also face the terror set upon them by the evil Macavity. In between, audience members meet a variety of entertaining Jellicles, such as a kitten with magical powers, a pair of acrobatic thieves, and an Elvis-like rock star of a cat.

The musical features one of the most famous songs in recent theater. 'Memory' has been recorded by over 150 artists, such as Barbara Streisand, Johnny Mathis, Liberace and Barry Manilow, whose rendition of the song made the Top 40 list in the United States, according to the tour's publicity materials. The song has also been featured in television and film alike. The Original Broadway Cast recording has a 4.5/5 star rating on iTunes.

'Cats' transformed musical theater. Though mainstream now, when the show first arrived on the scene in London in 1981, it was considered extremely alternative and risky. It also allowed for a new audience in musical theater: children. Though shows like 'Annie' and 'Oliver' had already been around for some time, they were not as interactive, and told stories that not as easy for young children to follow. Children were much more fascinated by graceful dancers dashing down the aisles of theaters in brightly colored costumes in 'Cats'.

However, the musical is not just intended for children. Gillian Lynne's choreography, which includes jazz, modern, tap, and ballet, is recognized as being among the best in the world of musical theater. The musical style of 'Cats' is diverse enough to please theatergoers of any age, ranging from rock n' roll to opera, and everything in between.

'Cats' has also made history for its previously unheard of level of success. It was the first of the mega-musicals that includes 'Les Miserables', 'Cats' ran for 18 years on Broadway, an incredible feat for the time. It held the title of the longest running show in Broadway history until early 2006, when Andrew Lloyd Webber's own 'The Phantom of the Opera' surpassed 'Cats' record. For over ten years, 'Cats' has remained the longest running, continuously touring show in North America, according to promotional materials. 'Cats' has also been shown in 26 countries on five continents, and translated into 10 languages, according to promotional documents.

The show often uses the publicity campaign slogan, "Now and Forever." With a worldwide audience of over eight and a half million since 1981, this certainly seems to hold true.

Alissa Mesibov can be reached at amesibov@student.umass.edu.

How to name your smoking apparatus

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

So, you bought a tobacco pipe over the weekend at Extravaganja. But like any good bowl or pipe, it will need a name that signifies its importance in your life. So how do you go about figuring out that name?

Naming a pipe is like naming a baby; if the name doesn't fit it just won't feel right. Sometimes a label will come right to you, other times it may take a while to think of one. Either way, take your time to discover and feel comfortable with the meaningful label you are about to bestow upon your new possession. While it might be funny to call your pipe "tits" at first, you will quickly get tired of it. Just because it was the first thing you thought about after buying it doesn't mean that should be its name. The best name may take a while but once it fits, you will know you have found its match.

The first thing you should do is check out the color, as this can be a great indicator of a good name. Is it fire red? Name it Phoenix or Charizard. Like most smoking pipes, its form may consist of a mix of colors, so try and find a theme or pattern. For instance, if the colors seem to remind you of an underwater scene, Spongebob or Calypso would make a good name.

If there is a specific pattern that the paint makes on the pipe, take that into consideration. Does it have black and white spots? Honor it with a name reminiscent of a spotted animal, like a leopard. Or, take that idea and come up with something a little more exotic, such as Sex Panther.

So you have a few names in mind based on the color, but none of them really strike your fancy yet. What about the shape? Each pipe is handcrafted glass so try and figure out what the shape reminds you of. Sherlock Holmes is a great name for a pipe with a long curving stem. Or maybe it's just a big bad smoking machine, and should be given a name like the Terminator or Samuel L. Jackson.

If you're still not sure, give the pipe a test run. Is there anything particular about the way the smoke goes through? Maybe it hits hard and fast, or maybe it's smooth like ice. Maybe you can pull a lot of smoke through at once, and calling it Sinkhole would be appropriate. Think about this when coming up with your name.

But maybe that still is not enough. In that case, get your friends' opinions. Sometimes the best names come after a long discussion over a pipe or two. Maybe if you wander off topic and think of a fun inside joke, it may spark the idea as well. Someone could make a joke about George W. Bush, and you decide to call your bowl Dubya for short.

Perhaps you like a particular movie quote or a certain song strikes your fancy. If you are in the middle of watching The Lion King, the names Rafiki and Mufasa may work for you.

Of course, some names are extremely arbitrary and random. Think of a weird word, such as ectoplasm, and use it. It can make no sense, but may just fit perfectly. Your pipe may just be that random.

The name you give your pipe should be a name you can use as if you were addressing it personally. Remember, any good name will have some meaning attached to it that is significant to you or to the pipe itself; it is the personality of the pipe that counts the most.

Deciding what to call your pipe may take more than a few puffs, but with enough use, a perfect name will come naturally from your lungs.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu.

Not your average boy band: Click Five reclaims music identity

By Annmarie Guarnieri
Collegian Correspondent

In 2004, The Click Five was on a lightning-speed path to success. The handsome five-member band performed in July for the popular eastern Massachusetts music radio station KISS 108FM's Hatch Shell Concert series on Boston's Charles River alongside pop music's top artists.

In October of 2004, the band signed its first major recording contract with Lava Records, by 2005, its first single "Just the Girl" was a smash hit. The Teen Beat magazines and trading cards with the perfectly coiffed quintet were hitting stores nationwide at a furious rate.

The band was formulated in 2003 in a Cambridge, Mass., management office. Wayne Sharp, the mastermind behind the group, found four of the five original members at Boston's Berklee College of Music during a band showcase. The fifth member and lead singer, Eric Dill, a high school friend of drummer Joey Zehr, was called in from Indiana to complete the group.

Within months of securing management, the band had a demo featuring three songs that would later be found on the group's debut album, "Greetings From Imrie House." Their first hit, "Just the Girl," was written by Fountain's of Wayne's bassist Adam Schlesinger, while the band's keyboardist, guitarist and bassist wrote the other two songs. In no time, the band had signed with a record label and was getting the music industry's push to power.

The band instantly started touring with huge acts, such as one of the highest selling boy bands in the world, the Backstreet Boys, selling out venues all across North America. Click Five continued to tour with pop princess Ashlee Simpson, earning them a place in pop music history.

"Greetings from Imrie House" pays homage to the band's home on Imrie Street in Allston, Mass. In its first week, the album skyrocketed to number 15 on the Billboard charts, earning Click Five the highest charting debut of a new rock act in 2005, and also made the band Lava Record's highest debuting act since the label's opening.

However, as quickly as the band members came to fame, they fell from grace.

"There was a point where it felt like we were in an airplane," said bassist Ethan Mentzer to The Boston Globe's Joan Anderman, "...and the engines just died."

The Click Five is the perfect cautionary tale for those trying to enter the fickle business of the music industry. In 2005, the band was all over MTV's playlist and performing for sold out amphitheaters. Since the band's glory days, four years later, there is one lead singer, one record label. The Click Five members find themselves playing in tiny nightclubs around Boston and New York. They are back to the basics and learning how to deal with the music business without the muscle of the record executives rooting for their success.

The band is now comprised of Mentzer, guitarist Joe Guese, Zehr, keyboardist Ben Romans and leader singer Kyle Patrick, who replaced former lead singer Eric Dill in 2007. The Click Five is a tight-knit group of men who met in college at Boston's prestigious Berklee School of Music. To many people, the men of The Click Five were just another prefabricated group of pretty faces. Their gimmick was their matching suits and skinny pants, as if they were trying to be a modern-day Beatles or The Cars.

"I think the band was marketed to a narrow demographic," said Ben Romans in a recent phone interview. "With all that said," he adds, "It certainly worked for a limited time."

When the band debuted, its first album sold over 350,000 copies in the United States alone. The boys

See CLICK on page 7

Things don't always 'Click' for those in the music industry

CLICK from page 6

seemed like a shoe-in for a long and successful career in the public eye.

Unlike many of the bands earning recognition at the time, the Click Five could actually play instruments. This factor gave the group a little edge against the boy bands it was competing against for radio time. However, when talking to any of the members, be wary of calling Click Five a "boy band".

"I shudder at that term, as I feel that it means that more photos are being taken than music being heard," said Romans referring to the "boy band" status.

"If boy band meant singing and dancing then that's hilarious," said Romans. He adds, "At the time, I suppose we had a singer who was more in line with that, but reality is our band was always a rock and roll band trapped inside of a marketing plan. That again, most certainly worked to some degree, and while very thankful for it, and with all due respect to 'boys in bands,' it always was a strange place to be in."

In 2007, with the entrance of new lead singer Kyle Patrick, the group took a step in breaking out of the boy band stigma. The matching suits and ties had vanished, but so had quite a bit of the fanfare stateside. In today's industry, a band only gets one shot before the label moves on to the next big thing.

Though, the label was not as hands-on for the second album, "Modern Minds and Pastimes," the band was able to move on to tour Asia. They have filled the seats in a number of Asian arenas, stretching from Singapore to Bali, and Jakarta to Phnom Penh. The band played the first ever international rock concert on the ancient steps of the temple Angkor Wat in Siem Reap, Cambodia.

In August of 2008, the band was awarded with the MTV Asia Knock Out Music reward, and by December, the band was back in Asia to take part in the MTV EXIT event, a campaign to raise awareness and increase prevention of human trafficking and exploitation in Asia and the Pacific.

Even with all of these accolades under its belt, The Click Five came back to the states and back to anonymity.

"Everything happened so quickly you think 'This is just going to keep going,' and it didn't," said Guese.

The band was dropped from Lava/Atlantic Records in 2008.

Since returning from the whirlwind experience in Asia and being dropped from the label, the band went right back to the studio to produce a self-financed third album. The Click Five has also moved on to complete several mini tours up and down the east coast.

In March of 2009, the band finished off a residency tour that included performing regularly in Cambridge's Lizard Lounge every Saturday night, World Cafe Live, Philadelphia, every Wednesday night, Pianos, New York, every Thursday night, and a few shows in Connecticut and Virginia. The band is wrapping up 2009 in another small tour starting December 3 at Boston's Great Scott, a venue just blocks from the old Imrie Street apartment where it all began.

The Click Five members have big plans for 2010. They plan to drop their third album in the upcoming months, and they recently rocked a second gig for Asia's MTV EXIT where they performed for approximately 60,000 people at the Military Zone No.7 Stadium on April 17.

Though the band's sound is still heavy in the power pop genre, it has blended a more mature 70s rock 'n' roll undertone. The guitars seem to be wailing a bit louder, the drums are being hit a bit harder, and the Click Five is hoping to get its success back on its own terms this time around.

"When we play live, we play live. That's that. When we record, we record as pure as possible. It takes more time and more effort, but we also take pride in our songs and aim to write good melodies and such. YouTube the band circa 2009... it's just apples and oranges," said Romans.

In an ideal world, The Click Five hopes that its sound, not its looks, will bring the boys the success they feel they deserve.

"At the end of the day, I would hope that good songs and a good band still count towards success," said Romans.

The Click Five had a bright 15 minutes in the limelight. Only time will tell if they will get 15 minutes more.

Annmarie Guarnieri can be reached at aguarnie@student.umass.edu.

Members of Click Five, who all graduated from Boston's Berklee College of Music, consider themselves to be anything but the traditional boy band. The group has recently been dealing with the music industry post-stardom.

Life of late Massachusetts poet revealed, fantasized in novel

By Lindsay Orlov
Collegian Staff

In today's world of cell phones, laptops and cable television, it's sometimes easy to forget America's past. Certainly, the Pioneer Valley remains an area dominated by a rural, agrarian lifestyle. A five-minute drive down Route 9 is all that's needed to remind the 21st century college student that Amherst and the surrounding towns are, and have always been made up of farmland. However, even today's farmers have access to all the modern conveniences that college students enjoy. Jerome Charyn's novel "The Secret Life of Emily Dickinson" serves not only to offer a hypothetical look at one of Amherst's most mysterious celebrities, but also to give readers a sometimes entertaining, sometimes sobering window into Amherst's 19th century past.

For fans of Dickinson's work, this novel offers a compelling look into what might have been the substance of the reclusive poet's life. Beyond the knowledge gained from primary sources, not much is known about Dickinson's daily habits. Charyn has gathered the facts of Dickinson's life from three places: dates and names garnered from official documents; analysis of her poetry and readings of her personal letters to various acquaintances. From this rather shaky scaffolding, Charyn has managed to author an elegant – and moreover – believable work of prose.

The novel is filled with landmarks easily recognizable to anyone who has spent time in the Valley. Dickinson spends the first portion of the novel at Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, known today as Mount Holyoke College. Her father's house, where she spends much of the rest of the novel, is right on North Pleasant Street. Charyn's Dickinson spends a significant amount of time walking through both the town of Amherst and the grounds of Amherst College. All of these locations are described with a slightly chilling combination of familiarity and foreignness. North Pleasant Street is still North Pleasant Street today, but without the horses, carriages and women in hoop-skirted dresses.

Charyn also uses fictional characters to explore and flesh out the foggier details of Dickinson's life. Dickinson spent only 10 months at Mount Holyoke, and the official reasons for her departure are unknown. Charyn gives Dickinson an enemy in her novel, a serving girl in love with Dickinson's brother. This serving girl serves as a plot device, indirectly causing Dickinson's departure from Mount Holyoke, as well as propelling and preventing a number of miniature romances – also somewhat fictional – that Dickinson encounters in her earlier years.

In Charyn's version of history, Dickinson's life is no boring tale of an agoraphobic woman, locked in her room writing verse after verse of poetry. Charyn breathes life into darkened corners of Dickinson's existence, and he does so by modeling his own writing after Dickinson's poetry.

The majority of the novel is written in the first person, from Dickinson's perspective. Charyn's literary genius has been to translate Dickinson's poetic genius into a work of prose. Readers might almost believe that Charyn merely unearthed a lost diary or autobiography written by Dickinson herself, artfully chronicling the lost details of her reclusive life.

Lindsay Orlov can be reached at lorlov@student.umass.edu.

Interested in... music? theater? dance? books? health and dining? art? movies?
... write for arts!
arts@dailycollegian.com

Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
free: 1 coffee drink
The Whisk(e)y Bar
AmherstCoffee.com
Rare and exceptional whiskies
Wines by the glass or bottle
Cocktails

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Need to spread the word?
Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!
IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column inch
R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
MAGIC The Gathering
Rise of the ElDrazi Party Weekend April 24 & 25.
Scan OffTheWallGameStore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

Minutemen take back-to-back A-10 series

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

With a lopsided 13-1 victory on Sunday afternoon, the Massachusetts baseball team captured its second consecutive Atlantic 10 series, taking two out of three games from Rhode Island over the weekend.

"I think we're playing better," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We played a really good game [Sunday] and everything went our way. We're doing a lot of things, clutch hitting, good defense and good pitching. It was a real good ballgame. It was nice to blow someone out, too."

The Minutemen (7-19, 5-7 A-10) flexed their offensive versatility during the rubber game on Sunday. They got out to an early 5-1 advantage by executing small ball to perfection. In the first inning, after three singles, Brian Baudinet hit a sacrifice fly to put his team on the board first.

In the third inning, the first two batters reached base and moved into scoring position on a sacrifice bunt. Baudinet again came through with a two-run single. After two more singles, UMass jumped out to a four run lead, all without the benefit of an extra-base hit.

"That's one of the things we try to do early is to put pressure on the defense as quickly as possible and make things happen," Stone said. "Fortunately it worked out [Sunday]."

UMass	6
URI	4
URI	3
UMass	2
UMass	13
URI	4

However, once the extra-base hits came, it was more of the same for the Minutemen. Baudinet hit a two-run triple in the fourth inning to break the game open and junior shortstop Matt Gedman hit a grand slam in the seventh to dismiss any chance of a Rams comeback.

"They looked like they were right in the zone," Stone said. "[Baudinet's triple] was a big hit and [Gedman] with the grand slam really opened the game up for us. When you get clutch hitting like that, it makes a big difference in the outcome."

In the end, UMass received contributions throughout the lineup as eight players combined for 13 hits.

Senior Bryan Leigh (2-4) tossed all nine innings for his second consecutive complete game victory. He allowed one run on nine hits, surrendering no walks while striking out three.

"Leigh did a really nice job, kept his pitch count down which was great because he threw a lot of pitches against [Boston College] when he won that ballgame on Tuesday," Stone said. "After we scored some runs, he'd go out and shut them down. And that's such a key factor for a pitcher and the momentum of the team. It was a real good performance."

Leigh's two performances earned him player of the week honors in the Atlantic 10. He pitched a total of 18 innings giving up five total runs.

UMass got another solid pitching performance from junior Nick Serino on Friday in the series opener as the Minutemen beat the Rams, 6-4.

Serino (1-3) went 6.2 innings, giving up four runs while striking out 10 batters. Sophomore Leif Sorenson earned the save, pitching 2.1 innings of shutout ball while striking out three. It was his first save of the season.

"Nick battled and put us in position to win the ballgame," Stone said. "[Sorenson] came in and did a great job shutting them down. He looked pretty dominant and that's what you're looking for out of the bullpen. That was a good way to start the weekend for us."

A four-run fourth inning was the key to the victory. The Minutemen hit for the cycle in the inning, which began with senior Mike Donato hitting his second home run of the year. His game-tying blast was followed by a double, triple and two singles as UMass pulled ahead for good.

The middle game of the series saw two pitchers battle deep into the ballgame as UMass fell short, 3-2. Rhode Island's Ken Graveline pitched a complete game allowing only two unearned runs. Senior Jared Freni (1-4) got the loss for the Minutemen despite surrendering three runs in eight innings.

The game was tied at two in the eighth inning but two consecutive singles and a fielder's choice allowed URI (17-16, 7-5 A-10) to push across the eventual winning run.

UMass will play Central Connecticut State this afternoon at 3 p.m. with sophomore Glen Misho making only his second start of the season. His first start came on March 13th versus Oklahoma State when Misho could not get out of the first inning and was charged with six earned runs as the Minutemen fell 10-1. He is 0-1 in seven appearances with an 8.25 earned run average.

CCSU (14-12, 9-7 Northeast Conference) is on a three-game winning streak after taking the last three games of a four-game series against Sacred Heart.

Last season the only game between UMass and CCSU was postponed.

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

Jeff Bernstein/Collegian

After defeating URI 13-1 in the rubber game, the Minutemen claimed their second consecutive Atlantic 10 series of the season. UMass took two out of three from Richmond in its last series at Earl Lorden Field.

Dickson helps UD beat UM

LACROSSE from page 10

three goals resulting directly from face-off wins.

While Cannella felt that senior All-American defenseman Diogo Godoi kept Dickson – the nation's second-leading scorer – locked up for most of the game, he noted that Dickson wasn't the only offensive threat for Delaware.

"Diogo had a good handle on him early in the game," Cannella said. "They also had a lot of great performances from guys who've been consistent all year."

Godoi shared the team lead in caused-turnovers, with two on the day. Senior Will Jeffery and sophomore Alex Reinhard also had caused-turnovers for the Minutemen.

The final goal of the game came when Delaware attackman Nick Elsmo scored on McCormack with just over three minutes remaining.

UMass next plays on Saturday as it takes on No. 9 Georgetown (7-4) in East Hartford, Conn. at the ESPNU Warrior Classic, which will be nationally-televised on ESPNU at 1:30 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillme@student.umass.edu.

Maxwell Shark/Collegian

In the loss to Delaware, freshman Will Manny scored three goals and dished one assist to lead the Minutemen attack. Anthony Biscardi, Ryan Hantverk, and Bobby Hayes each scored as well to give the entire UMass starting midfield a goal.

MAROON CENTRAL Student & Alumni Online Community

Use MaroonCentral to Connect With a Minuteman Mentor
[UMassAlumni.com/students]

- Want to know who's hiring in your field of study?
- Want advice on what classes to take, for your future career?
- Looking for ways to polish your resume, or practice interview questions?

MaroonCentral is where you need to be.
To register for FREE on MaroonCentral, you need to use your unique alumni ID.

UMass Amherst ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Call the Alumni Association to obtain it at 413.545.2317 or email alumni@admin.umass.edu.

Several qualify for IC4A and New England Championships

Wilson breaks own record in shot put with toss of 46-11

By Michael Counos
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams competed in the Larry Ellis Invitational held in Princeton, N.J. and concluded the two-day event with a handful of New England Championships qualifiers as well setting a few records.

Despite a late start on Friday afternoon, the Minutemen had a strong showing in a very competitive field. UMass concluded day one with five New England Championships qualifiers as well as three Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America (IC4A) qualifiers. Senior distance competitors Andrew McCann and Nicolai Naranjo qualified in the 5,000 meter run finishing in 20th and 21st overall with times of 14 minutes, 34.03 seconds and 14:34.13. Naranjo qualified for his second IC4A event having already qualified for it in the 10,000 meter run earlier this season.

Evan Donadt hurdled his way to the New England Championships, qualifying times in both the 110 meter and 400 meter hurdles event. Zachary Koncki improved his season-best time in the 110 meter hurdles, tying with Donadt for 24th overall. Sean Duncan and Sonny Gamble improved their qualifying times in the 3,000 meter steeple chase run with 16th and 17th place finishe respectively. Daniel Barry placed 19th overall in the 1,500 meter run with a time of 3:50.78 seconds while qualifying for the IC4A and New England Championships. Jonathan Pierce added to his successful senior season with a New England Championships qualifying time of 13:39.72 seconds in the 5,000 meter run.

Sean Busch improved upon his qualifying mark in the pole vault with a height of 15 feet, three inches, putting him just two inches shy of his career-best vault. Busch holds the third-best mark in school history at 15-5. The Minutemen finished the meet with eight New England Championships qualifiers and three IC4A qualifiers.

"This meet was really good chance for some of our guys to qualify with all the competitive teams and no pressure about scoring points," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said.

The Minutewomen were once again led by Lisa Wilson, who broke her own school-record in the shot put for the second straight week with a toss of 46-11. Her freshman predecessor Nalis Mbianda was not far behind as she set a UMass top five all-time mark with a fifth-place throw of 44-4.25. Mbianda sits in third place all-time in UMass school history. Wilson took third in the hammer throw and fourth in the discus events as well.

Elizabeth Fisk finished third in the 1,500 meter run with a New England Championships qualifying time of 4:43.37. Freshmen Rachelle Bourque won the javelin throw while Nicole Pompei took second place in the pole vault with a mark of 11-3.75. Junior Gina Perno finished third in the 800 meter run and sophomore Karen Rox qualified for New England Championships in the 3,000 meter steeplechase with an eighth-place time of 10:54.97. Shiyi Zan and Lauren Stocker both qualified in the 5,000 meter run as well.

UMass will return to action on Saturday at the UNH Pre-Conference Meet in Durham, N.H.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

REGISTER NOW FOR SUMMER CLASSES

UMass takes second

By Eric Mansfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team took second place at the Atlantic 10 championships in Pennsauken, N.J. on Saturday. The Minutewomen finished 13 points behind rival Rhode Island and one point ahead of Saint Joseph's.

In a regatta where only the First Varsity 8, Second Varsity 8 and the Varsity 4 receive points for the team championship, UMass could only take first in the Varsity 4 with a time of 7:44.05 seconds, 13 seconds ahead of URI. URI took first in both the First and Second Varsity 8. The Rams' First Varsity 8 finished with a time of 6:37.08, while UMass took a fifth-place finish with a time of 6:54.04. The Rams' Second Varsity 8 finished three seconds ahead of UMass, which came in second with a time of 6:49.91.

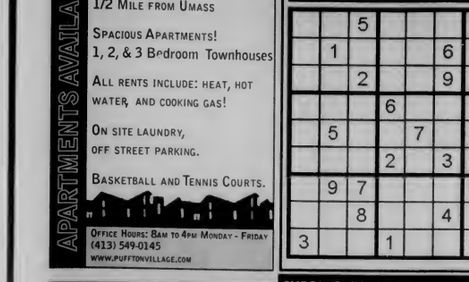
UMass coach Jim Dietz said it was a tough week-end but that he was pleased with the overall effort of his crew. He thought that the team had come to a good peak. The one boat that Dietz said did not race to their potential was the First Varsity 8 boat. He chalked it up to nerves, adding that it could have been because some of the members of that boat had just been moved there and that it was a new race for them. Dietz was hoping to win the Second Varsity 8 after falling behind with the First Varsity 8, but they came up just short.

Not adding to the disappointment of finishing second was the addition of four members of the UMass crew to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference teams. Seniors Megan Donovan and Samantha Smith were named to the first team, while junior Alexandra DiMatteo and sophomore Amanda Doolin were named to the second team. Dietz said that Smith "has been a workhorse" since transferring from Fordham before the 2006-07 season and that Donovan, over her career, has made great strides and will actually be able to participate in rowing next year as a graduate student.

Dietz fully expected that the top three teams in the conference would end up being UMass, URI and Saint Joeseph's, who ended up taking third over the weekend.

Dietz also said that the Atlantic 10 championships should be moved back and that all of the coaches within the conference agree. It makes more sense to have them later because the results shown at the championships would be more indicative of the entire season. The season goes on for another month or so after the championships.

UMass took third in the Novice 8 and Novice 4 with times of 7:22.20 and 8:30.26. Teresa O'Brien and Emily Hagan won the pair race by almost a full 30 seconds, beating out two URI pairs with a time of 8:33.03. The two URI pairs times were 9:02.67 and 9:36.72, respectively.



UMass will take on MIT this Saturday and Vermont on Sunday. Both regattas will take place on the Connecticut River.

Eric Mansfield can be reached at eamansf@student.umass.edu.

COMICS

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Buffalo Soldier

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% of with ID
nike New Era Clarks Timberland Outdoor Performance
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

I failed to convince my girlfriend that I was a feminist.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

SUPERCUTS SOCCERFEST
University of Massachusetts Sport Management Department 2010
May 1, 2010 • UMass • Amherst, MA
- 6v6 Tournament Format
- Each team guaranteed at least 3 games
- Registration fee as low as $10/player
- Registration Deadline: April 21st
www.soccerfest.org

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Double percolation, that's what Hendrix would have wanted tear.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
You can do whatever you want today, but for the love of god please do not poke smot.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Invest in every fast food chain for about the next 24 hours.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
A true pal sends all of their friends Edible Arrangments on April 20, 2010.

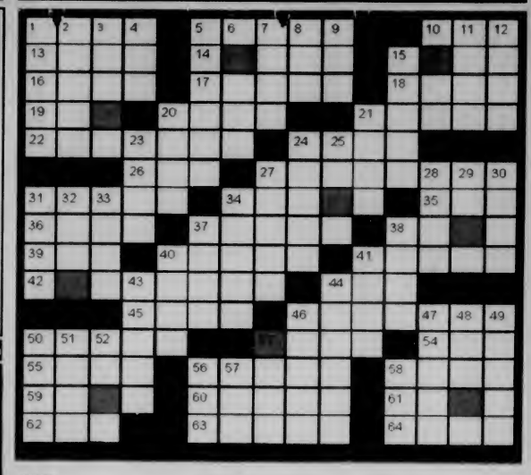
gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
You should get a tattoo on your lower back thats has a wink face and says, "Born to Bogart."

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Remember those who have fallen in battle. We spark this one for Leeroy! Jenkins!

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
School was not meant for a day as glorious as this. This campus is about to get a case of the sniffles for the next 24 hours.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Attend a poetry class even if you are not enrolled. What else are you going to remotely understand today?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
You should have totally majored in some form of botany.



scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Now is the best time there is for trying KFC's new bread-less sammich. Not convinced? Its got lots of bacon juice!

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Out of rolling papers? Use this Collegian!

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Do not forget to duck down when you go into class. You wouldn't want your antlers to hit the frame.

COUPON
Israeli Independence Day - Yom Haatzma'ut Celebration
Tuesday, April 20, 4-7pm - Campus Pond Lawn
Rain location will be at Hillel House - 388 North Pleasant St
BRING THIS COUPON FOR YOUR
SPECIAL DISCOUNT - BBQ $1.00 only!

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

ACROSS
1) Middle of "ceremonial social" is a joint.
5) Too many growers ____ the pot
10) High molecule
13) This point need not be made
14) Your plants need a secret Advertisementone
15) What you need to grow in volume
16) Uncle's mixed up tuna
17) Follows an X for lots of sex
18) A stamp of gold on hash that's sold
19) First half of a popular rollie
20) Prohibition is on the ____
21) Where a crao makes his home
22) Fundamental concentrate
24) Rearrange hose onto your feet
26) What you did with those shrooms
27) Drug laws are not of the public's ____
31) Marijuana sales have a positive effect on a nation's ____ economics
34) You have been ____ the way.
35) Female deer
36) Woe is me!
37) With the Coast Guard chasing you, you're better off here
38) Las Vegas lighting
39) Pot is supreme when you look back on it
40) Stain mix-up makes holy man
41) Goddess of the hunt.
42) What you have after sprouting
44) Short doctor
45) Assistant
46) Good grass ____ on a good grower
50) Often sounds where smoke abounds
53) This flower, by any other name?
54) Letter 18 is way they be
55) Is it human or rat?
56) Who rolls up a joint and won't smoke it with you
58) Ding-dong! ____ calling!
59) Leary's redeemer of humanity
60) Former editor Steve of High Times
61) How many times can you run the track?
62) A place to sleep, flowers to reap
63) Peaking on open waves
64) Threat: or ____!

DOWN
1) An astonishing place to hide your stash
2) Sun King's first name
3) The peyote spirit sometimes gives these powerful gifts
4) Terence McKenna's pen name
5) Cleaned-up tree
6) What to empty before desert.
7) Another commonly cultivated grass
8) Put the into boing for cooler baking
9) Sounds heavy, but it's just being towed around
10) The (10) of life is for the (11)ing of nations
11) see 10 down
12) Where some think all pot-heads go.
15) At the end of your butt are long, grey what?
20) ____ bagger and better things
21) You told two friends about your grow room, and they told two, and ____
23) Walls have them
24) Why midget lacks cash to buy a bag
25) End of gung-ho and beginning of weed
27) Cheech's buddy
28) Cartoon halide shows mental event
29) High time
30) The kind of tics that makes good seed
31) They make you feel welcome, and you walk all over them.
32) Vera's healing herb
33) APEC mix-up: fits tightly around the neck and hangs over your back
34) THC crystals do this in light
37) He ____ she ____
38) Mild compliment
40) You'll be the shape of a pinner if you skip too much dinner
41) The Pope smokes ____
43) Risked mixed dread
44) Abandon your friend in a hot, dry place
46) Units of acid
47) Oranges found at sea
48) What one does with acid
49) Government drug ____ isn't worth a penny
50) Middle-eastern fellow.
51) Hemp fabric frill brings sensual thrill
52) Good for your head, or when your battery's dead
53) Great anger
56) Condensed tetrahydrocannabinol
57) When pot-heads talk to politicos, it often goes in one ____ and out the other.
58) Fermented malt and hops

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If I wasn't from Jamaica, then why would I be wearing this hat?"

—Thurgood Jenkins

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing. 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Amherst: 2 Bedroom Open House! Come to Mill Valley Estates on April 24th, 12-4 P.M. Move-in specials! Whole Foods gift cards just for showing up! *500 Riverglade Drive, Apt F. 253-7377. www.millvalleyApts.com (*while supplies last)

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

HOUSE FOR RENT

Amherst-4 Bedroom/2 Bath, 2 car garage. June Occupancy. $2000+. Near bus stop. Skibiski, Realtor. 586-1827

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. 413-256-0772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

LOOKING FOR FUN?

Looking to have a little fun during your last weeks of school? Well, so is senior blonde bomb shell Alex Brown! No strings attached, nothing serious, just a little "fun." If interested please search her via facebook, or e-mail her at ajbrown@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen unable to make late comeback

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

A late scoring surge couldn't help the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team as it lost to Delaware, 9-6.

The No. 12 Minutemen (7-4, 2-2 Colonial Athletic Association) committed 20 turnovers, including eight turnovers in the first and third quarters in the loss.

Freshman attackman Will Manny led UMass with three goals and one assist. The Minutemen also saw goals from their entire starting midfield: Anthony Biscardi, Ryan Hantverk, and Bobby Hayes. Hantverk also contributed two assists as well.

UD	9
UMass	6

While Manny excelled in the final quarter, UMass coach Greg Cannella wanted that kind of play throughout the entirety of the game.

"I thought we stunk," Cannella said. "We didn't play well early and that hurt us."

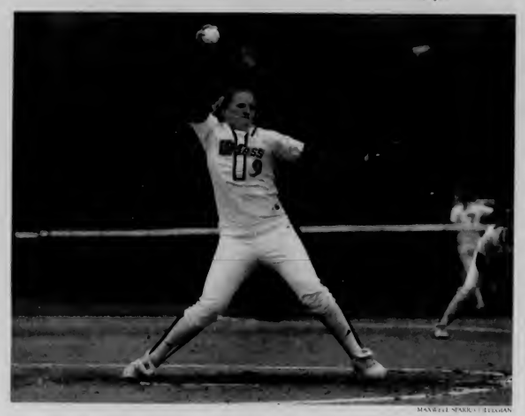
Hantverk's lone goal was the first of the game but the Blue Hens (6-6, 1-2 CAA) quickly turned the game with five-straight goals – four were unassisted and all scored by different players. Biscardi assisted on Hayes' goal with just over three minutes to go in the half to pull UMass within three.

Delaware outshot the Minutemen, 35-28, and had a 40-31 advantage in ground balls.

The Blue Hens opened up the second half with another goal but the Minutemen answered back when Biscardi took a feed from Manny to put the score at 6-3 in favor of Delaware.

In the fourth period, however, UMass rode the momentum gained by Biscardi's goal in the previous period and Manny torched the Blue Hens for three-straight goals. Manny's second goal came off an assist by Biscardi and his third score gave him his team-leading 22nd goal of the season off an assist from sophomore Steve D'Amario to tie the game at six.

After an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty on midfielder Greg Rushing, Delaware capitalized on its only successful man-up goal in five opportunities during the game to again take the lead. Attackman Curtis Dickson beat Minutemen goalie Tim McCormack (eight saves) for the score. Dickson added another goal on a rebound after two missed shots by the Blue Hens.



Rushing went 8-for-16 in face-offs for the Minutemen and UMass went 9-for-19 as a team in the face-off circle. Delaware went 9-for-9 in clears in the first half, including

See LACROSSE on page 8

MAXWELL SPARK / COLLEGIAN

Defenseman Diogo Godoi held Curtis Dickson of Delaware in check for three periods of Saturday's game. In the fourth period though, Dickson scored two goals to help the Blue Hens win 9-6 over UMass.

MAXWELL SPARK / COLLEGIAN

Before having their weekend doubleheader with St. Bonaventure rained out, the Minutewomen crushed UConn 12-0 as Meghan Carta hit two home runs, while pitcher Sara Plourde threw a two-hit shut-out.

UM thrashes UConn before weekend rain

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Before the second game against Boston University, the last team to put up more than three runs against the Massachusetts softball team was Kansas when it put up six against the Minutewomen on March 18.

This weekend, the weather was the only thing that could stop UMass from having its way on the defensive end.

UMass	12
UConn	0

The Minutewomen (27-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) had their double-header against St. Bonaventure rained out on Sunday, but drubbed Connecticut 12-0 on Friday. Junior Meghan Carta hit two home runs, including a grand slam in the win while pitcher Sara Plourde threw a two-hit shut-out with 15 strikeouts.

Seniors Sarah Reeves and Jessica Serio went 3-for-3 against the Huskies (18-20, 4-5 Big East).

Aside from strong hitting, UMass also showed plenty of discipline at the plate by drawing 10 walks.

The Minutewomen scored their first run in the second inning when senior Michelle Libby came home on Serio's double to right field. Libby and senior Whitney Williams reached base after being hit by UConn pitcher Kiki Saverano.

The freshman walked five batters and gave up five runs (three earned) in four innings before getting pulled for sophomore Ali Adelman.

UMass had its biggest inning against Saverano in the next inning with four runs on three hits. Carta hit her first home run on the game and brought in outfielder Jill Andrews, who pinch ran for Reeves.

The Huskies' defense did little to take the pressure off their pitcher. UConn committed two errors and eventually gave up another two runs to freshman Teea Rogers and Serio.

Adelman pitched a scoreless fifth inning, but gave up seven runs (five earned) in the next two frames. Reeves's triple was the first hit of the sixth inning, and eventually scored on Adelman's second straight illegal pitch.

The seventh inning was more of the same for UConn, which gave up five runs, including Carta's grand slam. Libby scored the 12th run of the game after reaching first base on an error by the shortstop, and then advanced to third after a wild pitch and a passed ball.

Serio brought in Libby on a sacrifice fly to centerfield.

It's the second-highest run total

See SOFTBALL on page 5

UMass splits dramatic games to A-10 foes

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

A last-second goal kept the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team from taking first place in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

This past weekend was filled with two tight contests for the Minutewomen (8-8, 5-2 A-10), the latter of which halted them from nabbing the top seed in the upcoming A-10 tournament.

"I'm glad we played two really tight games," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "Those experiences [can] only help us with kind of what we need to do and what we can't do. [We] kind of have everything covered in that sense."

UMass	14
SJU	13
La Salle	10
UMass	9

On Friday night, UMass went into double overtime in order to find a result over Saint Joseph's, the team it played in last year's A-10 championship game.

Despite the Hawks (2-14, 0-7 A-10) laying low in nearly all conference statistics, they put up a fight against the Minutewomen. UMass opened up the game with a 3-0 lead, but SJU spat four goals right back. Both traded another goal to put the score at 5-4.

Five straight goals came from UMass in the opening of the second period, but it couldn't keep the Hawks down, as they broke the lead to a single goal. The Minutewomen returned with two more scores to take a commanding 12-9 lead. SJU came right back, notching four straight goals to take a 13-12 lead over the defending A-10 champions.

Attacker Nina Sarcona knotted up the score for UMass, but neither team could find the net again, as the clock expired after two periods of play. For the first time in the 2010 season, the Minutewomen headed to overtime.

Neither team could get it done in the first period of overtime, with goalkeeper Christina Fey earning two saves to stop the Hawks from earning the win. With neither team finding the back of the net, the game went to a sudden death second overtime period.

Midfielder Jackie Lyons was the hero for UMass as she took the ball with just over a minute remaining and scored the game-winning goal for the Minutewomen.

Think that was dramatic?

UMass had its second game of the weekend on Sunday when it took on La Salle. The game was a pound-for-pound battle, and went right down to the wire.

"It was a 'get in there and muscle your way in' [kind of game]. It was a physical game," Venechanos said.

The game against the Explorers (9-6, 5-2 A-10) started off with a three-goal run by UMass, with goals from attacker Stephanie Hopkins and midfielders Danielle Pelletier and Merritt Cosgrove.

Pelletier had her hands in the first two goals, assisting on the first. After back-and-forth passes between Pelletier and Hopkins, the senior attacker made a quick turn and scored the opening goal for the Minutewomen.

Moments later, Pelletier found herself guarded heavily by the La Salle defense. After a flashy spin move, Pelletier found an open net for her to score in.

Following a dangerous attack by the Explorers, midfielder Jordan Renna added to the mix. Off the fast break, Renna sprinted down the field and soon passed it off to Cosgrove who netted the third goal for UMass.

After three minutes and 44 seconds passed, the Minutewomen had a 3-0 lead on La Salle, but it was not for long, as La Salle came right back with three straight goals to knot up the match.

Despite physical play and a swarming UMass defense, the Explorers pursued the net and found success. At the 10:27 mark, the perseverance paid off, as La Salle attacker Lauren McDermott notched her first goal to break the tie.

Sarcona brought the Minutewomen back into the game four minutes later with a jumping shot that sailed into the back of the net.

With the score even, neither team budged for the remainder of the first half. Lyons had an opportunity near the net, but the ball ricocheted off the post. The Explorers pushed forward in the final moments, but a physical UMass defense held them to an even score at the break.

The second half started off slower than the first, with the first goal coming nearly four minutes in from Lyons. McDermott did not let the 5-4 lead stand, as she notched in a score to keep the game level after fluid and quick passing by La Salle.

Nearly two minutes later, UMass went on its second three-goal run of the afternoon. Through nine minutes of play, midfielder Dayna Defliese, Sarcona and Lyons all notched scores to give the Minutewomen an 8-5 lead.

Even though attacker Stefany McKee notched an unassisted goal to bring the lead down to two goals, Lyons pushed right back less than thirty seconds later off a free position shot. With just over six minutes left, UMass had a 9-6 lead, and the game in its hands.

"I thought Jackie Lyons played a great game," Venechanos said. "We need some more people stepping up on attack. And defensively, we did well; we had those two goals at the end."

The Explorers did not see it that way, scoring a goal 39 seconds following Lyons' second. Over the next four minutes, the Minutewomen defense held La Salle back, and all signs pointed towards a victory for the Maroon and White.

McDermott knocked in an unassisted goal to bring the lead down to one. In the final minute, the Explorers earned two free position shots. While the first went wide of the goal post, the second was a straight shot into the back of the net by midfielder Melanie Sarcinello. With 26 seconds left, the game was tied at nine apiece.

Off of a sloppy draw and a chase for the ball, La Salle regained possession with the clock dwindling down. The Explorers fled up the field, where McDermott sent a rocket into past goalkeeper Katie Florence with two seconds left on the clock, sealing the game.

"Credit to La Salle, I thought it was one of those games where it was a hard-fought dog fight," Venechanos said. "I think both teams played a tough game Friday night. La Salle did a great job of playing until the end. We had to change a couple of things with the kind of the style that was going; it wasn't too much of a finesse game."

Throughout the game, the Minutewomen had nine draw controls and 18 groundballs. UMass went 2-for-7 on the free position, with La Salle right behind at 3-for-7. Despite the loss, the Minutewomen went nearly perfect on clears with 15-of-17.

"I thought we responded well, and in the end it wasn't really there," Venechanos said. "I was proud how we kept our composure to keep it a game."

UMass travels to Pittsburg, Pa., for the A-10 tournament. It will be a rematch for the Minutewomen, as they take on La Salle next Friday at 3:30 p.m.

"We're excited heading into the A-10 tournament," Venechanos said. "It's a fresh start, and we're looking forward to having another opportunity on Friday."

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN / COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen earned a berth in the Atlantic 10 tournament with their win over Saint Joseph's on Friday. On Sunday, however, UMass suffered a last-second goal by La Salle to lose 10-9.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 73 LOW: 44

www.DailyCollegian.com

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 2010

PR: Milligan resigns

Tom Milligan, executive vice chancellor for University Relations at the University of Massachusetts, announced his resignation on Tuesday after two years of service, making Milligan the latest in a series of public relations representatives to leave the University.

According to the announcement made by University officials on April 20, Milligan will be assuming the position of vice chancellor of External Relations at Colorado State University.

The move is a return to CSU for Milligan who had previously served on the cabinet of former University president, Al Yate, before he assumed his position at UMass in the summer of 2008.

When he takes up his new position with CSU, Milligan will be paid a salary of $225,000 a year, an increase from the previous salary of $150,000 per year.

Milligan's resignation follows several shake-ups with the University Relations office involving staff reorganization, as part of Holub's multi-year plan to raise the profile of the University.

Due to the reorganization, several staff members have taken positions elsewhere including Sharon L. Kennaugh, former director of state government relations, and Richard H. Conner, former executive director of government and community relations.

Other moves include the former assistant director of state government relations, Cheryl L. Dukes to different department, and the departure of Martha Nelson Patrick, director of community relations for a position in the University's Ombuds Office.

Milligan will stay on with the University until the end of August in order to ensure a smooth transition for his replacement which will be selected as soon as possible, according to Chancellor Robert C. Holub.

Of Milligan's decision to resign, Holub said, "The University relations team has made a great impact on campus and on our key constituents by creating a better understanding and support for UMass Amherst. I appreciate all that Tom and his team have done to move our university forward. We certainly wish him well and understand his desire to be near his family in Colorado."

"We've made major improvements in recent years, and have a good structure in place to do even more in the future," Holub added. "We have a good foundation to build on, and our future success depends on us continuing to make strides in building a clear and compelling image of UMass here on campus and around the world."

- Collegian News Staff

BBQ for Israeli independence

In celebration of Yom Ha'atzmaut, guests gathered by the Campus Pond lawn for a spread of kosher foods, hookah tent, professional massages, live Israeli music and dancing.

By Kirsten Swenson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Hillel and the Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI) coordinated a pond-side celebration yesterday to commemorate Yom Ha'atzmaut, Israel Independence Day.

The annual event, which was also sponsored by Combined Jewish Philanthropies, Harold Grinspoon Foundation, Legacy Heritage Fund, MASA Israel Journey and UMass' Jewish Student Union; was open to the public, featuring a kosher barbecue, a hookah tent, professional massages, various craft vendors, henna tattoos and a bounce house.

Five-piece band from Berklee College of Music, Hamisha, also performed live Israeli music for attendees.

"We've planned [Yom Ha'atzmaut] for three or four months," said UMass senior and SAFI President, Andrew Horwitz.

"It's been pretty intense during the last month or so – just getting all the loose ends tied up, and finally putting everything together today."

"It's really the smallest details that you never think about, but they always pop up just a week before," added current UMass Hillel Israel fellow Michal Baruch, who worked with Horwitz and SAFI to coordinate the event.

According to the SAFI section of UMass Hillel's website, SAFI believes in "Israel's right to freedom, safety and security ... that good citizens of democracy have the right to live together in a

See INDEPENDENCE on page 2

MICHELLE WILCOX / COLLEGIAN

With the hope of making the campus greener, UMass researchers are studying the effects of climate change, the development of liquid biofuels, solar fuel cells and the use of wind energy as an alternative to oil.

UMass celebrates Earth Day, advocating green initiatives

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

Students and faculty of the University of Massachusetts are preparing to celebrate Earth Day on April 22 with a series of new initiatives and advocacy platforms which seek to improve green programs on campus.

On the administration side of the Earth Day celebrations, the University will launch a pilot Green Office program in addition to holding a series of public lectures by national experts on sustainability and the environment.

The UMass Green Office program will consist of four offices chosen as practice locations for student sustainability interns to present their suggestions to faculty and staff on how to make the University's operations greener.

In regards to improved recycling percentages, campus sustainability coordinator Josh Stoffel expressed his hopes introducing a competitive aspect to the various departments on the UMass campus will improve performance.

"We hope to eventually offer a multi-level certification program with green at the top, so your department would be able to display its bronze, silver, gold or green sustainability badge on its website and show off your progress toward excellence in sustainability," Stoffel said.

The students, for their part, will be working towards a "sustainable move-out" from the dormitories around campus.

Additionally, 70 student Eco-Reps will be visiting the dorms starting sometime this week and continuing until May 13 which is the final Move-Out Day in the UMass residence halls.

The campaign for the student representatives will focus on educating fellow students about recycling the mundane items lying around the dorms in order to reduce the amount of waste that must be handled as the semester winds down.

This includes broken CD players, computers, futons, rugs and hangers.

The student Eco-Reps include six student leaders with previous experience in teaching sustainability to their peers, as well as 61 others who meet every month to learn about an environmental issue and then brainstorm about how to educate others about such issues as water conservation or corporate green washing.

"During Move-Out, we net an extra 100 to 200 tons of trash per week compared to a normal period of the same length," Stoffel said.

"It's an overwhelming, massive amount of trash and so much of it could be recycled if we just took some extra care," he added.

"This year our goal is to divert as much as possible away from the landfill. It's a measurable goal and we'll report on our success. We intend to do better each year from now on."

The message which the students Eco-Reps will be advocating to their peers according to Stoffel will be to act and not wait until the last moment to look under the bed and in the backs of their closets.

The message will be: "Start now, get your papers and printers and used lamps into the receptacles provided at every residence hall BEFORE your last day."

Additionally, Stoffel added that student housing and residential life staff will be collecting loose dining hall items for return, following a tradition of which they have done for the past several years.

Also, the staff will be donating wearable clothing and non-perishable food to the Amherst Survival Center.

The public lectures will begin on Saturday, April 24, as the UMass Commonwealth College will be hosting the Daffodil Lectures by Raymond Bradley, distinguished professor of geosciences and director of the Climate System Research Center. Andrew Revkin, an award-winning journalist who has worked for the New York Times and Discover and the Science Digest, as well as Bron Taylor, professor of religion and nature at the University of Florida.

Moderating the event will be Julie Brigham-Grette, UMass professor of geosciences.

The Daffodil lectures, which will he open to the public, are scheduled to begin at 3 p.m. in room 135 of the Integrated Sciences Building on the UMass campus.

Currently, UMass' research in green sustainability includes the development of liquid biofuels, solar fuel cells and the use of wind energy as an alternative to oil.

Additionally, several UMass faculty members are studying climate change, promoting a green economy and a green job growth, as well as teaching green building and energy efficiency techniques.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Faculty recount experiences, trials of textbook publishing

By Cameron Ford
Collegian Staff

Some students complete writings that take a few hours. Others must complete writing assignments that take a few days, while others take a few weeks.

But before you throw in a complaint about that English paper you have been chipping away at for the last week and a half, consider this: Jennifer Fronc, a professor in the University of Massachusetts history department took a full 10 years to finish her monograph, "New York Undercover: Private Surveillance in the Progressive Era."

As a faculty member of a major research university, professors like Fronc are all expected to complete research in their fields, according to Bruce G. Wilcox, director of the university's publishing arm, the University of Massachusetts Press.

"There is an expectation [at UMass] that faculty, along with engaging and teaching students, will be conducting serious scholarly research," said Wilcox.

Fronc said that she certainly accomplished that in the process of writing her monograph, which began as a seminar paper when she was in graduate school at Columbia University in 1999.

"I was looking at the work of the Committee of Fourteen, which was investigating prostitution in New York City," she said.

"I went to the New York Public Library and looked at their papers and wrote a 20-page seminar paper and I was like, 'This is it!' and it evolved into my dissertation. Then the book came out of the dissertation."

Fronc's book was published by the University of Chicago Press last year.

Barry Levy, also a professor in the history department, shared some similarities in the process of writing his own monograph, "Town Born: The Political Economy of New England Towns from their Settlement to the Revolution" (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2009). Like Fronc, Levy said his inspiration for writing this book stemmed from an interest in research, specifically dealing with orphans in colonial New England towns.

"I was working on orphans and I found that there were more orphans in New England than fit the prevailing paradigm of how New England was supposed to operate," Levy said.

"New England was supposed to operate by powerful fathers who kept their children in check."

Further research by Levy into the matter revealed that town governments played a more significant role in keeping New England towns together. Levy's book stemmed from this research.

Other professors, such as Judy Goodenough of the biology department, were prompted to write their books based on the interest of publishers.

"A book rep came in and asked if I wanted to write a book," said Goodenough of her 1993 textbook "Perspectives on Animal Behavior."

Goodenough added, "I had no idea how to write a book and so I said, 'Yeah! That would be fun!' And I think it took me 13 years to get the first edition published."

But overall it was a rewarding process, according to Goodenough, since she said that she was able to work with two others during the writing process.

"Betty McGuire is the co-author. She is a former grad student from here, and her field is animal behavior. Bob Wallace was a very well-known textbook writer. I wanted to work with him to learn more about writing, and he was just a very fun person to work with," she said.

There seems to be almost unanimous agreement among professors who write with others that a team effort is a much more enjoyable process than flying solo.

One of these is Gary Karpinski, a professor of the music department, who worked with graduate school friend Richard Kram to publish a book and CD-ROM package entitled "Anthology for Sight Singing."

"It was perfect for me," said Karpinski.

"Richard and I were very clear on our roles in this project. I asked him to come on board because of his programming knowledge."

With Kram's expertise, Karpinski added, the two were able to program "Anthology's" CD in such a way that enabled professors to reorganize music excerpts for their classes.

Fred Feldman, a professor of the philosophy department utilized a different method of cooperative writing in writing his latest book, "What is This Thing Called Happiness?" (Oxford University Press, 2009).

"[The book] emerged from lectures I presented in my seminars," said Feldman.

"When I do a seminar I write up my lecture notes...and then I get criticism for it and I revise my notes based on that criticism. And then when I come to produce [a book or paper] I start with my seminar notes."

As opposed to Goodenough and Karpinski, Feldman said that he does not use his own books in lectures, calling it his "general policy."

"When I'm all finished [getting feedback and critiques], then I don't see any point in presenting it to a class anymore," he said.

"My general view is that I almost never assign my published papers. I figure if anyone wants to know my view about something they can read it."

On the other hand, Goodenough and Karpinski both emphasized the advantages of teaching with one's own textbooks, citing the benefits of familiarity with the presented material and personal pride at being able to utilize the end product of one's own hard work, respectively.

Yet despite all of the hard work that goes into producing their books, professors are facing serious problems in the publishing market, according to Wilcox.

"[The UMass Press was] hit hard by the recession last year, as were our colleagues at other university presses," said Wilcox.

"Anyone who sells print-on-paper is facing the double whammy of the economic recession on the one hand and the shift to the digital environment on the other."

However, Wilcox did note that sales for this year are better than last year, ending on a positive note.

"We're having a pretty good year this year," he said, "and I'm feeling optimistic and hoping that the worst is behind us."

Cameron Ford can be reached at cjford@student.umass.edu

ARTS & LIVING

Dickinson's life explored

In a new book by Jerome Charyn, poet Emily Dickinson's life is recounted as accurately as possible with the little information left behind about her.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen defeat Quinnipiac

Behind a no-hitter from pitcher Sarah Plourde, the Minutewomen defeated Quinnipiac 6-0.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Shane Cronin discusses the Tea Party and its role in our country and he's not talking about the one in 1773.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, hosted by the Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 56

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor Sara Cody
Managing Web Editor Pete Rizzo
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Johnson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elise Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Leigh Greaney
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Hoshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Aseer
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Spurr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

You are cordially invited to attend
the UMass Amherst
13th Annual Commencement Ball
Fire & Ice

Friday, May 7 • 9 p.m. - 1 a.m.
Mullins Center
$25 per person
Light Hors d'oeuvres • Desserts • Dancing
FORMAL ATTIRE - CASH BAR
Tickets may be obtained at UMassAlumni.com/students or at the Alumni Association Office in Memorial Hall (545-2317).
Commencement Ball sponsors to-date:
UMass Amherst Alumni Association • Student Alumni Association • Coca-Cola Auxiliary Services • Student Affairs and Campus Life • Isenberg School of Management • College of Natural Sciences • Housing and Residential Life Senior Campaign • Mullins Center

Students honor Israel's day of independence

INDEPENDENCE from page 1

sovereign state, free of fear ... [and] in safe borders, freedom and peace."

Though SAFI and UMass Hillel are two distinct groups, Baruch – who's visiting Amherst from her native Israel to serve as an Israel fellow at Hillel – and Horwitz emphasize the benefits of working with each other's organizations to plan events that promote an understanding of Israeli culture, society and its people.

"We do cultural events, we do political events, we do some smaller events too," said Horwitz, of the RSO's various gatherings hosted throughout the semester.

"We partnered with a lot of different groups this year, which we're really proud of. We partnered with the [UMass] Pride Alliance and brought someone from the Combined Jewish Philanthropies (CJP), and he talked about his experience working with a gay organization in Jerusalem."

Baruch agrees that UMass Hillel's work with SAFI is particularly valuable when teaming up to put on events focused primarily on Israel, given the organizations' different focuses.

"We have a lot of other events that we do at Hillel, mostly [surrounding] Jewish holy days. When it comes to Israel, we definitely work with SAFI because they're doing it, they're on campus and they've got a lot of people that come to SAFI. It's definitely great to work with SAFI when we do anything about Israel."

Horwitz and Baruch's involvement in the planning of the campus' Yom Ha'atzmaut celebration stem from their mutually strong ties to Israel.

"Last Yom Ha'atzmaut, I was in Israel, which was a pretty awesome experience. I spent seven months there, so coming back here, becoming SAFI's president and just being able to share the positive feelings I have about Israel and spread awareness ... really means a lot," said Horwitz.

"It's really important that people see that Israel has a lot. In the news, you see one thing, but it's really important just to show that Israel is more, and I think that this is a good place for showing it," Baruch said.

Kirsten Swenson can be reached at kswenson@dailycollegian.com.

KIRSTEN SWENSON/COLLEGIAN

The annual event, which was sponsored in part by UMass Hillel House, brought many out to honor Israel's Independence Day.

HPV Fact #13:

About 2 out of 3 people will get genital warts after having any kind of genital contact with someone infected.

HPV Fact #11:

You don't have to actually have sex to get HPV—the virus that causes genital warts.

Why risk it
Visit your campus health center.

MERCK
Copyright © 2010 Merck & Co., Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in USA.

hpv.com
2105000(4/2)-01/10-GRD

SHOWCASE DEBATE

Student Perspectives from Across the Political Spectrum

From the Right
Mr. Brad DeFlumeri

>Affirmative Action<
>Gay Marriage<
>Abortion<
>Racism<

From the Left
Mr. Will Syldor

HOST MODERATORS:
Attorney Corey M. Carvalho, Associate Director, Student Legal Services Office
&
Charlie Felder, President, University Democrats

WE VOTE PRO-LIFE

TONIGHT!!

@ 5pm in the CAPE COD LOUNGE
UMass Amherst
Apple Cider, Coffee, and Sandwiches will be available at 4:45pm

Co-Sponsored by: The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Student Legal Services Office, The Silent Majority & The Radical Student Union

Question-and-Answer Session to Follow Debate
contact: slittlecrow-russell@stuaf.umass.edu for more information

Student Legal Services Office

Free and Open to the General Public

DailyCollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 2010

"If we don't believe in freedom of expression for people we despise, we don't believe in it at all." Noam Chomsky

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

What is the Tea Party?

Shane Cronin

Oh the Tea Party Movement, and the trouble it has stirred in the land of the free. Tens of thousands of Americans protesting across the nation: in both red states and blue states. Who are these people? Are they simply modern day colonists fighting against taxation without representation or are they racist, sexist, homophobic, "tea-bagging" rebels without a cause?

There is no question the left wing abhors them. The New York Times buried the Tea Party protests of the summer of 2009 deep in its A section – when they deigned to cover them at all. MSNBC mocks them mercilessly. The right wing heavily supports the Tea Parties and is making broad attempts to court them.

Let's set aside the conjecture for a paragraph or two and delve into the facts about the contemporary anti-tax, "Tea Party" movement.

Despite widespread belief, Tea Party organizing began prior to the presidential election of Barack Obama. According to thenewamerican.com the exact date of the movement's fruition can not be pinpointed. This is likely due to the movement's lack of central organization. There is no Tea Party leader. It is a grass roots campaign which is organized separately in each state. Each independent group thrives solely on private donations.

The people gathering today on Boston Commons have little, if nothing in common the colonists who dumped those boxes of Tea into Boston Harbor.

Just about a year ago the Tea Parties attracted the national spotlight. In the spirit of the Boston Tea Party in 1773, these Americans are protesting what they feel is recent skyrocketing government spending at taxpayers' expenses.

They concentrated their anger on the second $700 billion plus government bailout within a six month period last year. Let's put that into perspective. In less than six months, under two separate administrations, roughly $1.5 trillion in taxpayer money was distributed in large part to failing banks. Among countless shady book-keeping tricks many of these bailed-out banks practiced, some have histories of selling sub-prime mortgages to Americans. African-Americans were specifically targeted by these predator lenders.

After billions in taxpayers' monies were printed and handed out, President Obama initiated a year long campaign for healthcare reform. As the summer months whizzed by, Tea Party demonstrators and the American-electorate at large grew more frustrated with the Obama Administration and the democrats in congress. Several polls indicated that Americans did not want the President's health care reform legislation to pass. Angry constituents lashed out at their congresspersons urging them to reject the murky proposal. Scott Brown's election in Massachusetts earlier this year, which some deemed, "the shot heard round the world," was meant to plunge the final stake into the bill's heart and carry the message to Washington: stop the outrageous spending! But the cries of Americans went unheard... or should I say ignored?

In response to sexism permeating the movement I draw your attention to a recent Quinnipiac University poll which found that 55 percent of self-identifying Tea Party activists surveyed are female. And on an anecdotal level, can anyone say Sarah Palin? The former Alaska governor and potential 2012 presidential candidate just concluded her countrywide Tea Party Express tour. Ms. Palin is one of the most prominent American feminists I can think of.

The nationwide poll, which included 2000 registered voters, also found that only 19 percent of American voters trust the government to do the right thing "almost all the time" or "most of the time."

No doubt, the Tea Party movement, is conservative. However, that does not mean it is entirely Republican. Nearly 30 percent of Tea Party activists identify as Independent. More than 10 percent say they are Democrats.

In response to criticism that the Tea Party is an extremist movement, take a look at the rally held in Boston last week. An estimated 5,000-6,000 people turned out on the Common without incident. There were no arrests. They assembled peacefully and lawfully exercised their first amendment rights.

Is the Tea Party largely comprised of whites? Yes. So is UMass Amherst faculty and students. Does that mean it has a racially-motivated agenda? No. With all the reporters, cameras and microphones, a single audio or video clip of racism or homophobia have yet to surface, although several serious allegations have been made. Bet your bottom dollar, certain media outlets have been searching high and low for them. The Tea Party has made it clear they aren't fans of President Obama's political docket. Remember when George Bush was President not so long ago and the antiwar anti-Bush protests sponsored by the liberal left? This is America. And when people aren't happy in America on either side of the political spectrum, they protest, and they do so loudly.

There may be no titular figurehead leading the Tea Parties, but they are united by a common goal: reign in government spending. That has been the recurring theme since the get-go.

I would like to see the Tea Party become the third national political party in the United States. I'd also like to see it actively recruiting more minorities. Like many Tea Party activists, I've had it up to here with both Democrats and Republicans alike. I want more choices. But what I'd like to see most of all is the removal of the term "tea-bagging" in connection with political organizing. To all the dirty minds out there: grow up.

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu.

Internet, animals key to peace

Matthew M. Robare

For many long and painful years, world peace has been a utopian dream held in the highest regards by philosophers, religious leaders, politicians and activists. Every generation has sworn to pursue the dream, but they have always failed as some new war or crisis arose to shake their ideals to their foundations and dash their hopes and dreams to smithereens.

But no more.

The key to world peace is in the hands of this generation. We have the power to make a world without war or genocide, a freer world, a better world. We must not throw away this chance as previous generations have. It will require much hard work and painful sacrifice, but ultimately we will be able to leave the world in a much better condition than it is now.

The secret is in the confluence of the two most powerful forces known to man: the Internet and cute animals doing cute things.

Don't laugh, just think to yourself how many times you've gone online and been reduced to baby-talk and smiles by looking at a cute little puppy or fuzzy kitten playing with a ball or some string, or it's so small it can fit comfortably in a shoe with just a fuzzball sticking out. I bet just thinking about it you're getting that warm feeling spreading around your body and a soft smile is coming to your face.

Now imagine that you're a terrorist or warlord or Pentagon brass and you're interrupted in planning your next action because someone has e-mailed you a picture of fluffy bunny rabbit curled up on some bedding sleeping soundly. Or it's a picture of a baby dressed as a bunny rabbit. It's going to be hard killing someone or ordering someone else to kill someone after that.

The secret is in the confluence of the two most powerful forces known to man: the internet and cute animals doing cute things.

Even better, while some religions or ideologies might reject conventional means of achieving peace – disarmament, negotiations, the continued existence of Israel as a pre-requisite – not even the most depraved ideology or militant fundamentalist interpretation of a religion can object to cute animals.

If we have the tools for achieving and insuring a lasting peace for all our posterity, what would the method be for implementing them?

Firstly, we would need to guarantee good internet access to everyone on Earth, starting with those already in conflict zones. This could be accomplished either through the extension of currently existing technology or the development of a wireless network that truly reaches around the globe through a combination of existing internet infrastructure and satellite technology. It would have to be fairly high speed and inexpensive, as well as capable of penetrating deep into armored bunkers and caves.

Next, all these people with intent to disturb the peace and freedom of the rest of us will need computers to access the internet. Thankfully, that can be accomplished very easily: the $100 laptop is already available and in the process of being distributed around the world. It would be simplicity itself to commercialize it and probably even make them cheaper. Digital cameras can be had for around $20 at Wal-Mart.

More importantly, satellite internet technology may enable us to get around political obstacles such as the Great Firewall of China, although I don't think fluffy muffkin fuzzy kitty poses any threat to the People's Republic of China or the Communist Party.

Peace is indeed within our grasp.

The ability of cute animals to melt even the hardest of hearts is not something we can pass up. The world has been waiting for this chance, this unique moment in history when we have the technology and the will and the skills to accomplish this calling of peace. It must not be wasted.

Jimi Hendrix once said that "When the power of love overcomes the love of power the world will know peace." He lived in an age before the LOLcat, but had he survived to the present I am sure he would have revised the saying to, "When the power of cute overcomes the desire to kill the world will know peace."

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Time for seniors to think about future

Matt Kushi

Ah, spring is in the air. The trees are budding and the flowers are blooming even in New England. It is the time of year where college students turn their attention to love, summer prospects and wait, textbooks?

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, it is indeed that time of year again. While the poets may be correct about the glory of spring, much of the poetry that college kids are reading right now is in preparation for final exams.

The end of the school year always provides for some interesting rituals for students. These include all-nighters in the library, finishing term papers while watching the sun come up and studying until your head feels like it may explode.

It is also the time of year to start wishing the departing senior class farewell. This year, it is the Class of 2010 that is currently strolling around campus with both joy and nervousness in their hearts.

For the past four years, many of us seniors have lived the typical college life. We have lived life to the fullest and had a lot of fun. Suddenly, we are confronted with the fact that our college days are almost complete. An era of time in our lives is concluding. Though we may know where we wish to go with our futures, there is still a touch of uncertainty. The view of the unforeseen future can be a scary one.

However, we should have no reason to fear. This is merely where the journey of our lives resumes. Our journey does not simply end because we are graduating from college. There is still a whole lifetime to live. For some, it is time to enter the "real world" and contribute to society. For others, the time has come to further better themselves by attending graduate school. The spotlight has been thrust upon us, and it is time for us to shine and contribute to making this world a better place.

Regardless of our backgrounds and our ambitions, we are all capable of making this world a better place. All we need to do is believe in ourselves.

For the past 22 years, we have been watching as others have run the world. Now, it is our turn. It is our time to leave a mark on this world. We are fully capable of this task. Every single one of us is ready. We are the next generation that will be handed the reins to this ever so quickly changing world. The time has come for us to show the world that we are fully capable of leaving this world a better place than when we were born into it.

Now is the time in our lives where we must realize that we are not just another face in the crowd. We are all unique individuals that can change the world in some way. For most of us, the way in which we affect the world will be small. However, we must remember that the world only changes in small steps. As the saying goes, "Rome wasn't built in a day."

Many of us will move on to the traditional 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. jobs. Some will become scholars. Some will become writers. Others will go on to be humanitarians, doctors or members of the armed forces. Some are future teachers, while others are still future athletes.

Regardless of our backgrounds and our ambitions, we are all capable of making this world a better place. All we need to do is believe in ourselves. We need to continue living with an open mind and an open heart.

Earlier this semester, I had a guest speaker in one of my classes. This man's name was Vaughn Williams. I wasn't expecting much of a speech; it was 8 a.m. after all. The speech that I heard Mr. Williams give that morning was one of the best I had ever heard. It made sense, not only in the field in which my class was, but in life as well.

Part of what Mr. Williams stated that morning was, in life, there is motivation and influence. One can't motivate another person to do or be something, he stated. Rather, we inspire others and are inspired by others. The motivation has to come from within.

As I think of Mr. Williams' message, I think of what it means to those of us who will be graduating so soon. We have been given the strength to help change history and the world through the tools of education. However, in order to make the change we wish to see happen, we must be motivated to be that change. Only then will we be able to put to work the ideas that have inspired us and have the power to inspire others. As I look at not only the Class of 2010, but our generation as a whole, I believe that we are ready to take part in this history shaping process.

So, as we celebrate all that we have accomplished thus far, let us keep in the back of our minds that the journey has only just begun. Let us utilize the skills that we have so carefully crafted in our time here at the University of Massachusetts and make our predecessors proud. Let us assure them that the help that they will be receiving from our ranks is not the help that will drag the effort to better this world down but will the kind of help that raises our country and our world to new unimaginable heights. Let us prove that our time is now.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

Fed Up? Ed/Op.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Minutemen defeat ASU, Warhawks en route to championship

By Scott Cournoyer
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's club rugby team took two steps closer to winning the national championship over the weekend, beating Wisconsin-Whitewater 32-18 and Arizona State 22-6 to advance to the semi-finals.

UMass (10-1) used its aggressive style of passing patterns in close proximity to confuse the opponent to the point of committing unnecessary penalties.

"We feel like we surprised our opponents pretty well," said UMass coach Al Baker. "We found ways of exploiting our opponent's weaknesses, such as kicking into open spaces and playing aggressive right out of the gate."

Baker said his club became stronger as the game went on against the Warhawks, and that the wins on back-to-back days showed a lot about his team's passion to win.

"We feel like we can compete with anybody right now," Baker said.

The Minutemen faced two of the top 16 teams in division II rugby, first sending home the best ranked team on Saturday in the Midwest region.

UMass continued its style of grinding the ball up the field and scoring, but the kicking game was a key factor in the victory.

"Our junior Josh Reed stepped in to fill the shoes as penalty and extra point kicker, and stepped up big time," Baker said. "We forced them to commit penalties in the try zone due to our attack style, and it gave us the opportunity to put up some easy points."

In the game on Sunday, UMass stifled the Sun Devils high-scoring offense, allowing six points.

"We really focused on using defensive patterns that would allow us to keep them contained to certain areas the field," Baker said.

Without a full day of rest in between games, UMass faced a team that was undefeated.

"They're a really good club that plays an aggressive style of play," Baker said.

Arizona won the Southern California regional championship in the fall and was No. 2 in the top 25 poll going into the matchup.

UMass' offensive strategy has been successful all season, including the recent Cherry Blossom tournament, where the team combined to outscore its opponents 77-34 over four games.

"Playing an aggressive style, we knew that [Arizona] would be like us, in a sense that most of their strength came from working a lot of people on the ball at once," Baker said. "We were able to spread them out a little, while keeping our guys close together and retain the ball quickly."

The Minutemen will make their way to Albany, NY this Saturday to face Albany.

"At this point in the season, we're in full-gear, ready to compete against anyone," Baker said. "But, we also know the importance of rest and time to heal. We'll continue to play our style of game, getting in the guys most fresh and healthy, and prepare for the final four in two weeks."

UMass will take on Temple in the Final Four in two weeks. Baker stated that the challenge is a difficult one, but he believed his team is up to the task.

"This weekend showed something about us," Baker said. "It takes a team, working together the whole game to win in rugby. This weekend showed that we can hang with anyone, and we hope to continue our success when we head out west."

Scott Cournoyer can be reached at scournoy@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?

On-Campus & Local Business Ads for [illegible]

You could see your ad here!

Best way to get to the campus community!

ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

www.kaminsrealestate.com

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
- PERRY APTS.
- 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
- LANTERN COURT APTS.
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.

400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

IMPORTANT NOTICE
REGARDING YOUR STUDENT REFUND

THE STUDENT REFUND PROCESS IS CHANGING!

The Bursar's Office is Going Green Again! Beginning in MAY 2010, student refunds will ONLY be automatically distributed to students who are enrolled in the University's Excess Express (direct deposit) service. This is the final phase of our office's paper-less processing initiative to provide faster service, sustainable business practices, and elimination of long lines at the office!

Students who are eligible for a refund (i.e., have a credit balance on their student account that is refundable) will automatically receive a student refund ONLY if they have signed up for Excess Express (direct deposit). Students who do not have an active Excess Express enrollment will have their balances remain as a credit toward subsequent charges.

Students who need a paper check will need to complete a request form for each refund available on their account. This form and accompanying instructions will be available on the Bursar's website.

Sign up today for Excess Express through your SPIRE access to expedite your future student refunds. More information on Excess Express can be found on the Bursar's website at www.umass.edu/bursar/.

GLOBAL COMFORT FOOD

Taste OF UMASS 2010

THURSDAY APRIL 22
from 4:30 to 8:00 pm

The nation's largest campus food service
Home Comfort Food

FOOD
- 80 booths

COMPETITION
- Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest
- UMass Idol – Singing Contest
- Student Iron Chef Competition

PRIZES
- Apple iPad
- Many fabulous prizes
- Red Sox tickets

FREE
For students on the Meal Plan or $10 cash for faculty/staff and non-meal plan students
$12 General Public

FUN
- Celebrity Chef Jet Tila presents Giant Sushi Roll (40 feet)
- Celebrity MC Kevin Brauch

APPEARANCES
- NE Patriot Cheerleaders
- Student Dance Group
- Minuteman Mascot
- UMass Cheerleaders & Dance Team
- Wally the Green Monster

ENTERTAINMENT
- Stilt Walker

SUSTAINABILITY
- Local Produce
- Seafood
- Home Comfort Food

All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to the Mullins Center will leave at 4:00pm. Berkshire and Worcester re-open at 9 pm.

PUBLIC WELCOME

YCMP YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
RMP THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
RESTAURANTS Ivy

Off The Wall Games

WARHAMMER 40,000

Rise of the ElDrazi Party Weekend April 24 & 25.
Scan OffTheWallGameStore.com for details.

MAGIC

Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!

Hours: 10-11 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russell St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 2010 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WCLN informs with blunt honesty

By Elyse Horowitz
Collegian Staff

If you didn't see Body Politics 2010, a show presented on April 16 and 17, you missed the most powerful and engaging performance of the semester.

Presented by the Women of Color Leadership Network (WCLN), a program of the Everywoman's Center, Body Politics 2010 is a collection of monologues written by and talking about women of color. During this year's performance, 18 women transcended their roles as students, faculty, mothers and daughters to share their deepest emotions with a crowded Bowker Auditorium.

The evening opened with a few words spoken by Hind Mari, director of the WCLN program. After giving the obligatory thank-you's, Mari pointed out that this show, in its seventh year, is "as unique and diverse as the women in it," and that she hoped the production would educate audience members.

First onto the auditorium stage came six female high school students, all participants in the Girls, Incorporated program based in Holyoke. Girls, Inc. has a self-declared goal of inspiring young girls "to be strong, smart and bold" by providing a positive and educational environment for them to thrive in. The six lively girls who attended Friday night's performance recited a collection of poems, including descriptions of themselves, as well as descriptions of their individual cultural and ethnic roots.

The main event opened with a monologue about space, describing not only the safe space that the performers encouraged throughout the auditorium, but also addressing the other spaces that have been deemed unsafe by hate and segregation. The cast members described themselves as leaders and activists, and prepared audience members for what they were about to witness by reminding their own parents that they are no longer little girls. Overall, the theme of the night was to respect the performers and their opinions, and acknowledge the information they were unleashing into the crowd.

While most topics addressed were ones which primarily affect non-white women, such as dreadlocks and Black Entertainment Television, other monologues touched upon subjects that matter to all females, such as rape, motherhood and healthy relationships.

One resounding message that was portrayed was the idea of conforming to stereotypes. Cast member and University of Massachusetts junior Rosaline Abraham led the ensemble in a monologue titled "Too Much of Everything" to address this idea, proclaiming that everyone is considered to be too much of something — too tall, too skinny, too black — but owning these attributes is important to self-acceptance. She reminded audience members that they can never be too much of themselves.

A more humorous segment was presented as a way of showing that assimilating a multitude of cultures into one's lifestyle does not cause a person to understand the traditions, food, clothes and dances of that culture. For example, the UMass dining halls attempt to incorporate a different menu in honor of Black History Month resulted in offering foods stereotypically eaten by blacks, such as fried chicken and cornbread. One cast member went so far as to exclaim, "Just because you slept with a black guy in Southwest does not mean you understand black culture!"

The girls pleaded with the audience members to work for their black education, not to mooch off stereotypes portrayed in television, music, art or other forms of mainstreamed culture.

In another personal anecdote, Malis Locung, a mother of two and UMass Amherst staff member, addressed her feelings towards the toys available to her children. While her son enjoys playing with toy guns, she feels that this speaks to the "high and unjust number of black men in jails." She believes that her daughter, who plays with Barbie dolls, shouldn't be confined to the idea of letting a man to hand her a fairy-tale ending.

Many girls thanked their family members after their deep and honest monologues, saying that they helped them overcome racial struggles. The women constantly challenged themselves and each other to confront their personal emotions while standing on the stage in front of an entire crowd. There were a few particularly emotional moments, in which cast members supported each other with tissues and rubbing each others' backs.

One particular moment occurred when a cast member allowed herself to tell the audience the shame she felt as a child, knowing that her father had not gone to college, and was a late-night construction worker. While she first felt that he must not have been intelligent enough to gain a higher education, she came to learn as she got older that he was unable to afford college as a non-white American. Each time a cast member struggled through tears to complete her monologue, the audience's silence was shocking; it was as if the individual cast members and audience members were engaging in a one-on-one conversation. The only sounds that could be heard at this time were sniffles from the crowd, mirroring the tears of the cast members.

The night ended with the women explaining that they were self-proclaimed ambassadors between minority groups and whites. They say they don't choose to be in them, but were put in these socially-constructed boxes by others, who have further perpetrated these stereotypes. They all have been oppressed, and they all stand against it together in an effort to allow women of color to be seen as more than their appearance.

According to a press release, Body Politics 2010 was supported in part by the Native American Student Association, the Amherst Cultural Council, MotherWoman and Student Affairs ECSA grant.

Elyse Horowitz can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu.

Dickinson's secret life revealed in new book

By Lindsay Orlow
Collegian Staff

In today's world of cell phones, laptops and cable television, it's sometimes easy to forget Amherst's past. Certainly, the Pioneer Valley remains an area dominated by a rural, agrarian lifestyle. A five-minute drive down Route 9 is all that's needed to remind the 21st century college student that Amherst and the surrounding towns are — and have always been — made up of farmland. However, even today's farmers have access to all the modern conveniences that college students enjoy. Jerome Charyn's novel "The Secret Life of Emily Dickinson" serves not only to offer a hypothetical look at one of Amherst's most mysterious celebrities, but also to give readers a sometimes entertaining, sometimes sobering window into Amherst's 19th century past.

For fans of Dickinson's work, this novel offers a compelling look into what might have been the substance of the reclusive poet's life. Beyond the knowledge gained from primary sources, not much is known about Dickinson's daily life. Charyn has gathered the facts of Dickinson's life from three places: dates and names garnered from official documents; analysis of her poetry; and readings of her personal letters to various acquaintances. From this rather shaky scaffolding, Charyn has managed to author an elegant — and moreover, believable — work of prose.

The novel is filled with landmarks easily recognizable to anyone who's spent time in the Valley. Dickinson spends the first portion of the novel at Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, known today as Mount Holyoke College. Her father's house, where she spends much of the rest of the novel, is right on North Pleasant Street. Charyn's Dickinson spends a significant amount of time walking through both the town of Amherst and the grounds of Amherst College. All of these locations are described with a slightly chilling combination of familiarity and foreignness: North Pleasant Street is still North Pleasant Street today, but without the horses, carriages, and women in hoop-skirted dresses.

Charyn also uses fictional characters to explore and flesh out the foggier details of Dickinson's life. Dickinson spent only 10 months at Mount Holyoke, and the official reasons for her departure are unknown. Charyn gives Dickinson an enemy: a serving girl in love with Dickinson's brother. This serving girl serves as a plot device, indirectly causing Dickinson's departure from Mount Holyoke, as well as propelling and preventing a number of miniature romances — also somewhat fictional — that Dickinson encounters in her earlier years.

In Charyn's version of history, Dickinson's life is no boring tale of an agoraphobic woman, locked in her room writing verse after verse of poetry. Charyn breathes life into darkened corner's of Dickinson's life, and he does so by modeling his own writing after Dickinson's poetry. The majority of the novel is written in the first person, from Dickinson's perspective. Charyn's literary genius has been to translate Dickinson's poetic genius into a work of prose. Readers might almost believe that Charyn merely unearthed a lost diary or autobiography written by Dickinson herself, artfully chronicling the lost details of her reclusive life.

Lindsay Orlow can be reached at lorlow@student.umass.edu

Jerome Charyn's "The Secret Life of Emily Dickinson" looks into the mysterious background of Amherst's most famous historical figure. The book is based primarily on her poetry as well as letters and documents.

Decades later, 'Z' still lives on

By Andrew Cogan
Collegian Staff

A French film that debuted in 1969, "Z" is a political thriller directed by Costa Gavras based on the novel by Greek author Vassilis Vassilikos. Steeped in the fractured and highly antagonistic politics of Cold War Greece, the film depicts the moral struggle against state repression, capturing both its poignancy and fragility.

Taking place in the early 1960s, "Z" tells the story of democratic politician and peace activist Gregoris Lambrakis, whose assassination by right-wing extremists catalyzed a wave of popular dissent against the government. Lambrakis' death and its subsequent investigation exposed the government's thoroughly corrupt attempts to maintain power via coercive and violent means.

In the film, Lambrakis is represented by Zei, played by Yves Montand, a leftist politician attacked several times while attempting to speak at a peace demonstration. A few days later, Zei succumbs to his wounds and passes away. A government prosecutor played by Jean-Louis Trintignant is charged with investigating the incident. Jacques Perrin, cast as a photojournalist, comes forward with evidence suggesting foul play. Irene Pappas also appears briefly in the film as Zei's wife.

Though "Z" enjoys the talents of a star international cast, the spotlight is broadly focused across an array of major and minor characters. Perrin and Trintignant certainly play key roles, but their personal stories never drive the plot. They appear only as the events necessitate their presence on screen. The absence of character drama separates "Z" from other movies. It prevents the movies blistering pace from being hindered by superfluous details, making space for the action to tell the story.

Indeed, the action is what makes "Z" so compelling. Once the opening scenes set the stage, the movie hurtles forward at breakneck speed, building with intensity as the investigation narrows in on the truth behind Zei's death. The result is pure excitement and suspense.

Also worth noting is the films score, composed by Mikis Theodorakis, which became a hit after the movie's release. In 1970, the soundtrack was awarded the Anthony Asquith Award for Film Music by the British Academy of Film and Television Arts.

The film garnered a multitude of other accolades, including an Academy Award honoring Francoise Bennot for Best Film Editing. It received a Golden Globe for Best Foreign Language Film in 1970, and Trintignant got Best Actor at the 1969 Cannes Film Festival. Also in 1969, the New York Film Critics Circle Awards dubbed "Z" the Best Film, while honoring Gavras with Best Director.

To this day, "Z" remains powerful because it resists the temptation to brush over truth with fiction. Based on actual events, the film does not deviate from reality; it portrays real people whose stories speak poignantly without the aid of Hollywood drama. It is in many ways a historical account, just as much as it is an exciting political thriller and an excellent film. Above all, "Z" is a bold political statement that decries the evils of state repression. It is astonishingly relevant even decades after its original release.

Andrew Cogan can be reached at acogan@student.umass.edu.

The classic political thriller "Z" played at Amherst Cinema on April 11 and 14 as part of their "Essential Cinema" series.

Hampshire College hosts 24th Reproductive Rights Conference

By Christiana McDougal
Collegian Staff

This weekend's 24th annual Reproductive Rights Conference for Student and Community Activists held at Hampshire College was a huge success. Included at the event were a variety of workshops which ran in two hour sessions throughout each day, free HIV testing and many speakers who came from across the country, as well as three Nicaraguan former-revolutionary feminists who participated in discussions of sexual and reproductive rights justice with the public.

Workshop topics were comprised of discussions of gender, economic justice, sexuality and Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, Questioning and Intersex (LGBTQI) rights, abortion rights, access to health care, birthing and parenting rights, climate and the environment, comprehensive sex education, contraceptive practices, peace and safety, political action and reproductive technologies. Each workshop addressed topics that function as an integral springboard for anyone interested in learning more about inequality and oppression as it relates to reproductive rights and sexuality.

The event was sponsored by the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program (CLPP) and the Population and Development Program (PopDev).

CLPP, which was created in 1981 in response to the Reagan administration and the anti-abortion wave that came with it, seeks to call attention to the lack of both international and national reproductive rights that are facing many people today. They work alongside students and activists to both gain and give more knowledge about reproductive rights and sexuality activism.

The target goal for PopDev, who partnered with CLPP for this event, is "to change conventional thinking and policies about population growth that threaten reproductive rights, social justice and our environment," which is accomplished through "research, facts, expert analysis and activist and educational publications." The group also aims to debunk views that claim it is solely population growth that has led to environmental degradation, unequal access to food and agriculture and overall poverty and instead emphasize the socioeconomic and political inequalities that create oppression in the first place.

If attendees were not already pre-registered to be at the event, they were required to fill out a quick survey, give a donation if they were able to and were then given a folder for the event that was packed with information. In it was educational material not only about the event itself, but many other educational pamphlets and mini books that dealt with issues of reproductive health internationally as well as national informative literature and strategies for social justice and "Tips on how to be an activist and/or ally in the movement to end gender oppression".

Within the "Resisting the Right" workshop, a spokeswoman for the Washington D.C.-based health awareness organization, Advocates for Youth, spoke informingly about the conservative right and the detrimental effects of solely teaching abstinence only policies in schools. She referred to the abstinence only movement as being on "the spectrum of crazy," discussing how the conservative right includes in their attempt to persuade the public that "condoms break 30% of the time" and that "HIV is spread through sweat and tears." The "no sex until marriage" rhetoric that is taught in school also demoralizes the LGBTQI community, she explained, who currently cannot even get married under federal law.

Hampshire College was a perfect place to hold these workshops, allowing people from around the Pioneer Valley as well as interested students or activists from all five colleges to participate in creating awareness of the injustices that are committed against people due to their sexuality, gender, race or beliefs.

Overall, the conference was a huge success in raising the awareness of reproductive rights and discrimination many people face, as well as helping to build a strong community around this issue within the Pioneer Valley. It can be assumed that as long as there is this continued kind of interest and support, the annual conference and the movement for reproductive justice will be ever-growing.

Christiana McDougal can be reached at cmcdougal@student.umass.edu

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

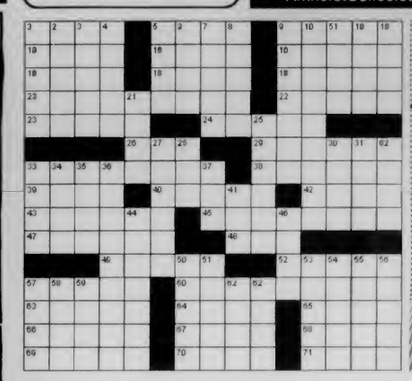
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffonvillage.com

Son of a Fruit Cake!

		5	8
	1	7	9			3
		6	1				9
	5			6				8
			2	5		7
2		9					3	5
	9
3					7	6
		2			4		1

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!
NEW! 3 Sessions:
• Session I: May 17 - June 7
• Session II: June 8 - July 13
• Session III: July 14 - August 17
Classes fill up quickly...REGISTER NOW
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
free: 1 coffee drink
The Whisk(e)y Bar
Rare Whiskies
Wine
Cocktails
AmherstCoffee.com



YEAH BOY!!!

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

ACROSS
1. Tardy
5. Lady's title
9. Majestic
14. Lyric poems
15. Wild goat
16. San Antonio fort
17. Where the sun rises
18. Prefix meaning "After" or "Beyond"
19. Almost 40 inches
20. Very irritable
22. Alter
23. Impolite look
24. Tend a fire
26. Arranger (abbrev.)
29. Lime tree
33. 2nd largest city in Canada
38. The whole thing
39. Arch type
40. Midget
42. Affirm
43. A citrus fruit
45. Without agony
47. Plant with stinging hairs
48. African antelope
49. Directed
52. Triangular formation
57. Sail supports
60. Sundog
63. Eskimo
64. Chocolate cookie
65. Pow!
66. Work out
67. Trade
68. 1 1 1 1
69. Spoken for
70. Swirl
71. Blemish

DOWN
1. Loamy deposit
2. Customize
3. Electrical pioneer Nikola
4. Aromatic compound
5. 10 cent coin
6. Assist
7. Mixed-blood
8. Precise
9. A small fireproof dish
10. Primary
11. Box office take
12. Ends a prayer
13. God Almighty 21. Close
25. Any unsaturated aliphatic hydrocarbon
27. Cash in
28. Uncooked
30. Plunge
31. Cupid, to the Greeks
32. Current event information
33. A natural satellite
34. Monster
35. Tidy
36. Conditional
37. One circuit around a track
41. Tattered cloth 44. Gleam
46. Naked
50. Part of a lyric poem
51. Challenged
53. Arm joint
54. Tropical vine
55. Laser printers need this
56. Anxiety
57. Fog
58. Dwarf buffalo
59. Pout
61. Absorb written material
62. Sacred

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Is that a TV or are you just happy to see me?

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Life isn't as easy as the infinite grind cheat code from Tony Hawk Proskater.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Hey! This isn't where I parked my car!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Once you've had some of Undercover Brother, there is no other.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
What are you doing?! You almost laid down on my fresh pile of "boogie".

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
This is a mass text message. Does anybody know where I am?

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
You just stopped at a stop sign and waited for it to turn green. Lay off the chronic.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Congratulations! You have 364 days until you listen to Cypress Hill again.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Today seems like a perfect day to bake. Like brownies. Or cookies. Or youself.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
We all know the terrible things you keep in your personal secret garden.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
If you learn yoga, you will have the opportunity to try that thing you've always wanted to try.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Nothing cures a day of the blues better than a tall, warm glass of milk accompanied by a super-sized nipple.

Quote of the Day

"There cannot be a stressful crisis next week. My schedule is already full."

—Henry Kissinger

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Bartenders Needed. EARN UP TO $250 PER DAY. FT/PT No Exp. Req. Will Train Call NOW 877-408-1078

FOR RENT
Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

FOR RENT
Amherst: 2 Bedroom Open House! Come to Mill Valley Estates on April 24th, 12-4 PM. Move-in specials! Whole Foods gift cards just for showing up! *500 Riverglade Drive, Apt F. 253-7377.

www.millvalleyApts.com (*while supplies last) www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

COUNSELING
Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. 413-256-0772

SERVICES
Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Plourde plumets Bobcats in win

Pitcher throws fifth no-hitter of the year in UMass victory

By Kara Deyermenjian
Collegian Staff

Pitcher Sara Plourde and the Massachusetts softball team defeated Quinnipiac 6-0 Tuesday afternoon at home, after Plourde threw her fifth no-hitter of the season and sixth of her career. With the win, UMass increases its winning streak to 13 and improves its record to 28-7, while the Bobcats fall to 21-21.

Plourde, whose record improves to 27-5 with the win, had eight strikeouts and only allowed two batters to reach base on two walks. The sophomore is the nation's leader in strikeouts and has a season total of 399 strikeouts along with 12 recorded shutouts.

UMass	6
Bobcats	0

"I never know when I'm pitching a no-hitter," Plourde said. "I don't even realize until someone tells me after the game. I don't want to get it in my head, so I don't think about it."

Defensive play for the Minutewomen was consistently strong throughout the afternoon, with Whitney Williams and Teea Rogers both snagging hard line drives out of the air.

"The team made a lot of good plays behind Sara, including Williams' and Rogers' two line drive stops. Those are the kinds of plays you need when a pitcher's struggling and they made those plays happen," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said.

The Minutewomen came out strong and managed to score two unearned runs in the second inning after impressive base running by pinch-runners Christine Della Vecchia and Jill Andrews. With Della Vecchia and Andrews recording two stolen bases each, UMass stole a season-high seven bases.

The Bobcats could not get any momentum going before UMass struck again in the third inning, as Katie Bettencourt reached on an error. A single by Meghan Carta moved Bettencourt to third, and a sacrifice fly by Jessica Serio allowed her to score easily, as UMass increased its lead to 3-0.

The Minutewomen wasted no time tacking on more runs in the fourth inning, after Carly Normandin got on base on a fielders choice and then stole second to put her into scoring position. Kyllie Magill then hit a run batted in single, bringing Normandin home and closing the gap.

Sarah Reeves had momentum on her side as she came up to bat, and managed to launch a 2-1 pitch out of the complex. The two-run home run was her eighth of the season. Reeve's impressive batting performances were recognized last week, as she earned the A-10 player of the week accolade.

"I think it was a good win for both offense and defense," she said. "We had a lot of good defensive plays; the team was a good hitting team. They put the ball in play and our defense had the chance to make our plays and they did it. They put everything away."

Next up, UMass hits the road again to take on Saint Louis in a two-game Atlantic 10 series over the weekend.

The battle against the Billikens will be the Minutewomen's first conference game since they took on Charlotte back on April 8-9.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyerme@student.umass.edu

Whitney Williams went 0-for-2 with a walk on Tuesday, as the Minutewomen defeated the Bobcats, 6-0.

Offense producing despite not getting timely hits from players

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Even when the hitting isn't going well for the Massachusetts softball team, the offense finds a way to score runs.

Quinnipiac threw two no-hit innings to start the game, but the Minutewomen still took a 2-0 lead to start the third inning, finishing the game with a combined .217 average and while still scoring six runs.

UMass (28-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) did so by taking advantage of the Bobcats' mistakes and had solid baserunning throughout the game, finishing with seven stolen bases.

Outfielder Carly Normandin (1-for-3) had two stolen bases and a run before getting her first hit in the sixth inning. The senior made a heads-up play in the fourth inning when she reached first base on a fielder's choice, then stole second as QU pitcher Emily Bellush nonchalantly walked towards the mound.

"With a play where they break it up at two, they're not really paying attention, they're not really in position, so you just kind of take a look down there, and if they're not paying attention, then you just take advantage of that and take the extra base," Normandin said.

She eventually scored after second baseman Kyle Magill singled to centerfield.

It wasn't just UMass' approach on the basepaths that led to the win. The Minutewomen also took advantage of QU's mistakes, as Bellush issued four walks while the defense committed two errors.

The pitcher's throwing error helped sophomore Katie Bettencourt reach second base, and eventually scored on designated player Jessica Serio's sacrifice fly.

Senior Jill Andrews, who started two games all year, has made the most of her limited playing time this season, serving mainly as a pinch-runner. Against the Bobcats, she showed her effectiveness on the bases with two stolen bases and a run in the second inning, despite never taking an at-bat.

Andrews pinch-ran for Libby and stole second base, while freshman Teea Rogers reached first on a fielder's choice and got Andrews to third. Andrews eventually reached home on a double-steal with Rogers to give the Minutewomen their second run of the game.

"You know that it's pretty much you're only time to shine, so you're going to try to have to do something to benefit the team, so if that's getting two stolen bases, then it's getting two stolen bases," Andrews said.

Despite her experience with the team, the outfielder never started much in her career, but still tries to make the most of her chances.

"I'm just trying to be a leader on whether it's going out there and starting, if that's not what the team needs for me, then I'm going to be anxious to go into pinch-run, pinch-hit, anything the team needs for us to win," Andrews said.

The bench had few problems creating runs during the win over the Bobcats. Pinch runners combined for four of the Minutewomen's stolen bases and were responsible for two of the runs.

UMass coach Elaine Sortino said after the win that she believes the bench is playing a critical role in the offense this season. Even if her bench players don't get much playing time, the depth they add makes her team even more of a threat than it already is to A-10 opponents.

"We're very fortunate in that we have five or six [players] that can come in lots of different situations and run for us," Sortino said. "They added a lot to the ability that we had today to manufacture some runs."

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

UM falls to Blue Devils

Pitching and fielding miscues result in defeat for Minutemen

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team once again saw its pitching staff falter and another contest slip away, losing 17-12 to Central Connecticut State.

Trouble came early for the Minutemen (7-20, 5-7 A-10), who trailed by six runs after three innings of play. Timely hitting by the Blue Devils (15-12) helped them jump out to a two-run first inning lead, and they never looked back.

After a scoreless second inning, the Blue Devil offense exploded with a four-run third inning, including a two-run home run by infielder Pat Epps. UMass starting pitcher Glen Mysho lasted two innings and gave up five earned runs on six hits while striking out one batter.

CCSU	17
UMass	12

"Clearly he struggled right from the start," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "He didn't have command of his curveball and when you're facing good hitters, you've got to have more than two pitches."

The Minutemen answered with three runs of their own in the bottom half of the inning, but could not match the bats of their opponents. Freshman Ryan Cusick contributed an RBI single followed by a sacrifice fly by junior Eric Fredette and an RBI double by outfielder Mike Donato.

In the sixth inning, the offense came alive again for the Minutemen as they scored four times to trim their deficit to one run. Outfielder Alex Fischer, Fredette and junior Matt Gedman each recorded RBI singles and Donato reached base on a throwing error to put the score at 10-9 heading into the seventh inning.

The Blue Devils capitalized on errors and poor pitching by UMass throughout the remainder of the game and added two more runs in the seventh inning as well as an additional five in the top of the ninth. Relievers Charlie Benson and Robert Machado combined to allow eight earned runs on 13 hits and recorded five strikeouts over the same amount of innings.

Three errors on the day and mental mistakes were costly for UMass. Coach Stone said that he understood why some of the errors were made, but not the mental mistakes.

"Those things can happen," Stone said. "You're out there for a while and you have a mental letdown because our pitchers were getting hit all over the place, and that part's tough. That's what leads to errors. But we didn't get anybody out and we needed to compete better out there today."

In the bottom half of the ninth, the Minutemen found their hitting ways again and scored three times. Fischer recorded another RBI single and scored a run, after Fredette drove him in. However, the effort came too late and CCSU held on for the victory.

Despite the loss, Stone said he was happy with the way his offense performed while trailing throughout the game. The Minutemen recorded 14 hits and scored 12 runs in the game.

"I told the guys you always need to stay positive," Stone said. "We have good hitters and we just had to keep fighting and we did. You never know when you can come back. The bad part was that we couldn't get guys out on the other end."

The Minutemen are in action again on Wednesday when they travel to Harvard to a 3:00 p.m. matchup.

Michael Wood can be reached at mewood@student.umass.edu

Kellogg welcomes point guard Traynham, Gibbs to transfer

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

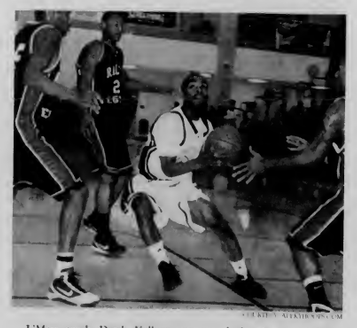
Massachusetts men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg is hoping size doesn't matter when it comes to point guards this season.

The Minutemen signed recruit Daryl Traynham from Upper Marlboro, Maryland, on April 19. He recently played in the Capital Classic, where he finished with 15 points and six assists, with his performance earning him all-tournament honors.

Traynham also earned the Washington Post 2010 All-MLT honors, averaging 23.4 points per game and nine assists. He shot 81.2 percent from the free-throw line this season and scored at least 30 points in four different games.

"I just felt comfortable with the coaches at UMass," Traynham said to UMass Athletics. "I feel that the program is headed in the right direction and UMass has such a family atmosphere with the team."

Traynham played with the D.C. Assault AAU team with freshman Javorn Farrell and incoming freshman Maxie Esho, as Rivals.com ranks him as the 27th point guard and 110th overall in the country.



ESPNU gives him an 87 grade, noting his ability to score off the dribble and his willingness to attack the basket.

Although Traynham verbally committed a few months ago, he had not officially signed his National Letter of Intent. He should get the opportunity to prove himself right away, as sophomore David Gibbs is transferring to another school after breaking his foot on Feb. 2.

Besides Esho, Traynham also joins Jesse Morgan and Raphiael Putney as part of the incoming class. Morgan could be eligible to play for the Minutemen as soon as Spring 2011 and Putney redshirted the 2009-10 season.

UMass is not expected to sign any other players, as both Gibbs and senior Ricky Harris's scholarships spots are now taken.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

UMass coach Derek Kellogg announced the signing of Daryl Traynham, the 101st prospect in this year's class.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

CHANCE OF RAIN / HIGH: 69 LOW: 38 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 2010

Opinions reign at showcase debate

UMass students Brad DeFlumeri and Will Syldor debated in the Cape Cod Lounge yesterday, with topics ranging from affirmative action to abortion, gay marriage and immigration.

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Students, faculty and community members filled the Cape Cod Lounge in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Wednesday night, with students packing in to sit on the floor or stand in the back just to catch a glimpse of a showcase debate between left and right ideologies, sponsored by the Student Legal Service Office, The Silent Majority, The Radical Student Union and the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

With Will Syldor representing the left side of the political spectrum and Brad DeFlumeri on the right, the two UMass students debated hot-button issues ranging from affirmative action to abortion, gay marriage, economics, prison, and immigration.

Moderating the event were Corey M. Carvalho, associate director of the Student Legal Services Office, Charlie Felder, President of the University Democrats, and Alyssa Creamer of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Creamer began by introducing the speakers, and then stated the rules of the debate and gave a brief bio of each speaker.

While introducing DeFlumeri as a die-hard Yankees fan amid boos from the crowd, Felder said half-jokingly, "here's to hoping the Yankee comment is the most controversial thing you hear tonight."

To begin the debate, Felder posed a question to the candidates about affirmative action, using a quote by conservative radio-host and former presidential candidate Alan Keyes. First to speak, Syldor said that "Keyes is a fool." Arguing that there isn't a level playing field for different races in America, Syldor went on to say, "He argues it isn't because of white supremacy, but black ignorance."

DeFlumeri argued that affirmative action wasn't constitutional, citing the Fourteenth Amendment.

"I think affirmative action, any distinction of the government on the basis of race, exacerbates racial ties," he said.

Relating affirmative action to unemployment, DeFlumeri went on make a case for eliminating the federal minimum wage.

"If we were to make a system of high unemployment and a minimum wage system, like we currently have, it's absolutely essential that we understand that the unemployment rate will function as a condition of wages, of what

See DEBATE on page 2

Student health plans in question nationally

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

After completing a 17-month investigation, New York Attorney General Andrew M. Cuomo recently released a letter stating that the results of the probe proved that over 65 institutions of higher learning in New York were essentially charging too much for health insurance and that students were not receiving adequate coverage for the money they spent.

Cuomo claimed such problems as those which were encountered in the investigation included policies that didn't pay for prescriptions, severely overpriced premiums and policies that did not cover suicide or alcohol related incidents. In a letter sent to over 300 schools last week, Cuomo suggested that institutions review their health insurance policies and make changes to plans that could potentially put students at financial risk.

In Massachusetts, the issue has been in the spotlight for some years now, with almost five years passing since health insurance became mandatory for all students in the Commonwealth. The Massachusetts Health Care Reform law, which was enacted in 2006, mandates that almost every resident of Massachusetts must have some form of government-regulated health insurance including all students attending the University of Massachusetts.

According to Karen Dunbar Scully, University Health Services' marketing and communication manager, a law was passed in 1989 that mandated that all college students have health insurance.

"One of the things that I think is important is that there is a big difference between Massachusetts and New York, primarily that Massachusetts has mandated health insurance, therefore, different policies have to be followed," said Scully.

Because of this, students who attend UMass who are enrolled in five or more credits are automatically signed up for the school's health insurance, which is offered through Aetna Student Health.

Students who already have pre-existing health insurance through another company may sign a waiver for Aetna to have the insurance removed from their overall bill.

According to the University Health Services Web site, the cost for a single person to be covered by the school's health insurance for the 2009-2010 school year was $2,322. The Family Plan costs $3,836, and students on the Family Plan must also be signed up for the individual health plan. The Family Plan premium, therefore, reflects the cost of both plans.

According to Bernette A. Melby, executive director at UHS, UMass students are receiving a stellar deal for their money, considering the price they are paying.

"When we are looking at benefit design, we want as many dollars to go to health care as we can get," said Melby. "We've seen other institutions with a target loss of only 40 percent, and our target loss is 80 percent, which means that 20 cents of every dollar goes to staff and costs," she added.

Melby also noted that costs on the insurance aren't going to go down, or that students will not receive money for unused insurance expenses.

"It's insurance," she said. "You may go years without needing it, and that's the way it goes. But when a time comes that you do need it, it's there."

Melby went on to explain that compared to other institutions, UMass students benefit greatly from their insurance.

"In other providers, we're seeing three to five thousand deductibles. We only have a $200 deductible, she said. "Our co-payments are anywhere from $30-$60, and relative to what we are seeing in the market, this is good coverage," said Melby.

"The state mandates that insurance provides $50,000 coverage per year; we offer $250,000," added Scully.

With the UMass health insurance, preferred areas are given 100 percent coverage with a minimal co-pay, and non-preferred areas cover 80 percent of the overall bill. Aetna coverage also provides student access to various discounts and services, such as programs in fields like vision and fitness. For information about the University student health care plan, head to http://www.umass.edu/uhs/insurance.

Tim Jones can be reached at tjones@student.umass.edu.

UMass students, whether they frequent UHS or not, are required to buy health insurance, like all Mass. residents.

Taste of UMass set for today, dining commons to close at 3 p.m.

The 16th-Annual Taste of UMass will be held today from 4:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. at the Mullins Center. PVTA buses to the Mullins Center from across campus will be available starting at 4 p.m., with extra buses running to accommodate the event.

The Taste of UMass is free for all students with a campus meal plan, and $10 for all non-meal plan students and staff. The event is $12 for the general public.

Just like every other year's Taste of UMass, all of the University of Massachusetts dining commons will close today at 3 p.m. for the event. Exceptions to this include the Blue Wall in the Campus Center, the Pita Pit at Worcester and the Southwest Café in Hamden Courtyard, which will all remain open for their normal hours. Worcester and Berkshire dining commons will reopen at 9 p.m. this evening.

This year's Taste of UMass is set to include 75 food booths in the Mullins Center, including one from Home Comfort Foods. It will also feature entertainment, including UMass Idol; a student Iron Chef competition, a Nathan's Hot Dog Eating Contest and a giant U-Mass sushi roll stretching 40 feet. Celebrity chef Jet Tila and Food Network personality Kevin Brauch will also be in attendance for the festivities.

Collegian News Staff

Economist alumnus returns

Economist Eric Janssen, who graduated from UMass in 2004 with a BDIC major, returned to campus to speak yesterday as the Eleanor Bateman Alumni Scholar in Residence.

ARTS & LIVING

Going green the easy way

If you haven't already joined the green initiative, Earth Day is the perfect day to start. You can cut back your impact on the Earth in a few simple ways.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Lacrosse looks to hook Hoyas

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will take on Georgetown on national television Saturday in the ESPNU Warrior Classic at Rentschler Field in Hartford, Conn.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Alex Perry argues that President Obama's new moves towards financial regulation are not what America needs.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, hosted by the Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 57

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Joinson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Lernard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zohniert
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elise Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rubin-Miller
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Asser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Starr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
SENIOR PRODUCER Sara Cody
SENIOR PRODUCER Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Debate moderators Corey M. Carvalho (left), associate director of the Student Legal Services Office, and Charlie Felder, President of the University Democrats.

Sparks fly as showcase debate covers abortion, gay marriage people are being paid federally by the Congress in each state's minimum wage," he said.

DEBATE from page 1

In response to DeFlumeri's call for eliminating the minimum wage, Syldor argued such a measure would not be in workers' interests.

"If you need to eat, you're not going to contemplate your choices of employment," said Syldor.

The next topic discussed was abortion. The moderators, quoting the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), read a statistic stating that 40 percent of abortions in America are undergone by African-American women, though they make up only 13 percent of the population.

Speaking first on the issue, Syldor said, "I would argue that the use of these statistics in many anti-choice arguments wrongfully characterize black women as weak-minded, hypersexual and unable to make their own decisions."

Syldor attempted to make the case that though African-American women were having proportionally more abortions, he did not feel it was because they were persuaded to do so.

"The reason black women are having abortions is because they don't have a supportive partner, and that they cannot afford to have a child," he said.

DeFlumeri opened by using numerous quotes by Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger, afterwards noting that "these groups prey on poor minorities, in inner cities – like Springfield and Holyoke. They mislead the public in their effort to do so," he said.

DeFlumeri argued that it is pro-choice groups themselves which are the cause of the disproportionate demographics in the number of abortions performed.

"Planned Parenthood is bent on profiting from aborting children of the most disadvantaged and susceptible in our society," he said. "They're not going into predominantly suburban areas and pushing forth their pro-abortion, pro-death message."

Perhaps the most heated debate between the speakers and the audience members was when Felder introduced a question about gay marriage.

Quoting Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court Margaret Marshall, Felder asked DeFlumeri to address Marshall's statement that marriage is not a privilege, but a right.

Citing the passage of Proposition 8 in California, DeFlumeri said citizens passing a bill banning gay marriage previously made legal by a State Supreme Court decision showed that the issue isn't supported by majority of the population.

"The public said the state is not going to permit gay marriage," he said. "States should be able to decide which policies work for them."

In response to DeFlumeri's comments, Syldor compared the LGBTQ movement to the abolitionist movement.

"The abolitionists spoke of slavery as an inhumane institution, and were called crazy at the time, because the majority of our society couldn't wrap their heads around the idea," said Syldor. He continued to argue that banning marriage for the LGBTQ community was treating them as second-class citizens, noting that "if you protect the right of a heterosexual couple to get married, but not same-sex couples under the same circumstances, you are blatantly homophobic." DeFlumeri responded to Syldor, denying the link between the ban of slavery and gay marriage.

This topic came up again during the question and answer section, with all questions directed towards DeFlumeri. The first question was asked by SGA Chief Justice of the Student Judiciary Robert Weed, who asked DeFlumeri to clarify his statements on the gay marriage question. DeFlumeri cited the Fourteenth Amendment again, saying that "it was not meant to protect sexual minorities." The questions that followed also focused on asking DeFlumeri to justify his beliefs on gay marriage. After two hours of debate and discussion, moderators called the event to an end.

When asked how he thought the event went, Syldor said he felt it went "alright." He said he was glad so many people came out to watch and participate, though he was uneasy representing the left when he didn't fully consider himself a "leftist."

DeFlumeri felt the debate went well, though he felt people stopped listening to his views after Syldor "began to vilify opponents of gay marriage as 'homophobic,' and instead focused on emotional questions."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mmwillia@student.umass.edu.

Mount Holyoke College's THE NETWORK brings you...
MICKEY AVALON AND BLACKLIGHT AFTER-PARTY
SPUN BY DJ FLO & JONESY
SATURDAY
04.24.10
9:00PM–2:00AM
CHAPIN AUDITORIUM
MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE
PRE-SALE TICKETS AVAILABLE NOW @ UMass (Tix Unlimited)
$15 General Admission Pre-sale
$20 General Admission @ door
NetworkMHC@gmail.com

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road, Rt 9, Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
FREE Heat, Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Select Units
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

Career Services
NEWS OF THE WEEK
Even though the career fairs are over Career Services still has a lot to offer you!
◊ Summer Jobs
◊ Internships
◊ Co-ops
◊ erecruiting data base with thousands of opportunities
◊ Resume and cover letter assistance
◊ Career advising
◊ Workshops in job search strategies, resume writing, career options
◊ Walk in hours Monday through Friday Noon to 4 pm in Goodell 512 ◊
◊ Intro to internships and co-ops workshops are Monday or Thursday at 3 pm in Goodell 508 ◊
WEB SITE: WWW.UMASS.EDU/CAREERS
PHONE: 413-545-2224
UMassAmherst CAREER SERVICES STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE

"I am only one, but I am one. I cannot do everything, but I can do something. And I will not let what I cannot do interfere with what I can do."
- Edward Everett Hale
Third Annual UMass Earthweek Celebration 2010
Thursday, April 22nd & Friday, April 23rd 10am-3pm
On the Dubois Library Lawn
* Student Buisinesses & groups
* Community organizations and farms
* Free Store
* Live Music
* Raffle
* Student lead workshops
* Student bands
* MUSIC
* FOOD
* FUN
* FREE!
Sponsored by: The UMass Eco-Coalition

REPORTER CHECKLIST:
1. Suspenders ... CHECK
2. One crumpled pack of cigarettes ... CHECK
3. Hunger for the truth ... CHECK
Be a reporter for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian!
Send a resume and writing samples to
NEWS @ DAILY COLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

Open 'till 11pm everyday!
FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BEER * All beer prices plus deposit
Stella Artois 24 pk btl $22.99*
Miller Lite 30 pk can $20.49*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl $16.99*
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl $12.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl $11.99*
Opa Opa Light Lager 12 pk btl $10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can $9.99*
Molson 12 pk btl $9.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl $9.99*
LIQUOR
Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml $59.99
Patron Anejo 750 ml $52.99
Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L $25.99
Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml $20.99
Svedka Vodka 1.75 L $19.99
Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L $17.99
Johnnie Walker Red Label 750 ml $20.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $16.99
584-8174
WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties $19.99
Bogle Vinyards Phantom Red Blend $18.99
Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon $14.99
Layer Cake Malbec $13.99
The Velvet Devil Merlot $10.99
Blackstone Merlot $10.99
Mark West Pinot Noir $10.99
Santi Pinot Grigio $10.99
Milbrandt Vineyards Riesling $10.99
Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon $9.99
Callia Alta Malbec $8.99
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Summer sessions begin May 24
Ten sessions.
160 courses.
One great summer.
Framingham STATE COLLEGE | Graduate and Continuing Education
Register now for undergraduate and graduate summer courses. Classes are offered day and night—on-campus, online, or hybrid.
Visit www.framingham.edu/dgce or call 508 626 4550.

GLOBAL COMFORT FOOD
Taste OF UMASS 2010
THURSDAY APRIL 22
from 4:30 to 8:00 pm
The nation's largest campus food service
Home Comfort Food
FOOD
80 booths
COMPETITION
Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest
UMass Idol – Singing Contest
Student Iron Chef Competition
PRIZES
Apple iPad
Many fabulous prizes
Red Sox tickets
FREE
For students on the Meal Plan or $10 cash for faculty/staff and non-meal plan students
$12 General Public
FUN
Celebrity Chef Jet Tila presents Giant Sushi Roll (40 feet)
Celebrity MC Kevin Brauch
APPEARANCES
NE Patriot Cheerleaders
Student Dance Group
Minuteman Mascot
UMass Cheerleaders & Dance Team
Wally the Green Monster
ENTERTAINMENT
Stilt Walker
SUSTAINABILITY
Local Produce
Seafood
Home Comfort Food
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to the Mullins Center will leave at 4:00pm. Berkshire and Worcester re-open at 9 pm.
PUBLIC WELCOME
YOUR CAMPUS MEAL PLAN YCMP
THE BEST VALUE ON CAMPUS RESIDENTIAL MEAL PLAN RMP
UMASS DINING UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Slavery is surviving now

Leigh Greaney

Much of the United States suffers from the guilt and shame that's built it up to where it is today. Many Americans suffer from the family scars that have been this country's foundation on a moral tomb. Everyone seems to suffer from the hatred and we all mourn slavery.

We mourn when we read slave narratives and see a black and white obituary of the past laid out before our eyes. We mourn when we go to museums, read old novels by Mark Twain and hear stories of how Brown University was funded. We mourn.

But we're mourning what is still alive.

Slavery is breathing just as heavily as it ever has. Arguably, it's breathing harder than ever before.

According to Kevin Bales' novel "Disposable People," an estimated 27 million people are still slaves today. 27 million. That's how many people in the U.S. use antidepressants. That's Saudi Arabia's entire population. That's a crippling amount of people – especially for something that is illegal the world over.

Bales calls slavery "theft." Theft of a life, theft of labor, theft of property, and theft of any lives – especially children – who depend on the person being enslaved. It's theft of identity. It's controlling a person by way of violence and economic exploitation. It's paying a person nothing for their work.

It's life choking oppression – and it's not all about race anymore. This colorblind "new slavery" strand is more cancerous than ever before. In the past 50 years, it's mutated and has been infecting more and more of the world's population due to the staggered, unbalanced global economy.

The world's population has burst at the seams, yet the rich stay rich while the poor stay poor. Development has been kind to some countries and devastating for those who have progressed more slowly. Social and economic forces have displaced these droves of piling-up-people into a haze of confusion when they're left off the pedestal of being "developed."

With no jobs, no security, and no hope, in the midst of a country of corruption, who turns a blind eye to slavery, the end result is slavery and desperation to stay alive. However, the fourth item in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights declares slavery is illegal everywhere.

Everywhere – like in Thailand and its brothels, and in Pakistan where human trafficking ruins the lives of many, and in Brazil where charcoal production is abused, and in Sudan – where captives of the Second Sudanese Civil War are enslaved and exploited. The most are found in India and Africa.

Everywhere – like right here, in the United States. Sorry, Mr. Lincoln, but it's a harsh reality that stings and chills. We're still bleeding, and what's worse – no one seems to think so.

The bottom line is, we're concerned about one thing: cheap labor. The United States seems to love getting something for nothing.

In 2004, the University of California, Berkeley did a study to pinpoint the five sectors of slavery in America. They found that 46 percent of U.S. slavery today can be categorized as prostitution and sex work, 27 percent is domestic service, 10 percent is agriculture, 5 percent is restaurant and hotel work and 4 percent is pure sexual exploitation of children, entertainers and mail-order brides.

The U.S. and the world share the shame pattern of exploiting women and children.

Alone, the U.S. traffics forced labor into our borders from 38 countries, such as Vietnam, China and Mexico. Those who were not brought into the oppression have been born into it. Slaves in America tend to reside in largely immigrant-populated areas such as, Texas, California and Florida. From there, they are choked by violence – physically, mentally and sexually – and fraud.

In 2000, the U.S. noticed that something must be done about human-trafficking and the Victims of Trafficking and Violence Protection Act was enacted, promising to imprison slave-owners or anyone enabling slavery for up to 20 years. In 2005, the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons and the President's Interagency Task Force were both set up to contribute anti-slavery efforts – but only protection from those already effected.

The real problem is that this is still happening. So, the solution needs to have two faces: one that protects and one that prevents.

One way for us to prevent slavery is to know it exists. After that, the only thing we can do is be the change and inspire the change in others (like with all things). We must know what we consume – what we bring into our homes and into our bodies. We must know where our money goes. We must learn not to support evil.

We can do this by avoiding products that are made by the hands of slaves – like cocoa from the Ivory Coast, or steel from Brazil or rugs from India. We need to plug up the silent holes shot through our moral compasses by supporting moral investments.

Every single dollar we spend counts. It's not expected to be easy – especially in a country where every product seems to come from a different country. Shopping seems stressful enough without all the label checking.

But, if change is ever going to come – we need to stop being lazy and be the change we want to see in the world. We have the power to end slavery. We have the power to shed our personal guilt. We just have to use it.

– Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Slavery is breathing just as heavily as it ever has. Arguably, it's breathing harder than ever before.

Another Obama game

Alex Perry

President Barack Obama continues to do everything but focus on getting America's economy turned around. Nothing has changed since he got his health care mess passed, and next on Obama's to-do list is not the economy – it is financial regulatory reform.

Here we go again. Much like the campaigns for the stimulus package and the health care bill, Obama has warned everyone that financial regulatory reform is an urgent matter.

"We cannot delay action any longer," Obama said this past weekend.

Why is financial regulatory reform a more important issue to address than the economy? Well, according to Obama, Wall Street is almost entirely to blame for the whole economic mess. The two are apparently directly related. On April 17, Obama said the following. "There were many causes of the turmoil that ripped through our economy over the past two years. But above all, this crisis was caused by failures in the financial industry."

The President is not fooling anyone when he tries to simply blame the cause of the financial crisis on some ludicrous circumstance where a few greedy rich people on Wall Street decided to destroy America's economy.

Obama makes it seem like there was not already enough regulation in place in this country to stop the crisis from occurring at the time. The financial regulation problem is not that there are no financial regulations – it is that the people in charge of doing the regulating are corrupt. The government officials who were in charge of this regulation at the time of the crisis were either too dumb to handle their positions or they were simply being bribed not to do their jobs correctly. There is no other explanation for financial regulators such as Barney Frank saying the following back in 2003 prior to the fallout, "These two entities – Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac – are not facing any kind of financial crisis ... The more people exaggerate these problems, the more pressure there is on these companies, the less we will see in terms of affordable housing."

Why did Barney Frank say that? Well at the time, it was actually the evil Bush administration that saw the problems that could potentially arise if there wasn't an increase in the supervision of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Bush proposed a plan to counter that problem. Cue Barney Frank – who had been receiving campaign contributions from both firms – who came to their defense with the aforementioned quote.

Regardless, the real issue Americans have with the firms that were bailed out is that those firms were bailed out. They got themselves into financial trouble and yet it was taxpayer money that got them out of trouble. This is frustrating to most because when working Americans get into financial, trouble the government doesn't bail them out.

That's where the anger stems from. It is that simple.

Yet, Obama does not seem to realize that this is the true issue. He thinks everyone will be thrilled if there is simply more strict financial regulation. So what does Obama propose? Even after seeing how the government regulators have already failed to do their jobs effectively in recent years, he still proposes more government oversight as the solution.

Government oversight is already what failed us. This is the equivalent of Mike Tyson giving his financial advisers from the 90's a raise. You don't reward failure. Government oversight is a corrupt business, and expanding it will not solve any problems – it will just lead to more corruption.

Instead of expanding oversight, he should simply be making sure the people in charge of these positions are doing their jobs. Our government is the group that requires the most oversight.

What financial regulatory reform really should be about is making sure that there is never a situation where government would need to step in and bail anyone out again. That is what the focus of reform should be, but it clearly is not the goal. Not only is it not the goal, the proposal Democrats have made would encourage just the opposite. In their proposal, they want to set up a $50 billion dollar fund which would be available in case a firm is ever in need of a bailout from the government. Even though this money would be supplied by the financial firms and not the government, it still incentivizes bad behavior.

How does that solve any of our bailout problems? To me, all that does is create an open invitation for all of these firms to maintain reckless decision making because they know that if they were to fail, they have $50 billion to fall back on.

Even if this portion of the proposal is removed from the final bill that is voted on, just the fact that it was ever involved in the first place shows how out of touch Democrats are with Americans on this issue. It shows their true intentions.

The real reason I believe Obama is pressing this issue is not because it will turn the economy around – obviously it will not. He is doing it because he thinks that if Republicans disagree with him on this issue they will look bad before the elections coming up in the fall.

He wants to paint the picture that Republicans are siding with greedy corporate fat cats by opposing regulatory reform – even if it is a terrible attempt at solving a problem – while Democrats can all say they are cracking down on greed and corruption in this country.

I can see the campaign slogans already – Republicans are with Wall Street and Democrats are with Main Street.

Much like with health care, it all just comes back to the same old political games for Obama and his liberal comrades. Politics first and Americans last.

You voted for change. You got it.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

Obama makes it seem like there was not already enough regulation in place in this country to stop the crisis from occurring at the time. The financial regulation problem is not that there are no financial regulations – it is that the people in charge of doing the regulating are corrupt.

The Senate's climate change bill lacks strength, backbone

Tim Cheplick

Today is Earth Day. Hopefully this is a holiday that increases awareness about environmental issues, though I, for one, am not convinced.

Unlike its humble beginnings, recent Earth Days have focused on global warming. It may or may not be coincidental that it is around this time that the famous "tri-partisan" climate change legislation proposed by Senators John Kerry of Massachusetts, Joe Lieberman of Connecticut and Lindsey Graham, a Democrat, Independent and Republican, respectively, is being revealed.

Climate change legislation will be an important and major step towards lowering greenhouse gas emissions. The current bill in the Senate – a similar climate change bill already passed last summer in the House – will be unveiled on April 26, but many key points are already known.

The bill will incorporate some of the same aspects of the Waxman-Markey legislation that passed last June, but overall the bill will be substantially different.

The Kerry-Lieberman-Graham bill is so flawed it may be better for the climate not to pass it at all.

The proposed bill will deviate from the cap-and-trade strategy outlined in the House bill, where emitters of greenhouse gases basically trade and buy the rights to pollute, and the total amount polluted is set at a specific level.

The new bill will instead use a gradual phasing in of emission reductions, done sector by sector. This is potentially even more complicated than a cap-and-trade system, with even more loopholes and chances for big business to interfere.

The most important reason the overhaul bill will have a negative impact on the environment is that it strips the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) of its right to regulate carbon dioxide – a power they were granted only recently. This will further ensure that the stringent reductions that are needed will never come about.

Additionally, the bill would get rid of regional cap-and-trade systems, like the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative (RGGI), which incorporates ten northeastern states (Massachusetts included) that aim to reduce their carbon emissions by 10 percent by 2018. Why should we undo such progress?

In fact, we should learn some lessons from the RGGI. It is often omitted that the U.S. already has a cap-and-trade system in place, which has raised $582 million to date for renewable energy programs and efficiency initiatives for those states. The cash is definitely a plus.

Another problem, as is the problem with almost any climate change bill introduced in Congress, is that the emission reductions are all too modest. The Senate bill, if passed, would only result in a three percent reduction of emissions by 2020, using 1990 as a baseline, even though scientists say that a 25 percent reduction in the same time period is needed.

Subsidies in the bill are skewed heavily in the wrong direction. There are billions of dollars for "clean" coal and increasd offshore drilling. This is, of course, to win Republican support, as well as to keep the coal and oil industry lobbyists happy. There are also major subsidies for nuclear power companies, but if this means less money for coal, then this is a good thing.

Such subsidies need to be seriously addressed when the bill heads to the floor of the Senate. Despite a need for renewable, clean energy to be implemented widely to mitigate global warming, subsidies are still very heavily focused on fossil fuels. From 2002 to 2008, subsidies for fossil fuels totaled $72 billion, while clean energy sources like solar, wind and non-corn-based biofuels only received $12.2 billion. Historically, any new energy source needs subsidies to be cost effective, and our current need is for renewable energy sources. This can dramatically lower carbon emissions.

Congress needs to address climate change, but many changes to the current Senate bill need to be employed before it will be advantageous to pass it. The EPA must still be allowed to regulate carbon dioxide in case legislation does not result in the necessary cuts. Regional agreements and states' own initiatives need to remain in place, and the reductions which will supposedly result from the bill must be higher. Last, subsidies must be shifted from the fossil fuels of the 20th century to the renewable energy sources of the 21st century.

The European Union has already had a cap-and-trade system in place since 2005. Let's not let America fall behind in yet another area. Though we must act quickly on global warming, such important legislation should not be rushed. I am for climate change legislation, but I am not for the Kerry-Lieberman-Graham bill.

Tim Cheplick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tcheplic@student.umass.edu.

The Senate bill, if passed, would only result in a three percent reduction of emissions by 2020, using 1990 as a baseline, even though scientists say that a 25 percent reduction in the same time period is needed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How to be green in your daily life

Green your wardrobe

In the spirit of Earth Day, here are a few simple, everyday things that every college student can do with their wardrobe to give back to the environment.

First, when doing laundry, only use cold water. This is beneficial for a few reasons. It saves energy by eliminating the need to heat up water. The average household washing machine uses a little under 1000 kilowatt hours per year (let's not forget about the world energy crisis). Cold water keeps your clothes in better condition, and it doesn't make your colors run (Side note: whites are the only thing that can be safely washed in warm water, but cold works just as well).

When you're done washing your clothes in cold water, don't put them in the dryer! The average household clothing dryer consumes about 1000 kilo-watt hours per year, which can cost your family over $100. Also, it is much better for your clothes to be hung dry – they are not getting weekly beat-downs in your dryer and therefore last longer. This then leads to consumers buying fewer clothes, which could ultimately lead to manufacturers producing fewer clothes, using less energy and fewer resources.

On that occasion when you do choose to buy some new duds, there are some eco-friendly items for which you can look. Second-hand or consignment clothes are an ideal way to reduce energy and resources used for clothing manufacturing.

If going to the Salvation Army really isn't your style, organic clothing is another alternative. It takes about half a pound of fertilizer to produce the cotton that goes into one t-shirt – think about that the next time you want to buy your American Apparel V-Neck. Organic cotton doesn't use any fertilizers, and with the world shifting into a more earth-friendly mentality, it's becoming a lot easier to find. Web stores such as TheHungerSite.com, JyGlaxy.com, OrganicExchange.com and EarthEasy.com are just some of the plethora of places to find organic attire.

After the seasons change and trends fade, instead of throwing your outfits either into the trash or the back of your closet, donate them! Second-hand stores are dying to get their hands on your stuff, and best of all, you leave with a little money in your pocket.

–Julie Holbrook Collegian Staff

By hanging your clothes out to dry after washing them, you can save over $100 a year. Your clothes will also last longer if they skip the beating they would get in the dryer.

Eco-friendly gifts on the cheap

Are you interested in protecting the environment, but don't want to sacrifice cost or efficiency? Next time you need to buy someone a gift, consider these low-cost alternatives to a bouquet and chocolates.

For your friend who can never seem to wake up in time for class, or your chemistry tutor who saved you on your last exam, consider purchasing a water-powered alarm clock. These nifty gadgets require no batteries, nor do they need to be plugged in. Most water-powered clocks need just a little water to power them for over 12 weeks. Added bonus? Once those 12 weeks are up and the clocks need to be refilled, most also have a built-in memory chip that resets itself to the correct time. No need to constantly reset the time every few weeks.

Know someone with an abnormal love for iced coffee? Satisfy their craving with a cold brew coffeemaker. These coffeemakers require no electricity and no heat, allowing your friend to even keep it on their desk in their dorm room. Additionally, cold brewing the coffee produces almost 70 percent less acid than hot brewing, allowing those with even the most sensitive of stomachs to enjoy a cold cup of iced coffee. Made of BPA-free plastic, a cold brew coffeemaker is an eco-friendly alternative to the typical hot-brew, electric-powered coffeemaker.

Forget the high cost of cut flowers and spring for a small potted plant. Bouquets are pretty, but the cut flowers wilt quickly. A small plant, such as a cactus or bamboo, lasts forever with very little care. Bamboo is one of the hardiest indoor plants available, and requires little water and moderate sunlight. Herbs are always a nice touch, especially lavender or mint; however, these useful plants require more sun, so some dorm rooms may not be able to support them.

Being eco-friendly does not have to cost you an arm and a leg, nor does it require you to completely change your way of life. Simply make a few wise decisions here or there, and you will not only be environmentally friendly, but you might save a few bucks on your energy bill in the process.

–Nora Drapalski, Collegian Staff

Easy energy-savers

Here are a few simple things you can do to help the Earth out without much effort on your behalf.

Throw your trash in trash barrels. There are more than enough trash cans on campus, and they should be used more often. Usually you can find one on the way to wherever you are walking, so rather than tossing a cigarette butt on the ground or a napkin, just wait until you find the next trash barrel and throw it in there. The environment will appreciate it if you take the time to carry your trash to a trash barrel – and if more people throw trash in the barrels, the campus will look that much nicer.

Use the lights in your room sparingly. Now that the weather is nice, it tends to be sunny enough to light your room with the natural light, rather than using the artificial light in your room. Use only what you need, don't over-light your room. Keeping the lights off in your room when nobody is around is a huge energy saver, as well – it's just a quick flick of a switch.

Unplug your chargers when you're not using them. It only takes a few seconds to unplug, but a charger which is not doing anything wastes a lot of energy. It may be easier to leave it plugged in, but it is not that much harder to unplug it. Even if the University is paying for the energy in the dormitories, it is still worthwhile to save energy so that housing prices will remain lower.

When you can, avoid using automatic doors. Automatic doors use a lot of electricity, and when you can just as easily open a door with your hand, you can save a lot of energy over time. Energy is not cheap, and there is not an infinite amount of it. Until more people switch over to greener energy sources, it is better to use less of it when possible. Automatic doors are a luxury which one usually doesn't really need to use.

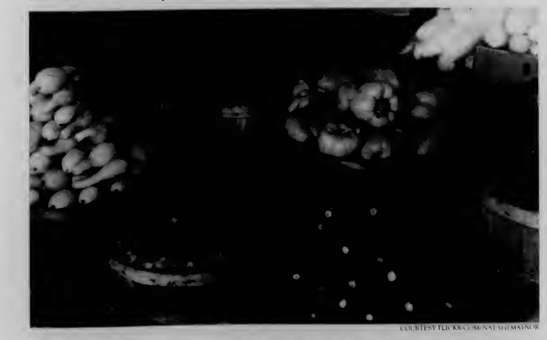
–Tappan Parker, Collegian Staff

Think green, act local

By Alex Tillotson
Collegian Correspondent

The local food movement is on the rise in the food industry, but chefs aren't the only ones able to take advantage of fresh, organic food anymore. These days, farmers' markets, Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) shares, and even large grocery store chains are providing the public with the quality ingredients they crave.

The great thing about buying locally-grown products is that it supports both the local economy and the environment as a whole. By buying fresh produce, eggs, cheeses, and even meats from local farmers, you're often able to cut out the middleman completely. So instead of shopping at a store that orders crates full of produce and has them shipped from California, you're getting your food from the source itself. Buying directly from farmers cuts down on harmful emissions that would be produced by trucks, boats and planes in order to deliver the ingredients from other parts of the country and the world.



CSA shares are a fantastic way to get in on the local food movement and to really explore the bounty that your area has to offer food-wise. For the last 20 years, CSA shares have helped form relationships between farmers and their neighbors. If you sign up for a share, you'll pay a set fee in order to receive a weekly box of super-fresh produce throughout the farming season. The cost is usually comparable to what you'd spend weekly on produce at a regular store and can often even be cheaper. Typically, the boxes are reused every week, cutting down on waste from conventional shopping bags, as well as reducing emissions that would result from driving to the grocery store on a weekly basis.

Another advantage to buying locally grown products is the organic factor. If you're able to find a farm around you that grows natural, organic foods free of pesticides and chemicals, you're essentially helping the environment two-fold. Buying local and organic combines the benefits of reduced emissions with those of chemical-free growing practices. When a farm refrains from using pesticides and chemicals, it helps both you and the environment. Eating organic produce ensures that you are putting only the best things into your body, free of substances which nature didn't intend. On a larger scale, it also keeps pesticides and chemicals out of groundwater, which could eventually feed into tributaries, rivers and then oceans. It may seem like a small detail, but the difference between organic and non-organic can make a big difference.

Vibrantly-colored fruits and vegetables have a wide range of vitamins and minerals that are great for our health, and buying locally grown food provides you with the advantage of enjoying colorful ingredients that are often picked that very same day. The less time fruits and vegetables spend on the shelf, the better, because over time, the beneficial vitamins and minerals begin to diminish, making the "healthy foods" you're eating not as healthy as you may have thought. Buying local equals buying fresh, and nothing tastes better than an ingredient enjoyed immediately after it's picked or pulled from the earth.

So this Earth Day, do some research on your town's local food movement. Find out when farmers' markets open up for the season and look into various options for CSA shares. Start reaping the benefits of your local food scene and help the environment all at the same time. Because one thing's for sure; eating local will never leave a bad taste in your mouth.

Alex Tillotson can be reached at atillots@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY FLICKR.COM/NATALIEMASON

By purchasing locally-grown produce, you are not only helping the local economy, but also helping the environment. The produce will be at its peak freshness, as well.

'ODDSAC' a magical mystery box of experimental psychedelia

Animal Collective had a showing of their new visual album, "ODDSAC," at Hampshire College on Monday. The album is a grab bag of songs and will be available on DVD and on iTunes on June 29.

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

About 15 minutes into Animal Collective's visual album "ODDSAC," an oozing color-storm reeedes abruptly, and its squeaky, clattering noise collage is cleared away for a haunting folk ballad. Floating over a moonlit river scene, Panda Bear's lightly-effected vocals ask a pertinent question – "why am I seeing screens?"

Perhaps at this juncture you are asking the very same question. O ye of little faith. Granted, thus far it has been difficult to make much sense of any of the film's sequences, much less connect them in any meaningful way – but if that's what you're trying to do here, you're already lost.

The key to watching "ODDSAC" is to sit back and let the patchwork audio-visual magic send you where it will; in other words, watch the images like you would listen to an album by Animal Collective. Themes and characters repeat, drifting in and out of the meandering pseudo-plot; the ending scene ties back to the opening scene, but no real story emerges from a single 54-minute viewing.

Instead, we are given a series of surreal vignettes, interspersed with indulgently layered deep dye visualizer sequences. This structure should be familiar to anyone who has listened to a few Animal Collective albums; it follows the same pattern of abstract textures into more overtly structured pieces, and every visual tone shift is matched beautifully by the band's equally dramatic transitions.

Musically, "ODDSAC" is an aptly titled grab bag of songs and textures that sound like they could have been pulled from nearly every stage of Animal Collective's 10-year career. We get (esoteric namedrop alert) that moonlit, macabre Panda Bear folk tune à la "Sung Tongs," plenty of the organic drone of "Here Comes the Indian," just enough of the grating noisiness of "Dansc Manatee," and a few moments of outright pop, like "Feels" or "Strawberry Jam" with a production style closer to their latest release, "Fall Be Kind."

Those big pop moments pay off magnificently when they burst from the sensory miasma, with delicate suspense built in equal part by the visuals and the sounds. One scene has Avey Tare, painted red, wearing what looks like the plaster cast of a xenomorphic skull on his head, screaming incomprehensible profanity at a group of young women in a low-lit kitchen setting. The feverish rabble-rousing escalates to a climax, and suddenly a beat begins to sound, heralding the fourth and last true music video of the film.

So, it's got three or four singles and a lot of hypnotic psychedelic negative space – what is this album missing? A big, cinematic slow-burner, and that comes just before the aforementioned sequence. What's more – it is a 15 minute horror show about a sad vampire hostile marshmallows, and the most viscerally terrifying family camping trip you will ever witness. This segment alone may be the best thing that Animal Collective has produced since "Strawberry Jam."

In the brief Q&A session following the first of two screenings of "ODDSAC" at Hampshire College Monday night, Danny Perez and Animal Collective members Geologist and Deakin discussed the creative process. Despite a few annoyingly specific and pretentious questions from the audience, they maintained their friendly, inform al composure – Perez jokingly claimed that they chose to use a vampire in the movie "because we were all really big fans of the 'Twilight' series."

They also confirmed that, although the film's DVD/iTunes release is scheduled for June 29, there are no plans for a soundtrack release. This is regrettable, and may or may not be tied up in studio contractual obligations, but the visuals and music are so well paired in this freaky fever-dream that they don't ever belong apart.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

UMass has not been swept in conference play since 2005, and have lost just two conference games over the past three seasons. The Minutewomen take on SLU on Friday and Saturday.

Minutewomen clash with Billikens Friday

SORTINO from page 8

games are hard because it doesn't matter what anybody's record is, people know everybody else," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said after her team downed Quinnipiac.

Sweeping the Minutewomen is no easy task, never mind beating the only undefeated team in A-10 play. They have not been swept in conference play since April 4, 2005 and have only lost two conference games in the past three years.

St. Louis will come at UMass with a balanced team led by its two starting pitchers. Both Hannah Huebbe (12-7, 2.47 earned run average) and Kelcie Matesa (11-10, 2.92 ERA) have split time on the mound and have both held opposing batters to under a .240 batting average.

Offensively, the Billikens are led by Kristin Nicoletti, who leads the team with a .324 batting average. The junior outfielder is the only Billiken to start all 42 games for St. Louis this year, and also leads the team with 27 stolen bases in 32 attempts.

The offense will have to go against Sara Plourde, who is coming off a no-hitter against the Bobcats on Tuesday.

In the 6-0 win over Quinnipiac, UMass' offense struggled to produce hits but not runs. While being limited to just five hits, the Minutewomen managed to get runners across the plate by stealing eight bases and capitalizing on two errors by Quinnipiac.

"We have to be a better softball team this weekend than we were [against the Bobcats], or it's going to be a tough trip out there to the Midwest," Sortino said of what will be needed to beat the Billikens. "[SLU] will give us a great game and [they] will come after us."

Friday's contest will be the first A-10 game for UMass since playing Charlotte on April 10.

The two road games will also be the last of the regular season for the Minutewomen, as they embark on a 10-game home stand to end the season before hosting the A-10 championships.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Starters Carly Normandin, Katie Bettencourt and Sarah Reeves have a 1.000 fielding percentage so far this season. The Minutewomen are first in the NCAA in errors (17).

Plourde getting quality outs from strong infield, outfield play the second out in the second inning, along with catching a fly ball in the fifth, and Plourde fanning the final batter to end the second. Freshman Teea Rogers also helped out with an out at third base to finish up the third inning.

DEFENSE from page 8

Sarah Reeves came through for UMass in the fourth, making two outs at first base after Plourde forced both batters to pop out. It was also Reeves who ended the game and ensured the shutout, making the final out on a foul ball in the seventh inning.

It was all defense in the sixth inning for the Maroon and White, with catcher Meghan Carta catching a foul ball. Rogers came through with her second key play of the day by stopping a line drive at third base, while Whitney Williams, playing shortstop, stopped another line drive to end the inning for the Minutewomen.

Normandin, Katie Bettencourt and Reeves are the three starting players who have a 1.000 fielding percentage this season. Kyllie Magill, Libby and Carta also have high ranking fielding percentages, with .980, .943 and .998, respectively.

In the A-10, Carta is second in putouts, with 431, while Reeves and Normandin are also tied for first place in the A-10 for their fielding percentages.

Despite having numerous defensive threats at her disposal, Sortino does not have one player on defense who she feels stands out especially.

"I think all of them are doing a good job," Sortino said. "I think we started out with errors early in the year, but that was also a byproduct of not being able to play on the field."

In the NCAA fielding percentage standings, UMass ranks fourth in the country with an overall percentage of .978. The Minutewomen also have the lowest amount of errors in the NCAA, with 17. The defense stands strong in putouts and assists, with 668 and 94, respectively.

Now that the Minutewomen can play outside at the UMass softball complex, 10 of their next 13 regular season games will be played at home, and Sortino thinks her defense will only continue to improve. Despite having a consistent pitcher and strong batters on offense, Sortino is confident that "defense wins championships."

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

Pitcher Sarah Plourde, who threw her fifth no-hitter, has gotten help from a strong UMass defense so far this year.

Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
free: 1 coffee drink
The Whisk(e)y Bar
AmherstCoffee.com
Rare and exceptional whiskies
Wines by the glass or bottle
Cocktails

GERMAN & SCANDINAVIAN STUDIES AND THE NORDIC COUNCIL PRESENT...
Scandinavian Impulses
UMassAmherst
DANISH SCHOLAR TO SPEAK ON MUSLIM CARTOON CONTROVERSY...
???
THURS., APR. 22, 2010
4:15 P.M.
SCHOOL OF MGMT. RM. 137
UMASS.EDU/IMPULSES

Register now
for summer courses at HCC
• Convenient Summer I, Summer II, and Full Summer Sessions
• Day, evening, and online classes
• Training for business & industry
• GED and Adult Basic Education
• Fun, informative personal enrichment courses
• Youth programs & sports clinics
Credit classes start June 7 & July 12
HOLYOKE COMMUNITY COLLEGE
Futures Inspired
Call today (413) 552-2000
303 Homestead Avenue, Holyoke, MA 01040 • www.hcc.edu

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

Off The Wall Games
Rise of the ElDrazi Party Weekend April 24 & 25.
Scan OffTheWallGameStore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

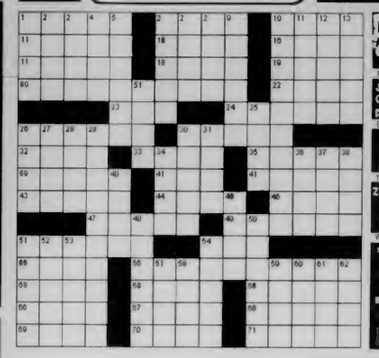
WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

amherst cinema
Fri Apr 23 - Thu Apr 29
35 SHOTS OF RUM 2:15 7:00 +12:00pm Sat & Sun
THE GIRL WITH THE DRAGON TATTOO *2:30 6:30 9:30 +11:30 Sat & Sun *NO 2:30 Sat
CREATION 4:30 9:15
GREENBERG *2:00 *4:45 (4:15 Sun) *7:30 9:45 +11:45am Sat *NO 2:00 Sun NO 7:30 Mon NO 4:45 Wed
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Apr 23 - Thu Apr 29
THE MOST DANGEROUS MAN IN AMERICA 7:15 +2:30 Sat & Sun +10:30am 2:30 Wed
THE JONESES 4:30 7:00 9:15 +2:15 Sat & Sun +10:00am 2:15 Wed
THE RUNAWAYS 4:45 *9:30 *NO 9:30 Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantsttheater.org (413) 584-5848

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour - 1/2 Price Appetizers
8 P.M. - Close Sun. - Wed.
9 P.M. - Close Thurs. - Sat.
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

Rim-Jimmies



8		4				7
5				8	2
			7		6
					6		4
	2		5			1
	3	1		9
1					3
			8			9	2
			9	2			6

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Detecting by radio waves
6. In addition
10. Information
14. Express a thought
15. Fluff from a dryer
16. Weightlifters pump this
17. Stupefy
18. Assistant
19. Make melodious sounds
20. Extreme fatigue
22. Sheet of glass
23. Regret
24. Carpentry tool
26. A US spacecraft (1960's)
30. Aromatic solvent
32. False god
33. Rip
35. 9 9 9 9
39. Tummy
41. Blvd.
42. Performance platform
43. Endow
44. Fortuneteller
46. Majestic
47. Sail supports
49. Not the youngest
51. It's ruled by an empress
54. Summer refresher
55. Horse color
56. Effervescent
63. Seaweed
64. Margarine
65. Brilliance
66. Chair
67. Require
68. Poison
69. Slave
70. Expunge
71. Holdup

DOWN
1. Gown
2. Culminating point
3. Plate
4. Dwarf buffalo
5. Bring back
6. Dish
7. Fifty-three in Roman numerals
8. Cancel
9. Stink
10. Demoralized
11. Operatic solos
12. 1000 kilograms
13. Cherub
21. Legal action
25. Female chickens
26. Taunt
27. Biblical garden
28. Cast
29. Shed light on
30. Overhangs
31. Tall woody plant
34. Where the sun rises
36. Back of the neck
37. Auspices
38. Religious offshoot
40. 365 days
45. Start over
48. 1/60th of a minute
50. Duration
51. Delete
52. Double agents
53. Heathen
54. Dwelling
57. Sheltered, nautically
58. Anagram of "Leer"
59. Found in skin lotion
60. Cab
61. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
62. Depression

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!
NEW! 3 Sessions:
• Session I: May 17 - June 7
• Session II: June 8 - July 13
• Session III: July 14 - August 17
Classes fill up quickly...REGISTER NOW
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Bistro 63 at the MONKEY BAR
Book Reservation for Graduation!
413-259-1600

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
JOHN SHELPON'S MASTERS OF THE STRATOCASTER DOWNSTAIRS 9 PM - 12 AM
LOST SERIES FINALE BIGGEST PARTY OF THE YEAR! UPSTAIRS ON THE BIG SCREEN
ZAYNE COUCH EXPLOSION GUITAR PHENOM! DO NOT MISS THIS SHOW! 9:30PM!
MEXICAN INSPIRED BEERS & MENU CINCO DE MAYO BEER DINNER & FIESTA! 6PM
BOOK YOUR GRADUATION PARTY NOW!
24 N. PLEASANT AMHERST MA
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

LA PIAZZA RISTORANTE
30 Boltwood Walk | Amherst, MA 01002
Book for Graduation
413-253-5444

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
The following are actual lyrics, "She don't know we're goin' back to the crib, back to the crib." Stay away from music.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Hey, what's in the cabinet?! Don't open the cabinet! There's someone in the cabinet! R. Kelly's in the cabinet!

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Not feeling too happy today? Picture Iron Man punching the British out of Hugh Grant's dentist–free cavity.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Never agree to a strange man offering compensation for you to taste test his personal line of frozen lasagna.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Keep a lid on it! We wouldn't want all those babies spilling all over the place now would we?

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Sadly, the Tea Party Movement does not sell crumpets with their policial agenda.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
"The Vaporizer" is a good name for a villain, but you might want to work on that whole master plan thing.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Luck will come to you when you officially change your middle name to "Bo Derek."

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
How can you sit there and make that sandwich quietly while this nation is witnessing its first toilet paper crisis!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Because of your heroic actions on Tuesday, you will forever be considered a shining example of "going green."

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Walk around campus with more swagger. I want to see some leg crosses and finger snaps around those corners!

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
I do not know if you've noticed lately but the balls next to your bed got frickin' HUGE!

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

"Quote of the Day"

I love to go shopping at Target. They have so much stuff there, you can buy almost anything, it's really amazing.
—Liv Tyler
—Liv Tyler

CLASSIFIEDS

SPECIAL EVENTS

Partake in "Stoolapalooza!" Barstool Sports and Southern Comfort are throwing a HUGE concert on April 30th at the Mullins Center. Tickets are almost sold out and running for around $50 a piece. Southern Comfort is giving students 21+ the opportunity to "win" these tickets at our pre-parties sipping on Southern Comfort while enjoying the last few weeks of school. Two of our SoCo girls will be giving out complimentary samples, Southern Comfort swag, and tickets to the upcoming Sam Adams concert on April 30th! Dont miss these upcoming Venues!

Thurs 4/22 ABC10pm-12am, Sat 4/24 Monkey Bar 11pm-1am, Tues 4/27 Stackers 10pm-12am, Wed 4/28 McMurphys 10pm-12am Thurs 4/29 The Spoke 10pm-12am

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Amherst: 2 Bedroom Open House! Come to Mill Valley Estates on April 24th, 12-4 PM. Move-in specials! Whole Foods gift cards just for showing up! *500 Riverglade Drive, Apt F, 253-7377, www.millvalleyApts.com (*while supplies last)

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM takes on Hoyas in Classic

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

In the first non-conference game between the two teams, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team takes on Georgetown in the ESPNU Warrior Classic Saturday at 1 p.m.

It will be a nationally-televised game on ESPNU, ESPN's college affiliate.

The No. 16 Minutemen (7-4, 2-2 Colonial Athletic Association) come into the weekend after dropping two-straight conference games, while the No. 13 Hoyas (7-4, 3-1 Big East) enter the Classic having dropped a game on the road to Loyola.

This meeting of the teams is the latest installment in a 10-year series, all of which took place in the Eastern College Athletic Association Conference. The Hoyas hold a 7-3 advantage all-time against UMass, and won the last contest, a 10-7 victory at Garber Field on the Minutemen's Senior Day last season.

UMass coach Greg Cannella appreciates the intensity of the games against Georgetown and eagerly awaits the chance to extend the series.

"Coach [Dave] Urick's [done] an outstanding job, obviously, and he's done a great job of bringing together athletes, as well as letting them play," said Cannella. "We try to pride ourselves on the same style. It's always been a great, competitive game. Let's hope it's the same way this weekend."

This season, attackman Will Manny leads the Minutemen with 22 goals and 14 assists while playing in all of UMass' first 11 games. He has at least two points in every game this season, including a hat trick in the second half of the Minutemen's last game against Delaware (16-6, 1-2 CAA).

Besides Manny, UMass also has three other players with at least 25 points this season.

Senior Bobby Hayes has a 13-game point streak intact, scoring 19 goals to go along with 12 assists during that stretch. One of his best games this season came against Sacred Heart, when he scored his first career hat trick in a four-goal effort, with three of the four scores coming in man-up opportunities.

Hayes' four man-up goals this season are second only to man-up specialist Kyle Smith's five.

The UMass defense ranks ninth in the nation with 10 caused-turnovers per game and the Minutemen have multiple defensemen responsible for such a ranking. Redshirt senior Diogo Godoi leads the defense with his physical and instinctual play. Godoi has 19 turnovers to go along with 22 ground balls.

Godoi also proved this season that he can make plays on offense when needed, scoring his first career goal against then-No. 6 Hofstra.

Alongside Godoi is sophomore Tom Celentani, who brings consistent contributions in his first full season as a starter. Celentani leads UMass with 21 caused-turnovers – which ranks 11th in the NCAA in caused-turnovers (1.91 per-game) – and also has 26 ground balls this season.

The Minutemen also have strength in face-offs as well. Sophomore Greg Rushing's 109 faceoff wins put him at 12th in the nation in that category. His team-leading 52 ground balls give him 4.73 per-game, good for 20th in the NCAA.

The Minutemen face a balanced offensive team that excels on the defensive side of the ball in GU.

The Hoyas have midfielder Scott Kocis, who made UMass pay for three goals and one assist in the Hoyas' eventual win in the last meeting between the two teams.

Leading the attackman position is freshman Travis Comeau, who leads Georgetown with 20 goals, two assists.

Duxbury, Mass. native Chris Nixon leads the defense with 23 caused turnovers as well as 36 ground balls.

Though the Minutemen withheld Nixon from the stat sheet last season, Cannella feels that defense, as well as other strengths, is one of the many factors UMass must pay careful attention to against the Hoyas.

"You have to handle their defensive pressure," Cannella said. "You've [also] got to win draws, handle the ball on offense, as well as defend the [numerous] guys that they have offensively."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Will Manny (1) and Kyle Smith (26) look to lead the Minutemen Saturday in the ESPNU Warrior Classic.

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Midfielder Ryan Hantverk and the rest of the Minutemen will play at a neutral site in a game that will be televised on ESPNU Saturday against the Hoyas.

National coverage beneficial for UMass

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will do three things for the first time this season when they take on No. 13 Georgetown Saturday afternoon.

The No. 16 Minutemen will compete at a neutral site, compete in their first-ever Classic, and will play on national television all in one contest.

UMass will play the Hoyas at Rentschler Field in East Hartford, Conn., home of the 2010 ESPNU Warrior Classic.

The first game of the Classic will be between No. 18 Denver and No. 17 Fairfield beginning at 11 a.m., followed by the Minutemen and Hoyas at 1:30 p.m.

"I think if we were playing out in the parking lot, I would be excited," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "You're hoping for nice weather, a good product out there in Georgetown, UMass, Fairfield and Denver, and you hope there's a good crowd, and I think there should be."

The field is home to the University of Connecticut's football team, holds more than 40,000 people, and is the biggest stage the Minutemen have played on since the 2006 national championship game, when the team lost to the University of Virginia, 15-7, at Lincoln Financial Field in Philadelphia.

UMass has not played at a neutral site so far this season, hosting six games at Garber Field and playing on the road in five games, but could have a large fan showing, with Amherst located just over an hour from Hartford.

The creation of the classic was announced back in January, with a combination effort from ESPN Regional Television Inc. and Warrior Lacrosse, a prominent lacrosse equipment manufacturer, attempting to reach larger audiences while spreading the growing sport of lacrosse.

Along with the Warrior Classic, other Division I programs have competed in such events held earlier this year, such as the New England Classic back on April 3, which was held at Gillette Stadium. Four Ivy League teams, No. 8 Cornell, Dartmouth, No. 6 Princeton, and Brown played in a double-header, while the Konica Minolta Face-Off Classic was the first such event played this season, as No. 5 Duke, No. 4 Maryland, the Towson Tigers and No. 19 Johns Hopkins all took part in the tournament in Baltimore, Md. on March 6.

The new Meadowlands Stadium, home of the New York Giants, hosted the Konica Minolta Big City Classic, featuring Delaware, No. 14 Hofstra, No. 3 North Carolina, the No. 2 Virginia Cavaliers, Towson, and No. 1 Syracuse on April 10.

This past weekend in Baltimore, the Smartlink Day of Rivals took place, with a No. 20 Army-Navy match-up followed by Maryland against the Johns Hopkins Blue Jays.

While the Warrior Classic will be the final regular season event for Division I lacrosse this year, the purpose of these invitationals has been to increase the exposure of lacrosse while putting it on a main sports stage, which has worked.

Every classic, including the Warrior Classic, will be nationally televised on ESPNU, and has the potential to be an annual event for years to come.

The Minutemen are 2-1 against teams which have competed in this year's classics, including an 11-10 victory over the Brown Bears and an 11-9 win over the Hofstra Pride.

For Cannella and his team, they want the attention, but want to play like it is any other game, following back-to-back losses to Towson and the Blue Hens.

"I think the exposure is great, [but] we're not used to it, playing on national television, playing on the big stage, so we hope the guys can handle that, and play it like it's any other game," Cannella said.

Tickets for the Warrior Classic are $15 for adults and $9 for children and senior citizens. The event will open at 8 a.m. Saturday for the ESPNU Lacrosse Tour and Warrior FanFest, followed by the games.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Sortino and Co. soar into SLU for series

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts softball team, playing teams at the bottom of the Atlantic 10 standings isn't as easy as it seems.

Those teams look at the opportunity to knock off the No. 22 team in the country as their biggest game of the season.

But, when the Minutewomen (28-7, 9-0 A-10) face off against some of the top teams in the conference, it's another story.

For a team like Saint Louis – who UMass plays Friday at 6 p.m. and Saturday at 1 p.m. – it will be a series against an opponent who sees two things: one of its biggest games of the season and an opportunity to shake up the top of the conference standings.

The Billikens (23-19, 9-3 A-10) currently rank fourth in the conference, behind first-place UMass, second-place Charlotte (31-12, 10-2 A-10) and third place Fordham (37-8, 9-2 A-10).

With a half-game separating St. Louis from Fordham, a game separating it from Charlotte and a game and a half separating it from the Minutewomen, a weekend sweep by the Billikens would move them ahead of UMass.

If Charlotte and Fordham were to struggle over the weekend, the Billikens could jump to the top of the standings.

"The thing is, the conference

See SORTINO on page 6

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen hit the road this weekend when they take on the Billikens in two A-10 contests.

Defensive play paying off for Minutewomen

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Behind the dominating pitching of Sara Plourde and power hitting from the offense, there has been one component of the Massachusetts softball team that has been overshadowed this season: The defense.

However, UMass' defense stepped up recently in its 6-0 shutout of Quinnipiac. With three players boasting a fielding percentage of 1.000, the Minutewomen (28-7, 8-0 Atlantic 10) helped Plourde record her fifth no-hitter of the season.

"No-hitters are sensational in newspapers and get people to want to come and watch," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "But, I can promise you that never once do we start a game and think, 'Today we're going to throw a no-hitter.'"

To Sortino, no-hitters are something to which her team pays little attention.

Plourde, with 399 strikeouts for the season, relied on her defense in the no-hitter, as she tossed nine strikeouts in the game.

"We had a lot more defensive plays," Plourde said. "[Quinnipiac] was a good hitting team, they just put the ball in play and our defense had a chance to make our plays. They did it, they put everything away."

Michelle Libby helped out in the first inning, catching a fly ball to end the inning after Plourde struck out two batters. Carly Normandin got

See DEFENSE on page 6

PSU upsets Pride, Tigers first in conference

By Kara Deyermenjian
Collegian Staff

Penn State upset No. 11 Hofstra, 11-10, Saturday night at Jeffrey Field after a hard-fought overtime battle. Freshman Nick Dolik scored three goals on the day, including the game-winner in overtime, while sophomore Matt Mackrides contributed four goals of his own in the victory.

The upset against the Pride was only the second win for PSU (2-9, 1-2 Colonial Athletic Conference) on the season, while Hofstra falls to 7-4 and 1-3 in the CAA.

The Pride dominated the first half, as they went up 7-2, but a pair of goals late in the second quarter courtesy of Mackrides narrowed the scoring gap and brought the Saints' Lions within three goals before halftime.

PSU promised to come out strong in the third quarter, as Mackrides put away yet another goal at the 10:41 mark. Dolik tacked on another score, as PSU came back from a five-goal deficit to tie the score 7-7.

The Pride were finally able to halt Penn State's scoring spree when Brad Loizeaux scored and put the Pride back on top with 1:34 remaining in the third quarter. Dolik responded with another goal with just 12 seconds remaining, however, and the game was once again tied. The teams continued to swap goals in the fourth quarter until the game was sent into overtime.

Overtime was short lived, as Dolik won the face-off and buried the game-winner just 50 seconds into overtime. Dolik earned CAA Rookie of the Week honors for his efforts.

Tigers in first place in CAA

Towson topped seventh-ranked Drexel, 8-7, last Saturday at Johnny Unitas Stadium after overcoming a two-goal deficit in the third quarter, propelling the Tigers to first place in the CAA.

Towson struck first when sophomore attackman Matt Lamon scored just five seconds into the game off the opening face-off. The Dragons were able to respond just a minute later, however, when senior attackman Colin Ambler tied the game at 1-1, scoring his 19th goal of the season. The teams continued to trade goals, tying the score at 3-3 at the end of the first period. Drexel had the edge going into intermission, however, as it led 5-4 after Adam Dennis scored an unassisted goal with just nine seconds left in the period. The Dragons tacked on yet another goal early in the third quarter, going up 6-4. The Tigers rallied in the fourth quarter, scoring four straight goals to turn the two-goal deficit into a two-goal lead.

Drexel scored one more goal with 7:55 left in the game when freshman attackman Robert Church tallied his 27th goal of the season. The Dragons caught a break with nine seconds remaining after a penalty and had a chance to tie up the game yet again. Church took a shot from 18 yards away, but goalkeeper Travis Love stopped the attempt as time ran out to clinch the Tiger victory.

With the victory, Towson's record improves to 5-5 and 3-0 in the CAA, while Drexel falls to 9-3 and 2-1.

Dickson earns POW honors

Delaware senior attackman Curtis Dickson was selected as the Colonial Athletic Association Player of the Week for the week of April 18. Dickson had a standout performance after the Blue Hens upset No. 16 Massachusetts 9-6 Saturday at Delaware Stadium.

Dickson is no stranger to receiving accolades, as he was honored back on Feb. 22 and March 8 of this year. He also received honors once in 2009, three times in 2008, and once back in 2007.

Dickson contributed heavily to the win against the Minutemen after scoring three goals, including a man-up game-winner with just 10 minutes left to play. The victory halted a two-game losing streak while keeping the Blue Hens' postseason hopes alive. Dickson will be entering this coming Saturday's match-up against CAA rival Drexel with 45 goals and 57 points on the season, needing just eight points to reach the 200-point mark for his career.

He currently leads the nation in total points and ranks second in total goals, points per game, and goals per game.

The game against UMass was Dickson's eighth hat trick of the season, while it extended his scoring streak to 21 straight games and 51 straight games with a point.

Dickson and the Blue Hens' regular season will come to an end Saturday as they face off against the Drexel Dragons at 7 p.m. at their home stadium.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyerme@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

The Pride, seen here against UMass, fell to PSU on Saturday, 11-10, in overtime.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM APRIL 23, 2010

inside this issue:

Ploch leaves team

SEE PAGE 16

A Ludacris show

SEE PAGE 12

Patrick at UMass

SEE PAGE 2

A new lease on campus life

UMass professors probe academic perks of virtual campus on 'Second Life' online game

See page 2

MAX GALLOWAY/COLLEGIAN

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 58

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
ELIZABETH TRAN

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Patrick gives Topol lecture

Focuses on going green, local

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Governor Deval Patrick became the last speaker in the Sidney Topol Distinguished Lecturer Series Thursday, presenting a nearly 20-minute address at the University of Massachusetts covering emerging technology, state budgetary dilemmas, Western Mass. and the Bay State's economy, and his administration's attempts to link local jobs, technological development and energy efficiency.

Patrick's speech, held in the Campus Center Auditorium, was the final installment of the series, established in 1997 through a gift from University of Massachusetts alumnus Sidney Topol, a telecommunications developer who helped create the cable-satellite connection which many feel catalyzed the burgeoning of cable television in the U.S.

In his discussion, Patrick did not contest that the Commonwealth has experienced trying economic times throughout America's current recession, but said before the crowd of students, faculty, administrators and community members that he has worked to produce green initiatives designed for economic and environmental advancement.

"Oterus is developing cellulosic ethanol based on discoveries made right here at UMass Amherst, and recently broke ground on a new facility in Chicopee," said the Governor. "Seuderi Engines, a Research and Development firm in Springfield, is on the cutting edge of new super-efficient gas, diesel and hybrid engines," he continued.

Topol, a native Bostonian, is the former president, CEO, chairman of the board and director of Scientific-Atlanta, Inc., a manufacturer producing broadband communications systems, satellite-based networks and instrumentation for industrial communications and government applications, according to a UMass Office of News and Media Relations release. He is now president of The Topol Group LLC, and is founding chairman of the Massachusetts Telecommunications Council, a past chairman of the Electronic Industries Association and sits on the Governor's Advisory Committee on Information Technology and the Governor's Council on Economic Growth.

Despite the series' conclusion, a scholarship Topol and his wife established will go on at UMass. The Sidney & Lillian Topol Scholarship Fund for Diversity in the Natural Sciences provides $5,000 scholarships for students in the natural sciences so long as they maintain a 3.0 grade-point average.

Patrick is running for re-election this November. He is expected to face steep opposition from Independent Tim Cahill and Republican Charles Baker.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Gov. Deval Patrick delivered the final Sydney Topol Distinguished Lecture Thursday.

Getting a 'Second Life' may help educate you in your first

By Max Calloway
Collegian Staff

Several UMass professors and graduate students have been turning to the massive online community of "Second Life" in an attempt to revolutionize the way education is delivered online, and they are not alone.

"Second Life" began in 1999 when entrepreneur Philip Rosedale founded Linden Lab with the intention of creating "a new form of shared 3D entertainment," according to the firm's website. Rosedale envisioned a kind of immersive social network, and unveiled Second Life in June 2003.

"Second Life" has set it self apart from other Massively Multiplayer Online Role Playing Games (MMORPGs) in that it isn't so much a 'game' as a virtual playground. Users create avatars – 3D representations of themselves – and travel around the "Second Life" world interacting with other users at various locales. Unlike other MMORPGs such as "Everquest" and the popular "World of Warcraft," all content in the "Second Life" universe is user-created.

Since then, "Second Life" has taken on, well, a life of its own. The Second Life Blog has been tracking everything from hours logged by users to economic statistics since the inception of the project, and according to recent figures, "Second Life" residents logged 124 million hours in the game, and its virtual economy topped $120 million U.S. in the first quarter of 2009. That's right: over 100 million U.S. Dollars. According to a May 1 2006 BusinessWeek report, the L$ (Second Life Currency) is trading at around L$300 to $1 U.S., which is a better rate than many developing nations' currency.

With interest building in the new potential uses of "Second Life" by the day, increasingly, educational institutions have been turning to the program in an attempt to bring a more immersive and interactive online learning environment to students.

The University of Massachusetts first ventured into "Second Life" in 2008, when it purchased its own island with University funds – yes, just like in the real world, institutions and individuals have to pay for their land. Since then, professors Florence Sullivan and Claire Hamilton from the Department of Teacher Education and Curriculum Studies have begun to implement "Second Life" in their classes.

Sullivan currently uses the virtual UMass created on "Second Life" in her class Instructional Design of Educational Technology, and is also "conducting research with virtual worlds looking specifically at collaborative problem solving and the effects of certain design elements on student discourse in such environments."

It was in Sullivan's class that Birdie Champ – a master's student in Sullivan's department – first worked with "Second Life" on a "collaborative chemistry simulation for middle school students that dealt primarily with the periodic table; how water molecules are formed and measurement issues of scale," she explained.

For Champ, this project opened the door for her current master's thesis.

"I am creating an interactive project that shows the effects of Lou Gehrig's disease on the body," explained Champ.

The project is still a work in progress, but Champ has been working with members of the International Society for Technology in Education to get the project done and has already hosted several virtual workshops with educators from the University of Texas, Long Island University, Florida State University and several European universities.

See SECOND LIFE on page 4

"Phallacies" asks what it is to be a man

By Bobby Hitt and Jillian Pasiecnik
Collegian Staff

The performers of "Phallacies: A Masculine Performance" think it takes a real man to express his feelings and wear pink shirts. The performance of students concerned about dispelling myths about traditional male archetypes, held April 20 in the Cape Cod Lounge, sought to challenge the fallacies of traditional concepts of masculinity.

The performance consisted of two acts, with a mixture of sketches drifting between comedic and serious in nature, conveying messages meant to promote healthy male behavior.

According to a pamphlet distributed at the show, the more a man holds a strong belief in what the pamphlet described as traditional masculinity, the more likely he is to commit sexual assault, drive unsafely and abuse drugs and alcohol.

"When forming this group, we had several revealing discussions," said University Health Services health educator and "Phallacies" performer Tom Schiff. "A group member brought up the idea that men had to decide often between being healthy and being traditionally masculine," he explained.

Schiff said that he and his troupe ran with this paradoxical idea and incorporated it into their Tuesday performance, adding that he drew inspiration to create the compilation of sketches from the 1996 play about women's struggles and relations "The Vagina Monologues."

"Too often men don't think about how it is to be a man," said Schiff.

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

Health Services educator Tom Schiff helped organize "Phallacies."

One of the more serious sketches the group performed was "Lessons from the Kickball Field," where actor and UMass student Dennis Canty explained the pain of getting picked last for kickball in the fourth grade. Canty's character explains that being picked last was a way to make him feel he was worth less than other students. The character explains that being discriminated against became a part of life as a gay adult man.

"Letters to Our Fathers" examined the relationship between a father and son, while "Crossing the Line" depicted a man being confronted by his friends about the abusive language he uses toward his girlfriend.

The mood was lightened with comedic sketches such as "That Guy," which made light of the actions of a highly intoxicated guy at a party. Another humorous piece was "The Middle Stall," where several actors portray the awkwardness and discomfort of using the middle urinal in a men's bathroom, all to ask the question, 'Why does is this an uncomfortable situation?'

"Testicle Talk" showed the humorous banter between the left testicle, "Lefty," and his counterpart, played by Schiff. The pair encouraged self-examination for testicle cancer, a health risk for men.

"Hugging 101" showed the multiple variations of the male hug, from the awkward "A-frame" to the drunken group hug. The audience was subjected to witnessing two men wrapped in an intimate embrace for about thirty seconds.

The show discouraged the use of certain terms, like "no homo," and phrases like "I'd hit that," in a sketch called "Masculinguistics." This sketch also examined how the history of some words, such as "suck," actually perpetuates negative "masculinized" expressions through their users subscribing to pre-established codes of perceived male behavior.

The performance also explored so-called masculinities from different ethnic and class perspectives. In a sketch called "What's Race Got to Do With It?" performers discussed topics including diversity among a group of Asian men sitting at a table together. A "yellow" performer explains that it is a "miracle" that at his lunch table are not just other "yellow" men, but Koreans, Chinese, Japanese and Vietnamese all coming together, regardless of the various historic differences between their countries.

Meanwhile, a white man expresses his frustration with being what he calls "just another face," and a "black" man articulates his struggle to reconcile his identity in what he considers a white man's world, lamenting that, "To be a full man means to be a white man, anything else is less than, therefore, I feel less than."

The play also sheds light on "the real cost of drinking" and focuses on how abuse can transcend the physical and include emotional trauma.

"I think they did a really good job representing different racial and class backgrounds," said UMass alumnus Margo Bossom.

"This show is not a solution to sexism," said Bossom, who works in community engagement, "but it is a good way to start talking about it."

The last sketch, "From This Day Forward," challenged the audience to initiate conversations challenging the traditional form of hegemonic, or dominant, masculinity.

The end of the show was met with a standing ovation.

"I think the performance went really well," said Scott Aldrich-Holmes, a performer. "This is the first time the group has performed as a whole."

"[The show] was nerve wracking," said Aldrich-Holmes, who is a member of the troupe for the first time this semester. "But I hope next time we are given a bigger venue than the Cape Cod Lounge."

Phallacies was sponsored by the Center for Health Promotion, University Health Services, UMass and was funded in part by a grant from the UMass Arts Council.

Bobby Hitt can be contacted at rhitt@student.umass.edu. Jillian Pasciecnik can be reached at jmpasiecn@student.umass.edu.

THE AMHERST COLLEGE PROGRAM BOARD AND AAS PRESENT:
THE ROOTS
FEATURING jason derülo
SATURDAY, APRIL 24TH
DOORS OPEN AT 7, SHOW STARTS AT 8
LE FRAK GYM, AMHERST COLLEGE
FREE FOR AC STUDENTS. TICKETS GUARANTEED! MARCH 29th- APRIL 9TH
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL AUDIENCE TICKETS AVAILABLE APRIL 9TH
FIVE COLLEGE $15
GENERAL ADMISSION $25
NO CAMERAS OR LARGE BAGS
AC TICKETS AVAILABLE IN ROOM 114 REFIE CAMPUS CENTER
5 COLLEGE & GENERAL ADMISSION AVAILABLE ON:
https://www.amherst.edu/campuslife/arts/calendar

Rise of the ElDrazi Party Weekend April 24 & 25.
Scan OffTheWallGameStore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russel St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

MAX CALLOWAY/COLLEGIAN

UMass professors Florence Sullivan and Claire Hamilton have been using "Second Life" in their classes since 2008, creating interactive environments, such as the molecule above.

Role playing game may create academic options

SECOND LIFE from page 2

Hamilton echoed similar sentiments to Sullivan and Champ, arguing that programs such as "Second Life" offer a level of immersion that SPARK, UMass' online academic dashboard, lacks. Hamilton currently employs the virtual campus in her Child Development classes to offer what she calls "virtual field trips," where students can assume the roles of parents, children, administrators and teachers in varying educational scenarios. Hamilton also takes advantage of "Second Life's" level of peer-to-peer interaction and schedules discussion sections for her larger classes at 'Second UMass,' the online community, allowing students to enjoy the benefits of smaller class sizes virtually.

"One discussion section was scheduled for 7 p.m. There was a snow day, but students were still able to meet," explained Hamilton, much to the chagrin of cold weather climate students everywhere.

The efforts of Hamilton, Sullivan and Champ are by no means an isolated case. Harvard University currently runs a simulation called River City, which, according to its Web site, is "an interactive computer simulation for middle grades science students to learn scientific inquiry and 21st century skills," situated in a turn-of-the-century New England town.

Indiana University's Quest Atlantis aims to provide "a powerful new learning environment that combines academic concepts and meaningful play with disciplinary practices with the goal to create socially committed citizens."

According to Sullivan, this is only the beginning.

Despite the possibility that some could discredit these virtual ventures as a hobby for "Second Life" shut-ins, "it's not about 'Second Life,' it's about its interactive potential," said Champ.

Touring the Second UMass campus, one is immediately stricken by how sparse the campus appears. Aside from the campus pond, there are only two buildings. Perhaps this may foreshadow room for new grass on UMass' first campus – and on its second, as well.

Max Calloway can be reached at mcalloway@student.umass.edu.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING THIS summer?

Save time and money by completing a summer course at Mount Wachusett Community College.

It's easily done, usually through your college's registrar's office. Check there first to ensure the course meets their requirements. Once you complete your MWCC course, request a transcript from the MWCC Enrollment Center to transfer the credit back to your home institution.

Summer Sessions:

- Two week May Intersession courses: May 17 – 28
- Summer 1: June 1 – July 2
- Summer 2: July 6 – Aug. 13
- Full Summer: June 1 – Aug. 13

Some Courses Offered:

ART113 Introduction to Studio
CIS127 Computer Technologies
ENG101 English Composition I
ENG102 English Composition II
ECO101 Macroeconomics
ECO102 Microeconomics
PSY105 Intro to Psychology
SOC103 Intro to Sociology
BIO109 Biology I
CHE107 General Chemistry I
HIS201 History of the United States
HUM260 The Art of Being Human
MAT143 Statistics
SPA109 Beginning Spanish I
THE113 Speech

Check out MWCC classes this summer, on-campus and online!
Go to www.mwcc.edu/summer

Mount Wachusett Community College
Enrollment Center (978) 630-9284
Email: admissions@mwcc.mass.edu

AA/EEO Institution

MAX CALLOWAY/COLLEGIAN

If "Second Life" becomes more popular, some of your professors could soon look like this.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" – SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Social creationism, social destruction

Harrison Searles

The most important lesson that one can learn from any of the social sciences is that the human mind cannot comprehend all of the factors, many of them infinitesimally small, and that it is therefore impossible to design society with social engineering.

Indeed, as F.A. Hayek said in "The Fatal Conceit," "the curious task of economics is to demonstrate to men how little about what they really know about what they imagine they can design."

However, despite how simple this may be to comprehend, both academics in their ivory towers and politicians in Washington still construct plans to design society according to their own delusions.

Nevertheless, all attempts to plan society will fail just as socialism failed, due to the fact that the human mind cannot centralize all of the knowledge necessary for such plots to succeed. Just as is the case with biological evolution, social order must emerge, it cannot be planned.

There are two primary reasons why the knowledge that permeates society cannot be efficiently centralized: first, the dynamic nature of society, and second, much of that knowledge is tacit, having to do with a specific space and time, and cannot be easily learned outside of experience.

Due to the fact that society is dynamic, the knowledge that is necessary for its operation changes along with the conditions of society; the truth behind this has never been so vivid as it is today, where information can be transmitted across continents in seconds. As the conditions of society change, the human mind is in a race to keep up with its changing environment. By the time the human mind learns to manipulate something as complex as society, the flux of conditions has rendered the plan obsolete.

> "The curious task of economics is to demonstrate to men how little about what they really know about what they imagine they can design."

For instance, as we have all seen in the past decade, innovation has far outpaced regulators' attempts to "tame" them, thus rendering attempts to plan the financial markets moot. The second reason why the planners of society do not have the knowledge to actualize their visions is that much of the necessary knowledge is tacit and therefore cannot be centralized. A basic example of such knowledge is how to ride a bicycle, it must be learned by experience and cannot be conveyed otherwise, and other examples are the mores, norms, and traditions of society.

Despite this fact, there are still many attempts to plan society according to the designs of those in power even though such attempts are bound to fail.

The irony of this is while the majority of those who believe in planning human society rightly criticize those who believe in evolutionary creationism, yet they fail to see that both the biological and the social creationists fail to realize the role of spontaneous order in each discipline.

Order can be the result of evolution whether by natural selection or market calculation. Furthermore, attempts to interfere with the natural, unplanned order have so often proven devastating, whether it be the introduction of species alien to a certain environment or the central planning of production. Despite this, while one is a belief that is mocked by all, another is held by some of the most intelligent members of society.

Reason may be man's most valuable possession, but it has its boundaries beyond which it cannot tread. One of the most important tasks for the defense of reason is protecting it against those who do not understand the necessary conditions for its use and growth. One of the most important bastions against the enemies of reason is identifying whether a system is either dynamic or static.

While the former are unchanging and therefore reason can discover the knowledge necessary to manipulate them, when a system is dynamic then it must be accepted that knowledge is limited and largely negative. Both evolution and society are examples of self-regulating dynamic systems that even though we may have some knowledge of their operation (e.g. natural selection and the law of supply and demand), never will they truly be able to be comprehended by the human mind.

Attempts to bend society to the designs and whims of planners have failed miserably and innocents have always paid the price of having to see their society fall to shambles because a couple of prideful individuals in power thought that they could, by the power of their reason, change society for the better.

It is high time that the influence of the social creationists be overthrown after all of the harm their doctrines have sown for they act as if they truly understand what no human mind could ever truly comprehend: human society.

Harrison Searles is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at hwearles@student.umass.edu.

'Going green' completely misses the point

Yevgeniya Lomakina

What is one catchphrase that has recently become more and more popular? The arrival of spring and Earth day only amplifies its emergence. Occasionally against their will, numerous times a day, the unsuspecting consumer is faced with various "Earth-friendly" slogans.

Words of affection towards the planet appear on bags, mugs, shirts, pants, cars, buses, buildings and the list can go on. The "green living" movement is here to stay. TV programs encourage viewers to buy Earth friendly products. Campuses and job facilities boast about their green initiatives. A new market for specifically "green" jobs is on the rise. All these actions are aimed at doing "a little part" at saving the planet from global warming. With such a noble cause in mind, it seems that no price is too high.

It can no longer be denied: the Earth is affected by global climate change, which was initiated by humans' misuse of natural resources. The statistics have forced the public to finally acknowledge the problem. In 2002, Colorado and Arizona had their worst wildfire seasons. Extreme heat waves in 2003 caused numerous deaths in Europe and more around the globe. The United States is said to lead the world in pollution, emitting more carbon dioxide than China, India and Japan combined. Based upon such statistics, it is apparent that action against global climate change was long overdue.

While saving the planet is a good cause, the carbon dioxide emissions will not decline if one invests into a "Love planet Earth" T-shirt. However, the media created a strong argument for the positive impact of "going" green, at any cost. Those who consent to help "save the environment" are perceived as "Earth conscious" and their opponents are suppressed. It seems as if suddenly, all spheres of society, from factory owners to private individuals, embarked upon a massive race for who can be the most green.

Green initiatives are as diverse as the people who embrace them. If the planet could be saved based on what kind of cereal a consumer bought, evidently, there would be no problem. The question, however, lies much deeper.

Did advertising and popular culture turn a genuine concern for the environment into an easily solvable problem? It seems that the answer to saving the Earth is only one purchase away.

> Green initiatives are as diverse as the people who embrace them.

Do you want to live green? Buy a mug. Do you want to live greener? Buy a hybrid car. Choosing an environmentally safe product may simply allow the consumer to have a guilty free conscience, but, in reality, will cost more for the environment. Costs for transportation, packaging and the novelty of green products must all be taken into account. It is better to spend a lesser amount of money on a regular product, or even better, not to buy any product at all.

Some Earth friendly initiatives require no spending on the part of the consumer. Instead of buying a hybrid car, a better choice would be taking better care of the currently owned model.

To save gas, carpool. Instead of buying newer "green" household electric products, once again, take good care of the ones you already own. Instead of buying organic vegetables at Whole Foods, choose to buy them at a local farm stand.

However, these simple ways to reduce carbon emissions and spending do not seem to be "popular" enough. It is assumed that if one's initiatives to be green are not publicly seen, they are not present.

It is interesting to note that criticisms of green consumption have only come from individual activists, and not large environmental groups, such as Sierra Club, or Rainforest Action Network.

Globalization is on the rise, and more and more countries begin to produce in surplus quantities and export their products all over the globe. In order to "stop" global warming with any significant rate, every country on the planet needs to play their part in reducing carbon emissions. However, countries outside the United States may not be as easily convinced into the green movement, partly due to the common belief that the United States is responsible for global warming.

Al Gore says it best in his documentary, "An Inconvenient Truth," when he says that in order to reduce global warming, every nation needs to contribute their part. Otherwise, individual efforts are meaningless on a worldwide scale.

It is only when buyers begin to diminish their consumerist desires that any change may begin to take place. If one wants to truly go green, it can be done without expensive purchases. Meanwhile, if the voice of the media remains above the voice of reason, the global warming situation will remain unchanged.

Yevgeniya Lomakina is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ylomakina@student.umass.edu.

Point-Counter-Point

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

UMass living areas: There can be only one

Southwest is the best

Roy Ribitzky

The other day I stared deep into my mirror in my awesome Z-room in Southwest and said, "Mirror, mirror on the wall, who in the land is fairest of them all?"

To cut a really long fairy tale short, the mirror just stared back at me. I guess I'll just have to fight for Southwest on my own.

The Southwest residential living area clearly has the upper hand on Central. For starters, everyone knows where Southwest is. Central?

Not so much. I can go up that treacherous hill from Franklin to, for example, Dickinson Hall in Orchard Hill yet the adjacent buildings atop the hill, such Van Meter and Butterfield, are a part of Central. How does that make sense? Pick a side of a hill already, will ya?

I am not sure why Central residents make such a big deal about Z-rooms. Not only are they different from the rest of the living area dormitories, but they offer some – however limited – privacy. Roommates have their own side, and can easily hang a curtain between the sections for added privacy.

You can't exactly split a square room in the old buildings in Central. Walk-in closets in Central? Great. How about walk in living rooms in Southwest? That's right. I've got my living room on one side and the master bedroom on the other.

I also have a Z-room to myself, so that might be a little bit more privileged than most other Southwest residents. But I have still seen awesome setups that I have yet to see in the boring old boxes up in Central.

I mentioned in the previous article about Southwest that we are close to the athletic fields, the new recreation center, two DC's, a relatively "convenient" convenience store, and we really are not that far from our classes. We have a nice, healthy walk to the academic side of campus.

Those up the hill in Orchard Hill – I mean Central, whichever area those buildings are a part of – have that horrid looking monstrosity of their very own Mt. Everest to climb up.

Both DC's are down the hill, too - great planning on behalf of the campus to make it even more difficult for people to go up that mountain.

My counterpart wrote that residents in Southwest struggle to get sleep because of the "noise." I highly doubt students get many hours of sleep anyways.

We have rigorous classes to finish homework in and socials we have with friends that go well into the night.

Now, I actually live in Southwest, and the noise really is not that bad. I might be used to it because I've lived in areas where people actually went out of their houses and apartments and socialized, so the noise probably does not affect me as much as someone that can not handle two people talking in the next room.

The idea that Southwest is the nosiest place on campus is a fallacy; I have been up in Central late at night, and the noise level was just like in Southwest.

Southwest also holds the best social events on campus. Southwest Week, put on by the hard workers and volunteers in the Southwest Area Government, was again a hit this year. Five full days of fun times – unlike Fill the Hill, a whopping one-day event – represents the balance of work and fun we experience in Southwest.

There a lot of 4.0 GPA students living in Southwest; there are a lot of honors students who live here and manage to have social lives as well. I like to have a balance in life: work, school and friends. Up in Central it's all "work, work and work some more! And maybe I'll hang out with you later... not!"

I'm sorry to bash so much on Central. I tried last time to point out the positives and similarities between the living areas, but, ultimately, "there can be only one." Down here, we're healthier, have more fun and do awesomely in school.

It is nice to walk around Southwest and know the campus is actually alive. We have a vibrant atmosphere – there's no surprise that school administrators like to take their guests to Berkshire. They like to show the bustling and active part of campus, other than the classrooms.

We are close enough to class that we don't have that hard a time getting there but we are far enough that we don't feel overwhelmed with constant pressure of academics. I've never ran into people traffic in Southwest either, so I'm not sure what Central people talk about when they say it takes an extra ten minutes to walk under the tunnel.

Overall, Southwest is just fun. I'm 10 minutes from class and 10 minutes from Amherst Center.

I know that there will always be people chilling and hanging out and doing work in Southwest – simply put, we have everything going on. Balance is key in life, and we have it.

I'm sure my mirror on the wall would agree with me. In the mean time, rock on Southwest residents and vote for your living area to prove you're the best.

Roy Ribitzky is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at rribitzk@student.umass.edu.

Central wins the battle

Dave Coffey

So, it's finally come down to it: Central vs. Southwest. It's a competition the likes of which we've rarely seen. Ali vs. Foreman. Kramer vs. Kramer. The Confederacy vs. the Union. Okay, that last one doesn't really apply, because the former was vanquished, but one can easily get my point. The battle between aesthetically pleasing and conveniently located Central residential area and the party-hedonistic urban forest of Southwest is not unlike the epic clash of the Shire and Mordor as depicted by J.R.R. Tolkien.

Central is undeniably the underdog in the matchup, not simply because of the huge advantage in population size Southwest has, but also because of the popularity Southwest has earned itself, mostly through notoriety. But even though Southwest is arguably much more popular than Central, do the experiences sincerely warrant this ranking? I, for one, don't think so. Let's analyze the two separate every day experiences that each residential area offers.

Let's start with Mordor, I mean, Southwest. Obviously, there are two different building choices in Southwest, consisting of low-rises and towers. Let's say one's dorm is in a low rise. I wake up and realize I live my life three and a half months at a time in a Z-room; in other words, a room the shape of an irregular Tetris piece. On behalf of everyone who doesn't share an affinity for living in cave-like residencies, I'll be polite and simply say, "No, thank you."

Perhaps I live in a tower. Then I assume someone's everyday experience goes something like the following. I rise in the morning to the composite awakening sounds of my alarm clock and my roommate regurgitating the contents of the prior evening's liquid regret. Of course, waking up isn't as easy as it could be, since the night's sleep is usually hampered by the goings-on of nocturnal festivities. Once I set foot out of my room, I must of course take care not to trip over the various empty beer cans and unconscious neighbors that lay strewn across the hallway floor. I then step outside the building into a concrete jungle full of monolithic slabs of stone and dozens of windows filled with the unsatisfied faces of cursed Z-room dwellers. And now, it's only a half-hour commute by foot to the nearest classroom building. Well, as glorious as all that sounds let's consider the alternative offered by Central.

I wake up to the sounds of sparse morning traffic and chirping birds, as opposed to the strained echoes of broken glass and vomiting coming from the bathroom. My roommate is still sound asleep, as opposed to hanging halfway off his bunk in the throes of alcohol poisoning.

I stroll down the stairs, thinking to myself, "Wow, how lucky am I that I don't have to wait for an elevator in the morning or wither away my existence in a Z-room?" I step outside into a pleasant, natural atmosphere complete with green grass and classic-looking, traditional, red brick dorms. After a quick, peaceful stroll down the hill, I am right in the middle of campus and close to pretty much anything on campus that I need to be.

How average are these comparisons? Well, suffice to say they merely romanticize one main concept: Southwest is a big, stone party place that is essentially geographically separated from the campus, while Central is a chilled-out, conveniently-located hillside place. And how far-fetched is this assertion? Realistically, not very.

So why is Southwest so popular? Once again, I would say its notoriety helps out its namesake via word of mouth. Obviously, most, if not all, of the stories surrounding UMass Amherst's reputation as a party school resonate from the concrete courtyards of Southwest. But do these tales of notoriety, too numerous and, in some cases, outrageous, to list here, really make for a better residential experience?

I would posit that no, it doesn't. And, to be fair, who could logically disagree? While perhaps Southwest does a good job of drawing attention and popularity towards the University of Massachusetts, those who know UMass well enough would probably also admit it is absolutely not the best place to live. Will everyone who lives in Southwest get trampled by a crowd after the Red Sox win a pennant? Probably not. But, will the average Southwest citizen lead an objectively better existence than a Central dweller?

Again, the answer is probably not.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ludacris to 'Rollout' Spring Concert

By Garth Brody
Daily Collegian Staff

Do you enjoy live music in widely accessible styles? If yes, then get your sweet keister down to the Mullins Center this Sunday for the UPC's annual Spring Concert.

Headlining the event is the one and only Ludacris. Luda is an MC who needs no introduction. We all know the words to "Rollout," "Move Bitch" and of course "Act a Fool" from 2001's "2 Fast 2 Furious" (in which he co-starred as Tej).

We have all at some point claimed to have hoes in different area codes, and though we've all respected him for quite some time, we all finally (collectively) admitted it after his appearance in the 2004 Best Picture Oscar-winner, "Crash."

From his 2000 major label debut, "Back for the First Time," to last month's "Battle of the Sexes," Ludacris has sold over 24 million records worldwide. His success has been fueled by agile lyricism, a zany sense of humor and an infectious stage presence that very possibly generated his moniker. All this and doubtlessly a few other surprises are in store for Sunday's concert-goers.

Also on the bill, New Found Glory are the only ones holding the banner high for all the UMass rockers. Their pop-punk style blends dynamic hooks and an aggressive aesthetic, sometimes tossing in a hardcore breakdown to contrast with vocalist Jordan Pundik's double-time, Disney melodies.

They are currently touring for the tenth anniversary of their breakthrough self-titled album, but New Found Glory is certainly not resting on their laurels. Last year they released "Not Without a Fight" to generally positive reviews.

LMFAO, comprised of Redfoo (Stefan Gordy) and Sky Blu (Skyler Gordy), are best known (depending on the source of your pop culture exposure) for either their debut single "I'm In Miami Bitch" or for "Get Crazy," the opening theme to "Jersey Shore." Their synth-powered party jams will surely get you completely crunk and/or hyphy.

Electrolightz follow in LMFAO's neon footsteps, listing them among their influences. The LA-based group rounds out their club sound with singer Rami Dearest and rapper Namebrand, along with their producer erOc and live drummer Kash.

C-Banga, who won the UPC's Battle of the Bands earlier this year, has earned his spot at the Spring Concert through trial by fire. His victory lap Sunday night will sound somewhere between Kanye and Chris Brown, with massive R&B force courtesy of his backup band – the Bang Boys.

Though the foremost musical advancement made by any of Sunday"s performers is Luda's popularization of the fully articulated "r" sound (as in "Ursher"), the concert is guaranteed to be a blast. Ludacris and New Found Glory are venerable veterans, LMFAO and Electrolightz are bringing the strobe-light anthems, and C-Banga is your hometown hero, though he hails from Springfield. Get off your high horse and go see thisa show. The Spring Concert is this Sunday, April 21 at the Mullins Center. Tickets are free for UMass students, $15 for five-college students, and $35 general admission. Rollout, UMass. Rollout.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu

SAMANTHA WEBBER/COLLEGIAN

C-Banga, winners of this year's University Programming Council's Battle of the Bands will be the opening act at Spring Concert this Sunday.

COURTESY LUDACRIS.NET

Hip-hop legend Ludacris will take the stage alongside New Found Glory, LMFAO, Electrolightz and C-Banga for the sold out Spring Concert on Sunday.

Roots to 'Star' at Amherst

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The classic hip-hop group, The Roots will bring their acclaimed live act to Amherst College on Saturday. With an album release planned for later this year, they are likely to unearth a number of new tracks.

Also known as the Legendary Roots Crew, the group has been performing all over the world for nearly two decades, featuring socially-conscious overtones and an eclectic blend of jazz-infused instrumentals. Though receiving modest mainstream success throughout their careers, the seasoned musicians from Philadelphia remain relevant with a new album scheduled to be released later this year.

The Legendary Roots Crew has gained acclaim as one of the top live performances in music. In 2003, Rolling Stone pegged the group as one of the twenty greatest live acts in the world. In its most recent issue, the magazine acclaimed them as one of the "40 reasons to get excited about music."

The Roots are as inspired now as they were when they began in the early '90s. The group is enjoying its new role as the house band for the network television show, "Late Night with Jimmy Fallon," rehearsing fervently in preparation for the release of their 11th album titled "How I Got Over."

"Our live shows have gotten better, our songwriting has gotten better," Questlove said to Will Hermes of Rolling Stone magazine. "Over the last year we wrote, oh, about 9000 songs."

The crew formed in 1987 when drummer Amir "Questlove" Thomson and Tariq "Black Thought" Trotter decided to combine talents after meeting at the Philadelphia High School for Creative Performing Arts. Under the alias of the Square Roots, the band gathered more members and played shows in New York City and Philadelphia. Throughout the years, the band has gone through various members including accomplished producer Scott Storch on keyboards and the beat-boxing phenomenon Rhazel. The character of the group's vocal sound changed in 1999 when fellow emcee and original member Malik B. left the group.

Along with the two founding artists, the band currently includes Captain Kirk Douglas on electric guitar, F. Knuckles doing percussion, Kamal Gray on electric keyboard, Owen Biddle on bass and Damen Bryson on tuba.

In 1993, the original Crew began touring in Europe without any studio albums recorded and soon gained the attention of record executive David Geffen. DGC Records (an acronym for David Geffen Company) represented popular bands such as Nirvana and Beck on his label and was known primarily for its hard rock acts. The alternative hip-hop sound of The Roots original instrumental compilations and stage presence spurred Geffen to sign them and their first album was released entitled "Organix."

"Do You Want More?!!??!" followed in 1995 to quiet success. The album is considered a classic by hip-hop enthusiasts, noted by The Source magazine as one of the 100 best rap albums, yet attention towards the album remained mostly underground.

See ROOTS on page 8

Kaki King reigns supreme at Monday show

By Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

Kaki King, an up-and-coming name on the indie- pop scene, came to Northampton on Monday to wow the crowd with her guitar-playing prowess.

The Iron Horse was the fourth on King's tour across the U.S. to promote her new album, "Junior." In stores starting April 13, "Junior" is King's fifth wide-released CD since bursting onto the scene in 2003 with her album "Everybody Loves You."

The show kicked off with opening act An Horse, an Australian indie-pop band which consists of members Kate Cooper and Damon Cox. While Cooper strums on her guitar and Cox provides a mellow beat on drums, the duo unites to lend heart-felt vocals to their songs. No stranger to touring, the band has played previously with such famous acts as Tegan and Sara and Death Cab for Cutie.

While not technically a full band, the duo still manages to make their music sound full and rich. The two brought the show to life with their light-hearted quips between songs, including how they rarely play shows where people eat food while watching them. Cooper and Cox only played for about 30 minutes, but the duo left the crowd with the impression that they would take their act very far.

Kaki King's arrival on stage was greeted with cheers and applause before she launched into her set. Contrary to her solo act in the past, King was backed on Monday by Jordan Perlson on drums and Dan Brantigan on both trumpet and analog EVI, an electric instrument that looks somewhat like a trumpet but can be set to play a number of different sounds. Many of the songs used this odd instrument as a bass of sorts.

King's performance can only be described as enchanting, mesmerizing, and, above all else, simply astonishing. Her fingers move effortlessly across the guitar strings, displaying a mastery of the instrument with an eclectic combination of styles and complex patterns. King spiced up the performance with heran innovative playing style where she utilizing hises her hand as an instrument itself and, turning her her fingernails intoas picks

Although half of King's songs lack lyrics, words sometimes seem unnecessary. Her songs blend soft melodies with rhythmic beats, creating a unique musical style that speaks for itself. Her new rhythm section compliments her trademark style, yet her fans at the Iron Horse got a glimpse of the true King when Perlson and Brantigan left the stage and King played solo once again.

Like An Horse, King exhibited a good sense of humor throughout the night, constantly joking around with the band, but never appearing to be aloof. Kaki King wrapped up the night with a round of wisecracks, leaving the crowd laughing and crying for more.

Before the audience even knew what had happened, the concert was over and Kaki King left the stage with her band. Heeding the cheers from the crowd demanding an encore, King walked back out and completed her set with one more song. King took our her steel guitar and played a looping version of "Gay Sons of Lesbian Mothers."

After arranging all of the loops, King left the stage and joined her fans in a dance, by itself. Alas, the concert had to end, and as King departed, the crowd reveled in the warm atmosphere born from the astonishing show. Kaki King wowed the Pioneer Valley on Monday night with her remarkable skills on her guitar, and her entertaining performance was both inspirational and memorable. The concert successfully combined the works of An Horse and Kaki King into a light-hearted adventure that had crowds cheering and craving more.

Following her current tour to promote "Junior," King will be returning to Northampton next year.

Tappan Parker can be reached at rtparker@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HAMILTON/COLLEGIAN

Kaki King and An horse wowed the crowd Monday night with their unconventional styles and charming banter.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.75 • STUDENT $7.50 (WITH ID)
CULT CLASSICS SUPERSERIES
EVERY FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
TICKETS ONLY $5 EACH!
APRIL 23rd & 24th
Pulp Fiction
HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - REAL D 3D
(S2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 145 415 645 915
◆ OCEANS [G]115 400 700 930
◆ THE BACK-UP PLAN [PG13]
125 405 720 1000
◆ THE LOSERS [PG13]140 430 730 1010
◆ (MIDNIGHT SHOW) - PULP FICTION
[R] ⓘ1201AM
◆ DEATH AT A FUNERAL [R]
110 450 735 955
◆ KICK-ASS [R] ⓘ
130 420 545 710 835 1005
ALICE IN WONDERLAND - 2D [PG]
150 740
CLASH OF THE TITANS - 2D [PG13]
100 410 715 950
DATE NIGHT [PG13]135 340 445 555
705 810 925 1025
DIARY OF A WIMPY KID [PG] 120PM
HOT TUB TIME MACHINE [R] ⓘ440 1030
THE BOUNTY HUNTER [PG13]155PM
THE LAST SONG [PG] 105 425 725 1015
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Legendary Roots Crew break ground

ROOTS from page 7

Throughout the 90s, during the Golden Age of hip-hop, in which rap music was categorized by synthesized sound samples and break beats and emcees' controversial lyrics, The Roots did not receive much consideration in popular music. But the group built an underground following by appearing at well-known music festivals such as Lollapalooza, the Montreux Jazz Festival and Woodstock '99.

The success of their 1996 album "Illadelph Halflife" gave The Roots its first mainstream recognition, cracking the top 40 on the Billboard 200. In 1999, the group broke out with "Things Fall Apart," reaching #4 on the charts and going gold in sales. The album received a Grammy nomination for Best Rap Album, won for Best Performance by a Duo/Group for the song "You Got Me," featuring Erykah Badu and Eve.

The band put out six albums since then to more elevated success. "Phrenology" (2002) went gold and reached #28 on the Billboard charts while "The Tipping Point" (2004) topped at #4 and produced Grammy nominated singles "Star" (Best Urban/Alternative Performance) and "Don't Say Nothin'" (Best Rap Performance by a Duo/Group). One more Grammy Nomination came for the group in 2007 for the song "Don't Feel Right" (Best Rap Performance by a Duo/Group) after the release of "Game Theory," the first off of their current label, Def Jam. The group's most recent album "Rising Down" was released on the sixteenth anniversary of the Rodney King Riots.

The staple of the Legendary Roots Crew remains their live performances. The act played behind Jay-Z during his "MTV Unplugged" (2006) live album and appeared in Dave Chapelle's "Block Party" (2006). They toured with MC Lyte and Big Daddy Kane in 2007, promoting VH1's Hip Hop Honors and headlined the Rock the Bells music festival last summer. The group has performed with Dave Matthews and was featured during the Winter Olympics on Feb. 25.

The group will take the Lefrak Gym stage at Amherst College beginning at 8 p.m. on Saturday night. Tickets are $15 for Five College Students and $25 for general admission.

Online ticket sales have concluded and remaining tickets will be sold at the door. Doors open at 7 p.m.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

The Roots can be expected to unearth new material Saturday during their performance at Amherst College in anticipation of this year's upcoming release.

Hampshire reproductive rights conference a success

By Christiana McDougal
Collegian Staff

Last weekend, the 24th annual Reproductive Rights Conference for Student and Community Activists was held at Hampshire College.

The event featured a variety of two-hour workshops and free HIV testing. There were also guest speakers from across the country, as well as three Nicaraguan former-revolutionary feminists who participated in discussions of sexual and reproductive rights justice.

Workshop topics included gender, economic justice, sexuality and LGBTQI rights, abortion rights, access to health care, birthing and parenting rights, climate and the environment, comprehensive sex education, contraceptive practices, peace and safety, political action and reproductive technologies. Each workshop addressed topics that functioned as a springboard for discussions about inequality and oppression as it relates to reproductive rights and sexuality.

The conference was sponsored by the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program (CLPP) and the Population and Development Program (PopDev).

CLPP, which was created in 1981 in response to the Reagan administration and the anti-abortion wave that followed, calls attention to the lack of reproductive rights nationally and internationally. They work alongside students and activists to share knowledge about reproductive rights and sexuality activism.

PopDev, who partnered with CLPP for this event, aims "to change conventional thinking and policies about population growth that threaten reproductive rights, social justice and our environment," which is accomplished through "research, facts, expert analysis and activist and educational publications."

PopDev also strives to debunk myths about the role of population growth in environmental degradation and unequal access to food and agriculture. Instead, they emphasize the socio-economic and political inequalities that create oppression in the first place.

If attendees did not pre-register, they were asked to fill out a quick survey and donate if they were able.

All attendees were given a folder with information about the conference, including educational material that dealt with issues of reproductive health, strategies for social justice, and, "Tips on how to be an activist and/or ally in the movement to end gender oppression."

Within the "Resisting the Right" workshop, a spokeswoman for Washington D.C.'s Advocates for Youth, spoke about the conservative right and the detrimental effects of abstinence-only policies in schools.

She referred to the abstinence-only movement as being on, "the spectrum of crazy," discussing conservative "scare tactics like," such as the myth that "condoms break 30 percent of the time" and "HIV is spread through sweat and tears." The "no sex until marriage" rhetoric that is taught in school also demoralizes the LGBTQI community, who still cannot marry under federal law, she explained.

Hampshire College was a solid choice as a location for these workshops, allowing people from all over the Pioneer Valley to gain awareness of the injustices that are committed against people due to their sexuality, gender, race or beliefs.

Overall, the conference succeededsucceeded in raising awareness of reproductive rights and the discrimination many people face, as well as helping to build a strong community around this issue within the Pioneer Valley. As long as there is interest and support, the annual conference and the movement for reproductive justice will continue to grow.

Christiana McDougal can be reached at cmcdougal@student.umass.edu.

Career Services
STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE
NEWS OF THE WEEK
Last Minute Summer Positions:
★ City of Holyoke, Civil Engineer
★ Smith Barney, Finance, Econ
★ Biogen Idec, Comm, Mkt, Mgt, Comp Sci, Lab Science
★ Hasbro, Copywriter, English, Comm, Journ
Last Minute Jobs:
★ Pegasystems, Comp Sci
★ Solutia, Chem E, ME
★ MFS Financial, Econ, Finance
★ Octagon, Event Coordinator, Comm, MKT
★ Boston Foundation, Director Donors, Music, Sociology
These are only a sample of positions in erecruiting
www.umass.edu/careers
Stop by Goodell 512 Noon to 4 pm Monday Through Friday
UMassAmherst CAREER SERVICES STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE

Former star Ploch explains falling out

Dixon points to factors in dismissal

By Kara Devermenjian
Collegian Staff

Down 5-0 in the first set of Magdalena Ploch's singles match against No. 1 seed Olga Mackhova of Charleston Southern March 16, Massachusetts tennis coach Judy Dixon approached Ploch and told her she was no longer going to be playing for the Minutewomen.

She made a name for herself last year with unfaltering singles and doubles play at the No. 1 spot for UMass. The rookie finished the 2008-09 season leading the lineup with a 10-9 singles record to go along with the same record in doubles.

Ploch, a native of Luedenscheid, Germany, continued to impress as a sophomore when she teamed up with promising newcomer Julia Comas for doubles.

Ploch also carried on her dominant singles play, and earned the 17th seed entering the Intercollegiate Tennis Association Regional Championships. She defeated the No. 14 seed and two-time Patriot League champion Annie Houghton from Army and also upset the No. 3 seed from Harvard, Hideko Tachibana, who previously held a 12-0 record and three tournament titles.

The sophomore earned UMass Athlete of the Week in November for her solid performances.

Ploch entered spring break tournament play in Charleston, S.C., with a 9-4 record overall. She was also No. 16 among singles players in the entire Northeast according to an ITA poll. Ploch took a commanding role in helping the squad earn its 7-4 record, the team's best start in 10 years.

The Minutewomen's match against the No. 65 Buccaneers was the last time Ploch would ever represent her school. After Dixon approached her, Ploch forfeited the match.

"I'm just going to say that [Ploch] is such a good tennis player, there had to be a lot of factors involved in my decision to remove her from the team," Dixon said.

NCAA rules prohibit Dixon from discussing the incident in detail.

Ploch said she struggled with academics and the pressure of being the top singles player.

"Playing No. 1 for the team all the time does put on a lot of pressure," Ploch said via email. "Even if my coach always said that she doesn't expect me to win all the time, the team kind of does."

Ploch alleges that communication shut down between her and her coach as the season progressed. She said the reason for her perceived lack of effort was because of her increased focus on schoolwork, which caused her to arrive tired for practice.

Dixon said that her team's schoolwork comes first. In 2009, the squad earned ITA All-Academic Team for the eleventh consecutive year and earned a cumulative grade point average of 3.2.

"Our academic accomplishments remain a very high priority," Dixon said.

In addition to balancing athletics with academics, Ploch felt isolated from the rest of her team and struggled adjusting to her new assistant coach, Juancarlos Nunez. The Minutewomen were in Saint Louis preparing for the Atlantic 10 tournament and were unavailable for comment.

Ploch also claims that she was in pain and on medication at the time of the incident, but decided against informing Dixon.

"I knew that if I told her it wouldn't make a difference," Ploch said. "So when I was down 0-5 in the first set, she came on my court and said I'm not trying to win and that I'm officially not on the team anymore."

The sophomore considered transferring prior to March 16, but waited until she was no longer a part of the team to make the decision. She has since lost her athletic scholarship.

"I knew it would be the best thing to transfer, but I knew I was the No. 1 and my coach would not release me if I told her that I wanted to go," Ploch said.

The next day, Ploch got on a flight back to Amherst, hasn't made an effort to contact Dixon and has little communication with her former teammates.

She plans to continue playing tennis and said she received several offers, but will be transferring to Hawaii at Manoa in the fall.

Kara Devermenjian can be reached at kdevermen@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?

Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

"I am only one, but I am one. I cannot do everything, but I can do something. And I will not let what I cannot do interfere with what I can do."
- Edward Everett Hale

Third Annual
UMass Earthweek
Celebration 2010

Thursday, April 22nd &
Friday, April 23rd 10am-3pm
On the Dubois Library Lawn

* Student Buisinesses & groups
* Community organizations and farms
* Free Store
* Live Music
* Raffle
* Student lead workshops
* Student bands

* MUSIC
* FOOD
* FUN
* FREE!

Sponsored by: The UMass Eco-Coalition

UMass off to SLU

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

After a long regular season, the Massachusetts tennis team begins its play in the 2010 Atlantic 10 tournament in St. Louis, Mo. as the sixth seed.

The Minutewomen (12-7) are looking to win their first A-10 Championship since 2001 when they defeated George Washington, 4-2. Last year, the team finished sixth overall, going 1-2 in the three matches it played. UMass has its first winning record since 2006-07, when it compiled an 11-7 mark overall. Its .632 winning percentage is the highest UMass has earned since 2004-05.

The Minutewomen will open A-10 tournament play against 11th-seeded Saint Joesph's. This will be the first matchup between these two teams this season. In fact, the Minutewomen have only played one A-10 team this year, defeating Rhode Island, 7-0, on Oct. 14. The Hawks (6-18) enter the tournament after losses to New Jersey Institute of Technology and URI, both of which UMass defeated earlier in the season. However, the Hawks are coming off a 7-0 victory over Saint Peter's in their last match. Senior Jhennifer Kedzierski led the way for the Hawks, earning a 6-2, 6-1 victory at No. 1 singles, and teaming with sophomore Laura Matz for an 8-1 win at No. 1 doubles.

The match-up between freshman No. 1 singles star Julia Comas and Kedzierski highlights the opening round match. Kedzierski is the co-captain of SJU, and is the all-time single season leader in individual wins for the university with 16.

Following sophomore Magdalena Ploch's removal from the team, Comas has put together a 5-2 overall record. She leads the team with 15 singles victories on the year and has earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors twice over the course of the season.

The tournament will also be the last time that senior Maude Lecluyse plays for the Minutewomen. Lecluyse is second all-time in career matches for UMass (109) and fourth all-time in doubles victories (66).

Xavier is the tournament's favorite to win as the No. 1 seed. Senior Jill Ducro, who has 75 career singles wins to her name, leads the Musketeers. They also feature A-10 Rookie of the Week Katie Pleiman, who has a 14-4 record this year at No. 1 singles.

Other notable teams include second-seeded Richmond, and third-seeded Temple.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu

UM hosts local teams

By Eric Mansfield
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts rowing team will stay home this weekend for two regattas. The first of which will take place Saturday against Amherst, while the second will be on Sunday against Vermont.

Both regattas will take place on the Connecticut River. The regatta against the Catamounts will be the last home regatta of the season.

UMass is coming off a second place finish at the Atlantic 10 Championships last weekend in New Jersey. Rival crew Rhode Island took first.

The team will also host its annual team banquet after the regatta on Saturday.

The weather for the regatta against the Lord Jeffs should be relatively calm as the temperature will top out at 70 degrees. There will be a slight wind, but nothing that will seriously affect the outcome of the regatta. The Vermont regatta will face different weather conditions with expected rain showers and a top temperature of 60 degrees.

Sophomore Emily Boucher is providing a steady boost in production. At last weekend's Atlantic 10 Championships she helped the second Varsity 8 earn a second place finish, just behind Rhode Island. She also won the single event at the Knecht Cup two weeks ago.

The Varsity 4 has been stepping up for the Minutewomen, earning first last week at A-10s with Jennifer Coyne, Meredith Kearney, Kathryn Kern, Jessica Stern and coxswain Molly Bogle.

On April 21, UMass was No. 10 for the fourth straight week in the Lightweight Varsity 8 in the USRowing Collegiate poll. The Minutewomen were also in the eMAX rankings, dropping five spots to No. 50.

Saint Joseph's came in at 42 and Rhode Island at 26. Four other A-10 schools were included in the top 50.

On tap for the weekend after next for the Minutewomen is the Double Duel regatta in Dartmouth on May 1 in Hanover, N.H.

UMass will look to improve upon what was been an already eventful season. This season's training has been derailed due to flooding.

The Minutewomen also witnessed coach Jim Dietz getting inducted into the National Rowing Hall of fame on March 21. He is the only rowing coach in school history, winning 13 Atlantic 10 Championships and seven conference Coach of the Year awards.

Four members of the crew also earned all-conference honors.

Eric Mansfield can be reached at ecmansfi@student.umass.edu

The Daily Collegian asks,
"Are you a
SPORTS FAN?"
THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!

Minutemen head to UNH

By Michael Counos
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams are set for the final regular season meet this weekend in Durham, N.H. for the New Hampshire Pre-Conference Meet. The event will be held at UNH, as many UMass athletes look to qualify for the New England Championships before the next weekend's Atlantic 10 Conference Championships.

The Minutemen are coming off a meet where they qualified several athletes for the postseason. After competing with some of the nation's best teams, UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien believes that his team is in the right mindset.

"We have had a consistent year of training and an enthusiastic group of kids, looking to succeed," O'Brien said.

One of the keys to the success of both squads is their well-balanced distribution of talent.

Another key to the success of UMass is its leadership. A talented group of seniors leads the way for the Minutemen. In the 3,000 meter steeplechase event, both Sonny Gamble and Sean Duncan shared success, as both have qualified for New England Championships.

Chris Vercollone leads the way for the men's throwing squad in the javelin with a top-five mark in UMass school history as well as Lisa Wilson who is the dominant force of the women's throwing unit.

The distance team features Jonathan Pierce, Jason Ayr, Nicolai Naranjo and Andrew McCann.

"I would say that the seniors carry more than 50 percent of the weight of the team, but the more important thing is their great ability to motivate the underclassmen and push them to do their best," O'Brien said.

Freshman thrower Nalis Mbianda for the women looks to be Wilson's apprentice. Mbianda currently holds the third best mark in the shot-put in UMass school history. Wilson holds the best mark in school history, with a mark of 45-05.75. For the men, freshmen Joe Doyle and Nick Otis had solid indoor seasons and are expected to be a factor in the outdoor season as well.

Some of the team's top athletes have been sidelined due to injuries. Tyler Cotto, who was the leading hurdler in indoor, suffered a hamstring pull, but is expected to compete and is looking to qualify for New England Championships. Mid-distance competitor Ryan DiOrio and long jumper Dan Woo will look to qualify as well as throwers Kevin Spieler and Dave McKenna.

The action begins in Durham on Saturday at 11:30 a.m. The Minutemen will return to compete in the Atlantic 10 Championships the following weekend at the UMass track and field complex.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?

B.S.O. Ads for $6.70
per column inch

On-Campus &
Local Business
Ads for $10 per column

You could see your ad here!

Best way to get to the campus community!

CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

St. Louis on deck for Minutemen

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

Looking to build on its latest success against Atlantic 10 opponents, the Massachusetts baseball team will host Saint Louis for a three-game series this weekend, beginning this afternoon.

The Minutemen (8-20, 5-7 A-10) alternated wins and losses in their last six games, but did take two consecutive conference series.

"We've gotten good pitching," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "That's really key. It starts with pitching and defense."

The Billikens (19-19, 7-5 A-10) have lost four out of their last five games since sweeping Temple at home, falling by two or less goals in each contest.

"They're a strong team," Stone said. "They've got a couple of real good hitters who hit a bunch of home runs and a solid pitching staff, so I expect to see a real good ballclub."

The Billikens sit in a tie for fourth place in the A-10 standings with four other teams including Rhode Island, which UMass defeated on the road last weekend, two games to one.

The Minutemen are locked for ninth place with Dayton. Stone hopes to use this series against SLU as a chance to move up in the standings.

"We can make a move, but we have to take care of business first," Stone said. "You can't be thinking about the standings while you're trying to play a game. You just need to focus [on the game] and the standings will take care of themselves afterwards."

Both UMass and the Billikens faced Saint Joseph's earlier this season, and lost two of the three games in the series.

St. Louis is anchored offensively by infielder Jon Myers and first baseman Danny Brock. Both players have combined for 28 of their team's 48 home runs. Over the course of the season, the Billiken pitching staff has given up 29 home runs.

Mike Gedman, who homered twice in UMass' 15-11 victory over Harvard, leads the Maroon and White with five home runs on the season.

"We'll have to see how the games go whether or not we decide to challenge them or pitch around them," Stone said. "It's just a matter of understanding the situation. Our ballpark is a good hitter's park. You just need to be aware of those situations before you get hurt by [Myers and Brock]. We can't allow that."

Brock and Myers both hold team highs for UMass, with a .391 batting average and 53 runs batted in. Both players have started all 38 games of the season, along with outfielder J.D. Dunn who leads the team with 13 stolen bases.

Facing the Billikens batting lineup will be the pitching efforts of Nick Serrino on Friday, followed by Jared Freni on Saturday and Bryan Leigh on Sunday.

Last year, UMass took the series, 2-1, over Saint Louis in mid-April. The starting pitchers for the Minutemen competed in 25 of the total 27 innings of the series.

Serrino held the Billikens hitless through six innings and struck out seven through his 7.1 innings of work. Freni threw a complete game giving up just one run. Leigh made an appearance during the series, allowing two hits and earning a strikeout after less than an inning of play.

Myers was not present in the series due to a season-ending injury that occurred only 14 games into the season.

After the Saint Louis series, UMass will host Siena for one game on Tuesday before taking on A-10 rival George Washington, for three games.

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Mike Stone is hoping for good offensive production to aid the pitching staff. The Minutemen have scored 27 runs over their last two games.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen host Saint Louis this weekend as part of a three-game series with the Billikens. UMass has won two consecutive Atlantic 10 series.

UMass hopes hitting lifts struggling pitching

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

With 40 runs in its past three games, the Massachusetts baseball team has sparked its offensive side.

The Minutemen (8-20, 5-7 Atlantic 10) watched their bats ignite last Sunday, when they won the rubber game against Rhode Island, 13-1. Since then, UMass plated 27 runs in two games, going 1-1.

"We're taking good, quality swings and we're balanced in the batter's box," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "Sometimes we manufacture runs and other times we just swing the bats. It's hard to put your finger on it sometimes but it's starting to come around more [lately]."

In their game on Wednesday, the Minutemen offense scored 15 runs in a four-run victory over Harvard. Every UMass batter registered at least one hit, including senior Mike Gedman who went 2-for-4 with two home runs and four runs batted in.

"Sometimes it has to do with pitching," Stone said. "We didn't see a whole lot of quality pitching these last few days."

Eric Fredette transferred to UMass from Vermont, and currently leads all UMass players with a .387 batting average and a .459 on base percentage. Fredette primarily bats second in the lineup, and consistently presents opportunities for the team to drive in runs. On Tuesday, however, Fredette proved he can send in runs as well, registering a career-high four RBIs in UMass' 17-12 loss against Central Connecticut.

"We try to stay inside the ball, stay balanced with our weight distribution and stay soft on the front foot," Stone said. "We have a pregame batting practice routine where everybody tries to hit the ball to the opposite field first and [after that], they can swing away based on where the pitch is."

The lineup has remained virtually the same throughout the season, except for the addition of sophomore Alex Fisher, who has recently put himself in Stone's good graces.

"Fisher is getting in there and that's a great story," Stone said. "He stayed back and didn't travel with us [earlier on] but he worked hard and improved and he's done a great job for us."

Fisher has started in eight games so far this season, batting .324 while scoring eight runs and batting in seven.

Stone believes that every player in the lineup should follow an approach that they are most comfortable with.

"On certain days, certain players feel more comfortable when they're not thinking but reacting," Stone said. "Sometimes you need to take a pitch so you're not jumping out at the ball. It's a day-to-day thing. Baseball is a tough game and it's hard to get into a groove."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

UMass prepared for A-10 tournament

Minutewomen set for rematch

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

If the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has its way, history won't repeat twice.

The Minutewomen received a second chance against La Salle today after last Sunday's nail-biting conclusion.

"We're excited heading into the [Atlantic 10] tournament," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said following the loss to the Explorers. "It's going be a fresh start, and we're looking forward to having another opportunity on Friday."

The game between UMass (8-8, 5-2 A-10) and La Salle went down to the wire as the Explorers scored its final and game-winning goal with two seconds left on the clock.

"La Salle did a great job playing until the end," Venechanos said. "At the end, it wasn't really there [for us]."

Last week, the offense opened the game with a 3-0 run. The defense was there too, as swarms of Minutewomen players crowded the Explorer offense on multiple possessions.

But as much as UMass knocked down its opponents, the Explorers kept fighting back, keeping the game within three points. It was a back-and-forth affair with five lead changes throughout the entire contest.

Before the game, the Minutewomen were ranked first in the A-10, right above Richmond and the Explorers (9-6, 5-2 A-10). Between La Salle's victory and the Spiders' 18-9 drubbing over St. Bonaventure, UMass fell two spots to third place.

The win by the Explorers bumped it up to second place, setting the stage for the rematch.

The Minutewomen were 11-0 against La Salle prior to last Sunday's contest, which included a 17-2 victory in 2009. The Explorers are experiencing a turnaround since last season when they went 4-13 overall with one win coming from their A-10 schedule.

A possible disadvantage for UMass stems from the fact that the game happens to be in Pennsylvania, although distant from La Salle's home field.

The last time UMass played on Rooney Field, it lost 12-10 to Duquesne in the Minutewomen's first A-10 loss of the year.

Jaekie Lyons will look to lead the Minutewomen squad, as she competed in each of the past two championship berths. Lyons had two goals and three assists in last year's opening game (game-high five points). The Rocky Point native also netted five goals and three assists.

Lyons's experience in UMass' 14-13 double overtime victory will be a key asset for when it comes to the La Salle match.

Goalkeeper Katie Florence played a critical role in the 2009 A-10 tournament as she earned a combined 18 saves throughout the two games. Florence had 11 saves alone against GW.

Today's game marks the third consecutive A-10 tournament appearance by UMass, with the first two including a berth to the championship game. Last year, the Minutewomen captured the A-10 Championship and earned a spot in the NCAA tournament.

Both UMass and Richmond were present in last year's tournament. The Minutewomen defeated George Washington, 12-9, en route to their placement in the championship game. Richmond failed to defeat Saint Joseph's to qualify.

In the past two A-10 championship game appearances, UMass competed against teams from Pennsylvania. In 2008, the Owls ousted the Minutewomen, 10-3. Last season, UMass defeated SJU, 15-14, in Philadelphia.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Haley Smith heads towards the net in UMass' 9-5 victory over Yale. Smith will join her fellow Minutewomen in Pittsburgh, Pa., where they will begin A-10 tournament play.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

The UMass side will have its hands full if it passes through the first round, as Richmond and Temple compete on the other side of the bracket.

Spiders, Owls to clash in playoffs

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

After being crowned the 2010 Atlantic 10 regular season champions, the Richmond women's lacrosse team heads into the A-10 tournament searching for its fourth title in the last six years.

In its path, however, will be Temple in the first round, which has a rich history of its own. The Owls (7-7, 4-3 A-10) are making their 11th appearance in the tournament in the last 12 years and have captured five overall titles, including four straight from 2001-04.

The Spiders (9-8, 6-1 A-10) earned the No. 1 overall seed for the tournament with a 6-1 conference record in the regular season. Massachusetts was the only team in the A-10 to defeat Richmond in the spring.

In the beginning of the year, the Spiders struggled early as they lost four consecutive games to difficult out-of-conference opponents in Maryland, Duke, North Carolina and Virginia. After starting out 0-4, Richmond bounced back and went 9-3 for the remainder of the season.

Temple, meanwhile, comes into the tournament with a No. 4 seed after a turbulent regular season.

After dropping two of its first three A-10 games, Temple finished its conference schedule strong with wins in three of its last four contests against St. Bonaventure, Duquesne and Saint Joseph's.

One thing that can be expected in the first round matchup between Richmond and Temple is a lot of offense. Both teams rank in the top half of the conference in many offensive categories, including goals per game, assists per game, ground balls per game, point per game and draw controls per game.

The offense was on display in the last meeting between the two teams on March 26 at UR Stadium.

Despite a late rally by the Owls, the Spiders held their own en route to a 15-14 win. Richmond received hat tricks from three players and needed every last goal to edge Temple to earn its first A-10 win of the season.

In the early going, the Spiders put up scores in a hurry to take a 9-5 lead with just under seven minutes remaining in the first half. The Owls seored two goals to close the deficit to 9-7 heading into the intermission.

As the second half began, Richmond extended its lead with four unanswered goals to earn a 13-7 advantage with 18 minutes, 49 seconds remaining in the contest.

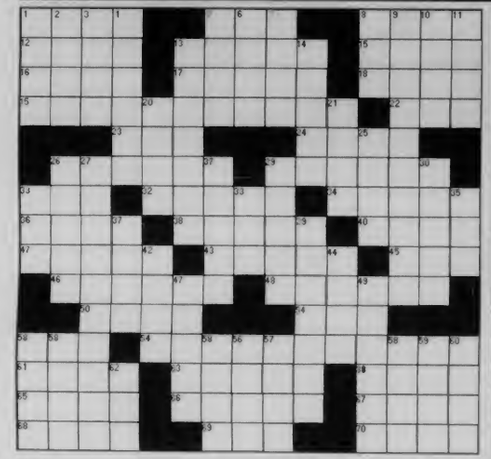
Not to be outdone, Temple responded with four unanswered goals of its own to close the gap back to two scores with under 10 minutes to play. Back-to-back goals from Gabi Wiegand and Mary Flowers, however, raised the Spiders lead to 15-11 and seemingly put the game out of reach with five minutes remaining.

Two costly yellow cards kept the Owls alive though, as Ryan Ball and goalkeeper Erica Marrocco each received a penalty within 30 seconds of each other to give Temple a two-man advantage. The Owls used the mismatch by scoring three goals within a 40 second span to all of a sudden make it a 15-14 game.

In the final 2:17, Richmond controlled key draws to regain possession and ran out the clock for the victory.

Sam Stevenson, Wiegand and Flowers each seored three goals to spur the Spiders attack, while Kara Mosehetti and Danielle Schaevitz chipped in two scores apiece.

Temple was led on the offensive end by Chelsea Rosick, who seored four goals while dishing four assists, and Missy Schweitzer, who scored three goals and added an assist.



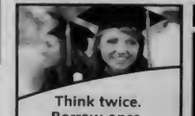
The winner of the first round matchup will face the winner of the UMass-La Salle game in the A-10 finals on Sunday. The A-10 champion will also earn an automatic berth in the NCAA tournament.

The semifinal game between Richmond and Temple will be played on Friday at 1 p.m., at Rooney Field on the campus of Duquesne.

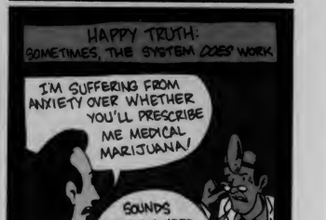
Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

comics

A VERY SEXY CROSSWORD



ACROSS
1. List of choices
5. Choose
8. Quarries
12. "Oh, my!"
13. Sturdy
15. Ultimatum ender
16. Be slack-jawed
17. Glee
18. Wings
19. Producing no result
22. Ashes holder
23. Website address
24. Short sleeps
26. They fly planes
29. Passes around or avoids
31. Pale
32. Ganders and goslings
34. Mark of insertion
36. Products of human creativity
38. Christopher of "Superman"
40. Tall story
41. Shooting game
43. Inhabit
45. Young child
46. Blood vessel
48. Examine again
50. Tropical root
51. Strong liquor flavored with juniper berries
52. Not high
54. Summit
61. Modify written material
63. Back of the boat
64. Assistant
65. Not a single one
66. Fortuneteller's card
67. Adolescent
68. Tall woody plant
69. More than warm
70. At one time (archaic)



DOWN
1. Wise men
2. Flair
3. Back of the neck
4. Beneficial
5. Auditory
6. Harbor
7. Ballet wear
8. ___ green
9. Draw pictures
10. Russian emperor
11. Witnessed
13. An ore refinery
14. Express gratitude to
20. Tailless stout-bodied amphibian
21. Secular
25. Beseech
26. A kind of heavy jacket
27. Interlace
28. Poorly kept
29. Cut off
30. Short-horned goat antelope
31. Is, formerly
33. Stitch
35. Explosive letters
37. Stiff hair
39. Chic
42. Course
44. Fifty-seven in Roman numerals
47. Perch
49. Natural
52. The period preceeding Easter
53. Smell
55. Mormon state
56. A Roman emperor
57. Gait faster than a walk
58. Level
59. Lyric poems
60. Confined
62. Golf ball support

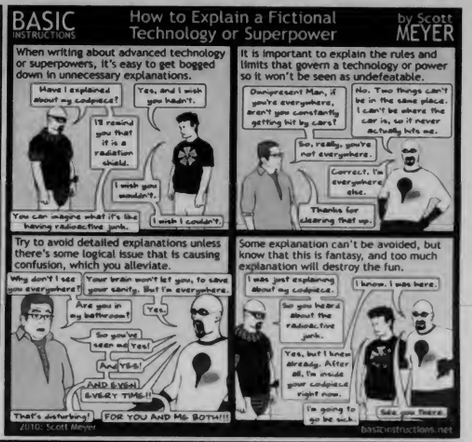
UMass Amherst Quincy?
Take UMass Amherst home with you this Summer
Three Summer Sessions
200+ ONLINE classes
REGISTER NOW!
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
Amherst Coffee
28 Amity Street
free: 1 coffee drink
The Whisk(e)y Bar
Rare Whiskies
Wine
Cocktails
AmherstCoffee.com

Think twice. Borrow once.
Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.
UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION
800.852.5886
umassfive.org
student Choice

SMBC by Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS
SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!
ON SITE LAUNDRY, OFF STREET PARKING.
BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.
OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM



Ew, Tara Reid!

5			9		8
3					2
	7		2		6	9
8		5			6
						9
	6		4	5
			6	9		7
7	8		5		1
				4		3

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS
How to Explain a Fictional Technology or Superpower
by Scott MEYER

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Hey, have you ever paid someone to give you an angus third pounder before?

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Throw away any IKEA instruction manuals that tell you to "open wide."

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
How many times a day do you "vajazzle?"

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Beware of new-age haircuts as they can often result in drain bramage.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Convert to Soy-based dairy products because you never know whose breast milk that is.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Having trouble finding a job? Try shaking yo' money maker like somebody about to pay you.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
You woke up today with some help. I just wanted to tell you before you looked in the mirror.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Your GPA is reminiscent of Betty White's party days with the thong song.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Apathy is not a breakfast sandwich that is served from 11-12 at the Route 9 Diner. Try Applebee's.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Paul Newman's spirit stares at you through his assortment of beverages and breakfast cereals.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
It takes two to tango, but it takes four people and a pogo stick to invent even weirder moves.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Craig Ferguson left his accent in your sock drawer. Its nestled in between your condoms and Miley Cyrus albums.

CLASSIFIEDS

SPECIAL EVENTS

Partake in "Stoolapalooza!" Barstool Sports and Southern Comfort are throwing a HUGE concert on April 30th at the Mullins Center. Tickets are almost sold out and running for around $50 a piece. Southern Comfort is giving students 21+ the opportunity to "win" these tickets at our pre-parties sipping on Southern Comfort while enjoying the last few weeks of school. Two of our SoCo girls will be giving out complimentary samples, Southern Comfort swag, and tickets to the upcoming Sam Adams concert on April 30th! Dont miss these upcoming Venues!

Thurs 4/22 ABC10pm-12am,
Sat 4/24 Monkey Bar 11pm-1am, Tues 4/27 Stackers 10pm-12am, Wed 4/28 McMurphys 10pm-12am
Thurs 4/29 The Spoke 10pm-12am

EMPLOYMENT

413-549-1398
Student Rentals
Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Summer Jobs with Enviroment Massachusetts $10-15/hr. Career Opportunities & Benefits www.jobsfortheenvironment.org Call Abby 1-800-57-EARTH

FOR RENT

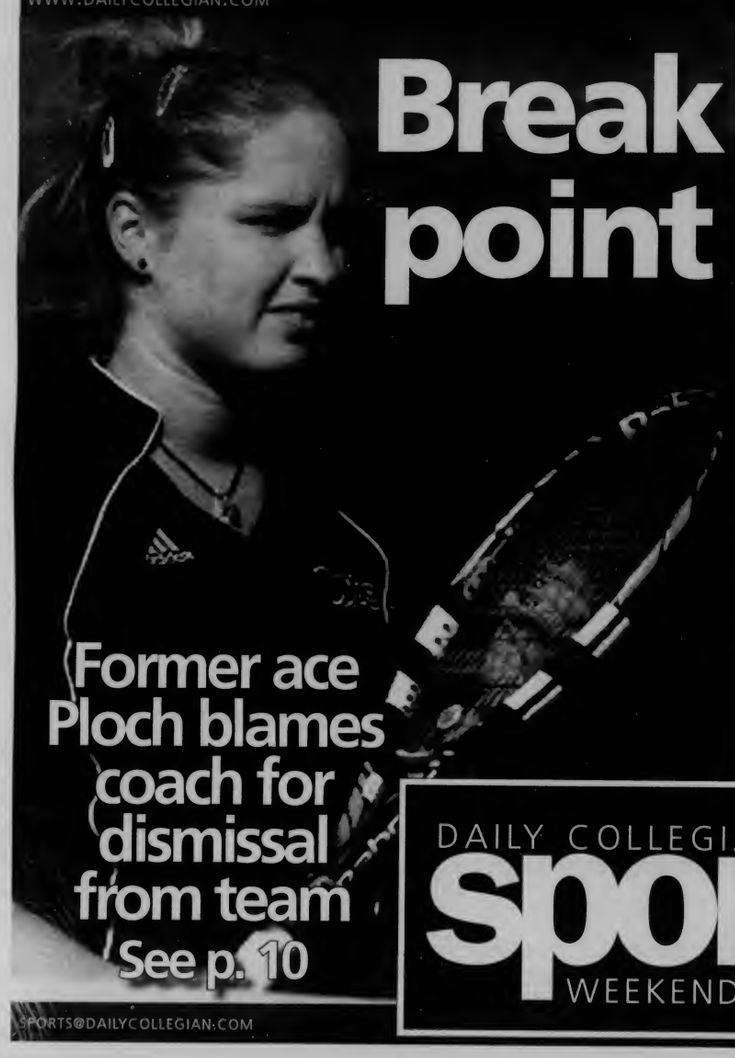
Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Amherst: 2 Bedroom Open House! Come to Mill Valley Estates on April 24th, 12-4 PM. Move-in specials! Whole Foods gift cards just for showing up! *500 Riverglade Drive, Apt F, 253-7377 www.millvalleyApts.com (*while supplies last)

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

SERVICES



Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

WANTED

Are you ADOPTED? Mentors (males especially) needed for adopted children. Call NOW, start Fall. Academic Credit available.Jen Dolan 545-0547 jdolancpsych.umass.edu

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 23, 2010

Break point

Former ace Ploch blames coach for dismissal from team

See p. 10

LACROSSE

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team heads to Pittsburgh, Pa., to compete in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament. The Minutewomen will face La Salle in a rematch after last Sunday's tight contest.

SEE PAGE 13

BASEBALL

The Massachusetts baseball team hosts Saint Louis for a three-game series against the Billikens. The Minutemen will be looking for insurance from their offensive side to achieve victory.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

RAIN HIGH: 57 LOW: 41 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, APRIL 26, 2010

Perfecting the art of the college visit

Schools work to impress prospective students

By Ashley Berger
Collegian Staff

Upon entering their senior years of high school, most potential college students already look at a wide range of schools, attempting to determine which campus will be their best fit – which provides the best academics, which awards the best financial aid packages and which has the most enjoyable social scene.

Thousands of trees were killed sending out innumerable admissions catalogs, brochures and pamphlets, casting each school as the paramount college experience. We all remember receiving the mailings, which boasted about a wide range of majors, a plethora of extracurricular events, the new science lab or the multitude of on-campus organizations.

The reason students choose the schools they do is likely because they think it is the best school for them out of the schools that accepted them. Only after most begin classes, however, do students realize that the dining hall food isn't quite as good as it was on accepted students' day, that the hike around campus grows excruciatingly tiring very quickly and that it isn't always sunny outside.

This is where the art of the college visit, a school's attempt to put forth its best face for prospective students, enters the picture. This image is created by admissions officers, deans and chairmen across the nation, who spend countless hours putting together programs, literature, websites and slideshows framing their school as ideal, all the while hoping for perfect weather on major tour days and programs for prospective students. The university, regardless of which one it is, needs to enroll projected numbers of students to sustain its economic growth and viability, and admissions officers are tasked with pulling in a hearty class each and every year. Over the years, the idea of the college visit has grown and changed in significance. In the volatile economic pit where America finds itself, colleges nationwide are spending more to attract students, hoping those who apply will ultimately enroll.

Officials at Amherst College said they focus on the upkeep of their campus more when the school hosts alumni than when they host prospective students.

Many students acknowledge that there has been a noticeable change in the way the University of Massachusetts campus has been presented to students on "Accepted Students Day."

Freshman Emily Whalen said she feels UMass cleans itself up when it hosts potential students and their families.

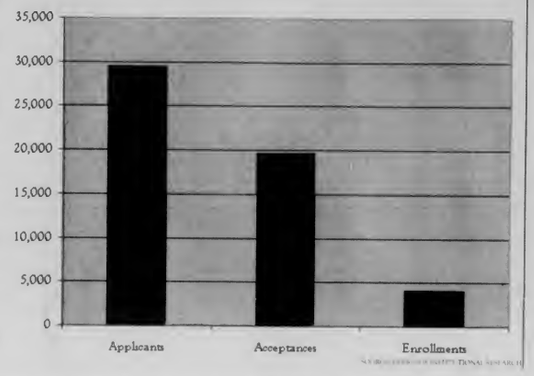
"The food is much better when parents and prospective students are around," she said. "The french fries are much crispier and the salad bar looks more fresh, there are balloons around campus," she continued. "It's clear that the admissions people put more effort into sprucing up the campus during the tour days."

In contrast, admissions representatives from Hampshire College denied that the campus in South Amherst changes during events for prospective students, or "prospies," as they're known at Hampshire.

"Hampshire has visitors nearly every day throughout the calendar year," said David Wagner, senior associate director of admissions. "We do not do anything special to spruce up the campus or dining commons; we show students a typical dorm room, a typical classroom, and give prospective students a realistic sense of Hampshire's academic program, campus and student life," he elaborated.

Anyone who has taken a UMass campus tour has also likely noticed that the most aesthetically impressive parts of campus are often shown on tours; the newest academic buildings, new athletic facilities and the biggest rooms in the Central residential area. While these are the arguably the most appealing parts of campus, they are generally not reflective of the reality many freshmen experience – a small room in the Sylvan Residential Area, say, or classes in the agricultural engineering building.

Wagner said he feels Hampshire's facilities speak for themselves.



"The most appealing aspects of the tour are Hampshire's state-of-the-art science facilities, the arts barn (studio arts), the Liebling Center (film, video and photography), the Lemelson Center (assistive and environmental technology), campus housing, dining commons and athletic facilities," he said.

Amherst College's admissions attempt to present a similar picture.

Leykia Brill, assistant dean of admission, said Amherst's tour guides are given pamphlets to educate them on the history and traditions of the college. Brill said most tour guides find funny stories and folklore about school rivalries to talk about during tours to appeal to students and make them feel like they are immediately part of the school community. Brill also explained

See VISIT on page 3

UMass Fall 2009 application statistics

Alum Janszen discusses mobile communication, web business

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Eric Janszen, an economic analyst and CEO of iTulip, a financial advisory firm, spoke at the University of Massachusetts last Wednesday evening, delivering a presentation titled "How to Build a Company in 40 Minutes."

The Memorial Hall auditorium was filled with students, alumni and professors as Janszen, a UMass alum, presented a proposal titled, "What do you see in a mobile phone?" for his new company, MediateImage.

MediateImage, Janszen explained, came from a combination of three words: immediate, mediate and image. The name represents his idea of a new marketplace to transmit immediate images between amateur photographers and news outlets.

The idea behind the company was initially conceived in 2005, when Janszen considered the mushrooming value of mobile communications. As Janszen pondered the skyrocketing significance of mobile communication and the near omnipresent role of the cell phone, he realized it has become more likely that an individual near the scene of unfolding news will be able to get a camera phone shot than a professional photographer in times of natural disaster or dramatic moments, such as last year's riots and protests in Tehran, Iran.

"The probability of getting that spectacular shot is higher for 5,000 cameras than one camera," Janszen noted.

He then considered how the quality of mobile camera phones has been enhanced of late. In a comparison of photos taken with his phone in 2005 and an updated model in 2010, he showed the audience that with time, the technology has improved and will likely continue to improve.

As photographs in breaking news are of instantaneous value as soon as they are taken, Janszen said his company would have a service, likely via an encrypted MMS text message or e-mail, which would send the photo to news outlets and allow them to sort through the photos and bid for the right to publish them.

One audience member asked how the news sources would be able to trust such amateur photographers, without suspicion that they would be using old, inauthentic photos or programs allowing them to alter images, like Photoshop.

Janszen responded that the photos, once encrypted, would be marked with a time stamp and would be unable to be resubmitted, ensuring the veracity of the images. The news sources would learn to trust photographers based on a rating system "much like the one eBay has – users build buyers' trust," said Janszen.

While the presentation didn't result in the formation of any actual company, it showed audience members the ease of doing so.

Janszen said the key to founding any company is attempting to locate where there is a problem and where a solution is opening to solve it.

Founding a company requires "trying to find an intersection of change and a problem," he said.

See JANSZEN on page 2

Economic analyst Eric Janszen, a UMass graduate, discussed starting online businesses last Wednesday.

UMass treated to Ludacris show

Ludacris headlined UMass' annual spring concert last night. Luda did not disappoint, playing off the energy of opening acts, C-Banga and LMFAO.

By Garth Brow
Collegian Staff

Minds, eardrums and asses were blown at the Mullins Center last night – the University of Massachusetts' University Programming Council hosted 2010's spring concert. A few songs into the brief but explosive set of opener and UMass student C-Banga, the suave young gentleman turned and said "ayo Bang Boys, get sexy on me," and his band obliged. It remained sexy all evening – with the possible exception of New Found Glory, because who has ever described pop-punk as "sexy?"

After C-Banga and the Bang Boys wrapped up their last song, the lights came on and Jason Levasseur took the stage with nothing but an acoustic guitar, introducing himself as a last-minute lineup addition. "my name is Set Change." This approximately encapsulates his performance – self-deprecating and unappreciated. After a few originals, he apparently decided to appeal directly to the crowd by switching to instantly recognizable covers, from "With a Little Help from My Friends" to "Can You Feel the Love Tonight?"

Next up were the Electrolightz, whose overall aesthetic could be shorthanded as "glow stick." Their stage set-up involved an array of phosphorescent beach balls. The set opened with an exhilarating kaleidoscopic synth breakdown, which quickly morphed into a pulsing club beat.

Repeatedly throughout this opening song, the two vocalists shouted "UMass, make some motherf noise;" which would have been a tall order – their overwhelming bass slammed and ricocheted against every wall in the stadium such that all else was inaudible. Actually, much of singer Rami Dearest's vocals were inaudible; it seemed as though the sound mix was customized to Ludacris and LMFAO, because they turned out to be the only reasonably balanced performances, sound-wise.

Their songs did employ some unbelievably catchy synth hooks, but they were never audible for long enough to grasp. The uncompromising rhythm swallowed up melodies like some kind of bass whale. Still, Electrolightz did what they were hired to do and moved the crowd, and an unconventional shuffle-time jam ("Merriweather Post Pavilion") mixed things up enough for the set to stay interesting.

Up next, pop-punk idols New Found Glory broke into their set with "All Downhill From Here" – which indeed it was, as the tempo seemed to pick up gradually from song to song. The on-stage energy was high, as evidenced by the fact that there was almost always at least one band member bunny-hopping around like those pop-punk guys are prone to doing.

Despite missing guitarist/songwriter Chad Gilbert due to surgery, New Found Glory performed admirably; Chad's replacement, Anthony Raneri, didn't miss a beat. Neither did the crowd, thanks to that dance club sound-mixing. Every bass drum hit reverberated and overshadowed the other instruments, even the vocals. The formula worked though, and the crowd warmed up steadily throughout their set, which finished with "My Friends Over You."

With the audience primed, LMFAO were poised to tear the stadium up

See LUDACRIS on page 5

ARTS & LIVING
The "Cats" Meow
The broadway classic come to the Mullins Center last Monday to the delight of fans, proving it's never too late to teach an old dog new tricks.
SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
Ducasse drafted by Jets
Former UMass tackle Vladimir Ducasse became the 61st overall pick in last weekend's NFL draft when he was taken by the New York Jets.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Collegian columnist Lauren Vincent writes about her experience with socially-conscious consumption.
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com
Check out the latest entries to the Local Music Project, sponsored by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 59

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Jonson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Stanwell
Comics Editor Andrew Watts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Earnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamillo
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Montarts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cods
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1965, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Crime Log for April 12–19

April 12

Karen Brinn-Nazarro of Crestwood, New York, was arrested on charges of disorderly conduct. At 8:34 p.m., two female students reported a woman in Hampden Dining Commons snack bar verbally harassing them. Brinn-Nazarro reportedly loudly asked the girls, "Do you always walk around with your breasts hanging out?" When a University of Massachusetts Police Department officer asked Brinn-Nazarro, who was reportedly still yelling, to lower her voice, she reportedly retorted, "Why are you on campus today?" and refused to lower her voice. Brinn Nazarro was then arrested on the charge of disorderly conduct. Her son, Ben Nazarro, a Hampshire College student who was playing in the band The Bubonic Souls at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's "Paper Jam" in the Southwest Residential Area, reportedly attempted to intercede to diffuse the situation, allegedly obstructing the officer from arresting his mother. He was issued a no-trespass order by the UMPD. When Brinn-Nazarro's boyfriend came to post bail at the UMPD station, officers saw Ben Nazzaro in the car and arrested him for trespassing.

April 13

Two 22-year-old Amherst males were issued summonses to court for damage worth more than $250 to University property. At 8:32 p.m. a UMPD officer on patrol saw two males "grinding" bikes near the Recreation Center. Upon closer inspection, the officer saw that as the result of their activity, pieces of concrete had broken off the recently remodeled area. The two males, whose names were not released, were summoned to Eastern Hampshire District Court.

Christopher Shelton of Waltham, Massachusetts, was arrested for trespassing on school grounds. An officer recognized Shelton as a person previously issued a no-trespassing order banning him from campus in the Southwest Circle at 9:30 p.m.

April 12

James Evans of South Boston, Massachusetts, and Joseph H. Barry of Boston, Massachusetts, were arrested for liquor law violations. An officer on patrol in Lot 50 noticed two males in a white Cadillac DeVille whom the officer suspected of possessing alcohol while underage. Barry and Evans were found to have alcohol in the vehicle and both were arrested on the charge of possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

Two students were issued summonses to court for use without authority of University property. Emergency services were called to the Hadley Farm at 2:30 a.m. after a female student was hurt. The student was injured while reportedly riding in a University-owned electric car. A male student was driving a vehicle with two female students riding inside when he reportedly hit an object and shattered the rear windshield. One of the female students suffered a facial injury, though she is reportedly not seriously injured. The driver has been summonsed to Eastern Hampshire District Court for damage to property worth more than $250, and use without authority. The female student has been summoned for use without authority.

April 17

James Henry Conners of Medfield, Massachusetts, was arrested for liquor law violations. A UMPD officer viewed a grey Ford which the officer suspected had alcohol in it. The officer found alcohol in the car, and Conner was arrested on the charge of possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

John Sousa of Medford, Massachusetts, was arrested for liquor law violations. In Lot 33, an officer viewed a grey Honda Civic whose driver he suspected of underage possession of liquor. The officer found alcohol in the car as well as a fake driver's license. Sousa was arrested on charges of misuse of a liquor ID card and possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

April 18

Matthew Alfred Cote of Hubbarston, Massachusetts, was arrested on breaking-and-entering charges. At 12:32 a.m., an officer in Lot 32 viewed Cote as he reportedly broke the window of a grey Nissan Sentra and proceeded to unlock and enter the vehicle. Cote exited the vehicle with numerous items from inside, and the officer arrested him. Cote was arrested on charges of larceny worth more than $250, breaking and entering a vehicle at nighttime, and four counts of malicious destruction of property worth more than $250.

Kenneth E. Lague of Brookfield, Massachusetts, was arrested for liquor law violations. An officer noticed the driver (Lague) of a green Ford Taurus cross the marked lanes on North Pleasant St. Upon approaching Lague, the officer reportedly smelled alcohol on him. The officer asked Lague to perform numerous field sobriety tests, which he failed. Lague was arrested on the charges of a liquor OUI and violating marked traffic lanes.

Joshua D. McPherson of Holyoke, Massachusetts, was arrested for liquor law violations. A UMPD officer reportedly viewed a green Mercury Mountaineer driving inconsistently on University Drive and asked the driver to pull to the side of the road. McPherson allegedly had bloodshot eyes and appeared under the influence of alcohol to the officer, and was asked to perform numerous field sobriety tests, which he failed. McPherson did not have registration information for the vehicle or an inspection sticker on it. McPherson was arrested on charges of a liquor OUI, failure to produce vehicle registration and failure to have the vehicle inspected.

Sidikiba Kaba of Malden, Massachusetts, was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. While driving on Fearing Street, Kaba was pulled over by a UMPD officer. Kaba was found to have a dangerous weapon in his vehicle and was arrested on the charge of carrying a dangerous weapon.

Daryl J. Deboer of Meriden, Connecticut, was arrested for liquor law violations. While driving on Commonwealth Ave., Deboer was signaled to pull over by a UMPD officer for crossing the marked traffic lanes. Deboer appeared under the influence to the officer and was asked to perform numerous field sobriety tests, all of which he failed. Deboer was arrested on charges of a liquor OUI and violating marked traffic lanes.

April 19

Frank D. Albano of Springfield, Massachusetts, and Ames H. Slate IV were arrested for larceny charges. The UMPD received a call from the Lederle Research Tower that there was a suspicious male in the building, later identified as Albano. The responding officers found Albano and Slate driving away from the building with University property in their possession. Albano was arrested on the charges of breaking and entering during daytime, larceny from a building, larceny of property worth over $250 and trespassing on school grounds. Slate was arrested for larceny of property worth over $250, larceny from a building, and operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

COURTESY AMHERST POLICE DEPARTMENT

The University of Massachusetts Police Department announced numerous arrests last week, including multiple alcohol citations.

Economist Janszen gives tips on how to start online firms

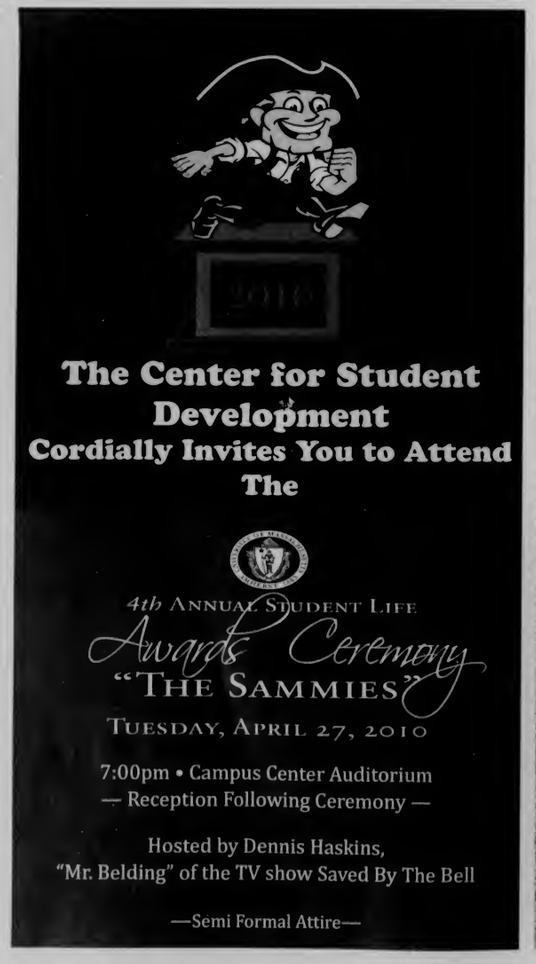
JANSZEN from page 1

"Preferably one the customer didn't even know [he or she] had."

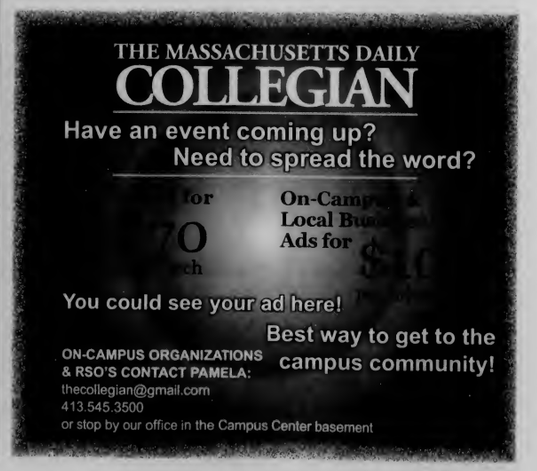
The most common problem entrepreneurs experience, according to Janszen, is their tendency to overthink. He used the social networking site Twitter as an example of how people typing 140 characters evolved into a $60-million company.

One student was convinced of the merits of Janszen's logic.

Oleg Kamenetsky, a senior kinesiology major said, "As someone without a lot of experience hearing presentations, I thought it was a great idea."



Kamenetsky said he was interested in the discussion because he might start his own company one day. When asked if he would personally invest in MediaImage, Kamenetsky said he'd like to learn more about investments in general first.



Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY ITULIP.COM

Eric Janszen, a University of Massachusetts alum, is the founder of the online financial review site, iTulip.com.

Legal pot alternative K2 smokes through Ks.

Herbal blend synthesized with THC-derivative yields comparable effect to smoking marijuana

Kansas State Collegian
via College News Network

"It gets you really high and it's totally legal," said Kyle Taylor as he took a long drag of a K2 cigarette.

Taylor, a sophomore in psychology, is one of thousands of Kansans who have discovered K2, a new drug that is rapidly gaining popularity across the state.

K2 is a legal marijuana substitute that has become popular in Lawrence and Kansas City over the last few months, and a number of K-State students have begun using the drug as well.

Natalie McAnnulla, an employee at Sacred Journey, an herb shop on Massachusetts Street in Lawrence that sells the drug, said K2 is a mixture of blue lotus, baybean and a number of other herbs. However, K2 does not get its potent effects from these herbs, but from two synthesized cannabinoids that are added to the mixture.

Synthetic cannabinoids are very closely related to tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, the chemical in marijuana which causes users to get high. However, because the chemicals in K2 are slightly different than THC, they are not covered by existing drug laws. According to a Nov. 3 Kansas City Star article, the chemicals were first synthesized by an undergraduate student at Clemson University under the supervision of chemistry professor John W. Hoffman.

COURTESY KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The herbal blend K2, which is gaining popularity across Kansas and the Midwest, can be smoked in many of the same ways as marijuana.

Users of the drug say K2's effects are almost identical to those of marijuana, but there are some slight differences. K2 produces less of a mental high and a much more notable body high than smoking marijuana. The effects are in some ways more similar to the high from eating marijuana rather than smoking it.

"The way I see it is when you smoke marijuana, it's more of a head high, and when you smoke K2 your whole body feels high ... You just kind of melt into the couch and lay there for a while," said Taylor.

He said he felt in this way, K2 was more potent than marijuana. Taylor said he felt it was possible to go to work or school high on marijuana, but didn't think he would be able to do so after smoking K2.

Chris, a senior in business who asked that his last name not be revealed, said the effects were "very similar" to marijuana. However, he said he did not think the high from K2 lasted as long as the high from marijuana.

K2 was available in Manhattan for a very brief time. On The Wild Side in Aggieville sold it for about a week. Luke Johnson, an employee of On The Wildside, said they ordered K2 after receiving a number of requests that they begin carrying it. He said it was very popular while they carried it.

"We couldn't even keep up with demand if we wanted to," Johnson said.

Johnson said the store did not initially realize what K2 was used for and had believed it was simply an incense. He said the store decided to stop carrying K2 after reading several reviews online.

"Once we heard all the controversy and bad stuff about it we decided to just ax it," Johnson said. "We don't want to condone anything."

Sacred Journey is the only store known to currently sell K2 in Kansas. The store sells four different types that range in price from $15 to $30 per gram, making the drug about half as expensive as marijuana of comparable strength.

McAnulla said she did not know of any other stores in Lawrence or Kansas City that sold K2. However, she had heard of a store in Kansas City that was considering selling it. McAnulla said Sacred Journey began selling the drug in June or July, and it has become very popular since that time.

Taylor said he had to wait in a long line to buy the drug.

"We went there as soon as the herb shop opened and there was a line out the door, and they were all in line for K2. The person working the desk came out and was like 'Who isn't here for K2? We can ring you up at the other register.' And no one even moved," Taylor said.

K2 can also be ordered from numerous Web sites. Chris said friends had bought the drug for him from Sacred Journey, but recently he ordered it from K2fire.com. Taylor also said he knew people who order the drug online because it is cheaper when bought in bulk off the internet.

K2 is popular among college and high school students. However, it has been particularly popular among people who cannot smoke marijuana because of their job or legal problems. Chris said he first learned about the drug from a friend in the army who must take drug tests.

"I'm smoking it because I'm on probation," Chris said with a laugh.

Taylor also cited legal reasons for smoking K2, because he is currently awaiting trial for marijuana-related charges and anticipates he will have to take drug tests in the near future.

A major concern many people have with K2 and other pot substitutes is that the health effects of using the drug have not been studied.

"I would definitely smoke pot before I'd smoke K2 because I think K2 is synthetic, and we don't know the effects," Chris said.

Hoffman said in an interview with the Kansas City Star that his research indicates synthesized cannabinoids may potentially break down into carcinogens in the human body, and he felt it was important the effects be studied before people use it.

While K2 may currently be legal, it is unlikely it will remain that way for long. The drug recently caught the attention of police in Johnson County when they found out a number of people on parole and diversion were using the drug.

K2 has also caught the attention of Peggy Mast, a state representative for District 76. Several years ago, Mast sponsored a bill that outlawed Salvia Divinorum, an herb with short psychedelic effects that was also being sold in herb shops in Lawrence. In an interview with The Kansas City Star, Mast said she would be "happy to sponsor a bill to make this illegal."

The state legislature resumes session in January. It is likely Mast will sponsor a bill to make K2 illegal as quickly as possible, which means smokers might only have a few more months to enjoy K2 before their legal high goes up in smoke.

K2, a blend of herbs synthesized with a THC-derivative, is still legal and unregulated, though if some legislators have their way, that may soon change.

Schools work to put best foot forth for prospective students that at the end of Amherst tours, guides lead students to the view of Memorial Hill, a view she described as the perfect way to wrap up the tour with a scenic view of the Pioneer Valley's hills.

VISIT from page 1

On a different note, Brill said she feels the campus changes more when there is a chance alumni will be on campus than when prospective students are around.

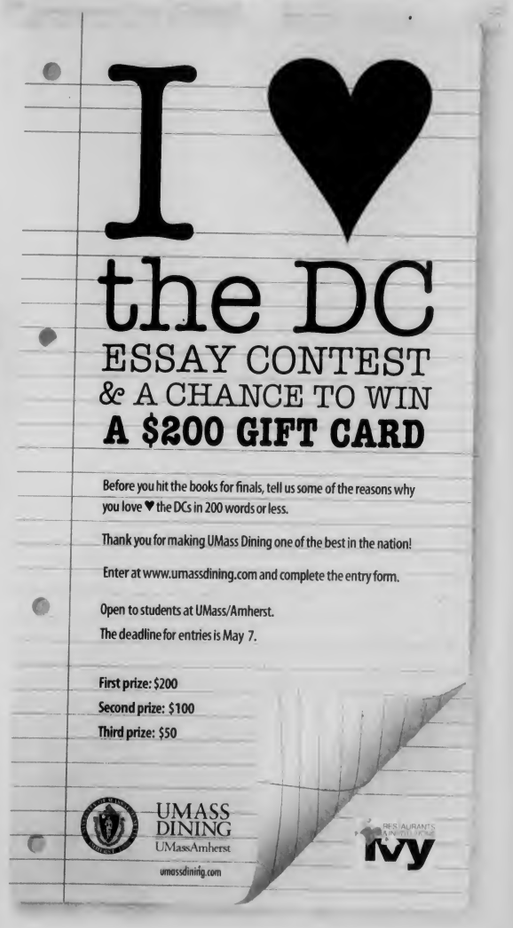
"We try to freshen things up more when there is a chance that alum will be around," she said. "There is a lot of campus grooming around graduation, rather that at an open house. We can cap the number of people at an open house, we can't cap the number of people at graduation."

Even just passing through a tour of prospective freshmen, it is fairly evident that schools are showcasing their strongest suits. While admissions representatives may play down schools' attempts to display their finest features, the campus tour and accepted students' events are time-tested strategies aimed at pulling in students schools have deemed desirable. While they may superficially showcase only the characteristics a college wants to highlight, their importance in attracting paying students in a bumpy economy marked by financial adversity has ballooned in recent years. At least in the Five College area, most are privy to the art of the college visit.

Ashley Berger can be reached at aberger@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY HAMPSHIRE EDU

David Wagner, senior associate director of admissions at Hampshire College, said the college does not change its image to benefit prospective students and that tours showcase the school's facilities, like the Liebling arts building.



Correction

Editor's Note: Correction from "Are UMass students paying too much for health insurance?" 4/21/10

In the third-to-last paragraph of last Wednesday's story "Are UMass students paying too much for health insurance?" the Massachusetts Daily Collegian quoted Executive Director of University Health Services (UHS) Bernette A. Melby as saying that "our co-payments are anywhere from $30-$60, and relative to what we are seeing in the market, this is good coverage."

Melby was referring to co-payment levels often encountered in employer-sponsored health plans, not student plans, including the one offered at the University of Massachusetts. This was not specified in the article. The Collegian regrets the error.

Smoke where there's fire

Alex Perry

Last Tuesday was a very significant day for a much-too-large portion of the University of Massachusetts population, so I thought I would take some time to address the person many of us hate, and even more of us know: "4/20 guy."

Everyone at UMass has met 4/20 guy. Four-twenty guy loves smoking weed and wants everybody to know about his passion for getting high. For 4/20 guy, smoking weed is more than a cheap way to make it seem like his friends are actually funny or cool.

How is he supposed to pretend Sam Adams is good without packing a bowl?

For him, weed is a way of life.

For those of us who have a friend who is a 4/20 guy, we know where he is every day at 4:20 – so long as he isn't already so high that he forgot he should be hitting the bong. If it was up to 4/20 guy, he would literally do everything high – and he honestly attempts it. We've all seen it. He needs to smoke before he writes any of his papers for class. Heck, he needs to smoke before he even goes to class. And don't think he's going to play flag-football without smoking some hippie lettuce before the game. Long drive home? He's rolling a blunt. A concert? How is he supposed to pretend Sam Adams is good without packing a bowl?

Even when 4/20 guy isn't high, his focus is always on the next opportunity for him to return to his ideal state. You're at a party or at the bars, and all he talks about is smoking as soon as you get home. Four-twenty guy is so convinced that his way of life is best, that he is also willing to apply it as a pickup line, as in, "Hey, you girls want to come back to my place? I'll roll a blunt."

Four-twenty guy loves to be around others who smoke. It is a social event for these people. Call me crazy – and many of you have – but I just don't get what is so great about putting a "Phish" t-shirt on and sitting on a hill smoking with a bunch of other hippies. I am, of course, talking about "Extravaganja."

Not only that, but 4/20 guy celebrates the holiday like it is some sort of holy day. To him, the "Extravaganja" event ranks somewhere between getting married and his first blunt on the memorability scale. It's embarrassing.

To make matters even worse, the existence of Facebook statuses have enabled everyone to pretend they are also 4/20 guy every April 20. Four-twenty has become a dreaded day for those of us whose daily routines don't start with rolling out of bed and hitting the bong. We have to hear about it constantly. A normal person would think that it makes no sense to go out of one's way to announce they smoke an illegal substance, but apparently many of our peers disagree. You all know that I'm talking about statuses such as, "I wish I wasn't in class so I could be smoking on the Hill!" These people honestly need to grow up.

Four-twenty guy is also convinced that smoking weed has no consequences.

Not only does he not see any negative consequences, he demands everyone else think the same way he does.

If you don't smoke, he strongly encourages you to do so. He also thinks marijuana should be legalized. He hears about the nation's deficit and the first thing that comes to mind is legalizing marijuana.

He'll give you some kind of spin, like if it were legalized our government could tax it, which would essentially make it the greatest economic proposal for the United States since 2009's stimulus package.

Although legalizing it would, at best, be described as moronic, arguing with 4/20 guy about it would be about as effective as trying to inform a Red Sox fan from 1999 that Derek Jeter is better than Nomar Garciaparra.

There is some good news associated with 4/20 guy though, which is that 4/20 is only one day a year.

Although many of us have to put up with 4/20 guy on a regular basis, it is at least comforting to know that 364 days out of the year, this guy is in the minority. At some point, this person will have to grow up and stop the immature behavior of smoking from a.m. to p.m. if he ever hopes to contribute anything to our society.

Otherwise, 4/20 guy will fail to be known as 4/20 guy, and instead will just be known by words that better describe his lifestyle and contribution to society – none of which I am allowed to use to close this column.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

Buying for all our futures

Being a socially responsible consumer gets increasingly difficult the more you know.

Lauren Vincent

This year, I've been trying to transform my shopping habits and make better choices. But as I learn more about the way the things I own are produced, the harder it is for me to commit.

The first step wasn't too painful. I started by giving up water bottles. It was something I'd been putting off doing for a long time, but I'm glad I finally did. I've saved a ton of money and it's only slightly less convenient. There's no reason to pay for water. Corporations like Coca-Cola and Pepsi have taken over a public resource and are selling us something that already belongs to us. And did you know that tap water actually has more regulations on it than bottled water, making tap water actually safer? Finally, all that plastic is not obviously eco-friendly, despite what they say. Less plastic or smaller cups do not equal green, especially when you toss a bottle after one use. So kicking the water bottle habit wasn't too difficult after getting used to it.

Then I planned on only buying fair-trade coffee. Fair Trade Certified (TM) coffee, according to the Starbucks Coffee Company website, "Empowers small-scale farmers organized in cooperatives to invest in their farms and communities, protect the environment, and develop the business skills necessary to compete in the global marketplace."

I knew this wouldn't be hard at the University of Massachusetts, because People's Market is right there. But I had to do some research for when I was home. I was happy to learn that fair trade has expanded to most coffee chains, including Starbucks and Dunkin' Donuts. But when dealing with big corporations, I'm often wary.

For example, Dunkin' Donuts states they use 100 percent fair trade and organic coffee for all espresso-based beverages – that's lattes, cappuccinos and espresso.

But as I learn more about the way the things I own are produced, the harder it is for me to commit.

It doesn't say if their regular coffee is fair trade. Starbucks has made significant efforts to be a responsible company and indicate that they have purchased 14-million pounds of certified organic coffee in fiscal year 2009.

When choosing between Dunkin' Donuts and Starbucks, I'm playing it safe now and picking Starbucks.

Clothing was the next thing I tried to conquer, and one of the hardest. I told myself I wasn't going to shop anywhere that utilizes sweatshop labor, which eliminated a lot of my favorite stores. I've gone shopping several times this year, and, admittedly, slipped up. The problem here is that a lot of organic and fair-trade clothing is much more expensive. It's handmade, and the person who made it was paid a fair amount. The reason that Forever 21 and Wal-Mart are so cheap is because they use sweatshops and cheap labor – but it can be easy to forget this when you compare the prices, especially as a college student.

My solution to this was to go shopping less. I'm trying not to go to the mall unless I absolutely need something – that way I won't be tempted. I took myself off the e-mail and mailing lists of my favorite stores, so I won't be tempted to go to their websites.

It's tough, because I do love to shop. I don't know if I'll be able to commit to only buying fair-trade clothing from now on, but I can commit to not making unnecessary purchases.

Food is probably the most difficult thing for me to evaluate. I am still having trouble letting go of a lot of different things, for example, Kraft products.

Kraft is the largest packaged foods company in the U.S. It is also a subsidiary of the tobacco company Phillip Morris, which lobbies not only for tobacco but also against public interest laws. According to Sourcewatch.org, the company fights laws mandating recycling, and one of their press memos stated that "recycling is not the answer to solid-waste management."

Since I disagree with that statement, I decided to no longer buy Kraft products, which seemed simple enough – I rarely eat mac and cheese anyway. Then I found out that Kraft owns basically every company that I buy snacks from: Ritz Crackers, Crystal Light, Jell-O and Post Cereals. So now I'm trying harder to check labels and see who owns everything I eat.

This is a challenge not only because I've eaten those things for a while and enjoy them. It's hard to wipe them all off my shopping list, but once again, money is an issue here. Most of the companies that are truly socially responsible are organic companies.

Whole Foods is probably my best bet for finding brands that are 100 percent organic and not socially destructive. Again, I'm a college student, and I don't have a lot of money to spend – especially when there's a cheaper alternative right down the street. It's an unfortunate reality.

I hope that making small changes will lead to the socially-conscious transformation I'm aspiring to. If I start now, I can hopefully be the kind of shopper I want to be someday. Maybe my actions will even make a little difference, and inspire you to take action, as well.

Lauren Vincent is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lvincent@student.umass.edu.

Five reasons why spring concert rocked

1) It was "Ludicrous."

2) There's always hope they'll get good acts.

3) There was still sushi left over from Taste of UMass.

4) All the cops were there, so the parties were better.

5) The boos for the alma mater brought tears to my eyes.

This one party never stopped

Last week, Rep. Darrell Issa (R-California) wrote a letter to Mary Shapiro, chairwoman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, asking for any documentation that the agency had been in contact with Democratic leadership before launching what resulted in a lawsuit against Goldman Sachs. Issa's rather overt implication was that the lawsuit has no basis and is just a political ploy by Democrats to stir up anger against Wall Street and the party often associated with them, the Republicans.

Scott Harris

At face value, there is nothing wrong with asking this of the SEC. Aside from the heated rhetoric with which Issa wrote the letter, he serves as ranking member of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee. This is one of the roles we should expect opposition party members to fill to make sure that the ruling party is not abusing its power.

Issa wants to score political points against the administration, feeling that if he can make the lawsuit a partisan issue, maybe the Democrats will not gain politically from it.

If the Goldman Sachs lawsuit really is a naked attempt to gin up populist resentment of Wall Street; coordination between the White House, the SEC and various entities of the Democratic Party can probably be found.

During the Bush years, Democrats wrote at least a handful of these kinds of letters, so it would be doubly hypocritical for me to blast Republicans for doing the same now. Though Shapiro seemed to think it harmed the institution for the question to even be posed, the truth is that we need someone to ask this question. It seems to me that neither Democrats nor Republicans were asking enough questions before the financial sector debacle hit its crisis point.

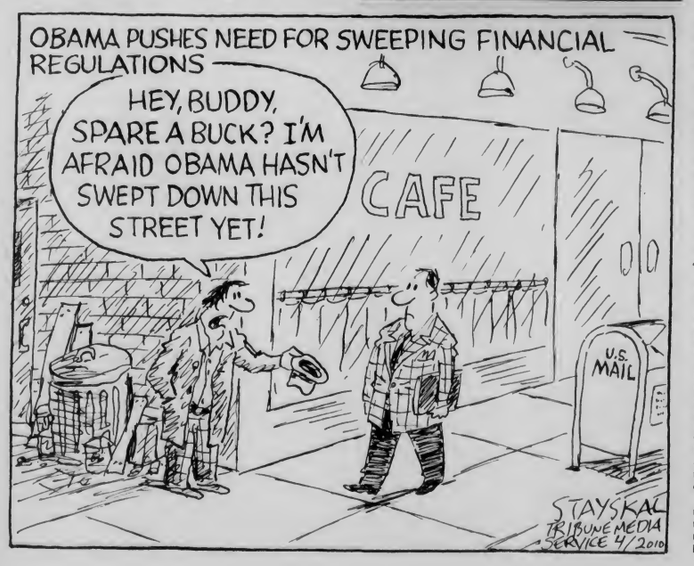
The problem is that Issa did not write the letter out of sincere concern about the abuse of power. He possesses no expertise on financial sector issues.

This is a fact: He does not sit on a committee with direct influence over financial policy. He has a limited background in business. In addition, despite all his years as a member of Congress, he has authored virtually no legislation related to this issue.

When Issa was part of the majority during the Bush administration, he refused to investigate potential abuses of power far more grounded in fact than this. In fact, the biggest accomplishment that Issa can claim on that committee is accusing families of slain Blackwater security guards of lying about who wrote their testimony that reflected poorly on the GOP-friendly organization.

That is what this issue ultimately comes down to. Issa wants to score political points against the administration, feeling that if he can make the lawsuit a partisan issue, maybe the Democrats will not gain politically from it.

It is the Washington version of "The Boy Who Cried Wolf."



Republicans know they can not win the public relations battle on financial reform because the only talking points they have are the ones fed directly to their offices from the Wall Street lobbyists. They oppose any regulation, and they oppose taxing banks if they put their customers in unnecessary risk and so on.

That is all well and good, everyone is entitled to their opinion, but those are not positions that will gain favor from the voting public. So the only thing left to do is make the battle over Wall Street reform and the Goldman Sachs lawsuit intensely political, turn the public off and hope that cynicism can depress any potential political gain.

Admittedly, there are some members of the Republican Congressional caucus that seem interested in making compromises on select issues in the wake of their loss in the health care fight. It is their ability to govern that is probably the more serious threat to GOP gains in the fall. The greatest potential for political gain, then, is not the Goldman Sachs lawsuit or the financial reform debate.

It is Democrats pointing out the stark, unavoidable truth: Republicans really do not have anyone credible that could have written that letter to the SEC. With all the problems our country faces, if we cannot trust the GOP to do the little things responsibly, I doubt the American people will think they can do the big things at all.

Scott Harris is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at smharris@student.umass.edu.

SPRING CONCERT 2010

LUDACRIS from page 1

Spotlights on, and band-mates Sky Blu and Redfoo began to dance to a manipulated sample of "Eye of the Tiger." This was a good introduction to their set, much of which consisted of '80s-inspired dance beats re-appropriated for irony and ecstasy.

Twisting geometric shapes and colored spotlights danced around the arena as LMFAO shelled out one goofy party anthem after another – like "I'm in Miami, Bitch" (for which they substituted the chorus with "I'm in UMass, Bitch") and "Shots." The dual MC's may not have displayed a particularly high degree of lyrical chops, but they sure did give a dynamic performance.

At moments throughout the set, they would coordinate dances that were at once spectacular and idiotic. Much like the choice to bring out a keytar for one song, or having the backup dancers dressed as Lego bricks. Though not the most impressive MCs, Sky Blu and Redfoo are two of the best hype men you could ask for. Suffice it to say, the crowd was entirely "crunk" by the time Ludacris finally took the stage.

But before he was ready to do that, he started up a "Luda" chant from the shadows; when the noise was finally right, he appeared on stage in white-rimmed shades and broke straight into "Stand Up," getting the first of several call-and-responses going with the chorus: "When I move, you move just like that."

He proceeded to play just about every recognizable single he's released in his 10-year career, from his very first – "What's Your Fantasy" to "How Low" and "My Chick Bad" off his newest album, "Battle of the Sexes." At one point near the end of his set, he asked the crowd if they were tired yet, after hearing "too many hit songs." Needless to say, nobody was too tired of hearing "Ludacris" music; either the smoke machines were working full tilt for his set, or UMass really loves their Luda.

Or, as he put it, before breaking into "Area Codes" – "Guess what I got in the 413?"

Ludacris' trademark syncopated rapping style was as insane as usual last night, breaking out of the rhythm in unexpected ways at the most climactic of moments. His DJ was also on point, cutting fast and tight on all the hits, as well as taking the spotlight for an impressive solo.

He had the audience in the palm of his hand all night, alternately getting them to clap, wave, light up or shout, all at the drop of a beat. Thankfully, he took the opportunity to inform the students of the dangers of alcoholism, driving and pot-smoking and sex addiction: "This has been a Ludacris public service announcement."

The tongue-in-cheek attitude went well with LMFAO's shenanigans, but the veteran MC hit a lot harder. He closed with a couple of his more aggressive singles, "Move Bitch" and "Get Back." But the crowd felt the love nonetheless.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu

PHOTOS BY MATTHEW HARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

The 'Cats' meow: UM hosted Broadway classic last Monday

By Alissa Mesbov
Collegian Staff

Last Monday night, the national tour of "Cats" played one performance to a full house at the Mullins Center, which it most certainly deserved.

"Cats" has been a benchmark of musical theater since it came out in 1981 in London, for its writing, music, dance and design elements. Now, more than 30 years later, the tour continues to uphold that high standard.

When "Cats" was released nearly two decades ago, Andrew Lloyd Webber pioneered an alternative way ofto producing a musical score. Lloyd Webber defied convention and composed his musical as an adaptation of "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats," a children's poetry collection by T. S. Eliot. The effect was a seamless integration of music and lyrics that challenged many of the preconceived notionsideas ofabout musical theater.

The cast of the North American Tour group wowed the audience last Monday with their spectacular performance. While the perfectly blended voices of the group left audience members breathless, the solos of the lead characters clearly stole the nightshow. The vocal standout of the night was Anastasia Lange as Grizabella, whose "Memory" is one of the closest to Betty Buckley's world-renowned original rendition. Along with Lange, Adam Steiner excels vocally as the rock star Rum Tum Tugger, as does Aubrey Elson, whose bell-like soprano is perfect for the innocent kitten, Sillabub.

Unfortunately, the pit orchestra wilted in comparison to the outstanding vocal performances. Comprised of five pieces, the pit could not support the twists and turns of Lloyd Webber's emotionally sweeping music. Though a touring production limits the size of the pit, more than five pieces are necessary to bring the music to its full potential.

The dancing consisted mostly of Gillian Lynne's original choreography. The difficult, yet excellently executed dance is based in theon modern and jazz styles;, however, the dance displayedshows a heavy tap, ballet and gymnastic influence. Every one of the dancers were exquisite in the ensemble pieces, particularly during the 10 minute, all-dance "Jellicle Ball." However, there were several standout dancers, including Sarah Bumgarner as Victoria in several ballet solos, Chris Mackenthun as Mistoffelees who tackled some of the most difficult ballet turns and leaps, and Brian Bailey and Kristen Quartarone as the acrobatic twin thieves, Mungojerrie and Rumpelteazer.

Though "Cats" has frequently been criticized for its lack of plot, viewers should not fixate on this shortcoming as the production was never intended to offer much in the form of traditional storytelling. Rather, viewers should sit back and enjoy the incredible visual spectacle before them. the cat-like agility of the actors and the fantastic dancing that the show is known and loved for.

COURTESY THEATRICALOUNGE PRODUCTIONS

The cast of the production uses "felinity exercises" to get them into character. Despite the unimpressive sets, the actors embodied their feline characters flawlessly. They proved, "It's never too late to teach an old dog new tricks."

MATTHEW HARRINGTON/COLLEGIAN

Tony Award-winning act 'Cats' came to the Mullins Center last Monday, delivering a visually stunning performance that lacked plot, but won hearts.

Erin Chupinsky, a veteran swing and assistant dance captain in the tour, said in an interview, "During [the] rehearsal process, we do felinity exercises. We do different improv activities to help us embody the characters. There's certainly a process to becoming cats."

Such efforts are evident in the show. There was not a moment when even one actor broke out of his or her "felinity," as Chupinsky called it. They not only move like cats, but they also pick up the little nuances of cats, like ear scratching or nuzzling. On top of that, each actor added his own character to the mix. Munjojerrie and Rumpelteazer, the aforementioned thieves, were constantly causing some sort of trouble. The female characters swooned over Rum Tum Tugger, who loved every minute of it. The acting is always a challenge in the show, despite its minimal plot, because of both the process of becoming a cat while attempting to capture eachcapturing their individual character.

David Hershey did the original lighting design for "Cats," though the playbill attributes the lighting adaptation to Rick Belzer. Regardless of the designer, the lighting display failed to create a mystical and aura that matched the feeling of the play. Instead, the design was atrocious, as it utilized ridiculous shapes and colors that belonged more in a cheap three- ring circus rather than in this Tony Award-winning musical.

Both set and costume designer, John Napier, the set and costume designer, created the visual elements in "Cats." Neither position was a small task, considering both were regarded as revolutionary when the show first opened. Napier was challenged to enlarge an oversized junkyard to serve as the set for the actors-turned-domestic cats. They hid out behind a large tire and escaped backstage through giant ovens, pipes and cars. A small tribute to Napier was evident in the deceiving car's license plate number, "NAP 11A." The costumes certainly reflected the style of the early 1980s, when they were first designed. For most characters, costumes consisted of hand-painted and dyed spandex unitards, fur-covered shoulders, incredible fur-like wigs, jazz shoes, and in some cases, arm and/or leg warmers. Napier's makeup designs were intricate and individualized. Though the costumes helped transform the humans into cats, the actors' emotions were not overwhelmed by the elaborate makeup.

Napier's biggest flaw in the set design, however, was the spaceship-like device that led to the Heavyside Lair, a sort of cat heaven. It looks like it could have come out of an incredibly cheesy combination of "Mars Attacks" and some type of 1960s cartoon. In stationary productions, a staircase is used, which, though still cheesy, is not nearly as nauseating as the cat-carrying UFO in this production.

It's never too late to teach an old dog new tricks, however. For "Cats," this may not be the most welcome anecdote, but it holds true. Though the show is almost 30 years old, it is certainly not too late for an update that would be warmly welcomed to this set piece.

"Cats has such a legacy … the famous tagline is 'Now and Forever,'" Chupinsky said about this and other recreations.

If this performance matches what "Cats" has always been, then it is no surprise that it has been around for nearly 30 years. The musical was an incredible two-and-a-half hours of theatrical excellence.

Alissa Mesbov can be reached at amesbov@student.umass.edu

Minutewomen shutout SLU, rained out in second game

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team was in danger of losing its first Atlantic 10 game this weekend to Saint Louis, but the combination of defense and bad weather made sure that wouldn't happen.

The No. 21 Minutewomen beat the Billikens in Game 1, 1-0, on Friday, while Game 2 was called after eight innings due to inclement weather, and ended in a tie at three runs apiece on Saturday. They now extend their unbeaten streak to 15 games.

UMass	3
St. Louis	3
UMass	3
St. Louis	0

Pitcher Sara Plourde pitched a complete game with one hit, 14 strikeouts and five walks while SLU's pitcher Kelcie Matesa allowed six hits, three walks and struck out three.

The offense had a slow day at the plate, hitting a combined 6-for-25, but senior Whitney Williams came through in the second inning to drive in the game's only run.

With one out, designated player Jessica Serio hit a double into left field. Two batters later, Williams singled up the middle on the second pitch and brought in Serio.

SLU's only hit of the day came from left fielder Kristin Nicoletti when she singled up the middle on a full count. She then stole second on a throwing error, but her effort did little to change the outcome as Plourde struck out the next two batters.

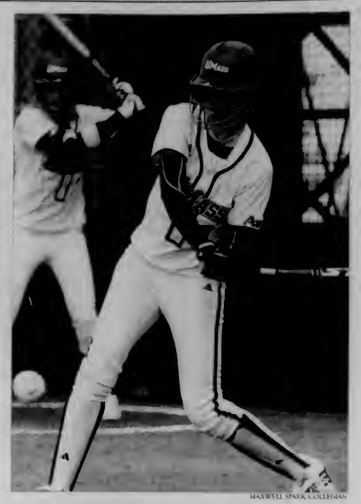
In Game 2, she struck out eleven batters and brought her season total to 424. She is now six strikeouts away from tieing Danielle Henderson's 1998 strikeout mark (430) and 41 away from Henderson's school record (465) that she set in 1999.

The Billikens (23-20-1, 9-4-1 A-10) scored the first run of the game after Caitlin Trevillyan pinch-ran for Kelly Flanagan following a sacrifice bunt the moved her to second. Nicoletti doubled down the left field line and brought in Trevillyan.

UMass (29-7-1, 9-0-1 A-10) responded with a three-run home run by catcher Meghan Carta after Serio and senior Michelle Libby reached base. Carta's shot gave the junior her team-leading eighth home run of the season.

The Minutewomen couldn't stay comfortable for long.

UMass committed two errors in the sixth inning, which brought in two runs and tied the game. Nicoletti scored the second run for SLU on a bunt single to the shortstop by outfielder Rachel O'Connell.



The next run came on a double-steal by O'Connell and centerfielder Jessica Buschjost when Carta made a throwing error and allowed O'Connell to score.

Senior Sarah Reeves hit a two-out double to the right field in the eighth inning, but the inning ended after sophomore Katie Bettencourt struck out. The Billikens never got a hit during the bottom of the eighth inning, giving the Minutewomen another chance in the ninth.

However, the rain ended the game in the ninth inning after the Maroon and White put runners on base with one out. Saturday's game was the first time Sortino and Co., finished a game in a tie since Feb. 11, 2007 when it ended a contest with Kansas knotted at one in San Diego.

The Minutewomen's next game will be a doubleheader against Rhode Island at home as part of a 10-game home stretch.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen narrowly escaped a loss on Saturday, as the game against Saint Louis was rained out. The game ended with a 3-3 tie.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Merritt Cosgrove was influential in UMass' championship-winning weekend, scoring three goals over the entire weekend. Cosgrove and the Minutewomen will move on to the NCAA tournament play-in game.

Defense holds La Salle attack

LACROSSE from page 8

minutes in, O'Donnell broke the silence between the two teams with a goal off a pass from Sarcona to give the Minutewomen an early lead. The lead was diminished after attacker Stefany McKee notched her 32nd goal of the year off of a free-position shot.

Cosgrove came right back with an unassisted goal four minutes later to revive the UMass lead, which was once again cut due to a similar score by midfielder Rachel Baker. With the game tied once more, La Salle pushed toward the Maroon and White net and earned its first lead of the contest from attacker Jill Davis' 40th goal of the season.

The Minutewomen began a strong push once the clock read 18 minutes, as the squad went on a five-goal, eight-minute run, led by Lyons. Lyons handed off the ball to Pelletier who opened the run with a score to knot the game at three.

Continuing her streak of success, Lyons sent in three-straight goals on Explorer goalkeeper Megan Corliss. All three of Lyons' goals came from different sets of plays, with the first being unassisted, the second off a free position and the third off an assist from fellow high-scorer, O'Donnell.

Pelletier, whose goal started the run, capped it off with a successful score off a ball from Sarcona to give the Minutewomen a 7-3 lead. Before the halftime break, La Salle got the final word with a score by midfielder Nora McGurkin.

The game against the Explorers last Sunday had been measured by the display of defense on both sides. In the early part of the second half, it was no different, as 10 minutes passed before a score. Midfielder Haley Smith took the ball to the cage herself to score the eighth UMass goal.

"Defensively, in that start of the second half, we held them, and they came back again, and we held them again," Venechanos said. "I was really impressed in the last three minutes of the game, it was a little bit of a flashback of what happened on Sunday, but this time we were able to keep possession."

Despite three scores, broken up by Pelletier's third goal of the game, La Salle could not find the magic it used during last Sunday's affair. The clock ran right down to the very last tick, and the Minutewomen earned their spot in the A-10 championship game.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
■ PERRY APTS.
■ 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
■ LANTERN COURT APTS.
■ MILL HOLLOW
■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.
400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

Leigh, Fredette big for UMass

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

Second baseman Eric Fredette changed the momentum of the weekend series between the Massachusetts baseball team and Saint Louis with his game-tying three-run homer in the eighth inning of Game 2.

"It was huge," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "[The game] changed 180 degrees. It completed a comeback. He just had a great at-bat, took a great swing, and came up with a big clutch hit."

Before his big swing to left field, the Minutemen (10-21, 7-8 Atlantic 10) were outscored 13-4 in the series, and came close to losing their first conference series since Charlotte's sweep over UMass in early April.

Instead, Fredette jumpstarted a 16-0 run as the Minutemen came back to win the middle game, and snatch the series away from the Billikens (20-21, 8-7 A-10) with a 12-0 victory in game three.

"[Fredette's hit] deflated them because we were down by quite a bit," Stone said. "[Saint Louis] probably figured the game was over with and for him to step up like that, we were able to continue that momentum right on through the second game [of the day]."

It was Fredette's biggest highlight of an eventful weekend. He finished 8-for-12 in the series with three runs scored and six runs batted in. The junior leads the team with a .415 batting average and a .568 slugging percentage.

Leigh continues to dominate

Senior Bryan Leigh continued his streak of top pitching performances this weekend by striking out 11 Billiken hitters during eight shutout innings in the final game of the series.

After starting the season 0-4, Leigh has won three straight games, compiling a 1.73 earned run average in 26 innings pitched.

"He's certainly proved that he works better as a starter," Stone said. "He has command of four pitches, works fast, throws strikes and did a great job."

After pitching in two straight complete games on the road against Boston College and Rhode Island, Leigh showcased his recent spark in front of the Minutemen fans on Saturday.

His last appearance at home before Saturday was on April 7 against UConn, when he suffered the loss after giving up four runs in one inning of relief.

In his latest outing, Leigh limited the two power hitters in the middle of the SLU lineup, Danny Brock and Jon Myers, to one hit in eight at-bats with. Myers struck out twice in four at-bats. In the first two games of the series, Brock and Myers had been 5-for-17 with six runs batted in and two runs scored.

UM Pitcher ends SLU threat

Northampton native Joe Popielarczyk came out of the bullpen in Game 2 and made his mark in what was an offensive-minded game.

In the top of sixth inning, with the Minutemen trailing 9-3 and the bases loaded, Popielarczyk struck out Myers and got the next batter to ground out to end the threat. Popielarczyk earned the win after pitching three innings of relief, surrendering no runs and striking out five batters.

"[Popielarczyk] is a great kid," Stone said. "He's a hard worker, he has a great attitude and he just battles. He did a tremendous job. Just when we needed it, he came in a tough position, with the bases loaded, and limited the damage. Then he pitched some great innings to get us to the point where we were ahead in the ninth [inning]."

It was a drastic change from Popielarczyk's last outing against Harvard on April 21, when he gave up four runs in three and one-third innings. With five more strikeouts on Saturday, Popielarczyk has collected 19 strikeouts in only 13.1 innings pitched.

"He's got a very good slider and that's the strikeout pitch," Stone said. "He did the job where we needed to have someone really step up and shut them down to give us a chance to climb back into the game."

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Ed Pequignot trots home during UMass' 6-3 win over Richmond. The Minutemen dominated Saint Louis this weekend, taking two games in the series including a 12-0 shutout on Saturday.

Popielarczyk blanks Billikens

BASEBALL from page 8

Reliever Joe Popielarczyk (1-0) kept St. Louis at bay, throwing three scoreless innings allowing one hit to earn the win.

UMass began its rally by tallying one run each in the sixth and seventh innings to make the score 9-5. Mike Gedman began the home eighth with a double, advancing to third on a passed ball.

After a Tom Conley sacrifice fly sent Gedman home, consecutive walks to Kyle Multner and Ryan Cusick set the stage for Eric Fredette's game-tying three-run homer over the left field wall. Matt Gedman followed that with a solo blast of his own to put the Minutemen ahead and tie the weekend series at one apiece.

Popielarczyk made way for the UMass rally when he came out of the bullpen in the sixth inning to shut down the St. Louis lineup. After two errors led to two Billiken runs, Charlie Benson failed to record an out in relief of starter Jared Freini, loading the bases on a walk and giving St. Louis another run on a free pass. Then, the sophomore right-hander was handed the ball and sat the next two batters down.

"We had a great relief performance by Popielarczyk," Stone said. "He came in [during] a tough situation, did the job and continued to pitch well throughout the game."

Freini (1-4) struggled early on in that game, allowing nine runs (seven earned) on eight hits while throwing seven strikeouts over five and one-third innings, until he was bailed out by Popielarczyk's shut-down performance.

Stone was pleased with his team's resiliency and focus down the stretch of Game 1, and ability to make up for their early miscues.

"We played some good defense near the end of [the game]," Stone said. "Early on we made a few errors, but offensively we hung with it and had the big eighth inning. We hit the ball well all day long and had some big hits at the end of the game, so that was important."

The Minutemen had seven batters with multiple hits, led by Fredette who went 4-for-5 with two runs and three RBIs. The second baseman was also the only player to hit multiple times in Friday's game as he ended the weekend 8-for-12 in the batter's box with six RBIs.

During the first game of the series, both starting pitchers went the distance, as the Minutemen fought to keep the game close and came up just short on a chance to tie in the final frame.

Down 4-2 in the bottom of the eighth, Cusick reached base on a double to leadoff the inning and Fredette knocked him in on the next at-bat with a single up the middle. Then, a Matt Gedman sacrifice bunt advanced Fredette to second. After a fly-out by Baudinet, a Mike Donato single put runners on the corner, but after a wild pitch moved both runners into scoring position, Peter Copa grounded out to end the inning.

With one last chance to tie the game in the bottom of the ninth, Mike Gedman nearly hit a solo home run to center field, but the ball appeared to hit a gust of wind, falling into the glove of J.D. Dunn to end the game, 4-3.

Starting pitcher Nick Serino (1-4) pitched formidably in a complete-game effort, allowing eight hits and fanning the same amount of batters in a 4-3 defeat. Billiken starting pitcher Bryant Cotton earned the win with similar numbers, going the full nine and allowing three earned runs on seven hits and eight strikeouts.

"Nick's got a good attitude, he knows he pitched well, well enough to win. He's not going to dwell on [the loss]," Stone said. "We worked on and improved on not getting down mentally when we [face a deficit]. As long as we take advantage of every at-bat and take quality swings, we have a chance to comeback."

The Minutemen will take that strong mental attitude into their next matchup on Tuesday at home against Siena.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

COMICS

Don't Tase Me Bro!

		3			8
			1				6
	5	1		3
2				5	6
					7	1	3
						5
6		2	4		5
5			2			4	1
		4		9

CITY FOOTWEAR
Students and Staff of the five Colleges Eligible for 10% off with ID
nike New Era Clarks TIMBERLAND
34 Pleasant Street · Northampton
413.341.5581

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

Take UMass Amherst home with you this summer
THREE Summer Sessions
200+ online classes
REGISTER NOW!
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS HIRING AN ASSISTANT BUSINESS MANAGER
FRESHMAN & SOM STUDENTS ENCOURAGED TO APPLY
GAIN VALUABLE BUSINESS EXPIRENCE
BECOME INVOLVED ON CAMPUS
GREAT RESUME BUILDER
For more information stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

CROSSWORD

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

SMBC By Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Economists are no longer allowed on "BibleTalk."

Chainsawsuit By Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

HARK! a Vagrant By Kate Beaton harkavagrant.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Do something nice for someone else. Try praying for the healthy return of Bret Michaels and his super awesome horse hair.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Delivery surcharges are such garbage. Return the favor by telling the delivery guy to, "keep the change, ya filthy animal."

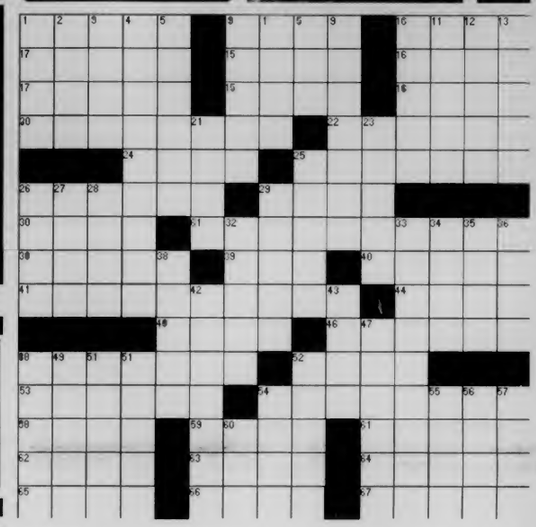
aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
You are about as crazy as a meat-craving woman who is anxiously awaiting the birth of their 15-pound child.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
I know, those security guards were frisking me like I was the Trix Bunny going into a playground too.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Not doing too well with your major? Try wrangling some deep-sea creatures for duty and humanity!

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Are you down with OPP?

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Do not resort to actual violence when in a traffic jam. However, feel free to hadouken those who cut you off.



virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
The roundhouse kick solves everything from the blues to the agonizing feeling during finals week.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
What if male sleaziness could be controlled by a daily dosage of a vitamin called, "Manpons."

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
The UMass community will never forget about last night and your demonstration of how low you can go.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Someone changed your Facebook status while you were at class. Your Mom does not approve...

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Your dog ran away from your farm. Even cyber animals resist your taste in Robert Pattinson.

ACROSS
1. Egyptian water lily
6. Shut a door forcefully
10. Narrow opening
14. Spy
15. A native of Poland
16. Wash
17. Prepare
18. Largest continent
19. Murres
20. Abandoned
22. Billows
24. Impolite
25. Guess
26. Look around casually
29. Arid
30. Charge per unit
31. Learner
37. Operatic solos
39. Meadow
40. Rot
41. Conjuring up the dead
44. Old stories
45. Territory
46. Recompense
48. Shield from harm
52. Glance over
53. Rape
54. After-dinner treats
58. Smell
59. Press laundry
61. Sturdy
62. A period of discounted prices
63. Short sleeps
64. A Muse
65. Cupid, to the Greeks
66. Sword
67. Can be maple or corn, for example

DOWN
1. Piecrust ingredient
2. Arch type
3. Rip
4. Undergarment
5. Phonograph needle
6. The Final Frontier
7. Misplaced
8. Muhammad ___
9. Quantify
10. Noisily eat soup
11. Slow
12. Climbing vines
13. Flirt 21. Brainstorm
23. Flip over
25. Glacial ice formation
26. Fiber source
27. Scarce
28. Auditory
29. Piddle away
32. Flora
33. Data from a remote source
34. Religious figure
35. One of 52 in a deck
36. Visual organs
38. Undersides of feet
42. Device
43. Long-haired Tibetan oxen
47. Omits
48. Nonpoetic writing
49. Detecting by radio waves
50. Convex molding
51. Grows weary
52. Detect
54. Fool
55. Lion sound
56. Ballet wear
57. Cease
60. Blame

CLASSIFIEDS

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

Amherst: 2 Bedroom Open House! Come to Mill Valley Estates on April 24th, 12-4 PM. Move-in specials! Whole Foods gift cards just for showing up! *500 Riverglade Drive, Apt F. 253-7377. www.millvalleyApts.com (*while supplies last)

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Jobs with Enviroment Massachusetts $10-15/hr. Career Opportunities & Benefits www.jobsfortheenviroment.org Call Abby 1-800-57-EARTH

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Bartenders Needed EARN UP TO $250 PER DAY. FT/PT No Exp. Req. Will Train Call NOW 877-408-1078

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 26, 2010 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ducasse 'J-E-T-S' off to NFL

Lineman drafted in 2nd round, five others sign NFL contracts

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The New York Jets made offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse the highest drafted Massachusetts football player in the National Football League since 1968, when quarterback Greg Landry was drafted by the Detroit Lions with the 11th overall pick.

The Jets selected him with the 61st overall selection (29th pick in the second round). Ducasse will be the second UMass player on New York's squad, joining safety James Ihedigbo.

Mike Tannenbaum, the team's general manager, is also a UMass alum.

Ducasse has the chance to start immediately the Jets released nine-time Pro Bowl selection, Alan Faneca. He led one of the best offensive lines in the league last year, but is 33 years old and is due $5.2 million this season.

The former Minuteman will now get to compete with last year's sixth-round pick Matt Slauson for the starting job.

"I'm a guy that [the Jets] can trust and rely on," Ducasse said during his press conference. "Pretty much all I'm thinking about now is competing."

If Ducasse gets the job, he will be playing in Faneca's spot, left guard, which he hasn't played since the spring football game of his sophomore year. However, he doesn't see himself having any problems adjusting to the position.

Ducasse will report to rookie camp next week and could be a flexible member on the Jets offensive line.

"He'll start out at right tackle and left guard," Tannenbaum said to UMass Athletics. "We're going to keep playing around with that. We feel we have some flexibility on the line with Rob Turner and Wayne Hunter, and Matt Slauson played some center at Tampa Bay last year."

In addition to leading UMass with his blocking ability, he also impressed scouts at the NFL Scouting Combine and his school's Pro Day. At the combine, he had 29 reps benching 225 pounds and ran the 40-yard dash in 5.21 seconds.

Ducasse said that from what he knew about the Jets, he feels comfortable with the offensive line's style of play and believes he will make a smooth transition to the NFL.

"That's the kind of offense I like, one that can run the ball over and over again. That's what I'm used to," Ducasse said.

The senior is from Port-au-Prince, Haiti, but moved to Connecticut for high school, where he got introduced to football. Ducasse, who now resides in Stamford, CT, said his family will be in attendance to watch his first NFL game, as he is playing close to home.

While no other former Minutemen were selected in the draft over the weekend, five others were signed to NFL contracts following the draft. Wideouts Victor Cruz and Jeremy Horne were picked up by the New York Giants and Kansas City Chiefs, respectively, while safety Jeromy Miles (Cincinnati Bengals) and fullback Chris Zardas (Philidelphia Eagles) were also signed. Kyle C. Harrington also got a tryout with the Miami Dolphins.

The details of the players' contracts are unavailable.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Vladimir Ducasse had a hard workout at Pro Day, but it seems to have paid off, as he was drafted in the second round of the NFL draft to the New York Jets. Ducasse will report to rookie camp next week.

UM retains A-10 title in dramatic fashion

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

It was close and it was dramatic, but at the end of the day, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team can call itself the Atlantic 10 Women's Lacrosse champion for the second-straight year.

The victory came from a back-and-forth showdown between top-seeded Richmond and third-seeded UMass, culminating in a last-second effort by the Minutewomen to secure a 12-10 victory over the Spiders.

With the win, UMass has secured itself a spot in the upcoming NCAA tournament play-in game against the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Champion. The date and opponent of the game will be determined at a later date.

UMass	12
Richmond	10
UMass	9
La Salle	7

As much as Richmond (10-8, 6-1 A-10) tried to down the Minutewomen, UMass continued to fight back in the opening half of the A-10 championship game.

The defending A-10 champion Minutewomen (9-8, 5-2 A-10) started off the game strong with a goal by midfielder Jackie Lyons. Despite a goal nearly three minutes later by Richmond's high-scorer Mary Flowers, Lyons fought right back and scored her second goal of the contest after six minutes of play to secure a 2-1 lead for UMass.

The Minutewomen suffered following the goal, as the Spiders scored four-straight goals on the Maroon and White. Flowers scored her second, while attackers Gabi Wiegand, Danielle Schaevitz and midfielder Anne Ryan nabbed their first goals of the contest.

While the chances of an A-10 championship repeat might have seemed bleak for the Minutewomen, down 5-2 after 13 minutes of play, UMass kicked up its offense after the game was delayed 50 minutes because of lightning. Following the delay, the Minutewomen went on a three-goal run of its own to knot the game up at five goals apiece.

Lyons earned a hat trick during the run, scoring her third goal of the contest, followed by goals from midfielders Jesse O'Donnell and Danielle Pelletier.

The lead switched again with each team trading a score within the final 10 minutes of the first half. Ryan and O'Donnell both scored their second goals of the contest to push the score to 6-6 going into the halftime.

Both teams played a similar game in the first half, with both sides earning four saves and eight groundballs. The Minutewomen had the advantage in clears (8-9) and shots (18-11).

UMass shocked the Spiders' 30 seconds into the second half, as goalkeeper Katie Florence tossed a pass to midfielder Merritt Cosgrove who netted the tiebreaking goal. The Minutewomen lead was cut short, as Wiegand nabbed her 48th goal of the season to lock up the game.

As hard as UMass tried to catch a break, Richmond kept down to two goals, it was not enough to spark the Richmond side, as UMass held on to secure the victory.

Despite the Minutewomen's ability to push the lead forward and earn the win, both teams played a similar second half. Richmond outshot UMass (12-10), but the Minutewomen had the edge in saves (4-3), groundballs (10-7) and clears (8-5). Throughout the entire game, both teams swapped the lead between them on eight occasions.

This is also the second-straight A-10 tournament title for the Minutewomen, and their second in three straight final appearances.

Before the championship game, UMass faced off against La Salle on Friday in a rematch of last Sunday's showdown, where the Explorers won on a last-second score. The Minutewomen did not let history repeat twice, as they finished off La Salle, 9-7.

"La Salle's a really tough team," Venechanos said. "I thought we did a great job to put ourselves in a position to do what we needed to do. We ran a lot of plays that we needed to play and score on."

The early part of the match was similar to the regular-season finale, with both teams trading goals. A little over three

See LACROSSE on page 6

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Lyons looks to complete a pass in a game last year. Lyons (five goals, two assists) led UMass to its second consecutive A-10 title.

Hain lifts UMass past Hoyas

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

When his team needed him most, midfielder Christian Hain came through for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

In his first career start for the Minutemen, Hain scored the game-winning goal with 33.5 seconds left on Saturday afternoon in the ESPNU Warrior Classic, propelling No. 16 UMass to a 13-12 victory over Georgetown.

After sophomore Steve D'Amario (two goals) tied the game at 12 with less than a minute and a half to go in regulation, UMass coach Greg Cannella called a timeout to set up a final offensive play.

"Coming out of the timeout, our plan was to go with the low wing dodge, to be patient and to push the ball behind and try to get it around," Hain said. "I don't know, I just got a stab, we had been practicing it all week, and I had my shot, took it and it went in."

Hain sprinted 15 yards into the offensive zone, beating his defender on the left wing and bouncing a shot in the bottom-right corner past Hoyas goalkeeper C.T. Fisher (nine saves) to give UMass the victory.

"He'll remember that the rest of his life, [on] a big stage, big game [and] in crunch time, and I'm happy for him that he was able to finish the ball," Cannella said.

Redshirt sophomore goalkeeper Tim McCorinack made nine saves in the win for UMass.

The victory snaps the Minutemen's (8-4, 2-2 Colonial Athletic Association) two-game losing streak, while this is the second straight loss for the Hoyas (7-5, 3-1 Big East).

Both teams were former members of the Eastern College Athletic Conference, but are now in different conferences for the first time this season.

"We've had a great rivalry, and if you look back over the last 10 years, six or seven of those were decided by one goal, and it actually felt like a league game," Cannella said.

Along with D'Amario and Hain, attackman Will Manny had his fifth hat trick of the season, while dishing out two assists, tying his career-high with five points. Senior midfielder Bobby Hayes (two goals, one assist) and sophomore Anthony Biscardi also had multi-goal games.

"We got a lot of contributions from a lot of different guys, and that's really the key," Cannella said.

Ryan Liebel (one goal, one assist), Greg Rushing and K.R. Jurgelevich each found the back of the net for the Minutemen.

UMass' offense has relied mostly on its midfield as of late, with mixed results. But against the No. 10 Hoyas, the attacking unit contributed seven of its 13 goals, with Biscardi getting moved from midfield to attack.

Rushing started things off, winning his first of 12 faceoffs on the day and put the Minutemen up 1-0 six seconds into the game.

The Hoyas took a 5-2 lead in the second quarter, but UMass scored five of the last six goals in the first half, and led 7-6 at halftime.

In the first half, the Minutemen went a combined 9-of-15 in faceoff wins, but could not generate offense in the third quarter, with the Hoyas scoring just one goal.

The fourth quarter saw 11 combined goals from both teams, with UMass scoring the final three goals of the game, and scoring six in the period.

On the offensive front, the Hoyas were led by Andrew Brancaccio, who led all scorers with five goals.

UMass	12
GW	10

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Will Manny and the entire UMass squad took it to GW in its 13-12 win on ESPNU.

Biscardi scored his second goal of the contest, putting the Minutemen up 9-8 before the Hoyas scored three-straight goals to go up 11-9 with a little over nine minutes to go in the game.

But the Minutemen came back, with Manny, Biscardi and Hain scoring to give UMass momentum going into their regular season finale against Drexel on next Saturday.

The Minutemen also cut down on turnovers, something that had plagued them in their losses to Delaware and Towson. They committed just one in the fourth quarter, and 13 in the game.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Strong 8th inning key in SLU series

By Dan Giglotti
Collegian Staff

An eighth-inning rally by the Massachusetts baseball team came up short on Friday afternoon. But the Minutemen bats ignited on Saturday, completing another eighth-inning rally en route to a doubleheader sweep of Saint Louis.

Two strong starting pitching performances and a clutch relief effort ensured UMass (10-21, 7-8 Atlantic 10) its third-straight series win.

Game 2 of the doubleheader, and rubber-match of the series, featured another impressive outing for last week's A-10 Player of the Week Bryan Leigh (3-4). The senor hurled eight scoreless innings and recorded a career-high 11 strikeouts in a 12-0 Minutemen rout.

UMass coach Mike Stone recently decided to move the senor to the starting role, and it has paid off.

"[Leigh's performance] was very similar to the game he pitched at Rhode Island," Stone said. "We scored runs and he shut them down. When we score runs and he gets all his pitches working for him, he can be very tough."

UMass hitters pounced on the Hilliken (20-21, 8-7 A-10) pitching staff, beginning in the fourth inning when they scored six runs off of starter Andrew Buckham and reliever Tommy Coovert. The bottom half of the frame began with back-to-back long balls by Peter Copa and Mike Gedman and was capped off with a Brian Baudinet two-RBI single.

Mike Gedman's (5-for-11, four RBI, two home runs) strong hitting during the series capped a week in which he hit five home runs and 11 RBI.

Each starter on the Minutemen line-up hit safely during the game, led by Copa, Gedman and Ryan Cusick, who each had three hits. UMass accrued 17 hits in Game 2 and 35 total hits on the afternoon.

"Our guys looked good in the box. They looked comfortable, they looked confident and they produced," Stone said.

A rousing comeback in Game 1 of Saturday's doubleheader seemed to be deflating to the SLU team.

"The momentum from Game 1 continued through to the next game," Stone said. "They were up 9-3 and I don't think they recovered from [the defeat]. That was demoralizing."

Facing a six-run deficit in Game 1 of the doubleheader, the Minutemen chipped away at the Hilliken lead, capping their rally with back-to-back home runs in the bottom of the eighth inning.

UMass	12
St. Louis	0
UMass	10
St. Louis	9
St. Louis	4
UMass	3

See BASEBALL on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

SHOWERS HIGH: 54 LOW: 31 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 2010

Rape case prompts student conduct code review

Committee recommendations due by mid-Nov.

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

A special commission, created in response to the University's admission that it improperly sanctioned a student who allegedly confessed to an on-campus rape, will consider establishing minimum sanctions for serious offenses to the student conduct code and allowing for victims of a misconduct to appeal sanctions.

A 17-member committee co-chaired by Associate Chancellor Susan Pearson and Associate Vice Chancellor Center for Student Development Byron Bullock will review the entire Code of Student Conduct (CSC) for the first time since the mid-1990s and submit its recommendations to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim by mid-November, according to information provided by University of Massachusetts spokesman Edward Blaguszewski.

Any recommended changes to the student conduct code would ultimately have to gain the Board of Trustees' approval before their implementation.

The committee comprised of seven students, six administrators and four professors formed on April 8 with the official title of "Special Commission on Code of Student Conduct and Disciplinary Process."

It will "consider a single code that governs the behavior of all students, undergraduate and graduate students regardless of residency [and] review University Housing & Dining Regulations."

The commission will review all sections of the "general procedures regarding disciplinary action" and will consider establishing minimum sanctions for the most serious "level 3" offenses, which include sexual assault, possessing weapons and distributing illicit substances. Members will also "consider including appeal rights and process for victims/survivors of a misconduct," review regulations the code's records and confidentiality section and review the roles and responsibility of student and professional residence life staff.

Committee members must "ensure maximum input and participation by students and staff groups (e.g., RAs, RDs, etc.) and relevant committees and departments (e.g., Student Affairs Judicial Issues Committee, SAJIC, Everywoman's Center, etc.) in developing recommendations."

The members are: undergraduate students Kelleyanne Curley, Modesto Montero, Melissa Urban and Josh Davidson, student and SGA President Elect Brandon Tower, student and GSS President Tiffany Yee, student and SGA Trustee Michael G. Fox, Assistant Professor of Educational Policy Research and Administration Benita Barnes, Assistant Professor of Microbiology Wilmore Webley, Assistant Professor of Communication Disorders Nate Whitmal, Legal Studies Lecturer Jerrold Levinsky, Director of Administrative Services in the Graduate School Office Susan Chinman, Director of Student Legal Service Office Chuck DiMare, Dean of the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences Bob Feldman, Associate Director for Residential Life Laura Giles, Director for Health and Wellness/BASICS Sally Linowski, and Ombudsperson Catherine Porter.

A male University of Massachusetts student confessed to raping a female friend and 2009 alum in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension, according to an investigative report published in late February. University officials allowed the alleged offender to stay on campus, a move that now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures.

The University has since said the accused student is no longer living on campus, but is still enrolled in classes. However, UMass declined to disclose when the student moved off campus, and if he did so on his own or if it was the University's decision, but has said the move is permanent.

The incident occurred in the early morning of October 16, the Friday during homecoming weekend, in North Apartments Building C, according to the New England Center for Investigative Reporting's (NECIR) story published in The Boston Globe.

The victim reported the incident to the Dean of Students' office the following month, said NECIR's report; however, then Assistant Dean of Students Christina Willenbrock gave the accused student a deferred suspension – a decision UMass officials have since said was too lenient, and have called the situation regrettable.

Willenbrock, according to prior reports, did not properly report her decision to her superior, Dean Jo-Anne T. Vann, for approval, and gave the deferred suspension sanction which notifies students that a subsequent violation of the University's conduct code will result in suspension.

She no longer works in the Dean of Students' office and instead is working for the school's housing office. Campus officials continue to refuse to confirm reports that Willenbrock handled the case and also declined to disclose whether or not her relocation was the result of the alleged mishandling.

In early March, she reluctantly declined to comment on her reported handling of the case to Collegian reporters who visited her South Hadley home.

"The University won't let me speak about it," said Willenbrock at the time. "I would love to tell you all my opinions and thoughts on the matter, but I really can't."

UMass officials have thus far declined to comment on her statement, and Willenbrock has not been able to be reached since Collegian reporters spoke to her in early March.

Campus officials said the University cannot change or add to the sanctions already handed down through the student judicial system because there is no appeal process allowed to any person other than the accused – a process the commission will consider changing.

Kim said previously there was no one individual to blame for the mishandling. She said the blame instead goes to the set up of the administrative process, which University officials have since moved to correct by instituting a formal, written policy that mandates serious cases be reviewed by the Dean of Students before they are finalized.

For continued coverage on this story, visit DailyCollegian.com's special page, "Breaking the Silence."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

AMANDA ROSENBERG/ COLLEGIAN

Due to an administrative error, a student who lived in North Apartments was allowed to stay on campus after allegedly confessing to raping a UMass alumna. In response, a special committee will review the student conduct code.

12 hospitalized after party, closes ER

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

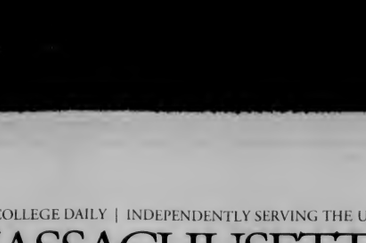
A dozen people were hospitalized and treated for severe intoxication after becoming ill during an on-campus dance party Saturday night into Sunday morning, according to campus officials.

Meanwhile, an influx of patients – which may have included the 12 intoxicated people treated after the campus party – forced Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton to close its emergency room to incoming patients shortly after midnight, according to staff members.

A nursing supervisor at the hospital confirmed the closure. She did not know the exact number of people who sought treatment Saturday night into Sunday or how many had an alcohol-related illness, but she said the patient total grew to an "excessive amount." The nursing supervisor said the hospital's emergency room can typically treat 20 to 25 people simultaneously. A hospital spokesperson could not be reached for comment Sunday.

UMass spokesman Edward Blaguszewski said the identity of those who became ill during the Mullins Center event was not known. He said he did not know whether they were University of Massachusetts students or which hospital treated them.

The Mullins Center does not serve alcohol, and the estimated 1,300 attendees were screened for alcohol and other prohibited items prior to entering the "Turn It Up Party," he said.



Police suspect the 12 who became sick drank alcohol before entering the event but did not begin to show signs of intoxication until later, said Blaguszewski. The 12 patients are expected to recover, he added.

Police reported no arrests or property damage at the event, he added.

The dance party, which was open to any college student who showed student identification, was part of the University's "Blackout Weekend," a campus tradition in which UMass students invite students from other colleges for various weekend sporting, food and music events. The name has no connection to the term "blackout," which some use to describe alcohol-induced amnesia.

UMass Amherst Police and town fire officials who responded with ambulances to aid the 12 intoxicated people were not immediately available to comment on the incident.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

CLAUDIA DIAMANTE-KING/ SG

Cooley Dickinson Hospital had to close its ER early Sunday shortly after a dozen intoxicated UMass concert attendees were hospitalized.

Police ID alleged hit-and-run driver who struck UM bicyclist

The driver of a vehicle that struck and hospitalized a University of Massachusetts bicyclist in a hit-and-run collision last weekend has been identified, police said.

A 19-year-old Orange man, whose name was not disclosed because he has yet to be summoned to court, will soon be ordered to appear in Eastern Hampshire District Court in Belchertown on the charge of leaving the scene of a personal injury accident.

Around 10:22 p.m. on April17, while riding a bicycle on Main Street near the roadway's intersection with Gray Street in downtown Amherst, Matthew Oliverio, a 22-year-old UMass biology major, was seriously injured after being struck by a dark-colored sedan, officials said. Witnesses told police the car involved drove away from the scene.

Oliverio, originally from Braintree, was treated at Baystate Medical Center in Springfield and has since been released from the hospital, police said.

The suspect's vehicle is now in police custody and is being examined by local and state officials. No court date has been set.

-Collegian News Staff

COURTESY UMASS ZUU

A UMass graduate smiles at the 2008 Commencement. In two weeks, the 2010 Commencement will include a series of honors for students and local leaders.

UM to honor students at grad.

As Commencement weekend draws nearer, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has announced 19 individuals who will be honored during ceremonies on May 14 and 15.

At the May 14 Graduate Commencement, Zhou QiFeng will receive an honorary Doctor of Public Administration degree. QiFeng earned both master's and doctoral degrees at UMass in 1983. He later returned to China where he is a member of the State Council and the current president of Peking University.

On May 15, two undergraduate commencement speakers were chosen after a "rigorously competitive process," said a press release from the UMass News Office. Mark Cerasuolo first attended UMass 40 years ago and will soon receive his bachelor's degree in marketing anthropology. According to the release, Cerasuolo, a University Without Walls student, "has more than 30 years experience in the consumer electronics industry, including director-level roles in marketing, product-line development, business development and training."

Emily Grund, a Commonwealth Honors College student from Rockport, was also selected to serve as a commencement speaker. Grund is a journalism major with a minor in psychology. After graduating, she has been nominated to serve as a Peace Corps volunteer and English teacher in Asia.

At the Undergraduate Commencement, several graduating seniors who "have demonstrated exemplary standards of achievement, initiative and social awareness" will receive 21st Century Leader Awards, said the release.

The 12 students who will be honored are Timothy Alden, a double major in accounting and economics from Charlton; Danielle Dean of Westford, a psychology and Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration major; Olga Deshchenko, a double major in journalism and legal studies from Brooklyn, New York; Peter M. Krafft, a mathematics and statistics major from Canton; Meghan Krupka, a civil and environmental engineering major from Medfield; Nicholas R. Morrison, a psychology major from Woburn; Martin Nolet, a psychology major from Quebec, Canada; Taryn O'Hearn, a psychology major from Sagamore Beach; David R. Paquette, a biochemistry and molecular biology major from Westfield; Abigail A. Reardon, a double major in English and legal studies from Ashley Falls; Jeffrey A. Rothschild, a political science major and Judaic and Near Eastern studies minor from Worcester and Sahil Shanghavi, an electrical engineering major from Kolkata, India.

Seniors Stephen Adams and Timothy Alden will be honored as Jack Welch Scholars for "their leadership and executive ability," according to the release.

In addition, two individuals will receive Distinguished Achievement Awards: Steven G. Richter, founder and president of MicroTest Laboratories in Agawam, is "being honored for his willingness to share his expertise as a microbiologist and entrepreneur with UMass Amherst students, faculty and staff," said the UMass News Office.

Also receiving an award will be Paul G. Kirk, Jr., who served as interim senator of Massachusetts after the death of Edward Kennedy. Kirk, Jr. will receive the honor "for his political leadership and commitment" on Friday, said the release.

-Collegian News Staff

ARTS & LIVING

"The Roots is comin'"

Musical sensation The Roots was the main attraction in Amherst College's spring concert on April 24. The Roots is also currently the house band for Jimmy Fallon.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Tennis team beats last year's mark

The Massachusetts tennis team finished Atlantic 10 tournament play with a fifth overall finish. This is one spot higher than last season.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Nick O'Malley reflects on his decision to go abroad as he finishes his semester in Ireland.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

If you missed Sunday's Spring Concert, go online to check out a slideshow from Photo Editor Matthew Harrison.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 60
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor Sara Cods
Managing Web Editor Pete Rizzo
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Jonson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Sannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witte
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cods
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life; became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

– Community Clips –

Arts in the Arboretum
Stop and take note of Arbor Day at UMass by joining with us on a walk through campus as we highlight a few of the ways trees of our arboretum shape our experiences at UMass.

Tue Apr. 27, 1:30 p.m. Campus Pond

University Without Walls Information Session
The UMass Amherst University Without Walls is a bachelor's degree completion program in which students design their own degree using background and interests that reflect their creative and interdisciplinary connections.

Tue Apr. 27, 5:30 p.m. Mass Venture Center 229A

Film Screening of "American Splendor"
N.C. Christopher Couch, Visiting Posen Professor in Jewish Secularism, hosts a showing of the film based on Harvey Pekar's comic book series of the same name.

Tue Apr. 27, 6:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137 (Flavin Auditorium)

Workshop: Asperger's 101
Autism Specialist and Family Support Manager Jason Litto of Community Resources will facilitate a workshop discussing strengths and challenges experienced by individuals with Asperger's Syndrome. Parents, professionals, and any interested community members are welcome to attend.

Tue Apr. 27, 7:00 p.m. Campus Center 904-08

The Sammies: 4th Annual Student Life Awards
Come celebrate the outstanding achievements of UMass student leaders and Registered Student Organizations at "The Sammies."

Tue Apr. 27, 7:00 p.m. Campus Center Auditorium

Lecture: "Between Earth and Sky: Our Intimate Connection With Trees"
Nalini Nadkarni, Professor at Evergreen State College and National Geographic Speaker, speaks as part of the TEI Environmental Lecture Series.

Tue Apr. 27, 7:30 p.m. Bowker Auditorium

Symphony Band Concert
With conductor James Patrick Miller and guest conductor George N. Parks.

Tue Apr. 27, 8:00 p.m. Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

Alumni Association Morning Mixer
UMass Amherst students, faculty, and staff are invited to stop by the Morning Mixer and start your day off with a complimentary breakfast of bagels, fresh fruit, coffee and assorted juices.

Wed Apr. 28, 8:30 a.m. Memorial Hall

NSF Career Grants Workshop
A Panel Discussion for 2010 intended NSF Career Grant applicants and previous Career Grant winners with Vince Rotello, Nilanjana Dasgupta, Kevin Fu.

Wed Apr. 28, 3:30 p.m. Campus Center 917

The Sexual Transformation of Ashkenaz
Naomi Seidman, Koret Professor of Jewish Culture and Director of the Center for Jewish Studies at the Graduate Theological Union in Berkeley, will explore the role of literature both in educating Jewish readers in European heterosexuality and in expressing ambivalence about these cultural transformations.

Wed Apr. 28, 5:00 p.m. Herter 301

Poetry Reading and Acoustic Open Mic
The Student Union Art Gallery is hosting a poetry reading and acoustic open mic night. Bring poems, stories, and lyrics to share.

Wed Apr. 28, 7:00 p.m. Student Union Art Gallery

Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: The Beaches of Agnès
A film screening as part of the 17th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival "Cinematic Cities."

Wed Apr. 28, 7:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137

Not Ready for Bedtime Players
The Not Ready for Bedtime Players, UMass Amherst's award-winning peer education theater troupe, is performing.

Wed Apr. 28, 8:00 p.m. Coolidge

Five College Early Music Collegium
Directed by Robert Eisenstein.

Wed Apr. 28, 8:15 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall

Amherst, MA Job Club: Is Your Resume Ready?
If your dream job was posted today, is your resume ready to apply for it? Come learn how to transform your resume into a powerful tool that will get you interviews.

Thu Apr. 29, 10:00 a.m. Memorial Hall Memorial Room

Panel Discussion: Designing for Sustainability
Samir Strouji of Wilson Architectsand, Chris Schaffner of The Green Engineers, and Ray Mann of the Department of Architecture + Design discuss Exterior Facade Design for Maximum Daylighting and Solar Power Generation.

Thu Apr. 29, 3:30 p.m. Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

Capstone Creative Nonfiction Reading
Participants in Commonwealth Honors College's Capstone—TRUTH TELLING—will be reading selections from their Creative Nonfiction works.

Thu Apr. 29, 4:30 p.m. Goodell Commonwealth Honors College Lounge

A Conversation with Harvey Pekar About "The Jewish Graphic Novel"
Naomi Seidman will interview Harvey Pekar, award-winning author of the autobiographical comic-book series "American Splendor," about his role in transforming comix and helping found the graphic novel.

Thu Apr. 29, 5:00 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 137 (Flavin Auditorium)

Panel From the Past
Interested in learning what you can do to incorporate sustainability into your career? Want to hear about life after Isenberg?
Thu Apr. 29, 7:00 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 112

Mass Marimba Bands and UMass Marimba Ensembles
Directed by Thomas Hannum.
Thu Apr. 29, 8:00 p.m. Bowker Auditorium

Second Annual TIMBR Conference on Cellulosic Biofuels
The conference will focus on the developing biofuels and bioproducts industry in the Northeast with the goal of catalyzing industry-academic collaboration.

Fri Apr. 30, 8:00 a.m. Campus Center 163

Lecture: "Supply Side Story: Risks, Guarantees, Competition and Information Asymmetry"
Professor Mehmet Gumus of the McGill University Desautels Faculty of Management delivers this lecture as part of the Spring 2010 Operations Research Management Science Seminar series.

Fri Apr 30, 11:00 a.m. Isenberg School of Management 112

Lecture: "Why Are We in a Recession: The Financial Crisis in the Symptom Not the Disease"
Professor Ravi Jagannathan of the Northwestern University Kellogg School of Management will be the guest speaker at this week's Finance Seminar.

Fri Apr 30, 1:30 p.m. Isenberg School of Management 112

GARDASIL.
[Human Papillomavirus Quadrivalent (Types 6, 11, 16, and 18) Vaccine, Recombinant]

INTERESTED IN GARDASIL?
GARDASIL IS WIDELY AVAILABLE AND MANY PRIVATE INSURANCE PLANS* COVER IT.

TALK TO YOUR CAMPUS HEALTH CENTER OR OTHER HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONAL.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

While your insurance company may reimburse for GARDASIL, your eligibility for coverage and reimbursement for GARDASIL depends on your individual insurance benefit. You can contact your insurance company for details on coverage for GARDASIL.

MERCK

Students learn self defense with on-campus gun class

The Post (Ohio Univ.)
via College News Network

Five Ohio University students stood in dark room with their pistols, as the sound of gunshots filled the air.

The group was practicing night shooting during a concealed weapon course this weekend in Marietta, led by fellow Ohio University students and pistol instructors Andy Zeigler and Bob Schade.

The two-day course was certified by the National Rifle Association (NRA) and is a necessary step in order to obtain a license for carrying a concealed weapon. Each student paid $80 to participate and proceeds went to the OU Second Amendment Club. OU's student code of conduct prohibits the presence of firearms and other weapons on campus.

Schade, a graduate student studying environmental health and industrial hygiene, said that prior experience with firearms was not needed.

"The class is designed for those who have never handled a firearm and (to) bring them up to speed and educate them of the knowledge, skills and attitude that are necessary to properly operate firearms," he said.

The NRA requires every class to have 12 hours of class instruction and two on the shooting range, Zeigler said. Although the course fulfilled all NRA requirements, Zeigler, a junior studying history and vice president of the Second Amendment Club, said it was not a standard class.

"We added a bit about personal protection in and outside the home," he said. "We wanted people to get their money's worth."

Seth Beachy, a senior studying chemical engineering, took the course and plans to get his permit to carry a concealed weapon for protection as necessary.

"I wanted to learn more about the safety and operations of handling a gun, specifically a pistol," he said.

Though focusing on combat accuracy, the course stressed the importance of reading one's surroundings prior to shooting, assessing potential threats and interpreting possible aggressive behavior.

Philip Shiflett, a training counselor for the NRA trains instructors at Fort Harmar, said that the course was designed to help students learn the fundamentals of self-defense.

Shiflett said that there is an ethical responsibility to self-defense. He said no matter where someone stands on the public use of firearms, in an emergency the police come with firearms to fix the situation.

"There is an ethical contradiction in asking someone to do something that you yourself wouldn't," he said.

Ohio state law requires an individual to be 18 years old to carry a weapon openly and 21 to pursue a concealed weapon permit. Completing a certified concealed weapon course is part of that process. Before obtaining the permit, one must pass a government background check, be free of any felonies and have no existing drug-related arrests or convictions on record.

Zeigler said he sees a clear connection between obtaining a concealed weapon permit and the Bill of Rights.

"You can't act on your Second Amendment right without expressing the right to free speech," he said. "It's important to realize and recognize the amendment right to protect yourself."

U. Illinois students fight cancer, celebrate lives at Relay for Life

By Shawn Adderly
The Daily Illini (Illinois)

Various fundraisers raised more than $134,000 for cancer research this weekend during the ninth annual Relay for Life. The event was held from 7 p.m. Friday through 7 a.m. Saturday at the Armory Building indoor track. More than 1,500 people registered for the relay.

The local chapter of Colleges Against Cancer, or CAC, planned the event for over a year.

"The event is going really well so far," said Emily Russo, junior in LAS and education committee chairman for CAC, at the rally. "We have a lot of energy this year, and it's pretty non-stop."

At the opening ceremonies, members of CAC presented awards, addressed their mission to defeat cancer and heard Miss Illinois 2009 Erin O'Connor's speak about the dangers of sun tanning in relation to skin cancer. The event also featured a video presentation celebrating the life of Amit Thawaney, a junior in LAS who passed away during spring break. Thawaney was heavily involved in planning the event.

"The video presentation was amazing. It was really special and got people thinking about why we're here and why we are working so hard to raise this money," said Sara Zanghi, senior in Business and CAC chapter president.

Emily Keck, senior in AHS whose mother passed away during her freshman year, spoke about her father, who took care of her mother while she was battling cancer.

"I gave the speech for the Eternal Flame Award to my dad, which was a really special moment to me," Keck said. "My dad was the most amazing caregiver for my mom."

Keck said she joined CAC to channel her grief after the loss of her mother. Since joining, Keck has worked her way up to a leadership position, culminating in her status as co-chair of CAC's team development committee, she said. Keck added that she plans to continue her efforts in funding cancer research after graduation by working with the American Cancer Society.

"I want to live in a world where my children don't hear the words that someone has cancer," she said.

After the conclusion of the opening ceremonies, cancer survivors took the first lap around the track. Caregivers, friends and those with affected family members took the second lap and the rest of the participants joined in for the third lap.

"I feel really good, and we've been planning all year for this event. I'm excited to see it all come together," Zanghi said.

Registered Student Organizations such as the Puerto Rican Student Association displayed signs with the amount of money they raised.

"A couple of us have loved ones that have gone through cancer or who have passed away because of cancer," said Joyanet Prado, senior in LAS and the Puerto Rican Student Association's team captain, which raised $2,407.

Ryan Riordan, senior in ACES, said the rally was very important to him since he battled advanced Hodgkin's lymphoma in his senior year of high school.

"It's been great. The entertainment did a really good job keeping the crowd occupied," he said. "But the important message is come again next year and raise more money to fight cancer."

College News Network

Participants gather at the Relay for Life at the University of Illinois. Fundraisers earned more than $134,000 during the weekend festivities.

REGISTER NOW FOR SUMMER CLASSES

Services
NEWS OF THE WEEK

CAREER SERVICES
SPRING WORKSHOP SERIES

TUESDAY, APRIL 27TH AT 4PM:
The Hidden Job Search
Location: Morrill III Rm. 212

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28TH AT 4PM:
Resume Woes to Resume Wows
Location: Campus Center Rm. 904

THURSDAY, APRIL 29TH AT 4PM:
Nail the Interview, Score the Job
Location: Campus Center Rm. 165

MONDAY, MAY 3RD AT 5PM:
The Hidden Job Search
Location: Morrill III Rm. 212

TUESDAY, MAY 4TH AT 5PM:
Resume Woes to Resume Wows
Location: Campus Center Rm. 165

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5TH AT 11AM:
Nail the Interview, Score the Job
Location: Campus Center Rm. 165

WWW.UMASS.EDU/CAREERS
STOP BY GOODELL 512 NOON TO 4 PM
MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY
413-545-2224
UMassAmherst
CAREER SERVICES
STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE

I ♥ the DC
ESSAY CONTEST
& A CHANCE TO WIN
A $200 GIFT CARD

Before you hit the books for finals, tell us some of the reasons why you love ♥ the DCs in 200 words or less.

Thank you for making UMass Dining one of the best in the nation!

Enter at www.umassdining.com and complete the entry form.

Open to students at UMass/Amherst.
The deadline for entries is May 7.

First prize: $200
Second prize: $100
Third prize: $50

UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
Restaurants & Institutions
ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Unions protect bad teachers, not students

Shane Cronin

During the early 20th century, when working conditions were appalling, employers were ruthless and labor laws didn't exist in the United States, vulnerable workers formed unions to protect themselves.

Many unions, however, have outlived their usefulness. Today, they stifle innovation and bully or bribe legislators into getting their ways at enormous taxpayer cost. Teachers unions are a perfect example of this.

The teachers unions are possibly the biggest hurdle a student must overcome to receive a high school diploma. To meet every educational innovation is a union leader with a billy club. They are analogous to legalized mafia.

Across the country merit pay, school choice, policy reform and scholarships for low-income children were vigorously opposed by the unions. This keeps well-paid union higher-ups rich and low-income underperforming students poor.

Teachers usually don't have a choice on whether or not to join the unions in their districts. This is why unions hate non-unionized charter schools: especially the successful ones.

Teachers unions in Massachusetts have fought tooth and nail to keep the charter school caps low. They fought to keep Teach for America out of Boston last year despite the program's accomplishments. The union argued new educators shouldn't be hired in a recession which threatened teacher layoffs.

Ostensibly that seems fair. But, my guess is even in the best economic climate the union would reject Teach for America.

Termination is virtually non-existent among tenured teachers in the U.S. In New Jersey, about one in 20,000 teachers are fired annually. In Los Angeles, between 1995 and 2005 only 112 tenured teachers were fired. In 2003, the city graduated only half its high school seniors. Less than one percent of tenured teachers are fired each year in Dallas, Texas.

This is largely due to legal expenses firing tenured educators incurs, which can cost anywhere from $50,000 to $250,000 depending on the district. Furthermore, unions (particularly in urban districts) have diluted the teacher evaluation system making it almost impossible for a teacher to receive an "unsatisfactory" review.

Union leaders, like mafia bosses, are all about dough. Teachers shell out hundreds of dollars per year to feed the hungry union hierarchy. Union leaders earn six-figure salaries, which is exponentially more than many of the teachers they claim to represent. The fewer unionized teachers there are, the fewer dues these leaders can collect.

Essentially, tenure ensures contract-renewal for mediocre educators year after year. The ability principals have to remove these teachers from classrooms is extremely limited. Principles often cite union power for not firing teachers.

In 2007, the National Education Association contributed more than $80 million (20 percent of its budget) to largely left wing, non-education-related causes. That's $80 million that could have benefited students. But why waste money on them with a blooming money tree growing in their backyard known as the taxpayers?

The gangster-like teachers union in New Jersey, for example, has suggested Gov. Chris Christie raise the nine percent state income tax rather than agree to a one year teacher pay freeze.

Another favorite target of the unions is The No Child Left Behind Act, signed into law by President Bush in 2002. NCLB essentially mandated standardized testing in every state. It also requires every student to be proficient in math and reading by 2014. The bill has its flaws. However, it is a major step in the right direction: standardization. It fails in the sense that it gives states wide latitude in determining what "basic skills" means.

President Obama, who originally pledged to strengthen education standards, seems to have changed course. The New York Times recently reported President Obama wants to revise NCLB. His proposed revisions, however, are more in line with the union agenda than student achievement.

The President's changes include factoring "pupil attendance, graduation rates, and learning climate" into a teacher's school's level of success. In other words, the edited version of NCLB will require less measurable accountability.

What happens to mediocre or outright incompetent employees in the private sector? They aren't awarded raises. They are fired because it would be bad business practice to keep them on the payroll. It is just as bad for students when mediocre teachers are kept on the payroll.

In addition, unions largely oppose merit pay also known as extra pay for teachers who produce high-achieving students. The Florida legislature passed a bill that would have enacted merit pay statewide. Gov. Charlie Crist caved to union pressure, however, and vetoed the legislation earlier this month.

Teachers are America's human capital. The role they play is critical in educating our youth so they can become analytical, high-functioning, hard-working members of an increasingly high-tech economy. Many teachers are overworked and underpaid. Starting salaries for new teachers deter many qualified applicants – especially in the math and science fields.

The private sector compensates math and science majors much more generously than a career in public education does. Unions, with near unilateral authority over policy, can change this. But they won't if politicians continue to give in to their self-serving, anti-innovation agenda.

Shane Cronin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at scronin@student.umass.edu

The teachers unions are possibly the biggest hurdle a student must overcome to receive a high school diploma. To meet every educational innovation is a union leader with a billy club.

Get crazy, write ed/op

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Sometimes, Europe sucks

Nick O'Malley

It's dirty, this study abroad thing.

Not in an unhygienic way. Well, except for when you're stuck somewhere without a shower. Then, yes, that's actually dirty.

It's dirty in the way that it's not clean. It's unfamiliar, a little scary and you're inevitably going to fall in the mud, sometimes literally, in the Ardlwee Caves, where it's really cold and drafty. Ahem.

Normally, this would be the column where I get all the "this experience changed my life" crap out of my system and look stupid doing it. And to be honest, I thought that I'd be writing it.

This past semester wasn't a life-changer. Save for a new appreciation for how much stuff costs and a wicked sweet shot glass collection, not a whole lot comes out as a permanent change. Before coming to Europe, my life was alright. Coming to Europe, though, provided an opportunity for me to do stuff in my life.

At this point, the question is raised of whether or not studying abroad was a good decision. In college, a semester is an eternity, so it's a fair question.

I have to apologize to my editors that get this. It's 7:30 a.m. in Florence and I haven't slept, for lack of an exact time – a while. I'd planned on crashing for a couple hours after my late flight from Dublin to Pisa landed. Unfortunately, the airport closes at 1 a.m. No problem, I would just take a train into town and figure out something there. No train. So, with minor directions, I decided to walk from the airport to the train station to get a landmark, to the Leaning Tower of Pisa – I pretty much had to – and then back to the train station for my 4:15 a.m. train to Florence.

So, after waiting for my hostel to open and finding myself some internet, I find myself here, about as dirty, tired and grumpy as I'll get over here and there's only one thing on my mind: This is awesome.

Why? I have no clue.

By coming over here, I messed up my graduation plan somewhat. Finding housing for next semester has been a nightmare. I have no idea what's going on for my thesis. By not being in the U.S., I definitely hurt some job opportunities. I won't be there to see my senior friends graduate. On a lot of levels, just not being there sucks.

One of my roommate's friends asked me: "Why would you come all the way over here for a semester? No offense."

None taken. In fact, I don't really think I'd asked that question. Instead, I'd been asking "why not?" The best answer I could give him was: The Experience.

Now, he was drunk and I could've told him anything and he would've taken it. But what is the experience?

It's not like in the movies where you go to The Pubs, meet some crazy guy at the first place you go and have tremendous misadventures for the night. No, bars in Europe are just like bars in the United States. There are sketchy dudes preying on the girls who look like they rolled around in a bathtub of glitter before they went out.

That's right Europe, in my last column I'm throwing haymakers. That's the American way, which, according to my French friend Lucie, means everyone owns a gun. Side note: She really likes cheese and wine. Ha.

No one tells you have much spare time when you go abroad. The television is just awful and the classes, at least at my school, have no homework and usually only meet once or twice a week.

Remember cars? Yeah, I haven't been in one since New Year's Eve, even with all my travelling and my school being a 25-minute walk away.

I miss knowing that stores are open past 5 p.m. Just once I'd like to know that there aren't cameras following my every move on the street. You never appreciate $1 beers and double cheeseburgers until you lose them. They don't have Mountain Dew here. Traffic here is asinine and terrifying. You know what? A lot of Europe smells bad. Hey, there was a freaking volcanic ash cloud that punched most of my travel plans in the face.

There are a thousand things that went bad. And there are a hundred reasons I shouldn't have studied abroad. So, if you were to ask me if this was a good decision, there's only one answer: absolutely, airport floors, volcanoes, crappy TV and all.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. If you have any questions about studying abroad, or anything else, he can be contacted at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

At this point, the question is raised of whether or not studying abroad was a good decision. In college, a semester is an eternity, so it's a fair question.

Clueless Sox

Alex Perry

"Why are you a Yankees fan?"

This question is probably the most annoying thing that I encounter on a daily basis in Massachusetts. It is far more annoying than being surrounded by liberal loons at all times.

I am a Yankee fan despite the fact that I was born in Boston and I have lived in Massachusetts my entire life.

So why is it that I like the Yankees? I think the primary reason is I just can't see myself ever being associated with the minority group that calls itself Red Sox nation.

Why is this? For me it started early on in life. My dad, who supports all Boston teams, raised me to be a Red Sox fan. He bought me the gear. He took me to games. I remember the moment when I put an end to wearing a "B" on my hat though. It was in elementary school on the playground when kids were trying to tell me the Yankees "suck."

I thought to myself, the Yankees "suck?" Didn't they just win the World Series again this year?

It didn't make any sense. It still doesn't. How do the Yankees "suck?" Derek Jeter plays for the Yankees. They have won 27 World Series titles. That's more championships than any professional sports franchise on the planet. They have won the American League 40 times.

The Yankees are a well run, classy organization with a tradition of winning. The franchise embodies nearly everything except "sucking."

I refuse to associate myself with people this moronic – ending my tenure as a Red Sox fan. I have been a die hard Yankees fan ever since and haven't regretted it for a second. Just look at modern day Red Sox fans.

Red Sox nation consists of the most arrogant, jealous, moronic, fickle and wrongly directed passionate fans in all of sports. Yet, they feel as though they are by far the best fans in all of sports.

I just don't get it.

Sox fans chanting "Yankees suck" when they are losing to them in a blowout? Sometimes I wonder if these self-proclaimed "educated fans" can even read the scoreboard.

It isn't just about the "Yankees suck" thing though. I'd be giving Sox fans way too much credit if that was the only thing I called them out for.

Red Sox fans have this perception that they are the most loyal fans in the world yet history and modern times show that's entirely not true. They turn on their players faster than the weather changes around here. When Ted Williams – regarded as the best Red Sox hitter of all-time – hit a home run in his last career at-bat at Fenway, he wouldn't even acknowledge the fans because he despised them so much. A handful of years ago, fans considered David Ortiz to be the biggest sports hero in Boston's history and now he is booed after striking out during meaningless at-bats in April.

Sometimes I wonder if these self-proclaimed "educated fans" can even read the scoreboard.

How can the fans consider themselves loyal when their best players end their careers so fed up with the fans they don't want to respond to them or in the case of Ortiz, they are simply booed out of town?

The Red Sox are barely a baseball franchise at this point. Their team is simply in existence to make money for their owners. That, and to let frat kids bring their girlfriends to Fenway in pink hats and tee shirts so they can sing "Sweet Caroline" in the seventh inning.

Yeah, Red Sox nation is really dedicated. This is the most embarrassing fan base I have ever seen.

The team's owners market the Red Sox better than any other team in the majors. I will give them that. They are also the most manipulative ownership group in the majors.

According to Forbes, the Red Sox earned the second highest profit in the major leagues last year. That is profit, not revenue. Yet, the ownership consistently let prized free agents go simply stating money as the reason. They earned $40 million in profit last year but they can't re-sign Jason Bay? They let Alex Rodriguez get away over a couple million?

If the ownership cared about their fans as much as they claim to, they wouldn't be exploiting their fans by profiting from them as much as they do. They have the highest ticket prices in baseball and there is no reason for it. It is not so the ownership can break even or compete with the Yankees. Like I said, they profited more than all but one franchise last year.

Why do I think the ownership is manipulative? Because I have seen what they are capable of doing to their fans. The ownership says "jump" and the fans say "how high?" When I was growing up, all I would hear about was how much better Nomar Garciaparra was than Derek Jeter. It was non-stop.

Yet, in 2003, this new ownership convinced fans that their best and most loved player for the past decade wasn't a team player because he wasn't on the top step of the dugout during a regular season game.

He had to go.

They got Boston fans to turn on Garciaparra and they didn't even have a replacement for him. The shortstop position has been a revolving door since the Red Sox traded him.

Although that's the most obvious example of how easily they can control the mindset of the fan base, examples occur yearly. They are constantly told the Yankees buy championships when, up until last year, the two highest payrolls to ever win a World Series were both the Red Sox.

This year they have convinced Red Sox nation to not worry about letting Bay go because they are investing in undervalued players and pitching and defense.

Let me know how that goes.

Why am I a Yankees fan? It is because I know first-hand what Red Sox fans are and what they represent. I am just way too smart to be a Red Sox fan.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Roots Crew rocks at Amherst College

By Daniel Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

In front of a sold-out crowd at Amherst College on Saturday, The Legendary Roots Crew performed deftly, impeccably blending in styles from their own collection and influential hits of the past.

The Roots were anything but square, but you couldn't say that about the audience. Towards the end of the headlining set, a confused crowd didn't know whether to cheer the act back on stage for an encore or berate them for not continuing to entertain.

Upon arriving at the Lefrak Gymnasium, the entry process and overall aesthetics gave the feel of a junior high school social, without the parent and teacher chaperones. Ticket-holders were asked to separate into gender-specific lines as a slew of volunteers applied wristbands to non-Amherst College students and ushered them into the open hall. The surrounding bleachers folded against the walls and colorful banners raised atop the building's high vaulted ceilings gave way to recollections of pep rallies and raucous volleyball matches.

The airy auditorium made for a comfortable atmosphere where peach-fuzzed pals and petites could congregate. When the bright gym auditorium cut to darkness and back-lighting cut red onto the stage, the sparse crowd moved in closer, preparing themselves for the opening act Jason Derulo.

Two men fashioning neon-flashing strobe lighted gas masks bopped frenetically across the stage as the young R&B artist pop n' locked his way to the microphone stand. The three men performed a well-choreographed routine, Derulo pausing at points to belt out the lines to his latest hit singles. But, the fledgling performer may have wanted to stick to dancing as his singing was about as robotic as his maneuvering.

Aside from select circles of giddy girls and a couple of ambitious crowd-surfers, listeners remained unmoved with their hands on their hips and arms by their side. The Chris Brown look-a-like rang out a generic performance of his #1 singles "What'cha Say" and "Sky is the Limit", addressing the crowd at times about his unfulfilling love life in hopes that the audience would be able to relate.

In an unoriginal move, the singer picked an unsuspecting girl from the front row to be serenaded by an inauthentic love ballad. The girl became terribly flattered as he creepily gripped the microphone inches from her face and groped her with a gratuitous groin movement simulating some sort of gaudy mating ritual.

Derulo seemed to lose pieces to his wardrobe throughout the performance, eventually wearing just a tank-top, until he tore off the sweaty garment and tossed it into the unfortunate audience. His final song "Love Hangover" sobered the crowd, making them wish that they had consumed more alcohol before arriving. The listless audience remained generally unimpressed by the pop-artist until he relived everyone by leaving the stage.

The eclectic live performance of The Legendary Roots Crew did not disappoint as they energetically enacted lengthy jam sessions during some of their most popular hits while cleverly incorporating classic funk, blues and rock hits of the past. The excitable members of the full band paraded around stage giving off a jovial vibe that eventually enlivened an otherwise stiff audience.

With a steadfast rhythm and an unfaltering flow, the veteran emcee Black Thought led The Fifth Dynasty through an array of music styles. The mic grabber meshed hip-hop one-liners and hot-footed James Brown shouts into the already entertaining ensemble. The sounds lent crowd members to snap their fingers like swingers, relax as if in a speak easy and stomp their feet emphatically.

The band's front-man controlled the microphone for a long-enduring opening flow that cut into the classic Sugarhill Gang tune "Apache" and James Brown's "Can I Get Some Help" before peaking into the group's new single "How I Got Over."

At various points, the musicians became static mid-song, as if in mockery to the stiff-legged crowd, unfreezing themselves to the same positions that they left off. They seemed to be wound up like a plastic kid toy, letting loose wily solos and parading about animatedly.

A jazzy "Mellow My Man" sunk into a dimly-lit drum solo during which drummer "uestlove and percussionist F. Knuckles took turns matching each other skillfully.

The highlight of the set was a 20-minute long version of the hit "You Got Me." The group skillfully slipped in and out of the song, intertwining soulful melodies and improvisational prowess.

Electric guitarist Kirk Douglas shone during this section as he skatted masterfully in unison with his own funky guitar licks and led the band in shortened covers of Donna Summers's "I Love To Love You Baby" and Guns N' Roses' "Sweet Child of Mine." The crowd perked up and the band slowed down to a bluesy number, heading back into the main song with a staccato symbol leading into a bass solo by Owen Biddle. The song finished with an abbreviated version of Led Zeppelin's "Immigrant Song."

The group carried on with its classic song covering with Kool & The Gang's "Jungle Boogie" before they left the stage to an odd response. Typically, when an act leaves stage, the crowd responds with an encouraging response, hopeful that the artists will return due to their insatiable attitude. In this case, the audience seemed utterly confused, requiring a flashing set of white flood lights to stimulate them to cheer for an encore performance.

Regardless of the questionable crowd conduct, The Roots obliged, perhaps saving their best song for last. The band took stage once again, to the tune of the fan-favorite "The Seed 2.0" and transitioning into the Curtis Mayfield funk jam "Move On Up," leaving listeners in a vibrant mood.

"Who can top that shit," Black Thought asked rhetorically, answering his own question by saying "ain't nobody." Fittingly, the group left on that note; after all, very few performers, let alone hip-hop artists, could match the versatility and showmanship that they exuded.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

The Roots performs in Washington D.C. on April 25, only one day after the legendary group's appearance at Amherst College's spring concert over the weekend. The concert also featured artist Jason Derulo.

Dir. Vaughn's 'Kick-Ass' takes names

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

"With no power comes no responsibility," muses Dave Lizewski, pondering a decision to risk his life to play super-hero, "...except that isn't true." This is the central theme in Matthew Vaughn's new film, Kick-Ass.

Adapted from the comic book of the same title, "Kick-Ass" is the story of a young man who, fed up with the indifference and apathy that the citizens of his city show towards the crime that runs rampant, decides to create a costumed alter-ego and bring some vigilante justice to the streets of New York. There is one problem, however: the newly-minted super hero Kick-Ass has no powers. He has no radioactive blood, no training, no special equipment and no clue about the realities of the criminal underworld.

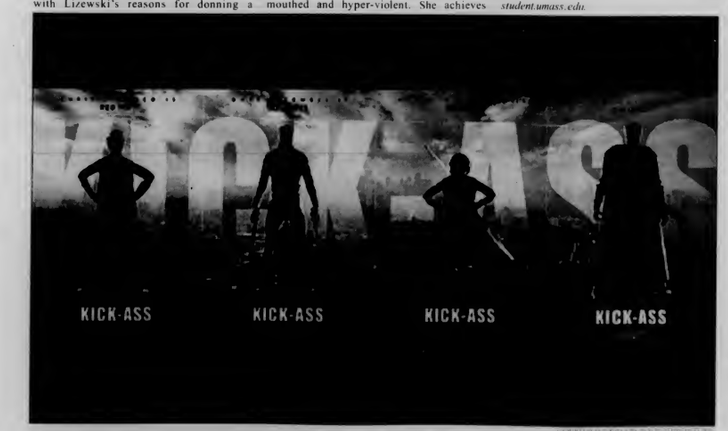
The film starts off as an overt play on Spider-Man. Lizewski, played by Aaron Johnson, is a hopeless high-school student who lives in the city, is raised by a single parent and can't get a girl to save his life. The obligatory girl-of-his-dreams is present as well, in the form of the beautiful but unattainable Katie Deauxma played by Lyndsey Fonesca. This well-worn formula isn't exactly overhauled, but it is given a new twist by the hapless protagonist.

The story's main difference from the classic super-hero tales it references lies with Lizewski's reasons for donning a mask. He isn't bitten by a spider and no one he loves is murdered before his eyes. Lizewski simply comes to the decision that someone needs to stand up to street crime and make themselves known.

In his first public battle with thugs, Kick-Ass gets asked by an incredulous gangbanger "what the f*ck is wrong with you, man? You rather die for some piece of sh*t that you don't even f*cking know?" He responds passionately, crouching over the bystander he is trying to defend, saying "Three assholes, laying it in one guy while everyone else watches? And you wanna know what's wrong with me? Yeah, I'd rather die...so bring it on!"

The film's story succeeds in bringing the concept of vigilante justice into the real world. Without any powers or abilities, Kick-Ass has the sense beaten out of him on more than one occasion, and as would likely happen in today's world the masked crime fighter becomes an instant internet phenomenon.

Kick-Ass is joined in the film by a cadre of other masked avengers. Nicholas Cage provides the film's only A-list star power in the role of Big Daddy, a no-nonsense crime fighter with a vendetta against the mafia. Big Daddy is joined by the story's most interesting and controversial character, the twelve-year-old Hit Girl.



Hit Girl, played by Chloe Mortez, is foul-mouthed and hyper-violent. She achieves easily the highest body count and provides nearly all of the comic book one-liners. While this odd combination of sweet little girl and ruthless killer can be unnerving at times, it works well within the story and provides a comedic foil for the less deadly titular hero.

While "Kick-Ass" is a funny movie that provides a solid amount of laughs, it also has an abundant amount of violence. The film gets serious as the action between killers, heroes, mobsters and wanna-bes heats up, and "Kick-Ass" earns its R rating. With his use of stylized fights scenes director Vaughn brings to mind echoes of Quentin Tarantino, using "Kill Bill"-esque amounts of violence without the gratuitous gore.

The one real criticism of "Kick-Ass" is that the tone of the film jumps around fairly often. It swings from teen comedy to hardcore superhero action flick on a regular basis. However this is a minor issue, and does not seriously interrupt the flow of the film.

"Kick-Ass" is an extremely entertaining film. The comedy is solidly funny, the violence is action-packed, and it keeps the viewer entertained from its opening scene to its closing credits. It is certainly not your average family-friendly Marvel adaptation, but it is one of the best films to see at the theaters this season.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheridan@student.umass.edu.

The classic comic book "Kick-Ass" is now in theaters, featuring Nicholas Cage. The film, directed by Michael Vaughn, combines comedic lines with violence as a group of teens attempt to become crime-fighting vigilantes.

April has been deemed as United States Grilled Cheese Month, so honor the classic sandwich with a fun twist.

Grilled cheese gets hotter through April

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Spring semester is coming to an end, and for many, that means two things: One, finals week is coming at you like a freight train, and two, you have already spent your entire food budget for the semester on beer. How can one find the time and the money to study on a full stomach during these stressful times?

Fret not, hungry student, because April happens to be the official U.S. Grilled Cheese Month. While not as widely publicized as breast cancer awareness or Black History, the staple sandwich of the broke and lazy has its own month, and it is about time that it got the recognition it deserves.

This month, restaurants from New York to Los Angeles are adding original grilled cheeses to their menus, pushing the boundaries of the simple dish. Food magazines, Web sites and blogs across the country are featuring creative recipes, and cheese makers are hopping on the band wagon to garner publicity for this American classic.

Tillamook Cheeses of California, for example, recently hosted the eighth-annual Grilled Cheese Invitational. At this one-of-a-kind competition, professional and amateur chefs compete in several different categories of "sammich" creation.

First of all, it is important to define what a grilled cheese is. While most people are familiar with the basic combination of Kraft American Singles, white bread and frying pan, many other varieties fall into the category. Different breads, fillers, herbs, oils and add-ons have become popular in the United States in recent years. Put at what point does grilled cheese simply become a hot sandwich that happens to have some queso in it? While some purists may maintain that anything with meats or veggies is no longer grilled cheese, for our purposes, we will define the sandwich as anything with two slices of bread, featuring cheese as the main ingredient, which is then carefully toasted to gooey perfection.

See GRILLED CHEESE on page 6

April showers bring savory sandwiches

GRILLED CHEESE from page 5

The beauty of the sandwich is its modular simplicity. Only four things are needed for a truly good grilled cheese: bread, cheese, butter and a skillet. Those who opt for the toaster oven to expedite the process miss out on the wonderful quality of buttered bread in a frying pan, a singular experience that cannot be recreated with dry heat.

While American singles are the standby filler, virtually any cheese can be used to stuff a sandwich. To cut down on cooking time and simplify the melting of sharper cheeses, try putting cheese on both pieces of bread individually and frying them breadside down before assembling the finished product.

Other ingredients can, as previously stated, be added to beef up the basic formula. The good news is that a souped-up sammich can be made with ingredients found in even the barest of pantries. Bacon and turkey are popular ingredients. Add some ham, for example, and you'll have yourself the classic French croque-monsieur. Think outside the box — any leftover lunchmeat that happens to inhabit the fridge can also be used. For those who bother to stock their apartments with veggies, tomatoes are an all-time favorite, and onions and mushrooms can be easily sauteed and added in.

The key is to be creative. The grilled cheese sandwich is a template, a basic model to be played around with, and an easy receptacle for getting rid of everything in your refrigerator. Embrace it.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheridan@student.umass.edu

Report says 75 percent of Americans not physically fit to serve in military

By Rick Montgomery
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Chalk up another national-security threat — this one looming with each excess pound, failing grade and drug bust affecting young adults.

An alarming 75 percent of Americans ages 17 to 24 would not qualify for military service today because they are physically unfit, failed to finish high school or have criminal records, according to a new report from an organization of education and military leaders calling for immediate action on the early-education front.

While some experts voiced doubt that obesity and other societal ills would keep three out of four young adults out of the ranks, the report titled "Ready, Willing and Unable to Serve" was endorsed by U.S. Education Secretary Arne Duncan, former NATO commander Gen. Wesley Clark and top retired admirals and generals.

"The armed services are meeting recruitment targets in 2009, but those of us who have served in command roles are worried about the trends we see," retired Rear Adm. James Barnett said. "Our national security in the year 2030 is absolutely dependent on what's going on in kindergarten today."

Military recruiters in Kansas City report turning away prospective recruits "in every office, every hour, every day" for reasons including girths too large and credit ratings too low.

Increasingly, applicants are disqualified for having asthma or for taking pills for depression or attention disorders. Nearly one-third of all young adults have health issues other than weight that could keep them from serving, according to the report of the group Mission: Readiness.

If you're the single parent of a dependent child without a support network, you're out. If you're carrying too much debt, you're out. The military doesn't want recruits who will be hounded by creditors and lawsuits.

Some applicants without a high-school diploma can get a waiver to serve if they earn a GED or score high on the military's entrance exam. But such waivers are granted to fewer than two percent of applicants.

"What we allow waivers for, and for whom, is like an opening and closing gate depending on our needs. We can adjust our policies if we have to," said Douglas Smith of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

As a slumping economy increases interest in military service, more people with obvious deficiencies are contacting recruiters.

"We're no longer so much saying, 'Try back in 60, 90 days and see if you can qualify,'" Smith said. "It's more like 'We're sorry ... and don't come back.'"

Even after signing up, seven to 15 percent of enlistees return home for not meeting all that basic training demands.

"It's not that the military is hard to get into," said Darin Eash, a Navy Chief hull technician at Kansas City's Military Entrance Processing Station in Missouri.

"It just all comes down to the individual," such as one potential recruit, an honor student, who failed a morning aptitude test apparently because he'd had little sleep — a trend Eash has noticed among young adults that he said might hurt their ability to perform.

The applicant completed the test for a second time and aced it.

Then there was the overweight cook from Joplin, Mo., who in his months-long quest to slim down showed up every week at the recruiting station to step on the scale.

"I transferred out before I could see if he ever made it," Eash said.

Obesity alone disqualifies 27 percent of all young Americans from serving. About one in four in the 17-to-24 age group lacks a high school diploma.

Delaware, Florida, Georgia and Texas posted unusually high rates of obesity, juvenile crime and dropout rates.

"To say 75 percent of an entire age group would be ineligible to serve, that sounds too high," said John Pike of the defense think tank GlobalSecurity.org, echoing the initial reaction of other military watchers and some recruiters in Kansas City. "But it wouldn't be off the mark in some communities," including low-income areas historically attracted to career and education opportunities offered by joining the volunteer fighting forces.

"When looking for officer candidates, they're trying to recruit the high-school quarterback, not the slacker under the bleachers smoking a cigarette," Pike said. "Someone who dropped out of school and got supersized? You have a hard time seeing a soldier there."

Just to bring one airman into the military, Air Force recruiters report having to make contact with 110 people who show an interest in joining. Still, the Air Force has met monthly recruiting goals for 10 years running.

"With the shift in the economy, we're seeing a shift in the number of people trying to get in and a higher level of those who disqualify," said Christa L. D'Andrea, public affairs chief for the Air Force Recruiting Service.

For the high schoolers at Wentworth Military Academy in Lexington, Mo., some of whom were low achievers in previous schools, daily physical activity is required after classes end.

"At 4 o'clock, you can't be playing Xbox 360," said principal Bob Levy.

The average ACT score at Wentworth last school year was 26, almost five points higher than the national average for college-bound students.

Mission: Readiness organizers, including Education Secretary Duncan, are pressing Congress to approve the Early Learning Challenge Fund, which would provide $1 billion annually in grants to states for 10 years to improve childhood development programs.

"The sophistication of our military is increasing every year so we will soon need even better-qualified recruits," said retired Gen. Hugh Shelton, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. "We need to ensure all young Americans get the right start in life."

Mix up your morning and take a breakfast break on us!
UMass Amherst students, staff, faculty, alumni, and friends are welcome!
MARK YOUR CALENDAR!
Morning Mixer in Memorial Hall
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 2010
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Start your day off right with complimentary bagels, fruit, coffee and assorted juices.
Receive a FREE 5-minute chair massage.
And...
Enter the drawing for a FREE UMass Amherst duffle bag of goodies!
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association, Bruegger's Bagels of Amherst, and Pierce Bros Coffee.
UMassAlumni.com • You were. You are. UMASS.

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Write for Arts&Living!
Interested? Let us know...
arts@dailycollegian.com

The Center for Student Development
Cordially Invites You to Attend The 4th Annual Student Life Awards Ceremony
"The Sammies"
Tuesday, April 27, 2010
7:00pm • Campus Center Auditorium
— Reception Following Ceremony —
Hosted by Dennis Haskins,
"Mr. Belding" of the TV show Saved By The Bell
—Semi Formal Attire—

Six Hawkeyes drafted, Bulaga to Green Bay

The Daily Iowan (Iowa)
via College News Network

In just one weekend, the Hawkeyes broke a 16-year-old record.

Starting with Bryan Bulaga's NFL draft to Green Bay in the first round and continuing with five other successful former Hawkeye picks, the number of athletes chosen in this year's event is the most Iowa has produced since the process was reduced to seven rounds in 1994.

Even the two undrafted Hawkeyes still have prospects — Dace Richardson will try out with the New York Giants this week, and wide receiver Trey Stross signed a free-agent contract with Houston.

Late in the second round on April 23, Pat Angerer was the second Hawkeye chosen, as Indianapolis made him the 63rd overall pick. Angerer became the third Hawkeye drafted by Indianapolis in the Kirk Ferentz era, joining former players Dallas Clark and Bob Sanders.

During a press conference with Indianapolis media, Colt general manager Bill Polian was excited after drafting the Bettendorf native, comparing him with another Colt linebacker, Gary Brackett.

"Hopefully, he can come in and play a major role for us from Day One," Polian said. "This is a player that is definitely going to help our football team, no question about it. He was the right guy on the board at that time. We often say let the board talk to us, and it did loudly and clearly."

Three picks later, Detroit nabbed cornerback Amari Spievey in the third round. The Lions used the same selection on Spievey — 66th overall — that St. Louis used on cornerback Bradley Fletcher last year.

During a conference call with Detroit media, Spievey, who decided to forego his senior season at Iowa, described feeling "shocked" when he got the call from the Lions.

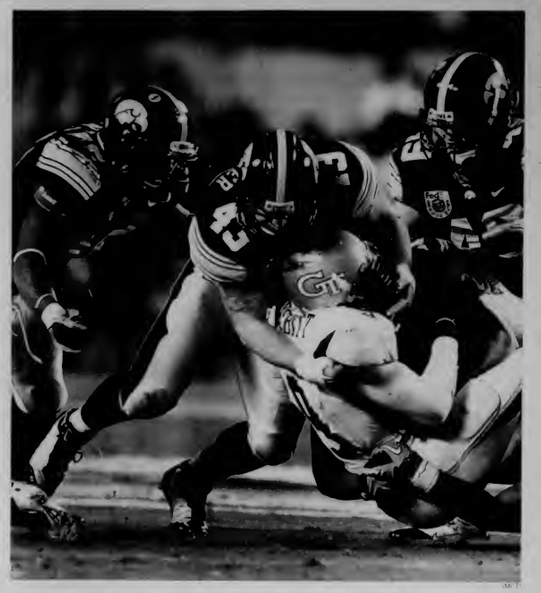
"They told me, 'Congratulations,' " he said. "They were thrilled to have me, and the reason they didn't communicate with me or anything was because they didn't want other teams to know that they were interested in me."

Near the end of the third round, tight end Tony Moeaki found a home with Kansas City after the Chiefs took the 93rd pick. Moeaki follows in a lineage of tight ends drafted since Ferentz took over Iowa in 1999 featuring Clark, Scott Chandler and Brandon Myers.

Chief General Manager Scott Pioli noted Moeaki's performance in the 2010 FedEx Orange Bowl against Georgia Tech as a factor that compelled him to move up and take the 6-4 tight end.

"We like his leadership. We like his toughness," Pioli told Kansas City media during a press conference on April 23. "He's been a leader on their team. He's been very productive when he has been on the field. There's a lot of things to like about Tony."

On the draft's final day, two more Iowa players found teams. Miami traded up seven spots to the 119th overall pick in the fourth round to draft linebacker A.J. Edds, a three-year starter for the Hawkeyes as an outside linebacker.



With the Dolphins running a 3-4 defense, Edds said he'll likely be asked to move inside.

"I'm excited, because they play a tough, physical style of defense," he said. "I'm really excited and real enthused about the opportunity, and look forward to getting after it."

Three rounds later, Buffalo used the 216th overall choice on offensive tackle Kyle Calloway. The 6-7 Calloway became the 10th offensive lineman to be drafted under Ferentz at Iowa and the first Hawkeye to be chosen by the Bills since Ben Sobieski in 2003.

Calloway said he feels what he learned from Ferentz will translate into success.

"I'm real confident in my technique," Calloway told Buffalo reporters during a conference call on April 24. "I mean, obviously, there are things I need to sharpen up, especially moving off to this next level, but I am confident."

Pat Angerer, No. 43, tackles a Georgia Tech player in a game last season. Angerer was one of six Hawkeyes to be selected in the NFL draft, and will join the Indianapolis Colts.

The Daily Collegian asks,
"Are you a
SPORTS FAN?"
THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3 and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
Sugarloaf Estates Apartment Homes
28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
Aspen Chase & Alpine Commons
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
FREE
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet
Electricity in Selected Units
In the Bus Route, Pet Friendly, Fitness Center, Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

Get the Most
CASH FOR BOOKS
Buyback Hours
Textbook Annex
Monday – Friday
April 26 – 30
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Saturday, May 8
11:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Campus Center Concourse
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m.
Southwest/Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
10:00 a.m. – 1:00 p.m.
Find us on Facebook
facebook.com/UMassUniversityStore
UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
Powered by efollett.com

IMPORTANT NOTICE
REGARDING YOUR STUDENT REFUND
THE STUDENT REFUND PROCESS IS CHANGING!
The Bursar's Office is Going Green Again! Beginning in MAY 2010, student refunds will ONLY be automatically distributed to students who are enrolled in the University's Excess Express (direct deposit) service. This is the final phase of our office's paper-less processing initiative to provide faster service, sustainable business practices, and elimination of long lines at the office!
Students who are eligible for a refund (i.e., have a credit balance on their student account that is refundable) will automatically receive a student refund ONLY if they have signed up for Excess Express (direct deposit). Students who do not have an active Excess Express enrollment will have their balances remain as a credit toward subsequent charges.
Students who need a paper check will need to complete a request form for each refund available on their account. This form and accompanying instructions will be available on the Bursar's website.
Sign up today for Excess Express through your SPIRE access to expedite your future student refunds. More information on Excess Express can be found on the Bursar's website at www.umass.edu/bursar/.

Illinois reciever's wait pays off, picked by Bucs

Benn receives chance in NFL, fellow Illini guard picked by KC

The Daily Illini (Illinois)
via College News Network

As Arrelious Benn watched the first round of the NFL Draft in his Washington, D.C., home Thursday evening, surrounded by friends and family, he watched his chance of being taken on the opening day shrink.

The former Illini receiver was expected by some mock drafts to be the second receiver taken, behind Oklahoma State's Dez Bryant, but no receivers were taken in the first 21 picks.

When Thursday's portion of the draft was complete, Benn was left to wonder when he would be taken.

"I wasn't disappointed. I was a little bit shocked by what guys got selected, but they're all good guys," he said.

"I believe I'm a first-round guy and I'll play like that, with that chip on my shoulder."

Finally, during Friday's second round, Benn received a call from the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

He was taken with the 39th overall pick to catch passes from the Bucs' second-year quarterback, Josh Freeman.

Benn built a close relationship with quarterback Juice Williams at Illinois and is ready to do the same with Freeman.

"I'm going to get down there as soon as possible and get that connection with him," Benn said. "I'll get on the phone as soon as I'm done with (his media teleconference) and talk to him and introduce myself to him and let him know I'll do anything and everything he wants me to do."

While Benn received his call to join an NFL franchise, former Illini guard Jon Asamoah waited nervously in his Park Forest home.

Rated one of the top offensive guards in the draft, Asamoah saw guards Mike Iupati, Zane Beadles and Vladimir Ducasse taken in the first two rounds.

Still, he waited.

"I was just waiting for that moment," Asamoah said. "I saw my good friend Zane, I said, 'My time has got to be coming, my time has got to be coming.' It was just relief when my phone finally did ring."

That call came from Kansas City head coach Todd Haley, who told him he'd be taken with the 68th overall pick.

Asamoah will join an offensive line that is aging and he will have a chance to play immediately.

Still, it was another aspect of Kansas City that excited some of his friends.

"The first thing one of my good friends said was, 'I can't wait to go visit you and eat barbecue,'" he said. "Half of them, that's what they ended up talking about after I got off the phone with them. They were just talking about barbecue so I'm just excited to see."

Illinois redshirt freshman quarterback Nathan Scheelhaase, a native of Kansas City, said he got about 15 text messages Friday asking about Asamoah.

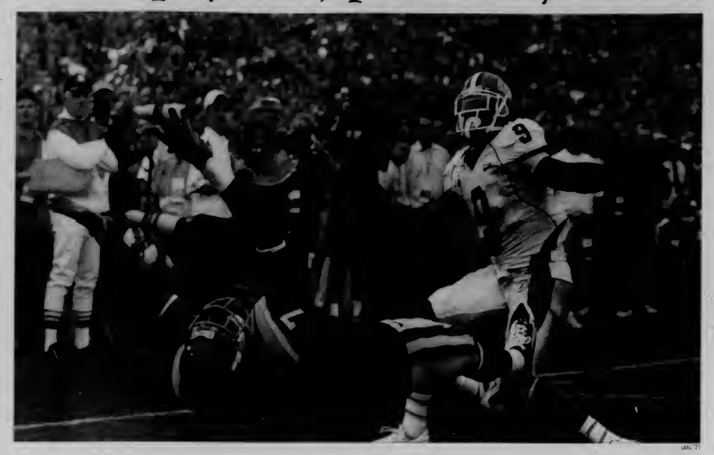
"I said, 'You're gonna love him. I promise. He's a great guy,'" Scheelhaase said.

"All I got to tell him is, good barbecue, he's going to find that out in his first week."

Former Illini tight end Michael Hoomanawanui was also picked, with the first pick of the fifth round by St. Louis.

Hoomanawanui was expecting to go to either the Rams or the Falcons and, unlike Benn and Asamoah, was notified beforehand.

"My agent just said, relax, get ready, it's coming," he said.



"I had a great workout with (the Rams), one on one."

Though their days at Illinois ended on a sour note, each player rode his college career to an NFL career.

While some think Benn could have gone higher at a different school, where he may have seen the ball more, he wouldn't say he regretted wearing Orange and Blue.

"What happened at Illinois happened at Illinois. I'm around new people. People who are going to put me on the next level as far as doing all the things I need. I've got the right guys around me now, and I just need to be ready to go," Benn said.

"I may do it over differently, but I'm glad, I'm excited that I went to Illinois."

Arrelious Benn is just one of several collegiate players to be drafted in the NFL. Benn was picked 39th byTampa Bay, and will join an aging offensive set. Jon Asamoah was selected 68th by Kansas City later on in the second round.

Young Wildcat roster held off No. 6 UCLA in series finale

Arizona Daily Wildcat (Arizona State)
via College News Network

One out was all the No. 17 Arizona baseball team needed to knock off No. 6 UCLA Friday night and grab hold of the momentum for the remaining two games of the series.

But with a 2-1 lead and two outs in the bottom of ninth, Arizona (28-11, 8-7 Pacific 10 Conference) freshman third baseman Seth Mejias-Brean was handcuffed by a hard-hit chopper to third, allowing the Bruins (29-7, 7-5) to tie the game and ultimately win 6-3 in the 10th inning.

UCLA's comeback took the air out of a young Arizona team, and the Bruins went on to take two of three games from the Wildcats at Sancet Stadium.

"Really if you look at one play Friday night we roll out of this thing winning two out of three," said head coach Andy Lopez after a 6-4 Arizona victory in Game 3. "We're one ground ball away from winning three out of four against the No. 1 and No. 6 teams in the nation."

Arizona Friday-night starter Kurt Heyer went pitch for pitch with Bruins ace and former Yankees first-round draft pick Gerrit Cole, and the Wildcats grabbed hold of the lead in the bottom of the seventh inning in Game 1.

Cole struck out 10 through eight innings and touched 99 mph on the radar gun, but Heyer was equally as impressive through six innings.

one run off of five hits and eight punch-outs — and Arizona appeared to be on its way to stunning one of the nation's top arms.

"Overall I thought I did my job," Heyer said after Game 1. "It was an intense game. We battled back in the eighth and we had it."

Sophomore lefty Bryce Bandilla relieved Heyer in the seventh and carried Arizona into the ninth as he yielded only one hit through 2 1/3 scoreless innings.

Lopez turned to closer Nick Cunningham to seal the deal. The freshman right-hander allowed a single but picked up the second out by inducing a grounder to Mejias-Brean.

With a runner on second and two outs, UCLA's Dean Espy sent a chopper down the third base line, and this time Mejias-Brean couldn't make the play, allowing the tying run to score.

"When (the ground ball) was hit I was charting it as five-three and then someone said it just kind of beat him up," Lopez said. "Tough night for him."

The Bruins went on to beat up UA relievers Augey Bill and Joe Allison in the top of the 10th and stole one from the Wildcats.

"I have some friends on UCLA and they know they should've been 0-1 going into Saturday and 1-1 going into today," sophomore right fielder Steve Selsky said after Game 3. "They got pretty lucky in that last inning. I feel like we played better than them."

The Bruins carried the momentum from Friday into Saturday's game when UCLA starter Trevor Bauer stole the show. Bauer went the distance, holding the Wildcats to only two runs off of 10 hits, while fanning 13.

UCLA got to UA starter Kyle Simon six runs in five innings and the Wildcat bats failed to capitalize on some early opportunities, resulting in a 6-2 UCLA win.

The Pac-10 Conference's top hitting team collided with one of the nation's best pitching staffs, and the Bruins' arms proved to be too much for the Wildcats.

"They've got some real good arms and we haven't done a real good job competing against those arms," Lopez said after Game 2.

"That might be the best pitching staff in the country," Lopez added after Game 3.

But Arizona finally got to UCLA on Sunday and avoided a sweep with a 6-4 victory. The combination of starter Daniel Workman and Bandilla held the Bruins to three runs through 6 1/3 innings and the Wildcats chased UCLA starter Rob Rasmussen after 3 2/3 innings.

"To win today was very important," Selsky said. "We were pretty upset about losing Friday and we wanted to win badly today and did exactly what we came here to do."

The victory gave Arizona something to smile about, but this series will undoubtedly be remembered for what could have been. One ground ball out and the nation would be talking about how the youngest team in the Pac-10 took two of three from the once-No. 1 Bruins.

"That's always in the back of your mind, like what if what if what if," Selsky said. "But we're 2-and-2 on the week facing the No. 1 team and No. 6 team, that's not bad."

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Summer @ Emmanuel College
Take courses on campus or online, and discover all that Boston has to offer.
Learn more about summer undergraduate and graduate courses at www.emmanuel.edu/summer.
Emmanuel College | 400 The Fenway | Boston, Massachusetts 02115
www.emmanuel.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Campus Local Business Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

Fresh Pair O' Snuggies

						8	7
	5	7					2
	6	1	8
						2	8
	3		9			4
		6	1
				7
	1		2
		8	3	1		5	9

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffontvillage.com

You are formally invited to
Beltane Ball
Saturday, May 1st
8:00PM- 12:00AM
FAC Lobby

Formal attire requested
Tickets $10/$15 for couples available at the door
Come enjoy delicious treats from Sweets and More!
Hosted by SPIRALS

The Daily Collegian is Hiring an Assistant Business Manager
Freshman & SOM Students Encouraged to Apply
Gain Valuable Business Expirence
Become Involved on Campus
Great Resume Builder
For more information stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal By Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

Dumbpiphany: The realization that the reason the entire conversation has been difficult to follow is that you're talking to an idiot.

Hark! A Vagrant By Kate Beaton harkavagrant.com

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Bengay is only used for joint pain and not for pain during joints.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Might I suggest the new premature peter pill that is now found in drug stores everywhere?

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
You know, there are all sorts of cool bionic body parts out there that serve really cool purposes.

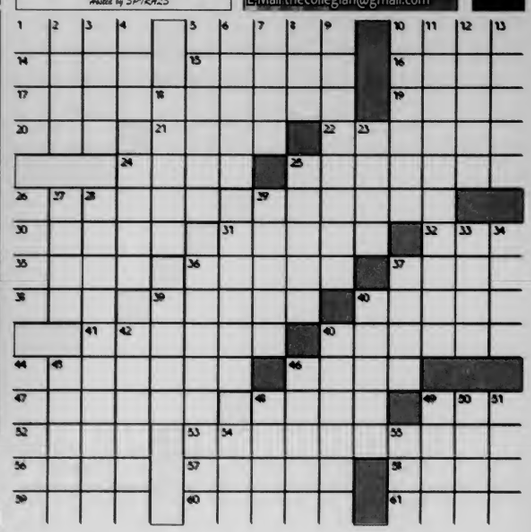
taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Has Sea-Man been getting on your back lately, too?

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Do not forget to cap off those bench presses with a little, "Hulk Smash!"

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
What is the best cure for a hangover? Enya.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
The world would be quite a different place if Rick just refused to roll.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Don't mess with Homeland Security unless you like frequent underwater breathing competitions.



libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Your knack for timing rivals the celeb status of Schwarzenegger's accent.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Want to know the secret ingredient of Campbell's Chunky Soup? Donovan McNabb's saliva.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Did that last biology test make you perform the walk of shame?

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Remember to respect the idea of quiet hours. The kid two floors down can hear that banging.

Crossword

ACROSS
1. Circle fragments
5. China grass
10. Poles
14. Nerd
15. Beautify
16. A river in Spain
17. Unchallenged
19. Current
20. French for "Summer"
21. Approximately 1.6 km
22. Horse
24. Desire
25. Show off
26. Globe
29. Split
30. In the air
31. Stupefy
32. Representative (abbrev.)
35. Flesh of animals
36. Pergola
37. Bundle
38. Hearing organ
39. Transparent
40. Deadly
41. Relating to a directionless magnitude
43. Official inventor's rights
44. Besmirched
46. Part of a foot
47. He makes leather
48. Sheltered, nautically
49. The 19th letter of the Greek alphabet
52. Not closed
53. Medical science for seniors
56. As well
57. Pelvic
58. Sea eagle
59. Exam
60. Skirmish
61. One who accomplishes

DOWN
1. Chills and fever
2. Apartment payment
3. Let go
4. Schuss
5. Despoiling a country in warfare
6. A grownup
7. Bit of dust
8. Anger
9. Undertaking
10. Repayment
11. Wipe out
12. Stingless bee
13. Scattered seed
18. Intelligent
23. Resign
24. Weave
25. Eyeshade
26. Identical
27. Entreaty
28. Throaty harshness
29. Prohibit
31. You need this for a sandwich
33. Flair
34. Bombard
36. Hypersensitive
37. Tub
39. Concern
40. Aspect
42. Anagram of "Canton"
43. Deliver a sermon
44. Brown ermine
45. Official tree of Canada
46. Assumed name
48. Operatic solo
49. Novice
50. Pimples
51. Utilizer
54. L
55. Crimson

Classifieds

For Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

www.amherstsales.com www.AmherstMARentals.com 413-549-1398 Student Rentals

Services

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Services

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

Employment

Summer Jobs with Enviroment Massachusetts $10-15/hr. Career Opportunities & Benefits www.jobsfortheenviroment.org Call Abby 1-800-57-EARTH

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Counseling

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

Wanted

Are you ADOPTED? Mentors (males especially) needed for adopted children. Call NOW, start Fall. Academic Credit available.Jen Dolan 545-0547 jdolancpsych.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass earned fifth in the A-10 Championship, finishing a place higher than last season. The Minutewomen will lose nine of their 11 players.

Minutewomen nab 5th in A-10

UMass holds onto most of current roster, loses one senior

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team finished tied for fifth overall in the 2010 Atlantic 10 tournament on Saturday afternoon in St. Louis, Missouri. The Minutewomen improved their performance from last year finishing one place higher.

The A-10 tournament for UMass began with a 4-1 victory over Saint Joseph's on Friday afternoon. Candynce Boney and Maude Lecluyse helped the Minutewomen with an 8-6 victory over Jhennifer Kedzierski and Laura Matz.

After falling in No. 2 doubles, the team of Jocelyn Providence and Kaitlyn Carpenter clinched the doubles point for UMass with a 8-3 win over Tara Walsh and Kate Dowd.

The Minutewomen clinched the victory by taking three of the four singles matches. Freshman Julia Comas raised her record to 6-2 at No. 1 singles winning, 6-1, 6-1, over Kedzierski. Both Tanisha Hodgson and Jocelyn Providence lost one game apiece in singles victories at No. 3 and No. 6 singles respectively to clinch the victory for UMass.

UMass	4
SJU	1
Temple	4
UMass	1

The Minutewomen fell 4-1 in the second round of the tournament to Temple, sending them into the consolation bracket.

Temple took the doubles point to begin the match, as Boney and Lecluyse fell 8-3 to Josephine Bergman and Katharina Mittag. Comas continued to be successful for UMass, as she continued her strong play with 6-2, 6-2 victories over Bergman.

Temple quickly regained control as it swept the No. 4, 5 and 6 singles contests to take the match. The Hawks moved on to face second-seeded Richmond in the semifinals, while UMass moved on to face Saint Louis for fifth-place overall.

UMass defeated SLU, 4-1, to earn a tie for the fifth-place spot. Top-seeded Xavier also finished fifth after beating Duquesne in its consolation match. Boney and Lecluyse seized the early momentum by defeating Casey Miller and Jenny Nalepa, 9-7. Jocelyn Providence and Kaitlyn Carpenter earned the doubles point with a 8-3 win over Mia Elmore and Sarah Septien.

While Comas fell 6-2, 6-4 to Hailee Elmore, Boney, Carpenter and Lecluyse picked up the slack with victories at No. 2, No. 5 and No. 6 singles respectively.

Nine of the team's 11 players will return next year, with Lecluyse being the lone graduating senior while sophomore Magdalena Ploch has been off the team since mid-March.

In the larger A-10 tournament, Richmond repeated as champions by defeating George Washington, 4-0. The fifth-seeded Colonials had made a strong run through the tournament, defeating St. Bonaventure, Duquesne and Charlotte. The Spiders entered the championship game after defeating Dayton, St. Louis and Temple.

The title was the seventh in school history for the Spiders. The victory also clinched a spot in next month's NCAA tournament. Last year, Duke swept Richmond, 4-0, in round one.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu

UM snabs new records

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

Record-setting performances propelled the Massachusetts track and field teams in the New Hampshire pre-conference meet over the weekend.

In total, six athletes broke or tied school records in their respective events as UMass prepared for the upcoming Atlantic 10 Championship in an exhibition setting.

The events weren't scored, however, the meet provided a chance for athletes to qualify for the postseason. UMass benefited from this format as it set school records and qualified additional members for championships in their given events.

Lisa Wilson, Gina Perno and Nicole Pompei all set school marks for the Minutewomen. Wilson beat her previous UMass record while taking first place in both the shot put (48-75 meters) and the hammer throw (176 feet) for the third straight week.

Pompei won the pole vault by reaching a height of 11-75 meters. The mark set her as fourth all-time at UMass for the event.

Perno, a junior distance runner, also left her mark in the record books, as she now sits third all-time in school history in the 800-meter run. She crossed the finish line in two minutes, 12.15 seconds, and placed second in the event.

Brian Miller, Sean Busch and Tyler Cotto led the Minutemen and each broke records in their respective events. Miller, a senior jumper, owns the best mark in school history in the high jump (6.25 meters).

Busch (15 meters) took second place in the pole vault event.

Cotto (14.51 seconds) qualified for the New England and IC4A Championships and set the fourth-best time in school history with a first place finish.

In addition to the record-setting performances, four Minutewomen qualified for the NECs while 10 Minutemen qualified for the NECs and IC4As.

Hurdlers Jason Dwyer and Nick Otis placed fourth and fifth, respectively, in the 400-meter hurdles. Each of them qualified for NECs in the event. With a 22-foot leap, Daniel Wu and Zach Konski tied for second place in the long jump.

Holly Heinricher (25.36 seconds) qualified for NECs in the 200-meter run. Emma Riedel and Michelle Jenssen each placed third in their events, qualifying in the 100-meter and 400-meter runs, respectively. Alex Haller (one minute, 20 seconds) also qualified in the 400-meter run by finishing fourth.

The teams return to Amherst in the upcoming weekend for the A-10 Championship meet. The event is scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY - MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Despite competing in an exhibition event, the Massachusetts track and field team recorded several new records. The event also gave competitors the hopes of earning a bid in upcoming championship meets.

UMass rafts over Amherst

Splits weekend after regatta against UVM

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

After finishing second overall in the Atlantic 10 Championships two weekends ago, the Massachusetts crew team competed against Amherst and Vermont in a doubleheader regatta on the Connecticut River over the weekend.

The Minutewomen faced off against Amherst on Saturday morning. The Lord Jeffs looked to impress in their bout against their cross-town rivals, entering one boat in the Varsity 4 races.

UMass defeated Amherst and finished in first place. All through the course of the morning, the two schools held multiple head-to-head races against each other.

Sunday, however proved to be much more of a challenge against a strong Vermont crew.

The Lady Catamounts displayed their young team on the Connecticut River, that edged out the Minutemen by 1.6 seconds on Sunday morning. Vermont (6:42.20) narrowly escaped the Minutewomen (6:43.80) by a little over a second.

Vermont fell victim to a strong surge by UMass' Novice 8 boat added a high note to the morning. They defeated the Catamounts by 0.8 seconds, with an overall time of 7:08.10.

This weekend, the Minutewomen travel to Hanover, New Hampshire, for the upcoming Double-Duel Regatta, where UMass will face Dartmouth, Buffalo and Cornell.

Next for the Minutewomen are two more meets in the month of May. The first is the Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia followed by the U.S. Rowing Collegiate Championships in Mercer, New Jersey.

David Martin can be reached at dmmartin@student.umass.edu.

Massachusetts was the last team to defeat Fordham, which is now on a 13-game winning streak. The Rams swept Temple over the weekend, with pitcher Jen Mineau earning 11 strikeouts.

COURTESY - TEMPLE MEDIA RELATIONS

The Massachusetts rowing team competed against Amherst and Vermont this weekend. The Minutemen split the weekend with a victory over Amherst, and a loss to UVM.

Fordham sweeps Temple in A-10 play, wins 13th straight

By Daniel Giardina
Collegian Correspondent

After coming off three solid wins, the Fordham softball team swept Temple and improved its Atlantic 10 record to 12-2. Ever since losing to Massachusetts, the Rams are on a 13-game winning streak.

The last game for Fordham was against the Owls (14-25, 5-7 Atlantic 10), which started off with a home run by outfielder Joceyln Dearhorn. The hits kept on coming, when catcher Megan Shager hit a single to left and brought home one more run.

The Ram's stifled the Owls in more ways than one, as the team contributed on both offense and defense. Starting for Fordham was pitcher Jen Mineau struck out the top three batters for the Owls through the first five innings.

A-10 Softball

Mineau (26-5) had 11 strikeouts and had three hits in the game. The Ram's defense maintained Temple, as the offense struck hard with heavy hitting.

Hawks search for groove

Saint Josephs has had difficulties in conference play after being swept by Charlotte. Recently, the Hawks (2-14, 4-5 A-10) rebounded with wins over Lafayette and George Washington.

Last Saturday, catcher Brooke Darreff hit a solo home run in the fourth inning to end the game, defeating the Colonials (5-12, 2-12 A-10), 1-0. The game started off with Erin Gallagher allowing two hits, which gave GW the opportunity to score. After the solo home run, Gallagher gave up one hit in the last four innings to give the Hawks the win.

SJU (21-14, 5-5 A-10) sits in sixth place in the A-10 with a match against Temple in its near future.

Crunch time for 49ers

After coming off a loss at Elon, Charlotte rebounded with a pair of wins over La Salle this past weekend. The Explorers fell short to the 49ers, 3-2. Catcher Tenaya Tucker hit a double that brought in two runs, but it wasn't enough to take down the Explorers.

The game went into overtime, and concluded with freshman Briana Gwaltney scoring the game-winning run.

Pitcher Gina Allen allowed two hits in the first three innings, and held off Charlotte's offense in Game 2. After junior Katy Hacket relieved Allen, she allowed the same amount of hits while striking out six batters in four innings.

Daniel Giardina can be reached at giardina@student.umass.edu

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 50 LOW: 34 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 2010

SOM to host golf tourney

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

The Isenberg School of Management at the University of Massachusetts is not just all about business and no fun. For two SOM students a capstone project became an alternative endeavor and event: a golf tournament in which portions of proceeds contribute to a scholarship fund.

Michael Friedman and Kim Jasik are two UMass seniors utilizing an entrepreneurial method for their graduating requirement. Since the fall of 2009 they have planned the second annual Scholarship Golf Tournament presented by SOM, sponsored this year by Scion.

Friedman and Jasik explained that they were inspired by two SOM students last year who took on organizing a golf tournament. This year Friedman and Jasik decided to form the event in the same way, while also moving the venue from Hickory Ridge in Amherst to The Ledges Golf Course in South Hadley.

"It isn't so much different from last years, as it is an expansion of last year's event," said Friedman. "Dave and Nick [the event founders] did such a great job last year with the tournament. They signed up 119 golfers and raised $5000 for scholarships. We simply wanted to use their success as a springboard to grow the tradition of the tournament."

Unlike traditional capstone projects the project incorporated, "marketing, IT, media relations, ticket sales, financing and accounting," said Friedman. He

See GOLF on page 2

Students gather inside the Isenberg School of Management. Two SOM students have collaborated to form the second annual Scholarship Golf Tournament. The event raised $5000 in scholarships last year.

Studying Alzheimer's

Two psychology professors at the University of Massachusetts are embarking on a medical study to "identify possible risk factors for Alzheimer's disease," said a press release issued by the UMass News Office.

According to the Alzheimer's Association website, alz.org, Alzheimer's is a brain disorder that "destroys brain cells, causing memory loss and problems with thinking and behavior severe enough to affect work, lifelong hobbies or social life."

There is no current cure for Alzheimer's, said the website. However the association said "there is an accelerating worldwide effort under way to find better ways to treat the disease, delay its onset or prevent it from developing."

In their study psychology professors Rebecca Ready and Rebecca Spencer will look to "determine how genetic risk for Alzheimer's disease and the stress hormone, cortisol, might interact to cause very early changes in brain structure and memory that might, eventually, lead to Alzheimer's disease," according to the release.

Ready and Spencer will focus in particular on the hippocampus, a part of the brain which is "critical for new learning and memory."

Genetic risk for Alzheimer's disease may increase vulnerability for other insults to the brain, such as damage from stress hormones," says Ready. "The current project will be one of the first to determine if and how genetic risk for Alzheimer's disease interacts with stress to impact brain structure and function in midlife."

The professors are seeking adults, aged 45-65, who are biological children of someone with Alzheimer's disease. The project will involve "questionnaires, cognitive testing, sampling of saliva to measure cortisol and brain imaging with MRI," said the release.

Those interested in participating can contact the researchers at cognaclab@gmail.com

– Collegian Staff

Professor Rebecca Spencer is helping head an Alzheimer's study.

Speaker discusses connection between humans and trees

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

In coordination with National Arbor Day on April 30 and as part of the "Spring 2010 TEI Environmental Lecture Series," the University of Massachusetts hosted a lecture by Nalini Nadkarni, a National Geographic Speaker, Tuesday night in the Stockbridge Bowker Auditorium.

About 150 guests attended to hear Nadkarni, a forest canopy researcher and professor at Evergreen State College in Olympia, Washington, speak of her experiences in scientific research on tree canopies and ecologies in the U.S. Pacific Northwest, Costa Rica, Papua New Guinea and the Amazon.

Her lecture, "Between Earth and Sky: Our Intimate Connection with Trees," chronicled the connections from the forest canopy to the canopy floor, and the canopies' importance of sustaining biodiversity, sustainability and human awareness.

"This is about public outreach into the sciences and engaging with non-science related audiences," said Nadkarni. "Outreach is about the ability to make connections between each other's disciplines."

After more than two decades of climbing throughout tree canopies and conducting extensive research, Nadkarni said she wanted to outreach and that keeping the information within the scientific and academia world would not serve its importance in justice. She began to outreach in prisons, churches, boardrooms, bookstores, hair salons and tattoo parlors, emphasizing that trees can serve as an important part in environmental sustainability universally.

Her outreach methods are unconventional, but she noted her success is based on the critical issue of preserving tree canopies and the ability for all to connect to the power of trees.

Nadkarni has targeted difference demographics to teach about preserving the tree canopies, with one demographic being young girls. She created a "Treetop Barbie," from recycled barbies outfitted to one similar of that a canopy researcher.

Nadkarni highlighted social and economic justice in the research of trees and outreach, as she implemented a program in five Washington State Prisons. The program allows inmates to grow 200,000 plugs of plants for prairie vegetation, lichens and moss and to grow the dwindling population of the Northwest Pacific's orange-spotted frog population. The program was successful in its social reform within and outside the prison walls.

As a result of the success of Nadkarni's program and outreach in prisons, Washington State legisla-

See TREES on page 2

Mowing down hitters

Sara Plourde's seventh strikeout in Game 1 against URI was her 431st of the season, moving her past alum Danielle Henderson's record of 430 strikeouts set in 1998.

UMass hosts 'Daffodil lectures' on sustainability, environment

By Kat Manser
Collegian Staff

As part of the 40th Earth Day and Commonwealth Honors College's tenth birthday, a series of "Daffodil Lectures" were held in the Integrated Sciences Building on sustainability and the environment last Saturday.

The lecture series was moderated by University of Massachusetts Professor Julie Brigham-Grette, who has researched global climate change. Brigham-Grette introduced the lecture series explaining that it is important to make a distinction between weather events and longer term climate change. Brigham-Grette expressed a concern that a disconnect seems to have developed between the idea of global change and its regional consequences, saying, "We need to empower ourselves as individuals to go back to thinking on a global scale."

Brigham-Grette displayed research slides illustrating that carbon dioxide levels in the environment are well outside normal levels, with a 64 percent increase since pre-industrial times.

Director of the Climate System Research Center and UMass distinguished professor in the department of geosciences Raymond Bradley also presented information about climate issues as part of the "Daffodil Lectures."

"Public opinion has shifted from concern about climate change issues," said Bradley, "but we will face real problems [in the future]. People can bury their heads in the sand, but they will soon find the sand is getting warmer too."

Bradley, who is also an advisor to international organizations and government agencies, is an author of many books and articles on the topic of climate change. He addressed the planet's "explosive population growth," sharing that the human population is growing by 240,000 people per day, "with 6.3 billion people in the world, our impact on the planet is ubiquitous."

Bradley shared United Nations estimates that the population will increase to nine billion by the end of the century. He discussed consequences of increased population growth, which include rising fossil fuel combustion and in turn even higher levels of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere. Bradley also mentioned increased ocean acidity, leaking methane and phosphates polluting lakes, rivers and waterways.

However, Bradley said, "The problems are all inextricably linked." He went on to say that if one problem could be fixed, this might alleviate other issues. For example, he mentioned how land use changes could help prevent further species extinction as well as water pollution.

Bradley compared the pollution we are faced with today as a "wall covered in graffiti," which has been soiled for years. His lecture focused on how many forms of industrialization have taken a significant toll on the earth's climate. He recounted how the invention of the steam engine created the need for burning coal, then the internal combustion engine created another source of greenhouse gasses and now many developing countries have added more emissions into the atmosphere.

"It's not just the moment we have to look at," said Bradley, "but the cumulative effect that goes back decades and hundreds of years when it comes to taking responsibility."

He showed the audience of a polar bear from a remote area that had toxic chemicals in its body which had migrated from more populated areas. Bradley said that we must find solutions to the sustainability problems that face us, because the effects of pollution and climate change are being felt even in the most remote areas.

Andrew Revkin an award-winning journalist who also writes the Dot Earth blog associated with the New York Times, acknowledged the popu-

See DAFFODIL on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

The chicken parmesan showdown

The best local delivery places duke it out in the first-ever chicken parmesan olympics, where sandwiches battle based on size, flavor, and value.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen beat down URI

The Massachusetts softball team claimed both its games against Rhode Island in a double header yesterday. UMass won 9-2 in Game 1 and 3-1 in Game 2.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Kirsten Swenson remembers Bill Movers and regrets his retirement.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

If you missed Sunday's Spring Concert, go online to check out a slideshow from Photo Editor Matthew Harrison.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 61

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR Matt Rocheleau
MANAGING WEB EDITOR Sara Cody
MANAGING WEB EDITOR Pete Rizzo
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Amanda Johnson
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Cal Scannell
COMICS EDITOR Andrew Witts
EDITORIAL EDITOR Alyssa Creamer
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolniert
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ellie Rulon-Miller
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Benjamin Moriarty
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Matthew M. Robare
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT NEWS Chris Shores
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Auser
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Index-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 9:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeffrey R. Larnard

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

Lecturers discuss the Earth, climate

DAFFODIL from page 1

lation growth to come at the lecture series. "We have to ask ...nine billion people plus one planet equals what?" said Revkin.

Revkin said that on his blog he tries to look for new ways of telling stories about the "changes that are afoot." A Senior Fellow for environmental understanding at Pace University, Revkin focused more on the social disparities that exist between some of the immensely wealthy and the poorest people on Earth.

"I see roots forward that are positive," he said. "We have multiple challenges and opportunities especially for young people looking to shape their careers. Climate change is not the only story of our century."

He acknowledged that wealth and technology can help developing nations tackle their sustainability issues. He also spoke of the younger people of the world, referring to them as "Generation E" for "energy."

"It is important to remember we're doing so many things to the Earth," he said. "It's like a whirring blender for biology. It is Generation E that gives me the most hope."

Bron Taylor concluded the lecture series with a talk that mentioned how many species are endangered.

"The problem is the Earth animal, and the solution is our capacity to care," said Taylor. A professor of religion and nature at the University of Florida, Taylor has written books explaining the idea of "Dark Green Religion."

One of the ideas discussed in his books is that protecting the environment can be seen as a religious duty.

"We are prey with no separateness from nature," he said. "We are part of the food chain."

Taylor discussed the role of "dark green religion" in helping people feel connected to nature and feel motivated to protect it.

"I think we're at the early stage of a large-scale cultural reformation. What follows is a sense of reciprocal moral concern for all species," he said.

"We need to start thinking about a future for our planet, re-thinking technology, to whom we belong, and what our place is in the universe," he added.

By thinking in this way, he believes that people will be more likely to learn their "manners on this planet."

He acknowledged decreasing biodiversity slying, "species' extinctions come with very large costs, many of which are unknown."

Kat Manser can be reached at kmanserta@student.umass.edu.

A climber descends from the rainforest canopy. A lecture by Nalini Nadkarni yesterday discussed the connection between humans and trees.

HerbFest at UMass

MATTHEW HARRISON, COLLEGIAN

Students examine the various plants displayed at HerbFest. The event, held yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom, allowed the opportunity to learn about the cultural and medicinal uses of plants.

Natl. Geographic sponsors talk

TREES from page 1

tors demanded that all prisons enforce more sustainable regulations and programs for inmates.

"Outreach is what I can do as a scientist to prevent negative consequence of human activities," she said.

Her career has involved linking ecology with recreational values, social and economic values and spiritual values.

She noted that her work has been in conjunction with a growing amount of information on the tree canopy.

"Until 25 to 30 years ago there wasn't a lot known about the tree canopy," she said. The need for tree canopy research is growing with the concern of climate change and global warming.

"I see myself as a scientist, an educator and a collaborator," said Nadkarni.

The event was not only a lecture with scientific data, but rather, a personal reflection of Nadkarni's religious and spiritual background – and the connection it has to trees. Nadkarni's father was a pharmacologist of Hindu faith and her mother a linguist and orthodox Jew. With her diversified background in science, research and religion she fused an appreciation of trees, the life they give to nature, and how they serve as an educational tool on a universal level.

Nadkarni said that no matter the species, trees are a universal connector to the human condition. Trees breathe life, they give life, they support other growing and living organisms – much like humans, she said.

Nadkarni said, "Trees have trunks. Humans have trunks. Trees have limbs. Humans have limbs." She said it wasn't a coincidence that the Old Testament had 328 references to trees and forests, explaining they are the very root of life.

The lecture showed a clip of "Heroes of the High Frontier," which documented Nadkarni's work and research and also won an Emmy Award for Best Documentary Film in 2001.

Next week Nadkarni will travel to Washington D.C. to receive a 2010 National Science Foundation Award.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

Combining golf and business

GOLF from page 1

said he "lucked out" with taking on the project – as he has been golfing for three years.

Jasik said that the sport of golf itself is an asset in the business world.

"I am involved in this tournament because I think it's very important, especially for a business student, to know how to play golf. Many business deals happen on the course and to know how to play will potentially further your career," said Jasik.

Other than the thrill of near completion of a capstone project Friedman said he found his the process worthwhile, because it served another aspect other than a requirement for graduation.

The tournament is set up, not only for a round of golf but to raise money for a scholarship. The scholarship goes to a UMass student in the SOM, typically who has lived in the Pioneer Valley area.

"This will benefit the Isenberg School of Management because all proceeds benefit a scholarship for a deserving student," said Jasik.

The Ledges Golf Course in South Hadley will host the event on May 5 with the event beginning at 11:00 a.m. The event is $75 which includes dinner, a polo shirt and other giveaways. As for changing the venue this year from last year's tournament Friedman said, "We've had a great relationship with the Ledges Golf Club." Other sponsors include The Hangar, Buffalo Wild Wings, Newman Center Cafe, CBS News Springfield, Callaway Golf and CampusLive.

Friedman said he has set his expectations above par for the second round compared to the tournament's first year.

"Our goal from the start has been to get a full field of 144 golfers and raise $10,000 in scholarship money. Ultimately, we'd like to leave a lasting impression on both the tournament participants and the tournament sponsors so that future organizers will be able to continue growing this amazing event."

Though Friedman is golfing in the tournament and hopes to do well, his intentions are within the event he has been planning for months.

"We're making a difference for students – that is what capstones originally intended to do," he said.

The faculty advisors for the capstone project are Alex Niefer of the undergraduate development office and Professor Robert Nakosteen of SOM.

Participants can register for the event at www.umassalumni.com/golf or in Isenberg atrium every Wednesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

(MCT)

Participants looking to enter the SOM golf tournament should get their clubs ready and sign up now.

Get the Most
CASH FOR BOOKS

Buyback Hours

Textbook Annex
Monday – Friday
April 26 – 30
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Saturday, May 8
11:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.

Campus Center Concourse
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m.

Southwest/Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
10:00 a.m. – 1:00 p.m.

Find us on Facebook
facebook.com/UMassUniversityStore
UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
Powered by efollett.com
58810

Graduating?
Give yourself the extra edge in today's competitive job market.
With our accelerated summer certificate programs, you can gain professional expertise in just a few weeks—a real advantage as you leave college to pursue your career.
Summer Accelerated Programs
Professional Fund Raising May 25-July 1
Information Session: Tuesday, May 4
Paralegal Studies June 7-22
Information Session: Wednesday, May 5
All information sessions begin at 6 p.m.
Visit: bu.edu/professional/P170
Call: 866-633-9370 or 617-353-4497
E-mail: cpe@bu.edu
Priority Code CPEP170
Boston University Metropolitan College
Center for Professional Education
BOSTON UNIVERSITY

ID cards to monitor student attendance

THE JACK CENTRAL (NAU)
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

On April 19, students gathered on the lawn between the University Union and Gillenwater Hall to collect signatures for a petition to stop the $85,500 installation of proximity card scanners in several classrooms as early as next fall.

The protest likely would have not been possible without the social networking medium Facebook, which allowed organizer Rachel Brackett, a sophomore biological chemistry major, to inform other students about the measure. Her group on the site, titled "NAU Against Proximity Cards," has 1,200 members, most opposed to the implementation of the scanners.

"It took me a while to get anything going," Brackett said. "I was very busy with class and over spring break, when I went out of town. [One of my professors] brought it to my attention, and I felt after she said that, no one really said anything about it again. And I thought we needed to bring this up – I don't think anyone really knows about it."

David Bousquet, the vice president for Enrollment Management and Student Affairs, said all students already have proximity cards, whether they realize it or not.

"There is a proximity chip in your student ID, and you probably use it to get into your residence hall," Bousquet said.

In President John Haeger's April 6 forum, "student success" was listed as an institutional priority for the university. Bousquet said student attendance in classes is key to ensuring that goal of improving the quality of education at NAU is met.

"There's a whole body of research that demonstrates that students who go to class get better grades than those who don't," Bousquet said. "No surprise there."

Bousquet said the scanners would be used to take attendance for a grade at the discretion of the professor teaching the class.

"Some professors make it very clear in the syllabus that your grade is, in part, dependent on attendance," Bousquet said. "And that is within a professor's right. Today, with proximity card reader technology, professors can take attendance without calling out everyone's name. The installation of proximity card readers at some number of classrooms will allow those professors to use that data if they choose to – some might, some might not."

Brackett said a large problem with the entire concept behind using the cards to assign attendance grades was that it could take away students' responsibility for their own actions.

"One of the biggest issues for me is that it should be our choice to go to class," Brackett said. "Maybe some people don't consider us adults yet. Maybe we still have some growing up to do, but that's how you grow up. You learn to make your own decisions, make your own choices – and whether you succeed or fail, that's your decision that you have to live with."

Bousquet said the installation of the card scanners would help foster student success, leading to higher rates of retention.

"To the extent that students attend class and do well, they are more likely to be retained," Bousquet said. "We have research that indicates that students who receive a 'D' or an 'F,' or withdraw from the class, are retained at lower rates than students who do not withdraw or receive a 'D' or an 'F.' All of this is tied to student success."

The estimated cost of implementing the scanners will be $85,500 – money that will come out of the $1 million "Innovation Fund" President Haeger set aside this past fall.

Of the 11 projects approved underneath the fund, the proximity card provision is the seventh largest, receiving less funding than the $175,000 retooling of the freshman mathematics curriculum, but more money than the $75,000 "Sustainability, Energy Savings, Climate and the Environment" measure.

"[Proximity scanners] got more than many other programs that I felt were much more deserving," Brackett said. "Going more towards scientific research, and more opportunities for students – I feel that the other things money from the [Innovation Fund] did go towards were much more deserving of more money."

Standing near the Union asking people passing by to sign a petition against the proximity card scanner installations, Taylor Gubler, a junior political science and journalism major, said the cost of the readers would be a burden for the university in a time when state funding is being scaled back.

"Eighty-five thousand dollars put toward this program is a lot of money, especially in this time where we are being charged more because of the economic downturn," Gubler said. "It is important that we look at how we are spending money."

Gubler said learning about personal responsibility is just as important a facet of the college experience as learning in the classroom.

"The university should not have to be responsible for making people attend class," Gubler said. "I feel that if you are going to be an adult, you have to be able to make the decision to go to class. Do you really deserve the degree you've gotten if you were forced to go?"

RITSY JACKSON/CENTRAL.COM

Rachel Brackett, a sophomore biological chemistry major, paints a sign for a protest outside the Union. Students have begun protesting at NAU in response to the installation of ID scanners in classrooms.

Sgt. hits PSU student with car

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN (PSU)
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

The officer whose vehicle collided with Penn State student Kevin Ignatuk early Sunday morning told police he had been driving about five to 10 mph over the speed limit at the time of the collision.

Sgt. William Muse's marked police SUV collided with Ignatuk, 21, at about 1:42 a.m. Sunday on the 400 block of East Beaver Avenue, the State College Police Department said.

Muse told police he was traveling about 30 to 35 mph at the time of the collision, police said. The posted speed limit at the location of the collision is 25 mph, police said.

Ignatuk, of Thornton, Pennsylvania, remains in critical condition at the Geisinger Medical Center in Danville, Pennsylvania, hospital officials said.

New information about the collision became available Monday after the police released the accident report detailing the incident.

The Pennsylvania State Police are assisting the investigation, but referred questions to the State College Police Department when reached Monday.

State College Police Department Capt. Dana Leonard said Muse – who was uninjured in the accident – is not currently facing any sanctions in connection with the incident.

So far, the information gathered indicates there is no reason to suspend Muse, Leonard said. The investigation is ongoing, police said.

Ignatuk was not in a crosswalk and the street he was on was dimly lit and wet from rain at the time of the incident, police said.

Muse told police he applied his brakes moments before the collision and that he had "no time to react," police said.

Just before the collision with Ignatuk, another man crossed the street, narrowly missing the front of his police SUV, Muse told police.

Then Ignatuk "jumped in the path of his vehicle," according to the accident report.

Benjamin Cuddy (junior-kinesiology), Ignatuk's roommate, said Ignatuk had been drinking earlier that day, and police said there has been a search warrant issued to find what Ignatuk's blood alcohol concentration (BAC) was on that night.

After the collision, police said Muse immediately called the accident in to dispatchers, requested assistance and began administering aid to Ignatuk.

Ignatuk hit the center of the SUV's hood, leaving a large dent, and rolled off to the vehicle's left, eventually stopping by the opposite curb where he lay unconscious, police said.

He was bleeding from his head, and his left leg was badly injured, police said.

"Pedestrian-vehicle crashes almost always result in injuries," Leonard said. "Although we have a relatively small number each year, there is a lot at stake in each one."

Police administered oxygen to Ignatuk at the location of the collision, police said.

Blood tests confirmed that there was no alcohol present in Muse's system, police said.

Trying to bring CU to 'Glee'

ERIC WILLIAMS/COLUMBIAN STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Senior Joey Goldberg and junior Emily Alpern Fisch were two students who answered an open casting call for the Fox show "Glee."

COLUMBIA SPECTATOR
VIA COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK

For the past month, Fox's "Glee" has held a contest on MySpace to search for the next cast member, and at least two Columbians have joined the fray – Joey Goldberg, CC '10, and Emily Alpern Fisch, BC '11.

Alpern Fisch and Goldberg come from singing backgrounds and have been involved with Non Sequitur, a coed a cappella group at Columbia. Alpern Fisch also performed in an off-Broadway show when she was a teenager. The pair auditioned for "Glee" because they loved the show, but there was also something more to their decision than that.

"The moment I knew this was an extraordinary show was during the episode with deaf students signing and singing along with the McKinley High Glee Club to 'Imagine,'" Alpern Fisch said. "This show really resonated with me, having spent eight years of my life performing in a deaf theater company. In fact, I have been performing that exact song, using sign language, since I was 12 years old."

Similarly, Goldberg said that he feels "a connection with the themes of the show and what the characters go through. It'd be a dream come true to be a part of such an awesome production."

With such a great prize, the competition is fierce. There are over "30,000 submissions," Goldberg said, while the last submissions were still trickling in by the Monday deadline. It is possible to view the entries online, and to award "gold stars" to the enirants one would like to see on the small screen.

But regardless of whether his videos receive few or many gold stars, Goldberg said he will not let the number bother him. "The voting isn't really how they're deciding who will be chosen," he said, "so I'm not thinking too much about it."

The contestants submitted a one-minute monologue and a song that was once sung by the cast of "Glee." Fox gave the contestants a choice of the top 10 songs from the show for karaoke. Both decided to sing "Don't Rain On My Parade," a song from "Funny Girl," most often associated with Barbra Streisand from the 1968 theatrical release.

It was a coincidence that Alpern Fisch and Goldberg chose the same song. Alpern Fisch decided on it because she had "tape cassette recordings of me singing that song ... in my car seat when I was a little kid." Goldberg chose "Don't Rain On My Parade" because it "is not typically sung by a guy" and "it allowed me to have the most fun."

The monologues were a little more difficult to film because of the strict guidelines. The videos had to state "your name, where you were from, how long you had been singing, [and] why you wanted to be on Glee," Alpern Fisch said. Goldberg's goal was to show his "goofy personality [that] I feel fits with the show."

But regardless of the outcome, they are both happy with the work they put forth. "I think I'm doing a good job of reminding myself that the chances of anything happening are extremely unlikely," Goldberg said. "Even so, I'm keeping my fingers crossed."

Alpern Fisch echoed a similar sentiment. "I am keeping my hopes up," she said, "because you can't even be considered unless you put yourself out there and give it your best shot. And I believe I did that."

Thursday, April 29
All DCs from 5 – 9pm

Taste of Home
Recipes submitted from UMass Families in the Spring of 2010

BERKSHIRE
Chicken Stew & Biscuits — Jeffrey Family
Pulled Pork Sandwich — Healy Family
Vegetable Lasagna — Brady Family
Szechuan Green Beans — Snyder Family
Feta & Spinach Stfd Mushrooms — Souza Family
Meatballs & Macaroni — Cohen Family

HAMPSHIRE
Mulligatawny Soup — Lynch Family
Crunchy Chicken — Considine Family
Eggplant Beef Stew — Sabouri Family
Meatballs & Sauce — Jacob Family
Mustard Crusted Pork Chops — Mannello Family

FRANKLIN
Beef Stew — Murphy Family
Cheese Lasagna — Joyce Family
Sweet & Sour Meatballs — Mazar Family
Linguini w/Clam Sauce — Bilgrien Family
Baked Chicken — Joyce Family

WORCESTER
Lemon Chicken — Walker Family
Baked Macaroni & Cheese — Orlando Family
Spinach Pie — Butterfield Family
Breaded Fried Zucchini — Budz Family
Mashed Potato Casserole — Hensley Family

DESSERTS IN ALL DCs
Noodle Kugle — Brenker Family
Peppermint Fudge — Souza Family
Rhubarb Cream Cake — Berkowitz Family

Ivy
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 2010

If we don't believe in free expression for people we despise, we don't believe in it at all. –Noam Chomsky

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

End the hatred, end 'Windowsphobia'

Matthew M. Robare

A great demographic shift is underway in American society. A once powerful majority, thought to be in power forever, is almost at a minority status and beginning to suffer the consequences of political and economic might. Unfortunately, what this means is a rise in discrimination and hate.

I'm talking about Windows-users.

Back in the '90s, Microsoft was so powerful and successful that no one could challenge it. "Windows-compatible" was a must for any program that wanted to be successful. Thanks to a strong dollar Bill Gates was the richest man in the world. The company's initial public offering in 1986, according to the New York Times, resulted in 10,000 millionaires by 2000. It was the Google of the decade.

Apple, Microsoft's only real rival in business, was left far behind. The first computer I ever used was an Apple IIe, complete with two-color monitor and dual seven inch floppy disk drives. I remember seeing a commercial for the iMac G3 and thinking to myself "Apple is still around? I didn't know that."

Few people seem to understand the stress or shame experienced by us victims of "Windowsphobia."

But then, things began to change. Several governments sued Microsoft for allegedly monopolistic practices regarding Internet Explorer; Linux started receiving more publicity as a "better" alternative; and the rise of cell phones and the internet drastically changed the way we thought about how computers should work. Aesthetics, high-speed internet capability and integration between all your hardware became the goal. Microsoft's business model had always been focused on PC's and workspace computers, leaving laptop development to hardware manufacturers.

But in the early part of the last decade mobility became important and laptop capabilities grew dramatically to compete with desktops. And Apple had good laptops and they were good-looking laptops, with good internet capabilities. After nearly a decade, Steve Jobs had struck back against Bill Gates.

Then there came the knock-down blow: the iPod. Apple won the kids and therefore the war. Brand loyalty begins young – if your parents buy Coca Cola you'll probably buy Coca Cola, regardless of anything Pepsi does. My generation overwhelmingly switched to Apple, following up iPods with iMacs and Macbooks when we got to college, or for the lucky few, in high school.

Microsoft has fallen behind – almost no one uses Internet Explorer now, in favor of Mozilla Firefox or Google Chrome; the Zune was an utter failure; Windows 98 and Windows Millennium were poor follow-ups to Windows 95; SkiFree's source code was lost for 12 years.

Apple's resurgence has led to a rise the amount of discrimination faced by Windows-users. There are jobs where Windows-users are asked not to apply. Few people seem to understand the stress or shame experienced by us victims of "Windowsphobia."

A few cutting remarks, like "Vista sucks" or "I bet the Windows tent outside the Student Union crashes before it does what it's supposed to" can ruin the self-esteem or sense of well-being of any Windows-user. Or those "I'm a Mac and I'm a PC" commercials. Those nearly bring me to tears. Worst of all was a picture of the anthropomorphic form of various operating systems: Vista was depicted as a man in a leather harness.

Words can hurt, people. Words can hurt.

Well, I like Vista, and I'm not going to let anyone make me feel bad about my Operating System. I've owned a Vista-capable computer since 2007, and I have never, never, never, ever had a single problem with it. I came close a few days ago when I downloaded Audacity, but that turned out to be a problem with the program, not Vista. In fact, the last a version of Windows I was using crashed and I got a Blue Screen of Death, it was the mid-90s and the computer was running Windows 3.1.

Windows-users: be proud, walk tall and don't let the hate get to you. Mac-users: stand-up for dignity and fight Windowsphobia. We're no better than you and Mac has no inherent superiority to Windows. It's all just a matter of personal preference.

End the hate. Be the cyberlove.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist.

Bill Moyers: modern hero for America

Kirsten Swenson

This Friday, Bill Moyers, an American journalist who hosted PBS' "Bill Moyers Journal," will retire from his weekly broadcast at the age of 75, after over 50 years of working as a media professional in various capacities.

Numerous reports suggest that Moyers will not be leaving journalism for good, but he has no new projects in the works.

As a soon-to-be graduate with a BA in journalism, Moyers' bittersweet retirement could not have come at a more appropriate time for me, whose exposure to the maverick media man was one of the guiding reasons I picked my choice of study.

Over the past six years, Moyers became something of a personal hero to me – his extraordinary commitment to journalism itself is insurmountable; his reputation has been revered the world over.

Even the late-great Studs Terkel, a Pulitzer Prize-winning American author, cites Moyers as personal inspiration.

"Bill Moyers has been my North Star, in his eloquence, his quiet passion and courage, and in the way he presents me and millions of others with the ideals of our nation," Terkel once stated, "...from our past to our present to our uncertain future. Always he offers the gifts of thoughtfulness and of hope."

I know many of you reading this editorial probably have no idea who Bill Moyers is – and why should you? He's fairly under the radar, especially when measured against the big-name pundits normally featured in television newscasts, thrusting their overzealous opinions into the media spotlight.

His show is also aired on PBS, which, let's face it, always takes the backburner to MTV, HBO and E!, not to mention its Friday evening time slot – students are far too busy partaking in end-of-week beer festivities to tune in at that hour. And I'm going to venture to say that some of you may not really have an interest in journalism, politics or the like – especially if you're a neuroscience major on the fast track to medical school.

Many shower Moyers with praise over his work and accomplishments, something that's undoubtedly warranted. But his truest, his most profound accomplishment, though, is his rare ability to maintain an utmost sense of dignity and morality while producing some of history's most groundbreaking journalism.

So why should Bill Moyers be of any interest to you, especially if you're not a "news nerd?" What exactly do plastic surgeons, marine biologists, archaeologists or anthropologists have to learn from this man?

At the tender age of 16, my father, who had always been a faithful follower of Moyers' work, noticed and was thrilled I was becoming more interested in news, politics and writing.

Admittedly, this interest was definitely fostered by my teenage need to develop an opinion on absolutely everything, then making sure everyone was well aware of it.

But one night, my father somehow persuaded me to watch Moyers' PBS program at the time, "NOW with Bill Moyers."

Like every other teenager, I knew absolutely everything and anything there was to know about the world, clearly. I mean, really, what kinds of insights could this guy give that would have any impact on my life?

An hour later, my perception and understanding of the world around me began to shift. The episode we watched featured a discussion on our government's response to 9/11, with extensive investigations, interviews and in-depth analyses of the situation.

My first exposure to Bill Moyers got me to stop talking and start listening – to question not only the judgments of others, but also my own. Since that moment, I haven't stopped reading or watching his work.

Now 22 and way more aware, my following of Moyers throughout the past six years has given me a strong sense of the man behind the reporting.

Regardless of background (political, religious, ethnic), there is certainly a general understanding of good and bad, right and wrong, among different demographics around the world.

Anyone with knowledge of Moyers and his work would, without a doubt, see the immense amount of goodness in this journalist. His reporting goes far beyond just delivering the facts – he inspires viewers to question, to think, to keep tabs on the government.

Many shower Moyers with praise over his work and accomplishments, something that's undoubtedly warranted. But his truest, his most profound accomplishment, though, is his rare ability to maintain an utmost sense of dignity and morality while producing some of history's most groundbreaking journalism.

Moyers served as former President Lyndon Baines Johnson's press secretary from 1965 to 1967 – though LBJ's persistence in the Vietnam War left Moyers grappling with his conscience; not knowing if he could compromise his personal convictions regarding the war to continue representing the president.

In "Secrets: A Memoir of Vietnam and the Pentagon Papers," written by Daniel Ellsberg, Moyers is reported as saying, "I never thought the situation could arise when I would wish for the defeat of LBJ, and that makes my current state of mind all the more painful to me."

Moyers' decision to end his press secretary stint and work as a publisher for Newsday is a prime example of the legendary reporter's integrity – removing himself from one of the most powerful, prestigious and exciting positions a media professional could have for the sheer sake of his ethics?

Without running the risk of sounding cliché or contrived, Moyers' actions are not just the mark of a courageous individual.

They're the indication of a true American hero. Since leaving his post serving LBJ in 1967, exceptional journalism has been his calling.

Moyers' most relevant legacy extends far beyond the realm of newswriting, newscasts and reporting. It even extends far beyond the scope of journalism ethics.

What college students, recent graduates and Americans can learn from his life's work is the ability to maintain the kind of self-respect and self-reliance in everything you do – from career choices to family, and everything in between.

During a time when it seems as if individuals are becoming increasingly corrupt, "selling-out" is fairly standard and shows like "Jersey Shore" and "Tough Love" demand the undivided attention of millions of fans on a weekly basis, we're in dire need of more public figures who espouse strong values, ones we so often forget due to hyped-up celebrity culture and tendency to associate these people with reality.

Skip the "Real World/Road Rules Challenge" this week and pick up a copy of "Moyers on Democracy" – you won't be disappointed.

Kirsten Swenson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kswenson@dailycollegian.com

Fast, hectic pace of the Internet net ruining journalism

Chelsea Whitton

I truly hope that the print news industry survives and not just for the mere vain of being able to hold and read a paper and sip back coffee in the morning.

By the time I have that newspaper in my hand, only hours after it has been printed – the news, in many cases, is already old in comparison to the updates that can found online. When and how do we say "enough" to constant updates? How do we regulate just how many times we need to be informed by constant 24-hour cable news and online newspaper updates?

Well, this is a question, as a third-year journalism student, that I still cannot answer, but determining the value of print journalism, personally, is something of extreme importance to me.

My questions are rooted in fundamental beliefs and support of the print newspaper industry. I will acknowledge and agree that, yes, the news industry is in the process of a great transition amidst an economic hardship, but if there is one thing that must be articulated about news media today, it is that we cannot lose ourselves in social media tools becoming robotic versions of our reality and the fact that we were once actually immersed in daily life, rather than a constant flow of updates on a computer.

The Chelsea Whitton on Linkedin or Facebook happens to be entirely different from who I really am.

I'll choose reading a print version of a newspaper over any online news content. There is an authenticity to holding the New York Times in the morning as I sprint to class, and this paper as well.

The minute I log onto the computer for news updates it's over – it's a never ending media train wreck that never ceases.

When and how do we say "enough" to constant updates? How do we regulate just how many times we need to be informed by constant 24-hour cable news and online newspaper updates?

For me, print is enough. I understand this isn't the general consensus especially amidst college students like me. Our lives revolve around events, which are broadcast through social media, tweets and incessant Blackberry updates.

I don't necessarily view these things as bad but I feel as if they are taking away from the very essence journalism has provided the public throughout history – quality stories and facts highlighting the news in our lives. A 160 character maximum tweet cannot suffice to do so.

Public interest has been lost in the public domain.

Who will voice opinions and facts accurately when anyone can tweet, blog and comment on every story, video and post?

I realize my views might be contentious in today's economic climate – especially in the news industry. But after staring at a computer screen for hours I have nothing to show for it.

I am becoming increasingly annoyed with the number of websites my education requires me to check, the blogs I need to have in my feed, the Facebook updates, the new tweets and the Blackberry updates.

But what if we don't care about social media or find all these websites a distraction? That's the question I've been trying to answer for the whole semester.

But I can't seem to find one.

Maybe you feel the same way. What if you don't want to spend your day on Twitter, on every mainstream news network, flipping through every channel, scanning every CNN breaking news update?

I know I sound like a 50-year-old newsy but I truly am not ready to sacrifice my eyes and my time to stare at a computer screen for 15 hours a day.

As much as I try to embrace a move towards new media – the more it is corroding me to my very core.

I feel as if our culture is being permeated with facts, floating around that can't be matched with any needed knowledge. We have too many options for what we are going to be paying attention to, that we don't know what makes us happy.

I refuse to turn my passion for journalism into an egotistical social media-spewing generic machine.

Where did public interest go? Now, it's personal gain.

Maybe I'm not the only one who feels this way. I hope not. I don't want to live and see the print newspaper business become an archaic way of chronicling daily history.

The web is too vast. News will be lost amongst all the tweets, toots, beeps, pokes, IM's and whatever else is making noise around out there.

Chelsea Whitton is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The great chicken parm showdown

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Staff

In a college town the size of Amherst, there are a lot of competitive restaurants on the scene that serve up a mean chicken parmesan. The unsuspecting underclassman can get lost in a sea of mediocre meatballs, everyday calzones and sub-par parmesans. Although the ingredients are simple in a chicken parm, and the preparation is standard, there are various mitigating factors that can make or break this quintessential comfort food.

The quality of ingredients that goes into this Italian classic is key to making a killer chicken parm. This article seeks to address the quality of bread used, the amount and taste of the marinara sauce, the preparation of the chicken so integral to this sandwich, portion size and the overall taste and value. There are roughly six delivery places where chicken parmesans are available in this town. For the purposes of this article, the top three in town are scrutinized in terms of their excellence. When all is said and done, use this guide to break through the sea of delivery joints and follow the light to the end of the tunnel, where the ultimate chicken parm awaits. Without further adieu, here are the results.

MATTHEW HANSON/COLLEGIAN

In the showdown for the best chicken parmesan in Amherst, Primo Pizzeria Too takes the gold with the best combination of flavors paired with the best value around.

Bronze Medal: The Sub and Pizza

The Sub and Pizza, in downtown Amherst, is a staple of any University of Massachusetts student's delivery diet – and for good reason. Their chicken parm is filling and very tasty for the median price of $6.75. The strength of this place is in its variety of toppings. If the customer so chooses to order 'the works' and get every topping imaginable, they give the most generous portions in town and don't compromise the amount of chicken in the sandwich. Other more unscrupulous restaurants may substitute the veggies for meat, and charge the same amount. Not the Sub and Pizza. They mix in their toppings too, so it's a harmonious mix of chicken, sauce, cheese and veggies with every bite. Additionally, their sauce is pretty good and the chicken quality is on par for the town. The consumer won't find a dry bit of chicken in this sandwich. It has a nice uniform coating of marinara is applied to all areas of their breaded chicken. The bread quality is a little disappointing, as it arrives flat and flaky to the door. But overall, this parm is a quality sub, and shouldn't be overlooked.

Silver Medal: Amherst House of Pizza

A newcomer to the restaurant scene in town, Amherst House of Pizza is located in North Amherst. They've been open for about two months now, and they serve up a wicked good chicken parm with some high quality ingredients, also for $6.75. Their bread is fresh, fluffy and delicious, and has no trouble containing the goodness within its soft-yet-crispy exterior. The chicken quality here is just as good as the gold medal winner. The sauce is also extraordinarily good here as well. There are two reasons why this place doesn't make #1 in the quest to the ultimate chicken parm: meager toppings and too little sauce. If one wants peppers and onions on their sub, they are out of luck here except for a few thin strips tucked away deep within the crevice of the sandwich. Additionally, there were barren, sauceless peninsulas of chicken jutting out from the sub even after asking for extra marinara. But on the whole it doesn't matter. What they lack in toppings they make up for in quality of ingredients and portion size. The taste of chicken, sauce and bread alone vaults them to the number two spot on our list. Just remember to ask for a side of marinara when ordering.

Gold Medal: Primo Pizzeria Too

At Primo's, located on Triangle St. towards the start of downtown Amherst, lies the Holy Grail of chicken parmesans. The sub here is fantastic. The bread is fresh and fluffy and plentiful, barely containing the delicious ménage a trois of chicken, sauce and cheese that awaits inside. This is some quality chicken too that simply can't be beat elsewhere. Additionally, the sauce is good and very plentiful – uniform throughout the sandwich. Veggies are placed generously throughout the sub as well, and not stuffed into a segregated area. Each bite is a heavenly mix of melted cheese, crispy fried chicken breast and savory sauce. It's 10 cents more expensive for this sandwich than the bronze and silver medal winners, but it's a dime well spent since Primo Pizzeria has the best chicken parm in Amherst.

Honorable Mention: La Piazza Pizza

Their 12-inch chicken parm, like the rest of their subs, is only $4.99. For the value alone, they must be mentioned. On its crispy exterior, the chicken parm is just a mix of fried chicken breast, a little provolone and some marinara sauce – a classic Italian meal. But the consumer has to look beyond the crust and peer into the saucy insides to gauge the true value of their chicken parmesan. There are many charlatans out there that will try and sell a second rate sub for the same price, so be wary- the distinguished honor of having the Ultimate Chicken Parmesan in Amherst goes to Primo Pizzeria Too.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Go Gaga for fashion

By Julie Holbrook
Collegian Staff

These days, there's no one with a more individual and eccentric fashion sense than Lady Gaga. Every time she makes a video, steps out on the red carpet or simply goes walking down the street, she has heads turning. Whether it be a globe around her head, a bloody wedding dress at the 2009 MTV Video Music Awards, or an interview with German Television with an ensemble entirely devoted to Kermit the Frog, Gaga definitely knows how to make a statement, and, arguably, does it better than anyone else in the business. She always wears funky looks that are very much over the top. She knows exactly how to push the envelope, and her fame is skyrocketing because of it.

Although most of her looks are not socially acceptable to wear around campus, there are a few, basic things that any college girl can incorporate into her wardrobe to get that same Gaga glam.

Gaga rocks all her looks with loud, bright and audacious colors. In each of the pictured looks, she includes various hues of the rainbow. And with the spring season in full swing, it is perfect time to bring out your best and brightest. Some of Lady Gaga's personal favorites are bold reds, bright pinks and purples and some daring yellows and greens. So no matter how loud the shade of your top may be, rock it with confidence.

After you've gotten your perfect shade, add a little sparkle to it. The majority of the time Lady Gaga is spotted in public, she has something bright and shiny on. She incorporates the idea of a "disco stick" into these looks, giving her that extra glam and shine. If you're not headed out to some red carpet event or glamorous party, you can still get your glam on while walking to class. Simply add to your look with a sequin top, jacket or shawl. Not only will all eyes be on you, but it is a perfect look for the spring season.

Like any fashionista, Lady Gaga knows the importance of accessories. Whether it's a pair of sunglasses or a crazy hat, she still pulls it off. Stylish shades have become synonymous with her name. From small circular ones, to rhinestone-studded square ones, she's worn them, day and night. It adds a little mystery to her look.

Another must-have accessory of hers is leather gloves. They give her that badass biker chick look without her having to hop on the back of a Harley. A great place to get a deal on leather gloves and more is ShopStyle.com.

Hats are another one of Lady Gaga's beloved accessories. She has rocked all types of hats, including ones resembling mushrooms, to an entire peacock's worth of feathers. But if that type of statement isn't quite your style, simply do up your look with a more subtle headpiece. Anything from a bright beanie, a chic bere, or a vintage Cloche hat will give your look extra pizazz. A great place to find Gaga-esque hats is HatsInTheBelfry.com. And if you're questioning exactly what type of headpiece to get, check out About.com's Hat Glossary.

Once you've completely Gaga-ed out the top half of your body, it's time to move on to the bottom. Now, on more than one occasion, Lady Gaga has been spotted wearing onesie-leotards with no pants. That isn't really the best look to walk to class in – so an alternative is tight, shiny bottoms. Gaga's been to known to love shiny. Ivera leggings. Those can be found anywhere from American Apparel to Urban Outfitters.

COURTESY PHOTO/COMSPRIPHOTOS.COM

Lady Gaga arguably has the most eccentric style in Hollywood and wear some of the most expensive designers available, but her style is easy to mimic on the cheap.

For shoes, the higher the heal, the better. Lady Gaga even wore a pair of 10-inch Alexander McQueen stilettos in her video for "Bad Romance." But, if you're one of the countless girls who can't rock in super high heals, a chic pair of flats will do the trick. Great flats can be found at pretty much all retail shops, but the best deals can be found at places like Target, Payless and DSW.

After you've gathered your bright shirts, shiny jackets, eccentric accessories, tight pants, and killer shoes, be sure to incorporate Lady Gaga's confidence into your look. She walks down any red carpet, wearing her confidence on her sleeve.

Julie Holbrook can be reached at jholbroo@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PHOTO/KOCHMEDIA.COM

Ubisoft's "Splinter Cell: Conviction," long-awaited by hardcore players, satisfies even the most critical fan with more diverse settings and interface tweaks allowing anyone to make the perfect sneak attack.

'Splinter Cell: Conviction' a hit with personal plot, new graphics

By Billy O'Keefe
McClatchy-Tribune

"Splinter Cell: Conviction" is a magnificently pretty example of how to present a mature game using vibrant environments and bright colors, so it's a little bittersweet that its most beautiful moments take place when the lights are off and all that color is chucked by the wayside.

But only a little bittersweet.

"Conviction," in a nutshell, is the reformed "Splinter Cell" game we've long been promised. Sam Fisher remains in the lead role forced out of retirement to address a personal vendetta that cost the lives of his best friend and daughter and he still does his best work by stealthily dispatching enemies instead of barreling forward with guns blazing.

But where previous games imposed all-or-nothing restrictions that left Sam as good as dead the instant players accidentally blew his cover, "Conviction" finally lets him give as good as he gets.

With bullets flying, "Conviction" plays like a contemporary third-person shooter: Players have powerful weaponry and environmental cover to aid their fight, and Sam is agile and tough enough to win a shootout when clandestinity fails. (During some of "Conviction's" later missions, which take place in the bright light of day, barreling forward practically is encouraged.)

But what makes "Conviction" special is how deftly it mixes run-and-gun game play with the methods that have always defined the series.

Ubisoft introduces a number of new interface tweaks to make the pursuit of a perfect sneak attack accessible to anyone, and all of them pay off.

The game's graphics go gray whenever the player is safely concealed in the shadows, and alerting enemies of Sam's location briefly marks the spot with an outline of his body. Disabling some light sources, tipping enemies off, executing an end-around and dispatching them from behind as they descend on your former position is as fun here as Jack Bauer makes it look on television, and "Conviction's" engine is flexible enough to allow players who get caught in the act to fight their way out or at least attempt a dash for cover.

Experienced "Splinter Cell" pros might not appreciate all this emphasis on accessibility, but the Realistic difficulty setting should satiate their thirst for challenge. A brilliant mission inside a parking garage, where detection isn't an option, also temporarily resurrects the original games' sensibilities with exemplary results.

"Conviction's" single-player storyline suffers a bit on the voice acting side—grunt enemies have roughly three sayings, and they spray the air repeatedly with them—but the actual plot is refreshingly personal compared to Sam's previous assignments. Considering how concentrated that storyline is, the environmental diversity, and Ubisoft's repurposing of different set pieces as stealth playgrounds, is absolutely terrific.

But "Conviction's" arguable shining moment happens during a collection of two-player (online or splitscreen) co-op missions that doubles as a prequel to "Conviction's" single-player story. (Quick aside: No competitive multiplayer. Sorry.) Neither player stars as Sam, but the full complement of his abilities lay at both players' disposal, and coordinating stealth attacks with a teammate opens the door to numerous strategic possibilities that aren't possible when fighting alone. Solo players can engage in most of this content by themselves if they prefer, but modes centered around cooperation – story-line portion included – are off-limits without a second player.

Reeves pushes UMass past URI on offense

SOFTBALL from page 8

a two-run home run and three RBIs.

"I thought Sara and Katie were great," UMass coach Elaine Sortuno said. "I thought they swung at good pitches, stayed inside the ball really well, and I was very pleased."

Reeves went 4-for-4 in the game and was named Atlantic 10 Player of the Week last Monday after going 6-for-6 at the plate in a pair of road wins against Boston University and Connecticut.

Reeves attributes her recent hitting success to intensive practices in which the Minutewomen have been working on improving.

"We've been doing a couple different things in practice that have been showing up through our line up," Reeves said. "We are just trying to put it all together as a team going into the postseason."

The first two innings of Game 1 were scoreless for both teams, but UMass managed to come alive in the bottom of the third to score a staggering six times. Kyllie Magill started things off with an RBI single, bringing UMass up 1-0. Rams pitcher Alison Hartzell struggled as the inning continued, loading the bases with no outs and then walking in a run.

The Minutewomen scored another four times, bringing the score to 6-0 before Hartzell was finally able to close out the inning.

URI responded in the top of the fourth, scoring two runs after Plourde hit a batter to open the inning and then walked another two with two outs. Two runs scored, one on an error, but UMass was able to get out of the jam after throwing out Nicole Massom at third base as she tried to advance.

The Minutewomen widened the scoring gap in the bottom of the fourth after Bettencourt hit a two-run home run over the right field fence to bring the score to 8-2. The Rams went scoreless the rest of the game, while UMass was able to tack on another run courtesy of Bettencourt in the bottom of the sixth.

Bailey Sanders replaced Plourde in the top of the seventh, but not before Plourde recorded nine strikeouts, tying former Minutewomen Danielle Henderson's record of the second most strikeouts in a season. Plourde also reached the 500 career strikeout mark. Sanders closed out the game with two strikeouts to clinch the UMass victory.

The Minutewomen are back in action tomorrow when they take on UConn at home at 5 p.m.

Kara Deyermenjian can be reached at kdeyermenj@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL STARR / COLLEGIAN

Sarah Reeves and Katie Bettencourt led UMass in Game 1. Reeves recorded two singles, one double, one run batted in, a stolen base and two runs scored, while Bettencourt went 3-for-3, including a two-run home run and three RBIs.

Towson is ranked 11th overall in the latest USILA Division I Poll, the highest the Tigers have been ranked since March 5, 2007.

Towson clinches CAA regular season title in win over PSU

Tigers secure top seed in CAA tournament beginning in May

By Michael Counos
Collegian Staff

The Towson men's lacrosse team clinched the Colonial Athletic Association regular season title with a 10-9 victory over Penn State on Saturday afternoon. The Tigers won their fifth game in a row, improving their record to 6-5 on the season and a perfect 4-0 in conference play. Towson secured the top seed in the CAA Tournament which begins on May 5.

CAA Notebook

The Tigers are ranked 11th overall in the latest United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association Division I Poll. This is the highest the team has been ranked since they were ranked 11th on March 5, 2007.

The win over the Nittany Lions was their third consecutive one-goal victory.

The Tigers gained the 10-9 lead on a goal from graduate student Christian Pastrik with six minutes, 41 seconds left in regulation. Towson's defense held Penn State to just one shot the rest of the game.

Junior attackman Tim Stratton scored two goals and had two assists in the win, while goalkeeper Travis Love had 15 saves for the Tigers. The five-game winning streak is Towson's first since 2005. The Tigers play a pair of road-games this weekend to finish up the regular season, including a non-conference game on Wednesday that will be broadcasted on ESPNU.

Hens playing defense

On Saturday, the Delaware men's lacrosse team knocked off Drexel, 10-6 at Delaware Stadium. The Blue Hens, who won their second straight game, held the No. 11-ranked Dragons to just one goal through the first 51 minutes of the game.

The Delaware offense was led by All-American Curtis Dickson who netted three goals, as well as John Austin and Nick Ebmo who each scored twice. Delaware goalkeeper Noah Fossner turned back 12 Drexel shots and held the Dragons to a single goal until the final nine minutes of the fourth quarter.

The Hens have now held opponents to six goals or less in a game four times this season. Drexel was held to its lowest goal total of the season, despite outshooting the Hens 35-34. Colin Ambler had two goals for the Dragons, while Robert Church, Brendan Glynn and Adam Dennis each contributed with a goal and an assist.

After a scoreless first quarter, the Hens took control with five goals in the second to take a 5-1 lead into the half. Delaware tacked on another seven goals over the next 26 minutes to secure the victory.

Delaware's head coach Bob Shillinglaw, in his 32nd year coaching, won his 500th career contest at Delaware Stadium.

The Hens face Penn State in their next matchup, and with a win over the Nittany Lions, Delaware would secure the No. 2 seed in the CAA tournament.

Rankings and awards

Curtis Dickson, who netted three goals in Delaware's victory over Drexel on Saturday, was named the Milt Roberts Most Valuable Player of the Game as he extended his goal streak to 22 games and his point-scoring streak to 53 straight.

Dickson was also named the CAA Men's Lacrosse Player of the Week for the second straight week. He entered the game leading the nation in total points and added on to his season goal total of 48, just two shy of becoming the first UD player to reach 50 goals in a season since All-American John Grant scored 56 in 1999.

Since Towson goalkeeper Travis Love became the starter on March 16 against Navy, he has helped his team to a 6-2 record. Over the last eight games that Love has started, he has turned away 58.2 percent of shots on goal, which ranks ninth in the NCAA Division 1. His .583 save percentage is helping lead a Tiger defense that has allowed less than 10 goals in seven of his games started.

UMass rookie Will Manny earned CAA Men's Rookie of the Week honors with his performance in the 13-12 upset against No. 10 Georgetown this weekend. Manny had a hat trick as well as two assists to extend his team leading points total to 41. Currently, four CAA teams are nationally ranked in the USILA Division 1 poll. The Tigers are at No. 11, Massachusetts is at No. 9, Drexel is at No. 13 and Hofstra is at No. 15.

Michael Counos can be contacted at mcounos@student.umass.edu

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2010

The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:

Thursday, April 29 @ 6:00pm in Bartlett 302

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
- Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
- One Way Rentals
- Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
- Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale

The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per inch
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
- PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
- PERRY APTS.
- 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
- LANTERN COURT APTS.
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.
400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

Off The Wall Games
WARHAMMER 40,000
Legacy Tournament May 8th
Scan Offthewallgamestore.com for details.
MAGIC The Gathering
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russell St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS

Tongue Some Lung

					3		9
	2				7			5
	6			9				8
6			4			7	5	3
	9	8					6
7				6	4		1
9						5	3

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal By Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
If you are a person with a rare medical condition, then you should know that it is okay to get your testicles removed.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Are you depressed? Then you must have seen the new trailer for "The Twilight Saga: Eclipse."

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
You shop for groceries like Winona Ryder shops at Bloomingdales.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Telling someone that you want to do terrible things to their Pokemon will lead to a life of cock-fighting. Yup.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
You have got too many problems when you start opening wine bottles with your toilet seat.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Sooner or later you are going to find out that even your sex can have training wheels.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
We are officially living in a world where the movie, "Face-Off" is possible. When are you going to trade faces with Nick Cage.

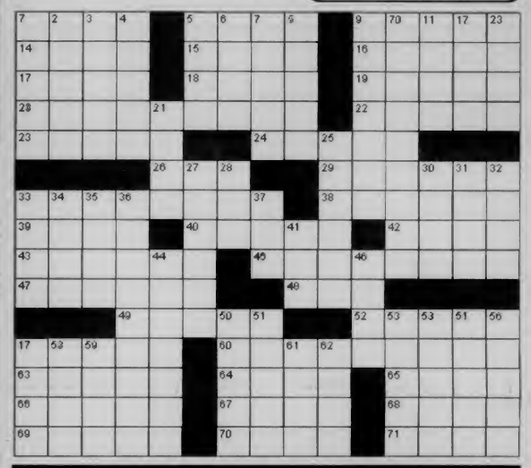
virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
No matter what happens to Brett Michaels, his hair will live on and on.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
If you do not get your act together then you are going to spend the night in D-Bo's chicken coupe.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Hopefully the new Freddy Krueger flick will answer Kelly Rowland's question, "what's with the butter knives?"

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Charlie the Unicorn wants to know where his kidneys are. Do not make him call Tom Cruise into this mess!

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
What was with those salacious dreams with you and some questionable manuevers with the creepy Axe Chocolate Guy?



WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

HOLY CROSSWORD, BATMAN!

ACROSS
1. Smooch
5. Exchange
9. Run off to marry
14. Once again
15. Not wild
16. Energize
17. Sheet of glass
18. Inspiration
19. Alter
20. Ruthless
22. After dinner candies
23. What we chew with
24. Article of faith
26. Before
29. Sign up
33. Cassock
38. Record player
39. Arch type
40. Take as one's own
42. A title of address
43. Called
45. Thick dark syrup
47. Ancient ascetic
48. Apiece
49. Tiny parallel grooves
52. S S S S
57. Without delay
60. Being on a very small scale
63. Beauty parlor
64. Ends a prayer
65. Coastal raptor
66. Unsuitable
67. Nerd
68. Matured
69. Concur
70. Likelihood
71. Not more

DOWN
1. Not working
2. Silly
3. Detect
4. Used a broom
5. Mix
6. Dry riverbed
7. Catkin
8. Wampum
9. Chemical
10. Infinite
11. Roasting appliance
12. Confined
13. Concludes
21. Throat-clearing sound
25. Snuggle
27. A literate person
28. Conclusion
30. Colored part of an eye
31. Arid
32. "Little pig-gies"
33. Cast a ballot
34. Auspices
35. Collections
36. It helps you see the stars
37. A male cat
41. Dad
44. Accord
46. Neighborhood
50. Insect stage
51. Directed
53. Rob
54. Billow
55. Gray sea eagles
56. Beginnings of plants
57. Largest continent
58. Twinge
59. Winged
61. Require
62. Writing fluids

Summer Session Just Got 50% BIGGER!!!
NEW! 3 Sessions:
- Session I: May 17 - June 7
- Session II: June 8 - July 13
- Session III: July 14 - August 17
Classes fill up quickly...REGISTER NOW
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

HARK! A VAGRANT By Kate Beaton harkavagrant.com

CLASSIFIEDS

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birth-right.org

Condom break? Come to Tapestry Health for emergency contraception & STD testing. 27 Pray St, Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

EMPLOYMET

Summer Jobs with Enviroment Massachusetts $10-15/hr. Career Opportunities & Benefits www.jobsfortheenviroment.org Call Abby 1-800-57-EARTH

Bartending $300/day potential. No expenence necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Bartenders Needed EARN UP TO $250 PER DAY FT/PT No Exp. Req. Will Train Call NOW 877-408-1078

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. 413-256-0772

WANTED

Are you ADOPTED? Mentors (males especially) needed for adopted children. Call NOW, start Fall. Academic Credit available.Jen Dolan 545-0547 jdolan@psych.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MAXWELL PARK / COLLEGIAN

Sophomore pitcher Sara Plourde struck out nine batter in six innings in Game 1 against Rhode Island, making her the third Minutewomen all-time to hit the career 500-strikeout mark.

UMass sweeps Rams

By Kara Deyhrmenjian
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team swept Rhode Island in yesterday's double-header at the UMass Softball Complex, 9-2 in Game 1 and 3-1 in Game 2. The wins are number 30 and 31 for the Minutewomen, bringing them to 31-7-1 on the season, while the Rams fall to 17-28-0.

UMass	3
URI	1
UMass	9
URI	2

In Game 2 of the afternoon, UMass came out strong as senior Whitney Williams hit a two-out, two-run home run off Rams pitcher Jayshree Narendran in the bottom of the second. URI was unable to get on the board before the Minutewomen struck again when Williams was hit by a pitch, stole second and pinch runner Cyndi Matthes stole home in the top of the fourth, increasing the lead to 3-0.

The score remained 3-0 going into the top of the seventh inning and pitcher Sara Plourde was just half an inning away from throwing her sixth no-hitter of the season, but the Rams managed to gain some momentum.

Although Plourde struck out the first batter, Leah DiBussolo reached on an error after Melissa Wilson singled up the middle with one out to register the first Rams hit of the outing. Another single put the tying run at first base and URI scored its only run of the game after Williams made an error at shortstop. Amanda Sbei then stepped to the plate with the bases loaded but was unable to deliver as she grounded out to secure the UMass victory.

"I wasn't nervous towards the end of the second game because I have faith in Sara and our defense, and I knew we would be able to make the plays and get out of the jam," first baseman Sarah Reeves said.

Game 1 was highlighted by impressive hitting by Reeves and sophomore Katie Bettencourt. Reeves recorded two singles, one double, one run batted in, a stolen base, and two runs scored, while Bettencourt went 3-for-3, including

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Plourde on track to move past Henderson

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Ever since pitcher Sara Plourde became the NCAA leader in strikeouts, her name has been associated with Massachusetts softball alums Danielle Henderson and Brandice Balschmiter.

During Game 1 of yesterday's double-header with Rhode Island, the sophomore broke two records, recording nine strikeouts in six innings. Plourde became the third Minutewoman of all-time to hit the career 500-strikeout mark and passed Henderson's 1998 strikeout total of 430, who eventually led her team to a third College World Series.

Plourde is currently 25 strikeouts away from reaching Henderson's all-time mark of 465, which she set in 1999.

"It shows that my work is paying off," Plourde said of her accomplishment. "I just have to keep pushing and making more challenges for myself."

UMass coach Elaine Sortino, however, was surprised to learn that her sophomore became the No. 2 single-season strikeout leader.

"That's great, I guess. Good for her," Sortino said.

Plourde reached 430 strikeouts in the third inning, which was her 228th inning pitched this season. Henderson reached the same mark junior year in 256 innings.

During the former ace's senior season, she broke her own record in 234 innings. Although Plourde is on pace to break Henderson's record in 1999 before the May 5th game against Boston College, she will set the record in significantly more innings.

However, she still averages 12.94 strikeouts per seven innings, second to Henderson's 1999 average of 13.91 strikeouts.

Plourde's short tenure with the Maroon and White already put her in the career record books as well as the third player to reach 500 strikeouts.

The only pitchers to reach that achievement are Henderson (1,348) and Balschmiter (1,218). Before UMass hosted the Rams, Plourde was tied with Kelly Daut, the Minutewomen's predecessor to Henderson.

Plourde is on pace to break Henderson's career record if she continues to play as much as she has this season.

Sortino believes that despite Plourde's accomplishments, it's a little premature to be comparing her to Henderson, who pitched for Team U.S.A. softball during the 2000 Olympics.

"[Plourde] is a very different kind of pitcher," Sortino said. "I think Sara is still a little young. I think Danielle had a little bit more control, but she was also in her junior and senior year when these things started to happen."

Although she leads the country in strikeouts and is the third UMass player to reach 30 wins in school history, she's also issued 78 walks this season. Plourde struggled with finishing the game at times in the seventh inning.

In Game 2 against the Rams, Plourde allowed two hits after pitching six and one-third no-hit innings. But Sortino has no complaints about her progress as a sophomore.

She stepped into the role as the team's ace after senior Bailey Sanders struggled to replace Balschmiter's production early in the season. Despite pitching just 49.2 innings in 2009, she made significant progress in her second season with the Minutewomen.

Plourde pitched her first game on Feb. 12 against North Carolina State, where she had a shutout with 10 strikeouts through five innings. Her first complete game shutout came two weeks later on Feb. 27 against Illinois State where she had her first no-hitter and fanned 18 batters.

The sophomore has five losses on the season and her last came when she gave up two runs to Long Beach State on March 21.

Plourde established her presence primarily with her speed and pitch variation, focusing mainly on using her rise ball to get batters out.

"We're very pleased to have herwhere she is as a sophomore, especially considering she didn't play very much last year," Sortino said. "She's just coming into herself and this one's had to do a lot this year so I feel pretty pleased."

The closest pitcher to catching Plourde in strikeouts this season is fellow Atlantic 10 pitcher Jen Mineau, who plays for Fordham. She currently has 414 strikeouts this season and is the only other player with more than 400.

The two pitchers dueled earlier this season, but Plourde held the advantage in both games as UMass topped the Rams, 3-2, in Game 1, and 2-0, in Game 2 on April 3.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Leigh, Fredette, Cusick earn conference accolades for play

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

For the first time in the history of the Massachusetts baseball program, three Minutemen athletes swept weekly Atlantic 10 accolades.

Senior Bryan Leigh, junior Eric Fredette and freshman Ryan Cusick earned A-10 Pitcher, Player, and Rookie of the Week honors, respectively, based on their stellar performances on the diamond.

UMass (10-21, 7-8 A-10) claimed a series win over Saint Louis after sweeping its doubleheader on Saturday and split two games earlier in the week, losing to Central Connecticut on Tuesday, 17-12, and topping Harvard on Wednesday, 15-11.

Leigh (3-4), the right-hander from Somerset, Massachusetts, paced the Minutemen on the mound in its 12-0 win over the Billikens in Game 2 of the doubleheader. The hurler threw eight scoreless innings and registered a career-high 11 strikeouts, while allowing four hits and two walks.

This is Leigh's second straight week garnering A-10 Pitcher of the Week honors, as he tossed two complete games last week to earn his first wins of the season.

Since UMass coach Mike Stone returned the senior into the starting rotation, he has gone undefeated, pitching 26 innings with an earned run average of 1.73.

Leigh's first start came on March 17 against Oklahoma as he took the loss after allowing five runs (three earned) over seven innings and fanning nine batters in an 8-4 loss. He now carries a 5.44 season ERA over 41.1 innings pitched (8.1 IP in relief) with 32 strikeouts.

Fredette led the Minutemen offense this past week, hitting .636 (14-for-22) with a double, two home runs, 10 runs batted in and seven runs scored.

"I know that I have great hitters behind me," Fredette said to UMass Athletics after the doubleheader victories on Saturday. "I'm just trying to extend the inning, find a way on base."

The second baseman drove in a career-high four RBIs against the Blue Devils and managed to get multiple hits in four out of five games on the week. Fredette highlighted his week with a game-tying three-run home run in Game 1 of the doubleheader against St. Louis to propel UMass to a 10-9 win.

The Connecticut native ranks third in the A-10 and first on the UMass team in hitting, boasting a .415 batting average. His current hitting streak of 13 games is the longest by a Minutemen player this season. In 30 games this season, Fredette has 49 hits, including four home runs and 22 RBIs with a slugging percentage of .568.

Cusick complimented Fredette in his lead-off position in the UMass lineup. The designated hitter had a .460 on-base percentage over the five-game stretch, hitting 9-for-22 while drawing two walks. He also scored a team-high nine runs on the week.

Cusick had his best game during the series clincher over the Billikens, going 3-for-5 and crossing home plate twice. It was Cusick's walk in the eighth inning of Game 1 against Saint Louis that set the stage for the Minutemen comeback, and a leadoff double nearly led to a successful rally in the eighth inning of Friday's game as well.

UMass outscored its opponents 52-31 on the week, going 3-2 and earning its third-straight series victory over conference foes.

Stone hopes that his team's individual efforts will continue to materialize into wins as they close out the regular season schedule.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

JEFF ROSATELLI / COLLEGIAN

Leigh, Fredette, and Cusick recieved Atlantic 10 honors for their play last week, making it the first sweep of awards in school history.

Charlotte's Ryan Rivers is second on the 49ers with a .397 batting average and has registered 11 home runs along with 50 runs batted in.

Charlotte leading A-10, Rivers supplying power and average

A-10 Notebook

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

In the very competitive Atlantic 10 conference, only the Charlotte baseball team can truly say it is the cream of the crop.

The conference-leading 49ers (29-9, 12-3 A-10) average nearly 10 runs per game. The individual statistics for the 49ers jump off the page, as they feature seven players with at least a .300 batting average.

Leading the charge for Charlotte is junior Ryan Rivers, who was just awarded A-10 Player of the Week honors and is second on the team with a .397 average. It's his power numbers though, that help propel his team to victory on a normal basis. Rivers has started all 38 games this year, registering 11 home runs and 50 runs batted in to go along with his robust average. The 6-foot-5, 230 pound Rivers is poised to have an even more productive year than his 2009 campaign, when he hit .313 with 18 home runs and 65 RBIs in 52 games.

Right behind Charlotte is George Washington (21-19, 10-5 A-10). Last weekend, the Colonials hosted the 49ers to a three-game series and lost, 2-1. After losing the first game, 7-4, George Washington turned to its ace, junior Eric Cantrell, to turn in a solid effort. He did just that, throwing eight innings while allowing three earned runs on eight strike outs.

The 132-pitch victory solidified Cantrell as one of the top pitchers in the conference. In 10 starts this year, Cantrell has compiled league-leading statistics in almost every major pitching category. He currently leads the A-10 in earned run average (2.99), wins (seven), and strikeouts (83). Cantrell is also second in the league in innings pitched (69.1) and batting average against (.234). Unfortunately for George Washington, it dropped the rubber game of the series the following day, 8-5.

Although the 49ers and Colonials are favorites to win the conference, one rival could spoil it for them – Rhode Island. The Rams (20-18, 9-6 A-10) currently sit fourth in the division behind Charlotte, George Washington and Saint Joseph's. However, Rhode Island is also the only A-10 team to defeat Charlotte in a series. The series began on April 10th when the Rams hosted the 49ers for a double-header, which was split. The following day, the Rams defeated the 49ers, 5-3.

Recently, Rhode Island is riding the hot play of its junior designated hitter Kyle Borden, who was 9-for-19 (.474) while driving in and scoring nine runs over a five-game span. The Rams went 3-2 over that period, with two victories coming over conference rival Xavier.

Rhode Island's next conference series is this weekend, when it will travel to Pennsylvania for a three-game set against lowly Duquesne (8-33, 4-11 A-10). The Rams will have to wait until the final weekend of regular season play to see how they fare against George Washington, when they host the Colonials from May 20-22.

The top four and bottom four teams in the A-10 are currently separated by six teams that own either an 8-7 or 7-8 record. Those teams include: Fordham, La Salle, Saint Louis, Xavier, Dayton and Massachusetts. With six spots available for the A-10 championships and the regular season coming down the home stretch, the race is on for those teams.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

WINDY HIGH: 63 LOW: 34 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2010

Survey finds e-book usage lagging

There has been much debate of late as to whether e-readers, smartphones, and other new technologies will revolutionize how textbooks and printed material are delivered to students.

Some believe hard copy textbooks are on the path to obsolescence and that electronic books, or e-books, will soon prevail as the standard form of text in this age of ever-expanding technology.

As an honors project for a Statistics 240 class at the University of Massachusetts, a group of students conducted a survey of fellow UMass students about their thoughts on switching to e-books and their current textbook preferences. Their results did not confirm the widely-discussed trend towards a paperless experience for students.

A majority of courses still use hard copy textbooks, the group found, and out of the students' survey group, only between five and 15 percent of students had any exposure to electronic texts at all.

Among those who said they use an electronic book, less than one in five students said they actually read the book.

So, then: does purchasing an electronic book save individuals money?

For an electronic version of a book, students pay about 60 percent of the cost of a hard copy textbook, but, conversely, cannot sell it back for profit. Additionally, more than 50 percent of those who use an electronic version said they need to print the material at some point.

According to researcher and UMass student Clara Chekanov, the group also found that there may be a link between owning a physical copy of a book and reading it.

In the study, users of hard copy textbooks read them more frequently than electronic versions. Between 55 and 65 percent of those in the study group who used hard copy textbooks read them on a regular basis.

Furthermore, the group came to some findings which may be disappointing to academics on either side of the digital discourse.

The group observed that fewer and fewer students purchase textbooks in either form for their courses. Chekanov said her group's results show that between 60 and 70 percent of students indicate cost as a major factor preventing them from purchasing a book, online or in print.

Chekanov said the group also asked students to describe their version of an ideal class. A majority said they would prefer PowerPoint presentations as opposed to taking their own notes.

However, the group showed no preference regarding online or written homework. More than half believed attending lectures is the most helpful way to adequately digest their material. Finally, between 70 and 77 percent of students felt that personal response systems (PRS) would help them become engaged when they are used for checking comprehension of material.

Overall, Chekanov said the group's results provide "valuable insight into the components of a student's ideal class," and that the group's conclusions "do not support the belief that hard copy textbooks are fading and that electronic books are increasing in frequency."

– Collegian News Staff

MAXWELL PARK / COLLEGIAN

A recent student survey found that few at the University of Massachusetts use e-books for their studies. Here, a student in the University Store turns the page of an e-book on an Apple iPad.

Obama administration OKs Cape Wind plan

By Renee Schoof
McClatchy Newspapers

Interior Secretary Ken Salazar on Wednesday approved the nation's first offshore wind farm, the 130-turbine Cape Wind project off Cape Cod, Mass., and said that the power of strong winds over the Atlantic Ocean would be an important part of the U.S. drive to reduce dependence on fossil fuels.

European countries have been building offshore wind farms for 20 years, and China is building its first, off Shanghai. Other U.S. states along the Atlantic Coast and the Great Lakes also are looking into building wind farms to produce large amounts of electricity.

The Cape Wind project, however, has been hung up for nine years as opponents – landowners, two Native American tribes and the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation – objected to its cost and its impact on views.

(MCT)

Although Cape Wind's fate is not related to other proposed U.S. offshore wind farms, many wind energy supporters hailed the decision as a good sign for the future of renewable energy development. The Interior Department set new rules for offshore wind last year and said it was working to streamline the permit process.

The decision on Cape Wind comes a month after the Obama administration approved more offshore oil and gas drilling. At a press conference, Salazar was asked about an oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico from a deepwater rig that exploded last week.

Salazar said the Interior Department was watching the spill carefully. He added that "my own view" is that the country needed to move away from fossil fuels.

"Our overdependence on fossil fuels has created a problem we have in this country which has endangered our national security and at the same time has created the challenge we have with responding to the warming of the planet," Salazar said.

"We will continue to use fossil fuels, yes, in an appropriate way, but we need to transition to a clean energy future," he said.

Salazar also said the United States is no longer leading in renewable energy technology. "We don't want to be second," he said, and so the government also would support efforts to get other offshore wind projects built.

Offshore wind farms have been proposed in proposed off Rehoboth Beach, Del.; Boston; Atlantic Beach, Atlantic City and Avalon in New Jersey; in North Carolina's Eastern Pamlico Sound; in Lake Erie off Cleveland; off Block Island and Sakonnet in Rhode Island; and off Galveston, Texas.

The Alliance to Protect Nantucket Sound said opponents would attempt to stop the wind farm in court.

"We will not stand by and allow our treasured public lands to be marred forever by a corporate giveaway to private industrial energy developers," the group's president and CEO, Audra Parker, said in a statement.

Plans for Cape Wind call for construction to begin within a year. Its 130 turbines would be placed in a grid pattern over a 25-square-mile area of Nantucket Sound. The closest turbine to

See CAPE WIND on page 3

'American Splendor' author Harvey Pekar to speak today

Legendary graphic novelist Harvey Pekar will be speaking to students about his life and work today at 5 p.m. in Flavin Auditorium (SOM 137). The 70-year-old Pekar rose to prominence with his pioneering work on the autobiographical comic "American Splendor" in the late 1970s, which broke ground by telling the story of his life as a file clerk living in a working-class neighborhood of Cleveland, Ohio with his trademark voice and unique sense of humor.

Pekar worked with some of America's finest underground cartoonists of the era, including Frank Stack and fellow Cleveland native Robert Crumb. He has since moved on to make a mark on many different mediums over the course of his career, including film, the Internet and television.

Pekar co-wrote and appeared in the 2003 film adaptation of "American Splendor," which won awards at both the Sundance and Cannes film festivals and starred Oscar-winner Paul Giamatti as Pekar. The film used a combination of documentary and narrative techniques, and was widely praised by critics.

Pekar's appearance on campus is preceded by a series of local events over the past two days, including a Tuesday screening of "American Splendor" at Flavin, and a book signing yesterday evening in Northampton.

– Collegian News Staff

Harvey Pekar will be speaking on campus at 5 p.m.

Hitting a high note

MAXWELL SPARK / COLLEGIAN

Senior shortstop Whitney Williams, seen here singing the national anthem before a game, has been singing since she was four-years-old, and hopes to pursue a musical career after she graduates this spring.

ARTS & LIVING

BarStool Bro talks beer, blogs

Dave "El Presidente" Portnoy, founder of the popular sports blog BarstoolSports.com sat down with the Daily Collegian's Justin Gagnon over a beer to talk about the site's popularity.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Williams makes music and plays

Whitney Williams has been an integral part of the Minutewomen's success this season. But she also enjoys singing and hopes to pursue a career in the music industry.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Jack Ho argues that we need to get past our outward presumptions of one another and stop holding loaded words against each other.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

If you missed Sunday's Spring Concert, go online to DailyCollegian.com to check out a slideshow from Photo Editor Matthew Harrison.

Renaissance Festival
Open Mic Shakespeare, Swords, Games, Scenes, Music, Food
Sunday, May 2nd 11-5 pm
Renaissance Center, 650 E. Pleasant Street.
FREE!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 62

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elese Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Senior Producer Sara Cody
Senior Producer Pete Rizzo

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian a published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sam Butterfield

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

After Republican opposition, finance reform moves forward

By David Lightman
McClatchy Newspapers

The Senate agreed Wednesday to end a three-day stalemate and move ahead with formal consideration of historic legislation to overhaul the nation's financial regulatory system.

Efforts to craft a bipartisan agreement broke up Wednesday, with Republicans, who had stalled the bill, getting few if any concessions and perhaps starting to suffer some political consequences.

The Senate next will begin debating and voting on possible changes to the massive bill, which would order the biggest overhaul since the Great Depression of how the government oversees financial institutions.

The Senate should take about a month to work through the legislation, and if it passes, it will have to be reconciled with a different version that the House of Representatives passed last year. Then each chamber must pass identical versions before President Barack Obama could sign it into law, which is unlikely before July.

Senate Banking Committee Chairman Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., promised a Senate debate that would allow time for all points of view. "It is time for debate to begin," he said, "and it must be a serious, vigorous debate."

Republicans remained guarded about the bill. "I continue to be concerned about several provisions," said Sen. Susan Collins of Maine, who is in the small band of party moderates that Democrats hope to win over.

The bill would make it easier for the government to move fast to dissolve troubled financial companies that pose a risk to the economy, and would create a tough new consumer-protection agency to keep an eye on mortgages and other forms of consumer credit.

It also would require big banks to spin off divisions that trade in derivatives – exotic financial instruments that helped cause the recent deep recession – and would bar them from proprietary trading of them for their own accounts if they also trade on behalf of clients.

Derivatives are bets between private parties. Their value is derived from price movements of underlying assets.

The fight over regulating derivatives is expected to be one of the more unpredictable battles in coming weeks. Some Democrats think that their colleagues have gone too far, and Sen. Richard Shelby of Alabama, the top Republican on the Banking Committee, complained that the plan that the Democratic-dominated Senate Agriculture Committee approved last week was developed "behind closed doors."

"The provisions as currently drafted would have far-reaching and devastating effects on these businesses and our economy, increasing the cost of nearly every product we use and negatively impacting job growth," Shelby warned.

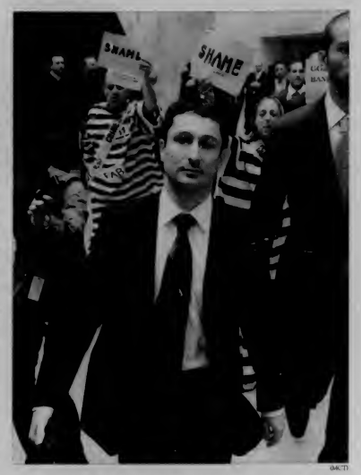
Republicans tried to show some gain from their three-day delay, when they blocked three motions to proceed with formal debate by maintaining united opposition. Some Republicans said they anticipated that Democrats would abandon the idea of a $50 billion bank-financed fund to help liquidate troubled institutions, though Dodd declined to abandon it in his negotiation with Shelby.

Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky boasted that the Dodd-Shelby negotiations had produced changes in the draft bill "to end taxpayer bailouts and the dangerous notion that certain financial institutions are too big to fail."

Democrats, and independent analysts, said the bill never included terms for taxpayer bailouts.

Republicans were unable to tout any other major gains. They were concerned that the new consumer agency would inflict onerous regulatory requirements on small businesses and make it difficult for them to attract investment.

Dodd called that a false claim, but Shelby remained concerned.



"This bill still contains a sprawling new consumer protection bureau that will find and force its way into facets of our economy that had nothing to do with the housing crisis," Shelby said. "This massive new bureaucracy would have unchecked authority to regulate whatever it wants, whenever it wants, however it wants."

One reason Republicans gave up their fight Wednesday appeared to be a sense that they were losing the political game, particularly after Tuesday's well-publicized Senate hearings featuring executives from Goldman Sachs, the beleaguered New York investment company. Senators flogged the bankers, charging foul play, and Republicans ran a risk of negative public reaction by blocking a bill aimed at policing Wall Street.

"I don't think this helps Republicans, and it could have blown up on Democrats," former Senate Republican leader Trent Lott of Mississippi said about the Senate's gridlock and failure to move the overhaul legislation. "Out in the real world, people say, 'What is systemic risk?' or 'What is a derivative?' They want something done."

Evans Witt, the chief executive officer at Princeton Survey Research, a political research company, saw the GOP as wounded more than Democrats were.

"If you say something long enough, it becomes true. Democrats have been saying from Day One, 'Republicans are blocking this,' and fair or unfair, accurate or inaccurate, that's become the litany."

Fabrice Tourre, named in the SEC fraud case against Wall St. firm Goldman Sachs, was hounded by protesters Wednesday en route to the Senate.

Tourre and other representatives from Goldman Sachs came before the Senate ten days after the government accused the firm of fraud. The Goldman Sachs case comes as Congress debates a reform of financial regulations.

IMPORTANT NOTICE
REGARDING YOUR STUDENT REFUND

THE STUDENT REFUND PROCESS IS CHANGING!

The Bursar's Office is Going Green Again! Beginning in MAY 2010, student refunds will ONLY be automatically distributed to students who are enrolled in the University's Excess Express (direct deposit) service. This is the final phase of our office's paper-less processing initiative to provide faster service, sustainable business practices, and elimination of long lines at the office!

Students who are eligible for a refund (i.e., have a credit balance on their student account that is refundable) will automatically receive a student refund ONLY if they have signed up for Excess Express (direct deposit). Students who do not have an active Excess Express enrollment will have their balances remain as a credit toward subsequent charges.

Students who need a paper check will need to complete a request form for each refund available on their account. This form and accompanying instructions will be available on the Bursar's website.

Sign up today for Excess Express through your SPIRE access to expedite your future student refunds. More information on Excess Express can be found on the Bursar's website at www.umass.edu/bursar/.

Poets jam at open mic

Senior Michael McSweeney reads a piece of original poetry at the Student Union Art Gallery's open mic Wednesday night.

Write for News
We will find you.
news@dailycollegian.com

Cape Wind project approved by Obama admin. Wednesday land will be about five miles from Cape Cod. The turbines will supply a maximum of 468 megawatts of electricity, about the output of a medium-sized coal-fired electricity plant, or enough for about 200,000 homes in Massachusetts.

CAPE WIND from page 1

The Interior Department said it would reduce carbon dioxide emissions by the equivalent of taking 175,000 cars off the road.

The developer, Energy Management Inc., said the wind turbines would appear a half-inch above the horizon from the nearest beach.

Salazar said the developer was required to reduce the number of turbines from an original plan for 170, reconfigure their arrangement and paint them off-white to reduce their visibility.

Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick and governors of five other Atlantic states wrote to Salazar arguing that if he blocked Cape Wind on the grounds of historic preservation, it would be difficult to get an offshore wind permit approved anywhere on the East Coast.

Patrick said the cost of conventional electricity has gone up in recent years and that the wind project would benefit consumers because the costs wouldn't fluctuate.

Cape Wind has not yet signed a power purchase agreement, and so it's not known how much its electricity will cost.

"We hope that today's decision on Cape Wind will help set in motion a series of actions leading to additional American offshore wind projects," Michael Hirshfield, senior vice president of the conservation group Oceana, said in a statement. "It sends a clear signal to turbine manufacturers and supporting companies that the U.S. means business on clean energy and climate change."

Michael Fry, director of conservation advocacy for the American Bird Conservancy and chair of an Interior Department advisory committee, criticized the decision.

Fry said that not enough was known about the potential for bird collisions and that the site is a prime foraging area for sea ducks and near a breeding ground for endangered roseate terns.

Rep. William Delahunt, a Democrat who represents Cape Cod, and Sen. Scott Brown, R-Mass., said they were in favor of wind power as an energy source, but opposed Cape Wind. Brown said that Nantucket Sound was a national treasure that should not be used for wind power, and that the wind farm would harm Cape Cod's tourism and fishing.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., a longtime leader in the Senate for measures to reduce the threat of climate change, said Salazar made his decision after weighing all concerns. Kerry said he supported it.

The planned Cape Wind project off the coast of Mass. will supply enough electricity to power about 200,000 homes in the state.

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

STOP!
Euthanasia = Felony

UMass Students For Life
Presents:
MARY MEEHAN
"Heading Euthanasia off at the Pass"

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2010
Campus Center 123 - UMass
Free & Open to the Public
Q & A Session to follow lecture umasstudentsforlife.com

Thursday, April 29
All DCs from 5 – 9pm

Taste of Home
Recipes submitted from UMass Families in the Spring of 2010

BERKSHIRE
Chicken Stew & Biscuits — Jeffrey Family
Pulled Pork Sandwich — Healy Family
Vegetable Lasagna — Brady Family
Szechuan Green Beans — Snyder Family
Feta & Spinach Stfd Mushrooms — Souza Family
Meatballs & Macaroni — Cohen Family

HAMPSHIRE
Mulligatawny Soup — Lynch Family
Crunchy Chicken — Considine Family
Eggplant Beef Stew — Sabouri Family
Meatballs & Sauce — Jacob Family
Mustard Crusted Pork Chops — Mannello Family

FRANKLIN
Beef Stew — Murphy Family
Cheese Lasagna — Joyce Family
Sweet & Sour Meatballs — Mazar Family
Linguini w/Clam Sauce — Bilgrien Family
Baked Chicken — Joyce Family

WORCESTER
Lemon Chicken — Walker Family
Baked Macaroni & Cheese — Orlando Family
Spinach Pie — Butterfield Family
Breaded Fried Zucchini — Buda Family
Mashed Potato Casserole — Henley Family

DESSERTS IN ALL DCs
Noodle Kugle — Brenker Family
Peppermint Fudge — Souza Family
Rhubarb Cream Cake — Berkowitz Family

Restaurants Ivy
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ballgame. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

First-hand Palestinian tragedy

Ahmed El-Shafei

The tragic story that has plagued my family for decades is a cruel past you should sympathize with. In our peaceful neighborhood, groups of homeless people began showing up, seeking shelter and refuge. Because it was a terrible time and we were good people, my family and neighbors welcomed them in with open arms. We shared our land, ate the same food and everything was great.

That all changed when the family we had taken in decided to take over our house with force. They wanted to secure a life of their own – with their own culture and practices. We hadn't banned them from doing anything, but somehow they felt compelled to act towards us with anger and violence.

Thrown into the streets, my grandfather decided this was unacceptable and headed down to the town hall to restore our estate by means of law enforcement. To his amazement, town hall officials had been bribed by these homeless people not to take action. They said there was nothing they could do in their power and it was none of their concern.

This was a recurring theme in our neighborhood. News had come to us that neighbors of ours had decided to take matters into their own hands and protect their family homes at any costs. They failed, and in the process they were mutilated, raped and ultimately defeated in their cause.

To scare the rest of us off, the homeless waged relentless attacks on homes that were yet to be overtaken. Not only that, these homeless people (not so homeless, anymore), decided to inform others of their kind that this neighborhood was all for them, and that they should all come and live together. They began sectioning the overthrown homeowners into walled ghettos – similar to what the Germans did to the Jewish people (and others of unwanted origins).

The Palestinians are not the terrorists. They are freedom fighters who lost all hope ever since America and the UN turned their backs on them.

Lacking oversight from a legitimate law enforcement authority, these people began one of the worst movements in human history – apartheid. With nowhere to go, the original owners of this community were forced into uninhabitable lands. They were cut off from the world, with little or no supplies moving in and out of the ghettos.

The story I am telling is not of my family's, but of the Palestinian people.

Would you do any and everything possible to avenge your family's loss if this was your story? Would you want to take back what is rightfully yours?

By now you are probably dismissing my story as a racial attack on the Jewish people and the state of Israel. It definitely isn't. It is in the interests of whoever controls the media to shun the truth about one of the most appalling atrocities of our times.

The same people – the people who are trying by whatever means possible to gain back their land – are branded as terrorists. The Palestinians are not the terrorists. They are freedom fighters who lost all hope ever since America and the U.N. turned their backs on them.

Currently, movement is increasing within the political arena, with regards to America's relationship with Israel. General Petraeus and the White House openly acknowledge that America's unnecessary babying of an unlawful and unjust state in the heart of the Arab world is destructive to American interests in the region. It is also why most of the world detests American foreign policy.

One false argument I always hear: Arabs seek to destroy Israel. Now, there could be some valid truth in that. However, many Arab countries have a lasting peace with Israel, despite many, many reasons not to. Why should Arab countries engage in peace with Israel when history and documented events justly and categorically prove Israel is dependent on aggression?

Israel has waged many wars against its Arab neighbors. Also, Israel's founders (and many of its current right-wing extremist cabinet) believe that not only is the land they hold today theirs, but that the Zionist aims of a greater Israel (from the Nile river in Egypt to the Euphrates in Iraq) are part of their future plans for their country. Over my – and my brothers' – dead bodies. Israel, as documented by numerous American governments and politically aware individuals, does not want peace.

Israel has committed genocide and crimes against humanity: killing Palestinians, Egyptians, Jordanians, Syrians and Lebanese alike. Their highly regarded IDF (Israeli Defense Force) takes pride in taking the lives of tormented children, women and elders.

Israel is the only country in the Middle East with nuclear weapons.

Israel has defied many, many United Nations resolutions, including U.N. resolution 242, which clearly states that East Jerusalem is and always will be a Palestinian territory.

Israel went to the extent of claiming cultural Arab food as theirs. People! Hummus, Tahina and Falafel are all Arab food. It is ridiculous that they claim it is theirs – disgusting actually.

Many voices from within Israel (obviously of non-Zionists) are dismayed by the actions of their government and the United States'.

What does that mean for us here in America? According to "Jewish Watch for Peace," America provides the state of Israel with nearly $15 billion annually – a hefty aid package, if you ask me.

Seventy-five percent of that money is used to purchase American weapons – allowing more room for lobbying in Congress. While this seems like an undeserved aid package, the true cost of our support for Israel cannot be measured in dollars.

America's refusal to uphold our national values by avoiding the position of freedom and equality is a disaster. Providing subsidies and military aid to Israel as our 51st state is one thing. Failing to uphold our core values is another.

It also means that all the real terrorists out there can continue to brainwash angry Muslims by simply pointing out whom Israel's best friend is.

But research this yourselves. See for yourselves who the real perpetrators are in this conflict.

Demand that your government ban the Israeli lobby AIPAC from influencing decision-making in Congress. After all, this is your country, and it is time to stand up and say no to violence, no to hatred, no to Apartheid and no to the suffering of the Palestinian people.

If Israel wishes to continue the same loathsome behavior it holds dear, let them do it at their own peril, and not with our taxpayer dollars. Support our troops overseas by ending the very reason for the hatred that ignites violence against them.

If we win the hearts and minds of the Muslim world, we can eradicate the dangers that loom in our world. We can salvage our image as the 'do-gooders' of the world, which we have long lost.

Ahmed El-Shafei is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at aelshafei@student.umass.edu.

Equal assessment

Jack Ho

The constant reminders of racism and sexism around us serve to reinforce our problematic judgments of each other.

People should be educated on the historical significance of events that have led to particular words. Knowing the background information on what a word really "means" might help people genuinely understand for rational reasons what words can and can't be said.

Can we not forge our own path to understanding each other? I aim this question towards those who identify as lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender or those who empathize with this group and stand together to promote understanding and awareness by systematically labeling words like 'transvestite' as offensive language.

These groups which wish to remove certain derogatory words from our lexicon stem from individuals' innate desire to promote acceptance. I agree with their plight wholeheartedly. It is a civil rights battle that rages on and consumes many interpersonal interactions to this day.

To stare boldly at injustice and accept that it has occurred, while seeking to eradicate it with rational action; this is the generation we need to become.

However, after sitting through a forced discussion on acceptable language in reference to the gay community, I found myself enraged. It has taken me some time to realize what bothered me so much about having a representative of a group come and tell me how I should interact with them – despite the fact that I agree with their ultimate goal of equality.

Quite a few months have passed since the day I stormed out of the room, feeling as though I had lost something of myself to a blind mass of people screaming from behind closed doors and asking for my help in a plight that has stretched on since man first has lain with man.

I learned why after an interaction with a lesbian couple at a party.

'Brutish' is the only word that sticks out in my mind about how they treated me and my friends. We took up positions at an open Beirut table, only to be interrupted by the two angry ladies storming down the stairs yelling, "who skipped the list!?"

It is my experience that when a Beirut list is present but goes unenforced, it is alright to forgo the list and whoever wishes to play may do so. In our attempt to explain to these ladies this concept, we were met with a defensive wall of feminist rhetoric. I could tell because, when my male friend tried to talk to them, they avoided eye contact and shouted over what he was saying – in a defiant "you can't talk to me like that because you are a man" tone, as if to say that our goal of basking in beer pong revelry was tantamount to misogyny and sexism.

Immediately after this, my friend's sister – a beautiful blonde, tried to talk them down, which was met with a gentle stroke of the arm and an, "Ok, I'll listen to you because you are a girl" interaction.

At this moment, I understood what made my insides boil. It was the idea that I am not being treated equally.

The group asking me to change how I speak to them because they are female is the equivalent to allowing these militant feminists to disrespect my friend based entirely on the fact he is a man.

What they ask for is equality, but instead they are demanding more than that; to only be spoken to in a certain manner and yet, conversely, the right to disrespect others based on their outward composition.

It is entirely wrong – for either side, for any race, any person – to ask for that when we are interacting in a free environment.

This needs to stop.

We need to begin to believe we are better now, past anachronistic gender and sexuality dichotomies, and revel in the fact we are a generation battling adversity and inequality with the wit and sensibility to overcome it.

What we bicker about in college may vary, but don't use our philosophical quandaries to impose on others.

Use them to catalyze a change that promotes freedom rather than restriction. Show that what we have learned in the classroom can culminate in activities which create a new generation of thought, where compassionate consideration of the travesties of the past can be regarded as just that, in the past.

To stare boldly at injustice and accept that it has occurred, while seeking to eradicate it with rational action; this is the generation we need to become. Throw away the whining emotional, idealistic responses and accept that others may have other understandings of these clashing cultural paradigms. These social stratum and our perceived roles present themselves as if they are binding laws governing our interactions, but they only censor our ability to express ourselves as we see fit instead. Expressions represent our ultimate freedom.

Prejudice should never be tolerated. There is no argument there, but rather in how we choose to express our tolerance of issues; often by openly discussing them as realities and predicaments.

These problems require more than simply stating personal indignations towards the ideas.

We have become a fearful populous – conditioned from the beginning to be cautious and wary of the world, and to assume the worst before accepting the actual.

Let us exist as people who refer to our physical characteristics or orientations not as disparaging speech but as a way to understand the human condition and its various forms.

Jack Ho is a UMass student. He can be reached at jwho@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed, but can be found online.

PUT A LID ON IT

Dear Editor,

UMass Amherst encourages students to ride bikes, as a way to help the environment. I don't see any problem in this, but from my experiences as a student traveling on foot, bicyclists don't have any safety concerns. When you put safety and bike in the same sentence, you think of a helmet.

There aren't many bikers that wear a helmet when riding. From my observations on campus, one of every 15 bicyclists wears a helmet. There isn't a law that you have to wear a helmet when riding a bike, but it can save your life if you ever get into an accident.

Most bicycle deaths are from head and face injuries. Each year, about 800 bicyclists are killed, and more than half a million are treated in hospital emergency rooms. In recent years, almost two-thirds of the deaths and one-third of the injuries involved head and face injuries. Shouldn't this encourage people to wear a helmet?

Bicyclists and pedestrians share the same paths. There is a law which states that bicyclists must give pedestrians an audible signal before overtaking or passing them. Nobody has done this yet.

They could easily knock someone down when coming from behind at such a fast speed. Pedestrians shouldn't have to worry about getting hurt by a biker.

Bicyclists should read the bike laws before they ride their bikes. This way there will be safety to both bikers and pedestrians – and can also prevent accidents from happening.

Jenny Yuen

A TASTE OF GOOD FUN

Dear Editor,

I am in dismay after reading the article today titled "Education over Taste of UMass" written by one of your columnists. He is misinformed and wrote without checking the facts.

Please let me tell the other side of the story.

UMass Dining, a division of Auxiliary Services, is a revenue-based operation, which means we are self-supporting and do not impact the general University operating budget.

The Taste of UMass event is largely sponsored by our fifty-some generous vendors which helps us to offset the rentals and other costs. What's more, it's free for the students on the meal plan, and does not cost a swipe!

Contrary to what the columnist said that the Taste of UMass is a waste of time; this is one of our most popular events and something that is anticipated by many.

This year, students will enjoy the opportunity to sample home comfort foods from 15 countries, while being entertained by various student performances ranging from UMass Idol to the making of the longest sushi in New England to the student Iron Chef Competition.

The event is a great way to gather with fellow students, build community and enrich the campus life experience.

To promote Earth Day – an educational presentation will be given by students from the Environmental Performance Action Committee during the Taste.

Our students look forward to the opportunity of having a change from the Dining Commons for a brief period to do something different, be entertained and enjoy some great food.

With 14,000 students on the meal plan who eat with us several times a day, seven days a week, special events such as the Taste of UMass, Guest Chef Series, Weekly Theme Specials, etc., help to break monotony and provide opportunities to experience regional and international cuisine – often with an educational component, such as Wild Alaska Seafood Week, Farmers' Market, etc.

UMass has one of the most innovative dining programs in the country, and we are proud of it.

We are fortunate to be able to host an event such as the Taste of UMass – to celebrate the end of another school year, with friends, fun and good food.

Sincerely,
Ken Toong
Executive Director, UMass Dining Services

AN UNJUST JUDICIAL CHOICE

Dear Editor,

Concerning the article "Student wins $800,000 in bullying case," it would have been reasonable to file a lawsuit against the perpetrator of a severe act of bullying.

However, the fact that a Michigan school was required to pay a student $800,000 defies the use of our judicial system. This case was similar in stature to a plea against a New York McDonald's.

In 2003, plaintiffs claimed that the fast food chain was responsible for their obesity. This case was thrown out of court by a federal judge. The Michigan bullying lawsuit should have met the same demise. Both of these cases were instances where the plaintiffs were looking for monetary compensation to help ease their own problems.

The school was found responsible for not doing everything in its power to prevent and stop the bullying. I feel the victim's parents are equally responsible for not properly consoling and treating their child.

It is more the duty of the parents than the school to ensure that the child was not being tormented. The effects of bullying have come under close scrutiny in recent years, especially considering some of the more drastic occurrences. In this case, I feel the evidence presented provided no justification for the final ruling.

Cory Kulacz
UMass Student
ckulacz@student.umass.edu

MERRY MARIJUANA

Dear Editor,

There seem to be many controversial topics floating through campus conversations. The most prominent one I've heard concerns the legalization of marijuana. Massachusetts has already decriminalized the drug, but what about the rest of the nation?

The broad question is always, 'should we or shouldn't we?'

It seems to me that college students have the most interest in the matter and usually lean towards the full legalization of the drug.

If the government were to legalize it for medicinal, use there would be an overwhelming relief for those in need of it, but it could lead to an increase in the abuse of the drug.

Legalizing the drug as a whole could allow the government to create tax revenue.

However, this could also allow drug dealers to stay on the streets selling harder drugs other than marijuana and could consequently cause the government to spend more money on the drug war.

The issue that seems to be the deciding factor is whether or not marijuana is a 'gateway drug.'

I believe this issue is not as prominent as people think, and it should not hold us back from legalizing it in order to see benefits for the sick and for our government.

Michaela Streitfield
mstreitf@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A beer with Dave 'El Pres' Portnoy

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

College students need to follow a lot of rules: study hard, get involved, apply for internships and don't party too much. If we don't follow these rules, we're told that we won't make it in the real world. There is an exception to every rule, of course; and one exception to these constraints is Dave "El Presidente" Portnoy.

He owns what he calls the "largest independently owned sports blog on the planet," BarstoolSports.com. The site is raunchy, uncensored and run solely by Portnoy. With comparable traffic to BostonHerald.com, the publication, which started as a newspaper, is now one of the most popular websites in the Boston area. Its news is trivial and as much about sports as MTV is about music, but the traffic continues to grow on Portnoy's simple ideology.

"I'm gonna run it with no hullst. I'm gonna talk and tell everyone what I'm thinking," he said while sipping a bottle of Sam Adams.

The entrepreneurial sports fan, gambling addict and blogger was born in 1977 and grew up in Swampscott, Mass. Following in his sister's footsteps, he attended the University of Michigan. While he had no intentions of ever becoming a teacher, he majored in history education simply because the school of education did not have a language requirement.

"I did nothing extracurricular, nothing. I was just a typical f*n' play Genesis all day, Sega all day [kind of guy]... and then I partied. That's all I did. I did the least amount that I could possibly do and still graduate," he said.

He did, however, start a gambling website.

"It was a joke," he said.

He didn't want to make money off of it; he didn't even try to. It was just for fun.

After college, Portnoy worked in sales for The Yankee Group. He hated the nine-to-five grind.

A self-proclaimed "degenerate gambler" – he claims to have lost over $100,000 in his lifetime – he flew out to Las Vegas and interviewed with a handful of casinos with no luck. He then talked to a few offshore online gambling websites. They told him that if they could advertise in a newspaper, specifically not on the Internet, they would essentially give him a year's worth of advertising to fund the paper. With that, Barstool Sports was born.

El Pres, as his fans, the Stoolies, refer to him, always wanted to do his own thing.

"When Barstool started, it had nothing to do with what it is now. It was really just gambling, fantasy football, and only four pages long," he said.

He could tell from the get-go that the raw, uncensored style was a hit with his readers. He was almost immediately swarmed with e-mails.

He didn't have a plan, and had no idea if there would even be enough money to keep it going.

"I just kind of stumbled my way through it and just followed what people liked. So it started as that and morphed into where we are today," he said.

Portnoy hired girls from a promotions agency to hand out the papers – one of whom he eventually married.

Eventually, the paper became BarstoolSports.com. The site's main audience originally consisted of "young professionals working in the Financial District [of Boston]," he said.

It wasn't until he introduced the "Smokeshow of the Day" feature that he caught the eye of the college students he now claims as his staple audience. The segment features an exceptionally attractive local college girl each day, with pictures from her Facebook page.

"[College students] would see the Smokeshow, then they'd read the other sh*t and be like, 'Oh, I like the whole thing,'" he said.

The other st is really a hodge-podge of material – everything from sex scandals involving teachers to videos of drunk beer pong dunks. The material comes from a combination of stories and videos he finds on websites such as Boston.com, BostonHerald.com, FoxNews.com and his favorite website (excluding Barstool), dlisted.com, as well as e-mailed story tips. Most of the e-mailed stories come from sites like DeadSpin.com, but he maintains that the "tips are the life-blood of the site."

Of course with the nature of the posts, the risqué material draws a lot of negative attention.

"People who threaten us with lawsuits have no idea who we are. They think it's a kid sitting in their basement... I have a pretty good handle on what we can do, and we very rarely step over the line," he said.

So what does his wife, Renee, a.k.a. the First Lady, think of his job?

"She's pretty cool with it. I have no game. She knows that. I'm getting old. It's kind of like the Howard Stern model to a point. She knows what it is. I certainly play it up to a degree. As long as she can buy a new pair of shoes, she's happy," he said.

While on the surface, Barstool Sports seems like all fun and games, it requires a seven-day workweek for El Pres, who runs the site on his own from his simple Dell laptop.

"I wake up around 9 a.m., then I write all friggin day. That's really what it is," he said. "I go to bed at midnight just waiting for stories. We gotta do our ads, sometimes things come up, but it's just non-stop in front of the computer."

The 33-year-old never dreamed of doing this. Ideally he'd be playing professional baseball, because like he said, "Who wouldn't f*n' want to do that?"

Barstool has always been just based out of Boston, but recently the site branched out to New York, which now has its own site.

It might be because of the New York expansion, but Portnoy believes that Barstool is ready to take another step. He's not exactly sure what that step is, but he would like to see Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Chicago eventually have their own Stools as well.

Unlike most current jobs for writers and bloggers, the website has proven to be rather profitable for El Presidente. He started it to make money, not to write. Somehow he's done just that without ever having to advertise or promote the site in any way – all readership comes from word of mouth. The site makes its money from advertising, which is all inbound – they contact him, he never asks.

Portnoy once attempted to interview Bill Simmons, an outspoken blogger who now works for ESPN. He ignored Portnoy's requests over and over. Now that he has his own sports blog, which he says is much bigger than Simmons' Digital City Boston ever was, Portnoy said that he probably wouldn't follow in Simmons' footsteps. But that's only because he doesn't think they'll approach him.

"I don't think I'd ever be asked to do something mainstream," he said. "I think they would have asked by now. I don't know what I'd say to that if someone offered."

Portnoy will be at the University of Massachusetts this Friday, April 30, when he will bring his college concert tour, aptly named Stoolapalooza, to the Mullins Center. The show will be headlined by up-and-coming Boston rapper Sam Adams. If you don't have tickets yet, you're out of luck. Portnoy has posted that the UMass show is officially "sold the f out."

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jgagnon@dailycollegian.com

Dave Portnoy, known more commonly as El Presidente, is the founder, editor and main writer for the popular blog, BarstoolSports.com. The site has become incredibly popular in the Boston area for its funny, crude and uncensored material.

COLLEEN BARSTOOLSPORTS.COM

El Presidente (right) will bring Stoolapalooza, a concert tour headlined by Boston rapper Sam Adams (left), to the Mullins Center this Friday. While the show is sold out, there will be an after party on Hobart Lane.

Taylor to satisfy Noho

By Dave Coffey
Collegian Staff

On Thursday night, celebrated Rock 'n' Roll musician Mick Taylor will bring four-and-a-half decades of virtuoso guitar prowess to the Iron Horse in Northampton.

Ever since he was a just a teenager in Hertfordshire, England, Taylor has proved to be a prolific blues-rock guitarist in the same vein as contemporaries such as Eric Clapton and Keith Richards. Throughout his career, Taylor has built an extensive classic rock resume few could deny and even fewer match.

At only 17-years-old, Taylor was invited to join John Mayall and the Bluesbreakers by Mayall himself. Before turning 18, Taylor toured and made his major recording debut with the Mayall's Bluesbreakers and began honing and developing an impressive and professional set of skills which would go on to wow countless crowds for generations to come.

Taylor's early success with the Bluesbreakers and prodigious talent eventually drew the attention of Mick Jagger and Keith Richards, who asked Taylor to replace Brian Jones as guitarist for The Rolling Stones. In the relatively short yet momentous period between 1969 and 1974, Taylor played on – and, in some cases, co-wrote – what many consider to be some of the Stone's best material, including iconic studio albums, "Let It Bleed" and "It's Only Rock 'N Roll," as well as the live album, "Get Yer Ya-Ya's Out!"

While Taylor only spent five years with the Stones, his performance with the oft-named "greatest Rock 'n' Roll band in the world" was considered by many to be one of the most technically proficient the Stones ever boasted, and was even praised by Jagger, Richards and drummer Charlie Watts as ushering in one of the most melodically and fluid musical eras the band ever saw.

In addition to his renowned work with John Mayall's Bluesbreakers and The Rolling Stones, Taylor has also worked with dozens of legendary musicians and groups as a session or live musician. Since his departure from the Stones in 1975, he's compiled a laundry list of collaborations with a wide range of artists. Among his more notable work has been a stint as guitarist for Bob Dylan in the early 80s, session work for the likes of artists such as Herbie Mann and Nicky Hopkins, and a tour with the Experience Hendrix tribute group.

On top of these plentiful and illustrious career highlights, Taylor has also released three solo albums. His eponymous debut, released in 1979, cracked the Billboard 200. While he has displayed an ability to play in a myriad of genres, Taylor developed a style that transcends his blues-rock roots. Fusing aspects of blues, rock, jazz and Latin music, as well as keen slide guitar skills, Taylor sports a considerably well-rounded and melodically complex sound compared to his contemporaries.

Taylor's show will include renditions of Stones and Bluesbreakers hits, various blues covers and Taylor's own material. He will take the stage at the Iron Horse in Noho at 7 p.m. Advance tickets have sold out, but there is still seating available on a first come, first serve basis at a price of $28.

Dave Coffey can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu

COLLEEN BARSTOOLSPORTS.COM

Former member of the Rolling Stones Mick Taylor will play a sold-out show at the Iron Horse tonight. The show will feature songs from the Stones and Bluesbreakers, as well as some covers and original work.

'The Losers' not quite a winner at the box

Tappan Parker
Collegian Staff

"The Losers" is an action-comedy and loose adaptation of the DC Comics series of the same name, but it is not a superhero comic. Rather, the film is about a team of Special Forces who are just really good at what they do.

The movie starts with one of the most efficiently effective yet cool movie introductions to date, introducing the five members of the squadron, the Losers, in rapid succession, while also quickly establishing the personality of each character. There is Pooch (Columbus Short), the laid-back driver, Cougar (Oscar Jaenada), the quiet yet cool sniper, Jensen (Chris Evans), the witty computer ace, Roque (Idris Elba), the angry second in command, and Clay (Jeffrey Dean Morgan), your all around average-Joe leader.

The plot begins when the Losers, betrayed after being sent into the Bolivian jungle to eliminate a target, plot revenge against the mysterious agent who was behind the entire operation, known only as Max (Jason Patric). The group, presumed dead, hole up in a Bolivian village to figure out their next move when Aisha (Zoe Saldana), a woman also seeking revenge on Max, confronts them. Aisha and the team pair up and go after Max as he plots a terrorist action involving new weapons technology.

There is not much more to the movie's plot than that. There are few plot twists and the plot itself is an action movie cliché if there ever was one. With any action movie though, the plot tends to be the least important aspect, and the emphasis is more on cool action scenes and how fun the movie is to sit down and watch.

Many of the scenes throughout the flick pay homage to other action movies such as "Crank" and the James Bond series. The first scene of the movie is an over-the-top shootout and starts the film off on a strong foot, as it continues to dish out more exciting action scenes.

Witty humor is possibly the biggest strength this movie has to offer, but it also turns out to be its biggest weakness. Evans' character often makes some laugh-out-loud comments and Patric's quirky take on the action movie villain is appreciable. The movie stays funny throughout and manages to successfully incorporate a few running gags, as well — including the team's apparent obsession with yellow vehicles. However, the movie seems to put too much emphasis on this aspect, and it ends up detracting from the action somewhat.

Unfortunately, the timing of this movie could not be worse, as it is foreshadowed by the upcoming release of "The A-Team," which is looking to be everything this movie could have been.

"The Losers" is Sylvain White's fifth foray into directing and his first into making an action movie, and for that he must be applauded. While it is nothing groundbreaking, the movie is an enjoyable flick and contains a few memorable scenes. Not much about the movie is original, but it ends up being a slight cut above the average action film.

"The Losers" is this summer's prelude action movie, fun but forgettable. If you have time, it is worth checking out, but otherwise just wait for "The A-Team."

Tappan Parker can be reached at Tparker@student.umass.edu

Based on a DC comic, "The Losers" lacks humor and plot, but lives up to its genre as an action film. Starring Jeffrey Dean Morgan ("Watchmen") and Zoe Saldana ("Avatar"), the film has been a box office flop.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2010

The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:

Thursday, April 29 @ 6:00pm in Bartlett 302

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3, and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road, Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road, Rt. 9, Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet, Electricity in Select Units
On the Bus Route, Swimming Pool, Sauna, Carports, Pet Friendly, FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

Write for Arts&Living!
Interested?
Let us know...
arts@dailycollegian.com

UM hosts A-10 championship

By Michael Wood
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 championship meet returns to Amherst this weekend and the Massachusetts track and field teams will look to capitalize on competing on its home turf.

The A-10 meet is a highly touted and important meet, determining the best team and individual athletes in the conference. One of three final championship meets, not only does the meet showcase talent, but it marks the beginning of the end of a long and, in UMass' case, successful season.

The last time the A-10s were in Amherst, UMass didn't fare so well, taking first place in just one event over the weekend. This year, men's coach Ken O'Brien said the Minutemen know the ramifications of the meet, and are ready to compete in front of their home crowd in such a critical contest.

"[A-10s] are a big meet for us," said O'Brien. "Everybody primes themselves for outstanding accomplishments all season, and the guys have been looking forward to this for a long time."

Home turf has been an advantage for UMass this season, as the Minutemen took second place in the UMass Nine-Way meet, and the Minutewomen won the event, while breaking several records in the process. Both teams are poised and ready to duplicate those performances on Saturday.

"It seems that being home helps the guys," O'Brien said. "Every one of our athletes mentioned that the enthusiasm of the fans helped propel them to some outstanding performances. We've had great fan support for UMass track, and I'm looking forward to the same thing on Saturday."

UMass is confident coming into the weekend thanks to another strong showing last week in the New Hampshire pre-conference meet. Between the two teams, a combined six school records were broken and 14 athletes qualified for the New England championship next week.

Lisa Wilson, Gina Perno and Nicole Pompei led the way for the Minutewomen, each breaking or improving upon UMass records.

Wilson, who has been an important part of the Minutewomen this season, continued her dominance, as she broke two of her own records in the shot put and the hammer throw events. She earned first place in both events, as she threw the shot put 48.75 meters and the hammer 176 feet. It was the third consecutive meet in which Wilson topped a personal record.

Perno also left her mark in the record books, as she now sits third all-time in school history in the 800-meter run. She crossed the finish line in 2:12.15 and placed second in the event.

Pompei has had a successful freshman season for the Minutewomen. Not only has she consistently impressed in each meet, but she has etched her name into the record books early in her career. Last week, she won the pole vault event by reaching a height of 11.75 meters, and is now fourth in UMass history in the event.

Minutemen Tyler Cotto, Sean Busch and Brian Miller kept pace with the women, as they also broke school records in their respective events.

Miller was most impressive of the three, as he now holds the top mark in school history in the high jump. He won the event by leaping to a height of 6.25 meters.

Busch has been a steady performer for the Minutemen throughout the indoor and outdoor season. Last week he finished in second place in the pole vault with a height of 15 meters.

Cotto, a veteran and leader of the Minutemen squad, showed why he is such an asset to the team. In the 110-meter hurdles, he qualified for the New England and IC4A championships, and set the fourth-best time in school history in the process, crossing the finish line in 14.51 seconds.

With such impressive showings last week, Brian Miller and Lisa Wilson were named tri-UMass Athletes of the Week. The award is given out weekly to the athletes who exemplify outstanding performances and best help their team.

Both Miller and Wilson were also named A-10 performers of the week for their showings in the UNH pre-conference meet. This is the first time each senior has taken home conference honors in the outdoor season.

The A-10 meet is scheduled to begin Saturday morning at 9 a.m.

"I expect a handful of outstanding performances from our guys, and other teams as well," O'Brien said. "Everybody brings their 'A' game to a conference meet."

Michael Wood can be reached at mcwood@student.umass.edu.

Junior sprinter Stephanie Aguguo and the rest of the Minutewomen host the A-10 championship this weekend.

Junior thrower Kevin Spieler hopes to lead the Minutemen to a victory in the A-10 championship this weekend. The championship meet will be held at UMass.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
R.S.O. Ads for $6.70 per column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per column
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

NORTHAMPTON PRIDE
After Party
MAY 1, 2010
The Hottest Party of the Year!
5 - 7 PM
$7
VIPs FREE
DJ Lori B
DJ Otis
7 PM - CL
$15
VIPs $5
NO RE ENTRY
DRAGSHOW
18+
Valid ID Required
Diva's Nightclub
492 Pleasant St., Route 5
Northampton
413-586-8161
Burgers/Hotdogs/Deck Bar

Get the Most
CASH FOR BOOKS

Buyback Hours

Textbook Annex
Monday – Friday
April 26 – 30
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Saturday, May 8
11:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.

Campus Center Concourse
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m.

Southwest/Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
10:00 a.m. – 1:00 p.m.

Find us on Facebook
facebook.com/UMassUniversityStore
UMass University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
790-58810
Powered by efollett.com

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience!
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 3rd from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
Come Celebrate With Us!
Salem Cross Inn
Restaurant & Tavern
Great food, great setting, great time!
Call now to book your reservations!

Groups of any size are welcome!
508 867 2345
www.salemcrossinn.com
Route 9, 260 West Main Street West Brookfield MA 01585

Grandma inspired Williams

WILLIAMS from page 10

"I knew I would want to keep pursuing [a singing career], so I asked if I could sing the national anthem for all of our home games and [UMass coach Elaine Sortino] said that was fine," Williams said.

In addition to singing for softball games, she also has experience singing for basketball, football and soccer. When her grandmother is available, she makes sure to watch Whitney sing the national anthem — and play softball.

The elder Williams believes that because of how talented Whitney is naturally, music school would have advanced her granddaughter's singing career and made her better prepared to be a professional singer. However, she knows that being on an athletic scholarship was going to require some sacrifices.

"She probably would be even further if she could go into the music school while she was in college," Donna Williams speculated.

Although Whitney doesn't have time to perform like she did growing up, the shortstop continues to practice every time she has a free moment, and sings for any audience willing to listen. Most of the time, her audience is her teammates, who, she says, are very receptive of her singing talent.

"They love when I sing, and they always request songs, like on Facebook, they'll ask me to leave a video for them on their wall of me singing their favorite song," Whitney explained.

She also plays guitar three or four times a week, although there are times when she knows she isn't practicing enough.

"You have to have callous tips on your fingers to play the guitar, and I know I'm not practicing enough when my calluses all peel off and then I go and try to play again and my fingers are blistered because I haven't played in a while," Williams said.

She gets some experience playing for her teammates during the regular season at times by hosting them at her apartment before games. However, she doesn't see herself going into guitar after finishing school until she feels she can handle singing and playing guitar at the same time.

When she graduates, she plans on hiring a vocal coach and looking for a recording studio.

She says she is done playing softball after this year, not only because she wants to focus on music, but also because of her physical condition. She has been playing all of senior year with a torn rotator cuff, and doesn't see herself tolerating the pain past this season.

Williams hopes to try out for "American Idol" sometime soon, and will stick with singing country music no matter where she ends up.

Donna Williams says that no matter where or what her granddaughter does with her musical career, she will be there for her.

"I'll support her and hope that she can pursue the music end of it," Williams said. "That's what her dream is, and I'll wish her well. I'll be very proud for whatever her accomplishments are."

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

MAXWELL STARK/COLLEGIAN

Senior shortstop Whitney Williams hopes that when her softball career is over, she will pursue singing professionally, and hopes to try out for "American Idol."

Open "all Hpat" everyday!
Four Seasons
Wine • Liquor • Cigars

BEER * All beer prices plus deposit
Stella Artois 24 pk btl $22.99*
Miller Lite 30 pk can $20.49*
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk btl $16.99*
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl $12.99*
Busch & Busch Light 20 pk btl $11.99*
Opa Opa Light Lager 12 pk btl $10.99*
Pabst Blue Ribbon 18 pk can $9.99*
Molson 12 pk btl $9.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl $9.99*

LIQUOR
Lagavulin 16yr 750 ml $59.99
Patron Anejo 750 ml $52.99
Dewars White Label Scotch 1.0 L $25.99
Wild Turkey 101 Proof 750 ml $20.99
Svedka Vodka 1.75 L $19.99
Admiral Nelsons Spiced Rum 1.75 L $17.99
Johnnie Walker Red Label 750 ml $20.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $16.99

WINE All wine 750 ml except where noted
Black Box 3.0 lt All Varieties $19.99
Bogle Vineyards Phantom Red Blend $18.99
Moon Dance Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon $14.99
Layer Cake Malbec $13.99
The Velvet Devil Merlot $10.99
Blackstone Merlot $10.99
Mark West Pinot Noir $10.99
Santi Pinot Grigio $10.99
Milbrandt Vineyards Riesling $10.99
Castle Rock Cabernet Sauvignon $9.99
Callia Alta Malbec $8.99

584-8174
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

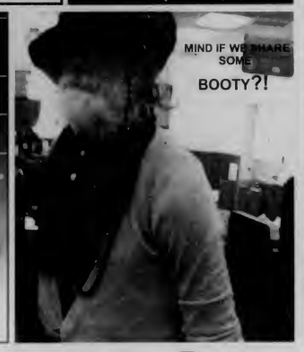
The Daily Collegian asks,
"Are you a
SPORTS FAN?"
THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!
Contact Jeff Larnard at
sports@dailycollegian.com

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffton village.com

Register now
for summer courses at HCC
• Convenient Summer I, Summer II, and Full Summer Sessions
• Day, evening, and online classes
• Training for business & industry
• GED and Adult Basic Education
• Fun, informative personal enrichment courses
• Youth programs & sports clinics
Credit classes start June 7 & July 12
Holyoke Community College
Futures Inspired
Call today (413) 552-2000
303 Homestead Avenue, Holyoke, MA 01040 • www.hcc.edu

Off The Wall Games
Warhammer 40,000
Magic The Gathering
Legacy Tournament May 8th
Scan Offthewallgamestore.com for details.
Discount role-playing games, Collectible card games (CCGs), Miniature war games and board games, fun for everyone!
Hours: 10-10 Wednesday-Sunday, 12-10 Monday, Closed Tuesdays - 41 Russell St (Hampton Village Shops) Rt. 9, Hadley 413-586-5451

COMICS



Do You Wanna Touch It?

2						5
			9	1
8			3		6
	1			6		8
			4
						4	7	3
5	3		9		8
				7			8
		2	1					4

amherst cinema
Fri Apr 30 - Thu May 6
A Town Called Panic 2:30 7:00 +12:00pm Sat & Sun
The Runaways 2:00 4:30 *7:15 9:30 (9:45 Wed) +11:45am Sat & Sun *NO 7:15 Wed
The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo *3:15 6:15 9:15 +12:15 Sat & 11:00am Sun *NO 3:15 Sun
35 Shots of Rum 4:45 9:00
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

Pleasant Street Theater
Fri Apr 30 - Thu May 6
Greenberg 9:45 +2:15 Sat, Sun & Wed
The Square 4:45 7:15 +10:30am Wed *NO 7:15 Wed
The Joneses 4:30 7:00 9:15 +2:00 Sat & Sun +10:00am 2:00 Wed
Emerging Filmmakers Series Wed 7:00
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasanttheater.org (413) 584-5848

MONDAY - SATURDAY
Happy Hour - 1/2 Price Appetizers
8 P.M. - Close Sun. - Wed.
9 P.M. - Close Thurs. - Sat.
EVERY THURSDAY:
Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY:
$1.00 Drafts and $5 Movie Tickets!*
21ST BIRTHDAY:
Free Entree or Small Pizza with ID*
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
Arizona Pizza

Quote of the Day

"Avoid employing unlucky people. Throw half of the pile of CVs in the bin without reading them."

—David Brent

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
www.townehouseofamherst.com
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You could always try quitting your job. I mean, you're getting fired soon anyway.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
The music video to "Aaron's Party, Come Get It" by Aaron Carter has some genuine insight for you today.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
ATTENTION! Oooooeeeeoooooo, Killer Tofuu uuuu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Williams performs on and off field

UMass shortstop to pursue career in singing

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Senior shortstop Whitney Williams has started 35 games at the hot corner this season. But Williams, who frequently sings the national anthem before UMass' home games, began singing when she was four-years-old, and wants to pursue it as a career.

Before the first pitch of any Massachusetts softball home game, senior Whitney Williams gets what has become a rare opportunity to showcase her singing ability to the crowd of UMass fans.

Williams, a shortstop for the Minutewomen, originally wanted to pursue a music degree, but had to switch majors because the demands of playing in recital always conflicted with her softball schedule. But over the course of her softball career with UMass, Williams stayed interested in singing professionally.

She says her grandma, Donna Williams, who is a piano player, was her biggest influence in her decision to continue with singing.

"Growing up in church, she was always the one who took me to church and Sunday school," the younger Williams said. "Her pushing me to be involved has really helped me out and inspired me."

Donna Williams, who never had any formal music education herself, says most of her family is musical. Her cousins can play multiple instruments by ear with no music in front of them, and she encouraged her grandchildren to get involved in music at an early age.

She says Whitney always had the most interest in singing of any of her grandchildren, and because she was involved in church, Whitney had her first opportunity to perform there.

"When I was little, I'd always sing in church, and ever since I was four or five [years old], I'd do little solos at church, and ever since then, I just kept singing places," Whitney said.

She gained confidence on stage by having her parents take her to places to sing while practicing every day. She says she knew she had musical talent when people who knew her kept asking her to sing in public for them.

Donna used her leadership in the church to get Whitney involved in plays, where she would get the lead role.

Although she had little doubt of her granddaughter's singing ability, Donna said the first time she knew the younger Williams could perform was in sixth grade, when she was doing solos in chorus and had the lead part in a school musical.

"I remember her teacher saying that she had a perfect pitched voice, so I just always encouraged her," said Donna.

Whitney prefers to sing country music, which she attributes to her background, coming from a farm in Kingsley, Pa., and growing up a Martina McBride fan.

Like her grandma, she never had a voice coach, even in her four years at UMass, but hopes to find one after graduation.

The first time Williams sung the national anthem was in fifth grade, when she was the only female playing baseball out of more than 200 teams in a tournament, with the best teams getting to play at Little Majors in Cooperstown, N.Y.

Her team didn't make it, but she got a chance to sing the national anthem in front of a crowd. When she entered high school, she sang before every sporting event and also joined honors chorus.

Williams eventually made other musically talented friends, who influenced her to pick up the acoustic guitar, but never took guitar lessons because she found it easy to figure out chords for the different songs she wanted to play.

"It was a good learning experience," she said of her decision to pick up guitar.

Throughout Williams' music career, she tried to pick up the piano, but her grandma never followed through with teaching her.

"More than once, she asked me if I could teach her how to play piano, but I didn't feel qualified to do that, because I've never been a music teacher," Donna Williams explained.

Whitney never had much of a problem balancing softball and music in high school, but that all changed upon graduation.

When she got to UMass, she couldn't perform as much as she wanted because of her softball schedule, but that didn't stop her from singing.

See WILLIAMS on page 8

Softball game against UConn canceled Thursday afternoon

The No. 21 Minutewomen will not play against UConn Thursday afternoon, and the contest will not be made up due to inclement weather. UMass returns to action this weekend against Dayton.

Mineau and Rams defeat Iona, 49ers looking for No. 2 seed

Marris pitches en route to two victories over GW

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

A combination of stellar Fordham offense and pitching helped the Rams shut out Iona, 6-0, for its fourth consecutive shutout on Tuesday afternoon.

Fordham (40-8, 12-2 Atlantic 10) proved once again why it is one of the premier softball teams in the country, as pitcher Jen Mineau led the team by hurling four strong innings, while giving up only one hit and striking out four against the Gaels (22-18).

Mineau improved her record to 27-5, and also has 400 strikeouts on the season.

The offense saw significant contributions from senior Erin Fisher, as she hit a three-run home run over the centerfield fence early on in the game, her 13th on the season.

Junior Jocelyn Dearborn also had a good day offensively, as she went 2-for-4 with a run and a run batted in.

The win is the Rams' fourth-straight shutout, and is also their 14th-straight win, as they remain a perfect 15-0 away from their home field. This season also marks the first time in program history when Fordham reached the 40-win plateau. The Rams are currently in third place in the A-10 standings, trailing only Charlotte and division-leading Massachusetts.

49ERS CLOSE OUT HOME SEASON WITH WIN

The Charlotte 49ers ended their 2010 season at home on a strong note, taking down UNC-Greensboro, 9-2, Tuesday afternoon.

The 49ers (35-13, 12-2 A-10) showed the rest of the Atlantic 10 why they deserve to hold on to the No. 2 seed, as they scored seven runs in the last two rain-drizzled innings against the Spartans.

The Spartans (23-24) were able to tie up the game at 1-1 in the third inning, but it all went down-hill from there.

After taking a slim 2-1 lead in the bottom of the third, the 49ers racked up five runs in the fifth off a bases-loaded triple by Lorena Vela and a two-run shot by Natalyn Blanton.

Pitcher Emily Jeffery picked up her 25th complete game of the season, as she struck out 11 and improved her record to 19-8.

Serena Smith broke the school's career RBI record and Jeffery broke the school's career strikeout record.

OWLS SHUT OUT GW IN DOUBLE-HEADER

The Temple Owls improved their status in the Atlantic 10 rankings as they completed a sweep against conference-rival George Washington with the help of Kristen Marris' pitching performances.

The Owls (16-25, 5-7 A-10) moved up in the division rankings with their double-header wins against the Colonials (5-35, 2-14 A-10), who are still struggling to make it out of the bottom slot in the division.

Marris gave up three hits combined in both games against the Colonials. She improved her record on the year to 10-11 and solidified her spot as one of the most reliable hurlers in the Temple rotation, as she struck out a combined 10 batters on the day.

Though the Temple offense exploded in the first game, scoring 10 runs (three unearned) on seven hits, they were very much quieted in the second game, where they scored just four runs on five hits.

The Owls will need more performances from their leaders in the last days of the season, especially in games against Atlantic 10 teams. Their playoff chances, though slimmer than they would like, are still alive if they can keep up their strong play down the stretch.

David Martin can be reached at dmmartin@student.umass.edu.

Fordham pitcher Jen Mineau tossed her fourth-consecutive shutout Tuesday to lead the Rams over Iona.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM APRIL 30, 2010

inside this issue:

Gurley opts for draft

SEE PAGE 12

Run Rabbit, run

SEE PAGE 7

State reviews appeal

SEE PAGE 2

In eighth year, tournament to feature 100 teams
See p. 3

SoccerFest kicks off Saturday at McGuirk

COURTESY DENNIS GRIMALDI

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXX
ISSUE 63

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Comics Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Pete Rizzo

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
KIRSTEN SWENSON

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

UM monitoring at-risk students

Administration rejects Collegian request for list of students on ACT

By Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

An investigation into the Dean of Students office by the Office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has commenced the process of appealing the University's response to a public records request about a relatively-unknown campus committee that seeks to identify and help students who could potentially pose a threat to themselves or others.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian called for the appeal investigation under the Massachusetts Public Records Law (M.G.L. Chapter 66, Section 10) after the University refused to disclose documents from the Dean of Students office requested March 24, 2010 in a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) public records request.

The documents in question concern the University's practices pertaining to the Assessment and Care Team (ACT), as well as judicial proceedings and outcomes.

ACT was established in the summer of 2007, in response to the April 2007 shooting at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. According to an ACT brochure, the committee "focuses on students who may pose a threat to themselves or others, taking action to help the individual and protect campus safety."

ACT meets once a week to "discuss students whose behavior was reported as a threat to their own safety, or students who are distressed or in distress," said Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jo-Anne Vanin, who is also chair of ACT.

ACT members include Vanin, Office of the Dean of the Graduate School representative David Lafond, Director of Administrative Services of the Graduate School Susan Chinman, Associate Director of Housing Services and Residential Life Laura Giles, Associate Director of Operations of Disability Services Ben Ostiguy, Director of the Center for Health Promotion at University Health Services Sally Linowski, Ombudsperson Catharine Porter, Associate Dean of Undergraduate Advising Gregg Stenhorn, Officer of Faculty Development Mary Deane Sorcinelli, Chief of Police Johnny Whitehead and Director of Mental Health Dr. Harry Rickland-Miller.

The documents requested were "Any formally or informally recorded list of students who have been deemed a threat to themselves or others compiled by the University's Assessment and Care Team (ACT) and/or used by ACT," as well as, "Any formally or informally recorded information from all of ACT's meetings this academic year, dating back to September 1, 2008 and through the most recent meeting."

The lists and recorded information from ACT meetings were declined because the University is legally prohibited under the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), the Massachusetts Fair Information Act and clauses twenty-sixth (a) and (c) of Section 7 of chapter 4 of the Massachusetts General Law.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Vice Chancellor Jo-Anne Vanin said ACT meets to discuss students whose safety may be in jeopardy.

However, with the assistance of Massachusetts Project Sunshine Chair from the Society of Professional Journalists (SPJ), Stephanie Vosk, FERPA has been deemed inapplicable in this request, facilitating grounds for appeal.

According to a 1998 FERPA amendment, colleges and universities are not prevented from speaking about disciplinary matters if those matters involve a violent offense and if the accused student is found to be in violation of the school's conduct code.

The documents, or at least portions of them, which were withheld, can legally be disclosed under the Massachusetts Public Records Law because the documents requested fall under the FERPA exemption (20 U.S.C. 1232g(b)(1)) regarding the disclosure of disciplinary records that states, "Nothing in this section shall prohibit an educational agency or institution from: (1) including appropriate information in the education record of any student concerning disciplinary action taken against such student for conduct that posed a significant risk to the safety or well-being of that student, other students, or other members of the school community."

See APPEAL on page 3

Everywoman's Center to petition for role in review of student conduct code

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

A campus rape crisis center is petitioning that a member of their staff be added to a special commission which will review the student conduct code and present recommended changes to the code by mid-November.

The 17-member commission, created in response to the University of Massachusetts' admission that it improperly sanctioned a student who allegedly confessed to an on-campus rape, will review the entire Code of Student Conduct (CSC) for the first time since the mid-1990s.

The Everywoman's Center (EWC), said it has contacted the commission's administrative leader, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim, who told the center she would not add a member of its staff to the committee, but has not given a clear reason why.

Kim did not return a call seeking comment yesterday.

"We have lots of ideas about how that code could be amended," said EWC Training and Educational Specialist Angela Bruns, 30.

Though the commission does include a student member from EWC, educator advocate Kelleyanne Curley, the center is requesting that University administrators add a full-time EWC staff member and expert.

"I feel it's really essential to have someone with that expertise on the commission," said Bruns, who received a graduate degree from UMass and has worked for EWC for two years.

Without representation from an EWC staff member, Bruns said, "I'm afraid of [changes to the conduct code regarding sexual assault offenses] getting lost in the shuffle."

EWC staff created an online petition, Ipetitions.com/petition/endsexualviolence, which had 500 signatures – about halfway toward their goal – as of Thursday evening. The petition will stop accepting signatures at the end of today and will be presented at an in-person meeting between EWC and Kim next week.

The center, which provides sexual assault crisis counseling and various women's studies programs to on- and off-campus students and community residents, held a "Take Back the Night" rally earlier this month and complied around 100 signatures – separate from the ones on the online petition – during the event.

According to the petition, "[UMass'] current Code of Student Conduct concerning sexual assault is inadequate and does nothing more than state that 'Sexual assault or any other uninvited behavior of a sexually explicit nature' is a violation of the Code … [and] that a new sexual assault policy must be written, and that the expertise of a staff person from Everywoman's Center is essential to the construction of a sexual assault policy that meets the needs of students at UMass Amherst."

To raise awareness of the petition, junior Nina Goodwin, a 20-year-old public health major and educator advocate at EWC, created a Facebook group which had around 675 members as of last night.

"I think that what [UMass] is trying to do is great. But I don't feel comfortable as a student and as a woman to not have someone who is an expert in this [on the commission]," Goodwin said. "I'm glad that [the issue of sexual assault] is staying fresh in people's minds, but I'd like to see a lot more people on campus taking action."

Both Goodwin and Bruns expressed disappointment about the University's response to its mishandling of the alleged rape case, which made national headlines earlier this semester.

"It's definitely frustrating, because I want to know that where I'm going to school is taking this seriously," said Goodwin. "I wish they'd say a little bit more. I don't really feel like I know why they've made some of the decisions they've made."

"I think the Dean of Students office response to that was unfortunate, because I want to see perpetrators of sexual assault held accountable," Bruns added. "I feel for them … There are certainly more things I'd like info about, but I understand there are boundaries."

For continued coverage on this story, visit DailyCollegian.com's special page, "Breaking the Silence."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

SoccerFest aims to score big Saturday

It's time to kick back and get ready for some football … Well, at least they call it football in Europe. The University of Massachusetts will host the latest installment of what has become a noted event on the spring calendar, the Supercuts SoccerFest, held at McGuirk Stadium on May 1.

Each spring semester, a new class of sport management students is accepted into the intensive six-credit sport event management class, which manages a 100-team soccer festival. This year, the class is composed of four graduate students, 20 undergrads and more than 230 volunteers – the majority of whom are UMass students.

The core 24 students work within six departments: finance, sponsorship, marketing, volunteer management, registration/hospitality and tournament operations. The class meets for two hours every Tuesday and Thursday, along with holding frequent departmental meetings.

In its eighth year, the class feels it is poised to score big with its version of SoccerFest.

Senior Lauren Hambidge, a senior from the operations department, echoed this sentiment, stating that the group has been brainstorming and believes it now has the tools it needs to put on a successful SoccerFest.

"We have studied the past SoccerFest events and solved problems doggedly over the last three months, with the intent of putting on the best event in history, and collectively, we feel that this is well within reach," she said.

If soccer doesn't get you your kicks, SoccerFest has plenty of other entertaining diversions. The event has become something of a local tradition through attempting to craft a vivacious ambiance, with live music and food transcending the event's soccer roots.

"We really try to create a spectacle; an event that no one in their right mind would want to miss, whether they play soccer or not," said Ben Rosenbaum, who is a senior in the sponsorship department.

"This year, we're bringing a lot of new and exciting things that no SoccerFest has ever offered before," explained Rosenbaum. "We have Nike coming to trial their new ID training technology, not to mention Hits 94.3 is going to be there."

SoccerFest is funded in large by its sponsors, and the devoted work of the class' sponsorship department, which has posted the second-highest dollar amount in the class' history.

See SOCCERFEST on page 4

State to look into info request

APPEAL from page 2

University officials have verbally denied the existence of any such list of students reviewed during ACT meetings. However, Vanin contradicted this denial in her response to the records request stating, "I decline to provide you the lists and recorded information from ACT meetings you request."

The Collegian also received confirmation from UMPD Police Officer Randy Kershaw that a list exists.

According to Attorney Rebecca S. Murray, a staff attorney at the Office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, the Office has contacted the Dean of Students' office and is in the process of requesting an index of the records that were requested. The Supervisor of Records, Alan Cote, will render a decision on the public status of the records in the coming months.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY: DENNIS GRIMALDA

This year's SoccerFest will feature a constellation of activities beyond just soccer, including fresh food and live music.

Get the Most
CASH FOR BOOKS

Buyback Hours

Textbook Annex
Monday, April 26 - Friday, April 30 | 9 AM - 4 PM
Monday, May 3 - Wednesday, May 5 | 9 AM - 4 PM
Thursday, May 6 & Friday, May 7 | 9 AM - 5 PM
Saturday, May 8 | 11 AM - 4 PM
Monday, May 10 - Wednesday, May 12 | 9 AM - 5 PM
Thursday, May 13 | 9 AM - 4 PM

Campus Center Concourse
Monday, May 3 - Wednesday, May 5 | 9 AM - 4 PM
Thursday, May 6 & Friday, May 7 | 9 AM - 5 PM
Monday, May 10 - Wednesday, May 12 | 9 AM - 5 PM
Thursday, April 13 | 9 AM - 2 PM

Southwest/Hampden Lobby
Thursday, May 6 & Friday, May 7 | 10 AM - 5 PM
Monday, May 10 - Wednesday, May 12 | 10 AM - 5 PM
Thursday, May 13 | 10 AM - 1 PM

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

Powered by efollett.com

Find us on Facebook
facebook.com/UMassUniversityStore

Crime Log for April 23–25

FRIDAY, APRIL 23

Mildred A. Roper of Westford, Massachusetts was arrested as the result of a traffic stop.

A University of Massachusetts Police Department officer driving on Massachusetts Ave. viewed a car following behind another car too closely around midnight. After signaling for the car to pull to the side of the road, the officer reportedly noticed that Roper, the driver, seemed intoxicated. The officer asked Roper to perform numerous field sobriety tests, which she allegedly failed. Roper was arrested and charged with OUI, following too closely and unsafe operation of a motor vehicle.

Paul Michael Fickenwirth and John R. Aiken, both of Beverly, Massachusetts, were arrested on liquor law violations.

At 7:12 p.m., an officer suspected that a green Chevrolet in Lot 32 had underage occupants who possessed alcohol. The two UMass students were found to have alcohol in the vehicle, and Aiken was reportedly found with class C drugs on him as well.

Fickenwirth was arrested on charges of possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

Aiken was arrested and charged with possession of a class C drug and possession of alcohol while under the age of 21.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24

Jordan T. Rabb of Newton, Massachusetts was arrested for disorderly conduct. UMPD officers responded to a call about a suspicious vehicle in lot 50, near Cance Hall. The officers arrived at 1:11 a.m., and after speaking with residents and Rabb, he was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

Anthony Hines of Boston was arrested on inappropriate behavior charges. UMPD officers received a call from North Residential Area Building C that a male was acting inappropriately. At 3:13 a.m., Hines was arrested on charges of breaking and entering during the night and disturbing the peace.

Michael J. Grady of Worcester was arrested as the result of a domestic disturbance. At 3:45 a.m., officers responded to a call from Brown Hall. Grady was arrested on the charge of domestic assault and battery.

Emily E. Anderson of Westminister, Massachusetts was arrested as the result of a traffic stop.

An officer signaled for a grey Chevrolet to pull over to the side of the road for not having its lights on. While speaking with Anderson, the officer reportedly noticed she was disoriented, could not find her license and seemed confused. The officer asked Anderson to perform numerous field sobriety tests, which she allegedly failed.

While performing an inventory of the car before it was towed, the officer found alcohol in the car. Anderson was arrested and charged with a liquor OUI, possession of alcohol while underage, driving while not in possession of a valid driver's license and failure to operate with headlights on.

SUNDAY, APRIL 25

Gregory T. Lee of Milford, Massachusetts was arrested as the result of a traffic stop. While on patrol on Massachusetts Avenue, a UMPD officer reportedly saw a green Honda fail to stop at a traffic light and driving above the speed limit.

At 3:38 a.m., the officer signaled for Lee, the driver of the vehicle, to pull over in the Southwest Circle. While speaking with Lee, he allegedly appeared under the influence, with bloodshot eyes and slurred speech, and was unable to find his driver's license. The officer asked Lee to perform numerous field sobriety tests, which he failed. While doing an inventory of items in the car before it was towed, the officer found an open container of alcohol.

Lee was arrested on the charges of a liquor OUI, speeding, failure to stop at a traffic light, driving while not in possession of a valid driver's license and possession of an open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle.

Juan Nelson of Wellington, Florida and Samuel Fredrick Murphy of Chelmsford, Massachusetts were arrested for disorderly conduct. During UMass' annual spring concert at the Mullins Center, UMPD officers were forced to intervene in a fight between Nelson and Murphy. Both Nelson and Murphy were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

Kyle S. Gariepy of Leominster, Massachusetts was arrested for drug and alcohol violations. UMPD officers responded to a call from Prince Hall about a suspicious male in the building. Gariepy was identified as the suspicious male and was also found to have alcohol and a class E drug in his possession. Gariepy has been summonsed to Eastern Hampshire District Court on charges of possession of a class E drug, and possession of alcohol while underage.

– Collegian News Staff

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!

Come Celebrate With Us!

Salem Cross Inn
RESTAURANT & TAVERN

Great food, great setting, great time!
Call now to book your reservations!

Groups of any size are welcome!
508 867 2345
www.salemcrossinn.com
Route 9, 260 West Main Street West Brookfield MA 01585

SoccerFest kicks off Sat.

SOCCERFEST from page 3

during a down economy, ensuring the sustainability of the event. This year's major sponsors are Supercuts, Coca-Cola, Country Nissan, Cliff Bar, Off the Wall Games and Hits 94.3.

One of the biggest growth points communicated by the class was its new charitable efforts, which the class hopes will add another dynamic to the festival. Last year marked the first year of a partnership with the Amherst Survival Center, which supports the health and well-being of residents of Franklin and Hampshire counties with a variety of programs designed to help people meet their basic living needs.

SoccerFest will feature a dunk tank with various "local celebrities," where any donation will provide three throws, with proceeds going to the Amherst Survival Center.

"We're delighted that SoccerFest has chosen to continue its relationship with and support of the Amherst Survival Center," said Cheryl Zoll, the center's executive director.

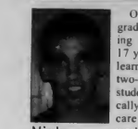
Former UMass soccer coach Ken Banda's Banda Bola Sports Foundation for children, which operates in Banda's home village of Chituka, Malawi, will also look to win big from SoccerFest. The charity is a small privately-run organization which collects donations of used and new sports equipment, school supplies, health products and clothing.

"It is our intention as a class to assist in the delivering of these goods back to Chituka village by donating 10 percent of registration fees to the Banda Bola Sports Foundation, as well as any donations collected the day of the event," said Matt Dion, a senior in the marketing department. "This is a great opportunity to help others halfway across the world, and all through a student-run grassroots festival."

—Collegian News Staff

Plenty of free time?

Work for the Collegian.



Stop by the Collegian Office, located in the UMass Campus Ctr.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Students will just have to bear with Bair

Nick Milano

On May 15, 2010, I will graduate from college, ending what has been a long 17 years of education. From learning the ABCs and one-two-threes as a kindergarten student to thinking analytically about different health care systems around the world, a lot has happened over that time period. To me, college education is not as big a deal as high school was, nor is it for my family: I'm not getting a party, I do not expect any gifts. College graduation is about being welcomed into the real world. Graduating from high school is about being welcomed into four years of partying.

Still, as someone who has paid tuition for four years, I expect graduation to be a big deal, especially when my family will not be doing much else.

When I think of college graduation, I think of important speakers who come to give one last burst of inspiration; challenging me to do something real with my life other than just make money. So this year, the University of Massachusetts is sending me and about 4,200 other graduates off into the real world with the chairwoman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Um. Word.

It will be a blast learning about banking practices – financial regulation is all the rage these days. But seriously, I understand that the University has forgone the typical commencement speaker, instead highlighting people with a connection to UMass. This can have its positives by showing us graduates that someone from UMass has gone on to accomplish some great things.

My point is not that Sheila Bair is going to bore us to death, but that when I think about college graduation, having the FDIC chairman is a little underwhelming.

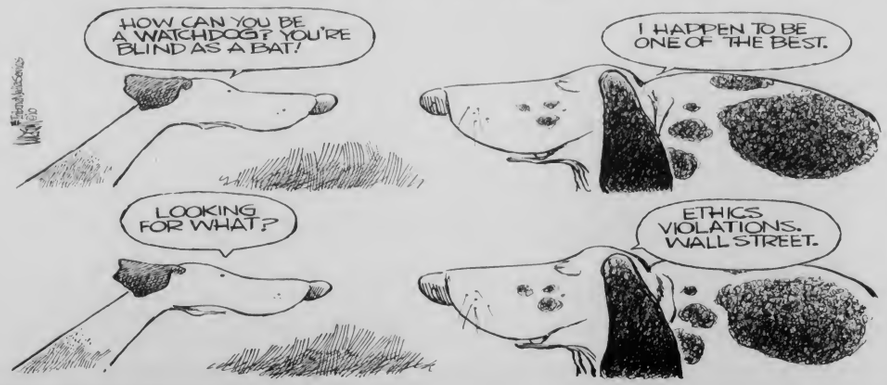
But the FDIC chairwoman?

Granted, there are many finance, accounting and management majors who might be fascinated about the United States banking system, but doesn't that leave a lot of people left out to dry?

Now I do not want to suggest that Sheila Bair is going to come in and bore us with banking rule. She has been called the second most powerful woman in the world by Forbes and was a point person for helping prevent a crisis worse than the one we're facing now.

Still, the FDIC chairwoman does not really get the heart pumping. Plus, bankers and professors for the most part seem like pretty boring people. Unless it is fabulous Fabrice Tourre of Goldman Sachs – how can you not expect great things from someone who calls himself "Fabulous Fab?" – I would prefer to be looking forward to a speaker whom I know will definitely have a fascinating story to tell.

Even the other UMass schools outdo us. UMass Dartmouth is hosting José Ramos-Horta who is the president of East Timor.



Few people know his story; East Timor descended into chaos after its fight for independence against Indonesia, but thanks to a strong United Nations peacekeeping force, the country is doing better. Ramos-Horta has even survived an assassination attempt that took place during a failed military coup. He has probably got some good stories.

UMass Lowell invited National Football League Commissioner Roger Goodell. While he might not seem like a source of inspiration, as a football fan, I would be intrigued by what he might have to say. UMass Boston's graduating class will hear from Victoria Reggie Kennedy. Her relationship with her late husband, Ted Kennedy, would also be fascinating to hear about. Even Mass Bay Community College has an impressive speaker in former Senate candidate Alan Khazei, who is best known for starting City Year and whose life has been about creating services to help others.

Since I have written this column, I fully expect Sheila Bair to come in and blow us all away. It happened at Boston University last year when BU students complained loudly about Congressman Mike Capuano as their commencement speaker, going as far as making Facebook groups in objection. He took his critics head-on saying, "The truth is, if this is the biggest disappointment of your life, you are the luckiest people in the world." Students applauded and he went on to deliver a speech about doing more than just earning a living and living your life with your head down, unaware of the other people existing around you.

My point is not that Sheila Bair is going to bore us to death, but that when I think about college graduation, having the FDIC chairman is a little underwhelming. I hope I have jinxed myself and she keeps us entertained. For next year, the University should look far and wide for someone who will give the 2011 graduating class something to look forward to.

Nick Milano is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Point-Counter-Point

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Clash of the munchies: Antonio's vs. Wings

Taste buds soar with Wings

Eli Gottlieb

So it has come to this: The final battle between good and evil; Batman and the Joker; God and Amalek. The contestants stand across from each other in the Wild West town square of cosmic war, and the requisite cries of "Who the Hell do you think I am?" are uttered.

At long last, the two greatest fast-food restaurants in the Amherst area stand face-to-face and settle, once and for all, who's the greatest — Wings over Amherst or Antonio's Pizza. I think I can say, surely and simply, that the prize must go to Wings. Of course, I have to prove this to my readers, and have no choice but to voice a few unpleasant truths that many might not want to hear about the society and world we live in; however, I feel it my utmost moral duty to enlighten everyone.

First of all, Wings must win because Antonio's is the pizza of the infidel, who will drown in their own blood for eating it. The pizza place that suddenly must not be named insists on not producing any kind of pizza or slice, except by special order, with any less than three to five toppings on it, one of which is somehow always a salad dressing.

They also use very little tomato sauce and a hard, thick crust. This is the Massachusetts Lovecraftian Abomination, an unacceptable deviation from the true New York City way of thin, foldable or cracker crusts with lots of fruity tomato sauce, spices and only one or two toppings. This combination allows the eater to enjoy the subtlety and richness of simple, well-made pizza, while the Massachusetts Abomination tries to cover its fundamental inadequacy in meats and dressings. To be quite frank, if you want bread covered in meat, salad dressing and some vegetables — without proper tomato sauce or mozzarella cheese — you can leave Antonio's with your soul intact, walk right into Moti's next door, and just get shawarma.

If, on the other hand, you want proper pizza, I recommend visiting the Berkshire Dining Common or simply taking a trip down to New York City or New Jersey.

In contrast, Wings improved Buffalo, New York's base product. Buffalo wings were originally meant to have a single flavor of sauce, the hot-sauce-and-butter flavor, fried onto actual wings and legs of chicken — complete with bones and cartilage. Thanks to innovative wings places such as Wings over Amherst, we can get "wings" that don't actually consist of anything but tasty, delicious meat, with a choice of dozens of sauce flavors and five different "hot" intensities of the original buffalo goodness. Some of them aren't even spicy, allowing us to get wings for friends who don't like or actively hate hot-pepper flavors.

Wings even delivers to anywhere in the Amherst area and the UMass campus until one in the morning Sunday through Wednesday, until 2:00 a.m. on Thursdays and until 2:30 a.m. on Fridays and Saturdays. Antonio's doesn't deliver at all except for large orders.

Speaking of delivery, we ought to consider the methods by which one orders the truly righteous junk food. To order Antonio's, one must actually visit the shop, or at least place a phone call ahead of time. To order Wings, all you have to do is place a phone call or, as of this semester, order online from their website. Yes, you read that correctly: You can now order delivery with no more effort than it takes to order books from Amazon.com, or find any of the other things so common on the Internet. The future is now, and the future eats Wings over Amherst.

Of course, many have been seduced by the Great Moldy Ones' propaganda, and will protest that Antonio's can at least put up a fight in price. After all, a slice only costs a couple of dollars, whereas Wings costs at least $10, right? Well, no. That $10 actually buys enough wings for two people, yielding a per-person price of $5.

That's less than it costs to buy a couple of slices at Antonio's, let alone a solid meat meal. There are children starving in Sudan, India and China who would kill for a whole meat meal, and Antonio's seriously proposes that we behave so decadently as to pay extra for less food that's of lesser quality? I seriously propose that Antonio's take a hike.

I suppose that tastes differ, and some might actually enjoy the eldritch quality of Antonio's.

Even so, we should consider the origins of each restaurant. According to their website, Wings "started in Amherst, Massachusetts, September of 1998, at the University of Massachusetts. Masterminded by Patrick Daly and Harold Tramazzo with the intent to deliver high quality, yet simple food to college students for a fair amount of money. It caught on like hotcakes and we haven't looked back since."

Antonio's may very well be a local establishment, but it's owned by townies. These people constantly attempt to criminalize our mere existence as students. Why should we pay for their food instead of buying our food from UMass students like ourselves? This moral stand requires neither doing the impossible nor seeing the invisible. The only proper way to transform raw ingredients into delicious, cheap food, while subsequently "fighting the power" and standing for our rights as students is to boycott Antonio's, and order junk food from UMass fellows at Wings over Amherst.

Overall, I think Antonio's should just give up. They can't possibly be better, as food and for students, than God's chosen junk food: Wings over Amherst.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Slice up your cravings

Everyone has a favorite slice or combination. For me, it's chicken-bacon-ranch and one honey mustard. The wide range of flavors available at Antonio's Pizza appeals to any bizarre craving one might develop.

Mike Fox

The small uptown institution has served its insane concoctions for years to University of Massachusetts students. I personally know a number of alums who make it their first culinary stop when returning to town.

But I'll be honest here – I don't need to convince anyone that Antonio's is great.

It's simply a fact, and there's no arguing against it. However, I am here today to prove to you why Antonio's is superior to that other delicious Amherst food staple, Wings over Amherst.

First, we must look at atmosphere.

Five nights a week (Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday), the bars empty out at 1 a.m. and everyone pours into Antonio's. What occurs is something known as "Club Sidewalk."

A combination of people from all of Amherst's uptown establishments, it really is the place where everyone's at. The festive atmosphere ensures that the party continues for another hour. And of course, it's all centered around getting a slice.

The Hangar (the home of Wings) is a fine establishment, but let's face it, the place is tucked away from anything else, somewhere on University Drive. If you want to go and eat at Wings, it requires you to plan your whole night around it.

Antonio's is instantly accessible at the end of the night.

What about delivery? Yes, I acknowledge that Wings is by far the best delivery option, but let me blow your mind: For all you juniors and seniors, do you remember back two years ago that when you ordered Wings, the cases seemed a bit larger?

The chicken sandwich had two strips of chicken instead of one "sandwich-ized" strip. Wings, like many businesses in the food industry, has fallen victim to the economy and has had to subtly downsize.

Now let me ask you, how do you downsize a slice of pizza?

Antonio's is still a massive slice to be reckoned with.

I, for one, will admit that either ordering Wings or getting a slice of Antonio's is often done after a night of festivities.

After a "long night of festivities," how on Earth are you going to deal with sticky fingers? You'll probably fall asleep with Wings sauce stuck to yourself, failing to recognize after a "long night of festivities" how you appear.

All that needs to be said about this is Antonio's has a crust. A slice of pizza is infinitely easier to handle when your senses are dimmed. Well, unless your senses are really dimmed. But when I want a snack, I want it to be easily handled. I don't want to have to go through an entire roll of paper towels just to satisfy my craving. Such a notion is ludicrous.

Antonio's, little may you know, has another location in Providence, R.I.

However, it is still an extreme rarity and truly a pride to Amherst. How many locations do you think Wings has? Well, it's in 10 states, with just six locations alone in Massachusetts.

Now I will not begrudge their success, but this demonstrates that Antonio's is truly more unique and able to inspire UMass pride. Wings may have started here, but Antonio's is truly of here.

But all the rest of this is window dressing. Let's get down to what really matters.

Taste.

A friend of mine said comparing pizza to wings is like comparing apples to oranges, two completely different things.

So let's analyze based on how each food can satisfy taste cravings.

Fried chicken has something about it – the texture, the slight crunch, the tender white meat. Additionally, the range of spices at Wings is undoubtedly impressive.

But you know what? You can only satisfy one, maybe two, at most three cravings in one bite.

Let's look at the chicken-bacon-ranch slice from Antonio's. Bacon is universally acknowledged as a superfood. Simply put, it is pure, distilled flavor, in a tasty, salty snap. Chicken, well, who doesn't love it?

And Ranch is a miracle dressing. Smooth, creamy, with a bit of bite. Underlining it all, you have a nice, warm, doughy crust.

Read those two passages over again.

Antonio's is famous because in one slice it can satisfy every craving you have. Wings, while great, is limited in scope.

I love Wings and Antonio's. But when I'm in need of an easily accessible craving that is truly unique to Amherst, it's a slice. As for lines, I think we've all been craving it enough to order a hot cheese slice up front.

Mike Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Scottish folk hits Noho

By Angela Starowski
Collegian Staff

Scotland is good for more than just haggis and men in tartan skirts. Selkirk's Frightened Rabbit, a five-piece folk band with an indie-rock streak, take the stage at the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton this Saturday. The band is touring to promote the recent release of their third studio album, "The Winter of Mixed Drinks."

Kicking off the evening in style is Bad Veins, a band born out of a Cincinnati attic. Since their debut, the band nestled themselves in a fuzzy, alternative-rock niche, drawing references to everyone from the National to the Strokes. The band was initially conceived as a solo project for singer Ben Davis, but became a duo when drummer Sebastian Schultz was added to the mix. They came into their own in the three years since their debut, receiving critical acclaim for their self-titled studio release.

Also preceding Frightened Rabbit is Maps and Atlases, who hail from the Windy City itself. The band concocted their own recipe for rock music, combining peculiar percussive rhythms with folk inspiration and just a dash of math rock. "Perch Patchwork," a brand-new EP from Maps and Atlases, will be released in June of this year and serves as their debut with Barsuk Records.

Like Bad Veins, Frightened Rabbit was originally a solo effort. Scott Hutchinson's vision consisted of a half-dozen tracks and a lot of ideas. When the remaining two members joined, the rest came naturally.

Among the interesting features of Frightened Rabbit is their genetic makeup. The band consists of vocalist Hutchinson and his brother Grant Hutchinson on drums, with the help of rhythm guitarist Ben Kennedy.

In an interview with Bill Cummings of God Is In The TV online magazine, vocalist Hutchinson commented on working with his percussive brother, joking, "Grant joined a year later, making the outfit much nosier. Billy came along about six months after this and actually made it a bit less noisy."

Another of Frightened Rabbit's more prominent features is Hutchinson's thick Scottish howl, which provides a bit of folk to even the hardest hitting songs on the album. The general lack of a bass guitarist also aids in this twangy folk feel of their music, though Kennedy occasionally fills this role as well.

Though the band has been together since 2003, they finally found their ticket to the big-time with 2008's "Midnight Organ Fight." The album features the singles "Fast Blood" and "Heads Roll Off," which helped earn the band a spot on Pitchfork's "Top 50 Albums of 2008."

"The Winter of Mixed Drinks," which was released in early March, marks the band's third studio release. The album builds upon Frightened Rabbit's previous releases, since the members have noted they do not intend to leave much time between albums.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Scotland folk band Frightened Rabbit are performing at the Pearl Street ballroom this Saturday. The group's lack of a bass player emphasizes the folk feel of their music.

The album is still a bit of a departure from their previous works, however, adding elements of electronica and more rock-oriented tracks to their catalogue. Songs on the album tend to flow into each other, making graceful transitions between each of the 11 tracks.

The single "Swim Until You Can't See Land" found its way to alternative radio stations all over the world, rekindling the flames of folk-rock love in their fans. The song is written in true folk fashion, posing the question, "Are you a man, or are you a bag of sand?"

Frightened Rabbit is a high-energy representation of the direction of modern folk music. The performance comes at a perfect time, perhaps serving as a respite for weary minds after a long semester. Regardless, the band is sure to ring in the last week of classes for the University of Massachusetts in a manner all their own.

Frightened Rabbit will perform at the Pearl Street Ballroom on Saturday, May 1 at 9 p.m. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

Angela Starowski can be reached at astarow@student.umass.edu.

Cool off with summer beer

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

The weather outside is still cool and the trees are still in full bloom, but while the world outside your window may tell you that springtime is in full swing, the world inside your liquor store's fridge tells a different story. Summer beer season has already begun, and many consider it to be the most flavorful season of the year. Choosing the right bottle of suds to cool down with on a hot summer day can be a tough decision, but it is not one that you have to make alone. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian has got you covered, with some guidelines to help you pick the perfect pint for the summer season.

First of all, let us define what makes a beer a "summer seasonal." Summer beers are meant, of course, for warmer weather, and accordingly are generally light to medium-light in body for casual ease of drinking. The typical flavor profile includes fruity flavors, often provided by citrus fruits, with lemon and orange zest in particular. Brewers also often provide fruity notes with honey, as well as floral hops and unique brewing spices.

The category is largely dominated by ales, with a special emphasis on wheat ales, for a number of reasons. For one, ales are receptive to a large range of hops, and their lighter flavors are relatively simple to tweak and toy with. Second, the smooth taste of wheat ale, made from malted wheat as well as barley, provides an excellent background for fruit and sweetness. Look for this marked difference in flavor in any wheat-based summers you try.

First on the list of seasonals this year is Honeymoon, Blue Moon's summer offering. The Honeymoon is a good example of the category, as it blends most of the typical summer flavors into one beer. Although it is technically a wheat beer, it distinguishes itself as being both a pale and a white ale, with an interesting balance of smooth wheat and tangy white. The flavor is filled out with an orange zest, and is mellowed by a hint of clover honey.

If you are looking for a sweet summer beer to drink on its own or sip with raw shellfish, this is one of the best brews available. Be wary, however. If you plan on downing a six-pack, the sweetness of this honey-laced beer may prove to be too much.

See SUMMER BEER on page 8

Celebrate with white wine

By Matthew Harrison
Collegian Staff

With graduation almost here for a lot of students, I thought I'd talk about a few inexpensive sparkling wines which are sure to add a nice fizz to your graduation celebrations. While any carbonated wine is sparkling wine, it's important to note that "Champagne" is reserved for wines coming from the Champagne region of France. Sparkling wine may also be called bubbly, brut, champagne-style, Spumante (Italian) or Sekt (German).

The first wine I tasted was Cook's Grand Reserve, a California sparkler weighing in at 11.5 percent alcohol and priced at a mere $8. Cook's is known for making sweet, inexpensive sparkling wines, and I've enjoyed one of their other wines before. Grand Reserve has a very pale color, and it's almost as clear as water. The nose is very closed overall, but it has components of grapefruit, rubber (very common in sparkling wines) and citrus. It leaves a nice and dry feeling in the mouth, not unlike the feeling you get from eating Warheads. It has flavors of grapefruit, ginger ale, flowers and a hint of vanilla. It feels pretty thin, and its finish doesn't last very long. Overall, I give Grand Reserve a rating of B; it's not too spectacular, but it's enjoyable and very easy to drink. The $8 price point makes it very affordable, especially if parents are paying for a graduation party!

The next wine is Brut Dargent's Blanc de Blancs from France. It has 11.5 percent alcohol and costs $10.50. This wine has a much darker yellow/golden color than Cook's, and it's considerably thicker in the glass, leaving nice legs. The nose is very floral, with hints of rubber, melon, cantaloupe rind, citrus and another smell I couldn't quite pinpoint. It has a very nice acidic, almost bitter taste, and an oaky, nutty and vanilla-like flavor. The finish is all oak, and the rest of the flavors are completely masked by oak. I give this wine a C+ for the overpowering oak taste with not much else going on.

The final wine is a California sparkler which many people reach for when celebrating: Korbel Extra Dry. It has 12 percent alcohol and I got it for $12, on sale from $14. It looks about the same golden color as the Brut Dargent, and the thickness is similar as well. It has a very pleasant, flowery aroma. I get a strong honeysuckle flower component, and a metallic smell which made me think of the foil from the bottle or sucking on quarters. The taste is wonderful – sweet with good acidity, and a more refined, pleasant taste. This wine is very easy to drink, and it's by far my favorite of the three. I give it an A overall, and this wine would feel at home on the table of a casual dinner or a fancy work-related party.

See WHITE WINE on page 8

Champagne celebrations

WHITE WINE from page 7

At $8-$12, all three sparkling wines are a very affordable way to celebrate your graduation. Drink with caution, however, since the carbonation in these wines makes the alcohol hit your system faster than regular wine. Keep those corks pointed away from your (and my) face, and until next time – cheers!

Be sure to visit http://dailycollegian.com for a video review of these wines, or http://TheBottleReview.com for more wine reviews.

Matthew Harrison can be reached at mharriso@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Sparkling wine, commonly known as champagne, is an affordable way to celebrate any occasion, with bottles available for as low as $8.

NORTHAMPTON PRIDE
AFTER PARTY
MAY 1, 2010
The Hottest Party of the Year!
5 - 7 PM
$7
VIPs FREE
DJ Lori B
DJ Otis
7 PM – CL
$15
VIPs $5
NO RE ENTRY
DRAGSHOW
18+
Valid ID Required
DIVA'S NIGHTCLUB
492 Pleasant St., Route 5
Northampton
413-586-8161
Burgers/Hotdogs/Deck Bar

COURTESY FLICKR.COM/LEANNE_A

Sierra Nevada Summerfest is one of a number of seasonal summer beers. Summer brews usually contain hints of fruit and citrus flavors.

Chill out with seasonal beer

SUMMER BEER from page 7

Harpoon Brewery's seasonal brew, simply named Harpoon Summer Beer, is an excellent choice for fans of beer. Running nearly twice as long as most of their seasonals, the beer is wheaty and smooth. Possessing just a hint of sweetness, it is a more understated summer beer than those offered by other companies, but the flavor is rich and the body is at the fuller end of the category.

Sam Adams Summer Ale is perhaps the most famous warm-weather brew in the nation, and its taste is certainly distinct. Although technically a wheat beer, it does not have the smoothness of German- and Belgian-style white beer, and the texture is nearly syrupy. Summer Ale packs a threefold bite of floral hops, lemon zest and grains of paradise, a brewing spice that the company claims has been used for centuries. The result is an extremely tangy beer, and the taste may be difficult to acquire for those who enjoy the beers listed above.

The last brewing company on our countdown is Sierra Nevada, a company that goes against the flow by offering a pilsner-style summer in the form of the Sierra Summerfest. From a brewer that produces almost universally strong, hoppy beers, the Summerfest forgoes the fruits, citrus and sweetness that characterize the category. The pilsner is a light style, lighter than their signature pale ales, and uses a delicate combination of floral hops and light-roasted malt to create a crisp, refreshing beer that fans of the hoppy bite are sure to enjoy.

While these are some of the most popular brewers around to put out a summer seasonal, they are by no means the only ones. If you enjoy the sweet, tangy taste of summer beer on a hot June afternoon then keep your eyes peeled for local offerings available in your area. Shop around, try everything and find out what you love. And until next time, bottoms up.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheri1@student.umass.edu.

TV shows fight cancellation

By Kate MacDonald
Collegian Staff

It's that time of year again, when television shows come to an end amidst ridiculous cliffhangers and possible character deaths, while their viewers wonder if the show will pick back up where it started next fall. The network lineups are usually released after the season finales, so when they roll around to close the 2009-2010 season, we are left to guess what shows will be back and which should be forgotten.

Some of the big shows, however, have already been renewed. Fans should expect to see the following shows, which should come as a surprise to no one.

"Brothers and Sisters," despite major cast shifts, will see its fifth season on ABC, probably assuming its long-claimed Sunday night time slot. "Glee," too, has obviously already been renewed. The show, one of the most popular currently on television, began the second half of its season earlier this month.

Other shows that have been saved include "The Office," "30 Rock," "Gossip Girl" and "Two and a Half Men" (with or without Charlie Sheen). "Family Guy" and "Friday Night Lights" were a given as well.

According to TVGuide.com, many other popular shows have been placed into the "Looking Good" category, and can be assumed to be safe for the 2010-2011 season. Underrated shows "Parenthood" and "Private Practice" find themselves on this list, along with heavy hitters "Grey's Anatomy," "House" and each version of "CSI."

It's assumed that fans can stay tuned to "Law and Order: Special Victims Unit" to see if Stabler and Benson's obvious sexual tension ever actually amounts to anything. They can probably also wait around to see who will be the next "American Idol" replacement judge.

Even "One Tree Hill" might be alright. After two of its main characters left last season, many fans agree that this show should just be put out of its misery. Though Chad Michael Murray and Hilary Burton were not the best actors on this teen drama, the show peaked years ago before they left.

Then there are shows that are on the cusp. Even after analyzing ratings, buzz and general likeability, there are shows that could go either way – never seen again or live to entertain another day. Stars of "Heroes," a former hit program, are among those waiting to see if they'll be hitting the unemployment lines later on this year. At least they have good company. "Mercy," NBC's new drama, is in the same predicament, though it would truly be a shame if this show is not picked up.

TVGuide.com also counts "Melrose Place" to be in this category, but most other entertainment websites have written it off. The show certainly did not live up to its older counterpart, and viewers quickly found Katie Cassidy's spitfire character Ella to be the only thing saving it.

See CANCELED SHOWS on page 9

'Lost' among canceled

CANCELED SHOWS from page 8

Certain no-shows in the 2010-2011 lineup include the already cancelled ABC programs "Lost" and "Ugly Betty." The network's "Scrubs" is also thought to be cancelled. Star Zach Braff announced its demise on his Facebook page, though ABC has not officially corroborated his statement. "Sons of Tucson," doomed from its futile pilot, is also thought to be over.

Is your favorite show on the edge or on its way out? Fret not viewers – shows have actually been saved by the perseverance of its loyal fans. When CBS's "Jericho" was cancelled in 2007, fans sent executives 20 tons of peanuts (due to a line by a main character), and their show was given eight more episodes in 2008. The ill-fated WB's "Roswell" was saved in 2000, while the CW's "Reaper" found a reprise in 2008.

If not, surely one of the many new pilots that will be tried by the major networks will attract some viewers next season. Boston-based "Quinn-tuplets" will make its way to CBS, while Fox is rumored to be trying yet another police drama "Ride-Along" in the fall. The other networks will certainly try some new shows out as well, and some, at least, are sure to be promising.

If the 2010-2011 lineup doesn't interest you, there's always the Internet to help fans watch their favorite shows that have been sent to the TV cemetery in the sky. Reruns of Paris Hilton and Nicole Richie's "The Simple Life," anyone?

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY FLICKR.COM/DOORFISHION

"The Office" is one of a handful of shows that avoided the axe and will be returning to television for another season.

Conservatives struggle in liberal-lousy Hollywood

By Patrick Goldstein
Los Angeles Times

If you are a devoted reader of Andrew Breitbart's ultra-conservative Big Hollywood website, as I am, you'd think that the world as we know it is surely coming to an end, being turned into a hideously ever-shrinking black hole by Hollywood liberals and their fellow travelers.

The site is chock-full of posts lambasting liberal film critics for not liking vigilante movies, decrying the "gutless" Comedy Central for editing out any references to the prophet Muhammad in "South Park," mocking global warming activists, getting into a tizzy for weeks on end about Tom Hanks' elitist, anti-American view of American history and, of course, celebrating Sarah Palin at every turn. My favorite recent headline was "Is James Cameron a Genocidal Maniac?"

One of Big Hollywood's pet causes is promoting the notion that if you're a conservative, working in liberal Hollywood is like trying to survive in an oppressive gulag-like Soviet state where everyone has to conform to a rigidly controlled form of liberal political thinking. The site features an interview with "Northern Exposure" actress Janine Turner, who's launching a new organization, Constituting America, where she contends that "it's hard for conservatives in Hollywood because they're afraid to step out. Because when they do, there could be repercussions where they don't have work, and that can mean – I think there are a lot of conservatives in Hollywood ... (but) no one is really willing to take the first step. And I don't blame them. I mean, it's affected my career too. And I think it's hard ... when you step out as a conservative, it's just such a – the environment is very left, very, very different to our type of environment."

Mystery novelist and screenwriter Andrew Klavan, a leading conservative activist, put it more bluntly: "There's a culture in Hollywood where if you're a left-winger, you can talk very openly . If you go in to sell something, you can make anti-American, anti-military, anti-religious remarks, but I'm the kind of guy who's going to say, 'No, I disagree.' But that's pretty much the end of my sale. Whereas, if you're a conservative, especially if you're a religious person, people like that meet in secret, talk in whispers. It's a very disturbing kind of culture."

Being a Jew who grew up in the South, I sympathize with all oppressed minorities, but I think that conservatives need to get a grip here. Yes, Hollywood is lousy with liberals – they're everywhere. That's a given, OK, just like where my family comes from, there's a Baptist church on every block. But where's the evidence that conservatives are denied jobs because of their political beliefs? For all the vague charges being bandied about, I've never heard any specific examples of suppression in action. If you're a conservative and can offer me chapter and verse, I will be happy to take up your cause.

And I will do the same for any liberals who can support their claim that they've been denied work in talk radio simply because it happens to be dominated by, ahem, a lot of moral absolutist conservatives. In both cases, I suspect that each field has strong political leanings because of greater cultural forces at work, not because of bias. But if you think you can prove me wrong, have at it.

Write for Arts&Living!
Interested?
Let us know...
arts@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
B/W Ads for $6.70
per column inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for $10 per inch
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UM, Drexel meet in first-ever matchup

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

On paper, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team and Drexel are pretty similar.

The Minutemen look to exploit the No. 13 Dragons differences when they play their final regular season game of the 2010 season this Saturday afternoon at 4 p.m.

Both teams have clinched a birth in the Colonial Athletic Association tournament, but the match-up will be a pivotal one, with both teams looking to get a higher seed while attempting to reach the NCAA Tournament.

The two teams will meet for the first time in program history, as both are new members of the CAA.

"We have to go down there and play a flawless game if we expect to come out on top," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

No. 9 UMass (8-4, 2-2 CAA) is coming off a 13-12 victory over No. 14 Georgetown last Saturday in the ESPNU Warrior Classic, as the Minutemen scored the last three goals to end a two-game losing streak.

"Confidence wise, for our guys to know we've done it before, but we didn't win the game, we've come back in a couple of losses against Yale and Harvard, but we didn't win the game, this one we did win the game," Cannella said.

In his first career start, senior midfielder Christian Hain tallied the game-winning goal with 33 seconds left to give UMass the win.

"So it gives you confidence to do that, [but] unfortunately, that one's past, that was Saturday, and now we're into Tuesday and Wednesday, so it's almost out of our memory, and we need to make sure we get ready for Drexel and Drexel only," Cannella said earlier this week.

Along with Hain, freshman attackman Will Manny continued his scoring surge, tying a career high with five points while scoring his fifth-career hat trick against the Hoyas. Manny leads the team with 41 points on the season.

The No. 13 Dragons (9-4, 2-2 CAA) have a similar record to the Minutemen and also lost to No. 11 Towson and Delaware, the two opponents UMass fell to this season in its first year in the CAA.

The Dragons fell to the Blue Hens 10-6 last Saturday and 8-7 to the Tigers on April 17, but won their first two games in their new conference, a 13-11 victory over No. 15 Hofstra and a 12-7 win over Penn State.

The team is 6-1 at home this season, and will honor its 11 seniors before the game against the Minutemen, most notably attackman Colin Ambler. Ambler has started 13 games, and has 21 goals and 10 assists to lead the Dragons with 37 points.

Along with Ambler, attackman Scott Perr has 17 goals and 19 assists on the season, while goalkeeper Mark Manos, who leads the conference in save percentage (.605) and goals against average (7.90).

"They play very well together as a group," Cannella said.

UMass is in the Top 10 in the country in six statistical categories including sixth in assists per game (7.92). The Minutemen are eighth in the NCAA in goals scored (12.33), and 64.2 percent of UMass' goals have been assisted so far this season.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SHAW/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen celebrate after a goal earlier this season at Garber Field.

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

UMass travels to Drexel on Saturday in hopes of trying to get a better position in the playoffs.

Special teams to play key role on Sat.

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Success in lacrosse isn't always determined by a team's ability to function in even-man situations.

While the No.9 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team excels on special teams offense, No. 13 Drexel is one of the toughest teams to beat on the penalty kill in the Colonial Athletic Association.

A win this weekend puts the Minutemen into a good position for good seeding in the conference tournament.

UMass (8-4, 2-2 CAA) boasts a conference-best 45-percent man-up scoring percentage, tallying 17 goals on the man-advantage.

Attackman Kyle Smith and midfielder Bobby Hayes account for nine of those goals.

Saturday against Georgetown, the Minutemen won, 13-12 but needed to score the final three goals of the game to do so.

"I thought we needed to be more athletic on the attack side," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of the Minutemen's win against Georgetown last Saturday.

"In starting D'Amario right of the bat, hopefully we'll instill some confidence in him. We bumped up Christian Hain into the first group with Bobby Hayes and Ryan Hantverk and that's a formidable group."

In that game, the Minutemen scored on their only extra-man opportunity of the game and allowed the Hoyas two extra-man opportunities, one of which resulted in a goal.

The two penalties were an improvement, however, for a UMass team that averages four per game. The Dragons (9-4, 2-2) average just under five.

Outside of goalkeeper Mark Manos (7.90 goals against average, .607 save percentage), defenseman Dana Wilbur (45 ground balls, 11 caused-turnovers) brings ball-hawking skills that can stifle numerous offensive runs put together by opponents.

As well as handling themselves on the defensive side of special teams, six different Dragons have multiple man-up goals on the season.

Conference Differential

Both UMass and Drexel have trouble defending against conference opponents. Each have 36 goals against them in conference play.

"It's our first year [in the conference] and the two teams we've faced for the first time in conference, we've lost to," Cannella said. "So we put the challenge [to break that trend] out to the guys this week."

The Minutemen average 17 turnovers per-game against conference opponents but Tim McCormack's .581 save-percentage in conference game is 20 points higher than his overall.

Another constant during conference play is the tandem of attackmen Will Manny and Anthony Biscardi.

Manny has most of the minutes previously held by sophomore Art Kell, whose season ended due to a leg injury as UMass began conference play. Since then, Manny has nine goals, six assists. He also leads the conference with 3.75 points per-game in conference games.

The only blemish to Manny's conference numbers is his 16 turnovers.

Biscardi has seven goals, five assists, while starting in all four conference games this season.

Defenseman Diogo Godoi and Casey Rahn have led the UMass defense through conference play, amassing 14 caused-turnovers, 20 ground balls, second only to face off midfielder Greg Rushing, who leads the conference with 21 ground balls during CAA play.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

UM heads to Dartmouth

By David Martin
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team looks to pick up a strong win against tough competition in this Saturday's regatta in Dartmouth, New Hampshire, in preparation for May's U.S. Rowing Collegiate Championship tournament.

The weekend's regatta will feature races from the Varsity 8, the Second Varsity 8, the Lightweight 8 and the Varsity 4 boats.

The competition this weekend will be a huge factor, as the Minutewomen will be facing off against strong opponents in Dartmouth, Buffalo and Cornell.

Dartmouth is one of the premiere Ivy League crews with a 10-2 overall record. The Big Green are ranked 17th in the nation according to the Collegiate Rowing Coaches Association and are looking to improve their standings further against a determined UMass crew.

Buffalo, however, is the team that looks to be the biggest overall threat in this weekend's regatta. The Bulls are fresh off of a Colonial Athletic Association championship run and are trying to show that they are one of the teams to beat in the Collegiate Championships. UMass coach Jim Dietz is not missing their argument.

"Buffalo is one of the strongest teams in the country, and I can definitely see them reaching the finals in the Championship regatta. Their crew is one that raises the bar for other schools across the country."

Dietz understands Buffalo's strengths and abilities well, considering his team was in that same position just a few years ago.

"We were always that team, but now others have taken our place as we find ourselves in the middle of a rebuilding year," Dietz said.

It's worthy to note that, in the Minutewomen's rebuilding year, they have rarely finished below second place overall in any regatta. They have also placed in first and second consecutively in several different races throughout the season.

In preparation for their last three regattas of the year, most of the rowers have taken it upon themselves to practice on the water twice a day, getting their timing right and figuring out which combinations of rowers per boat work out the best.

"The more time that they spend on the water, the better they'll become. We make sure that they don't burn themselves out by having their second practices outside replace the time that they would have spent in Boyden working on rowing machines and in the weight room," Dietz said.

In a sport like this, constant practice and repetition are key to a crew's success. Hundreds of hours go into races that last at most six or seven minutes. Determination, camaraderie and commitment will be what help the team transition from a rebuilding roster to a championship contender.

"You don't get good at rowing if you don't have a day-to-day, year-to-year commitment," Dietz said. "These girls have that, and they all want to enjoy the same type of success that this program has seen in the previous decade."

In preparation for the upcoming championship regatta in New Jersey, Dietz is looking to concentrate more efforts on the smaller and lightweight boats. Those, he feels, are the boats that are really going to make a lot of noise in the championship bout.

David Martin can be reached at dmmartin@student.umass.edu.

UMass faces No. 1 Terps

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

After winning the Atlantic 10 championship last weekend, the Minutewomen will travel to No. 1 Maryland on Saturday in their final regular season game of the year.

Donato up for Lowe's Senior CLASS Award

By Scott Cournoyer
Collegian Staff

Once every so often, a collegiate talent exemplifies what it means to be a true student athlete. The Massachusetts baseball team outfielder Mike Donato is one of the few players in this day in age to display dedication and commitment to excellence on the baseball field, in the classroom and in the community.

Donato is one of 10 finalists across Division 1 baseball nominated for the Lowe's Senior CLASS Award, an acronym for "Celebrating Loyalty and Achievement for Staying in School." The award recognizes the complete student-athlete for their performance on the diamond, as well as their academics and impact in the local community.

"To be nominated for this award is a culmination of all the hard work put in over the last four years," Donato said. "I've been playing baseball since I was five years old, and I always figured it would take me to where I wanted to go in life."

After seeing regular playing time as a freshman and sophomore, Donato has taken off the last two seasons, excelling in every facet of what it means to be committed to excellence.

"UMass gave me the opportunity to come in and play Division I baseball right out of the gate, and one of the biggest things for me was setting an example for others to follow," Donato said.

Donato started all 53 games last season as a junior, posting a .336 batting average, driving in 40 runs and slugging 13 doubles and five home runs. The slugger also racked up 73 hits, tying for 10th in the conference, also ranking sixth-most hits for a single season in school history. Donato was also named to the first team All-Atlantic 10 team.

As a senior, Donato was elected as one of three co-captains, being recognized for his leadership and passion for the game.

"Being elected as one of the captains really showed that others recognize the work you put in, and I'm honored to be a leader for this team," Donato said.

Donato continues to shows great discipline and ability at the plate this season, posting a .331 batting average, a team-high 10 doubles and a .387 on-base percentage.

As a history major, Donato holds a 3.41 grade-point average and has been on the dean's list, further exemplifying his dedication to everything he does.

"UMass gave me the opportunity to come here and get a great education, while playing baseball at a high level. With or without baseball, I've always had aspirations to finish school and receive a degree," Donato said.

Donato also gives back to the community, volunteering as a teacher's aide at Wildwood Elementary School where he is involved helping fifth and sixth grade students in subjects such as reading and language arts, as well as social studies.

"After I'm done here, I hope to be able to teach history. Academics has always been my priority. Finishing here with a degree has always been my goal," Donato said.

Donato will be joined by some of the best senior players in the country, which include finalists Daniel Bibona (University of California, Irvine), Stephen Cardullo (Florida State), Blake Dean (LSU), Jim Klocke (Southeast Missouri State), Cory Kovanda (Ohio State), Tyler Lyons (Oklahoma State), Matt Payton (Western Kentucky), Tony Plagman (Georgia Tech) and David Towarnicky (Appalachian State). Fans can go to the official website SeniorCLASSaward.com to vote through May 31. The winner will be announced in June at the College World Series in Omaha, Nebraska.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior Mike Donato is excelling on the baseball diamond as well as off the field.

Scott Cournoyer can be reached at scournoy@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.25
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.75 • STUDENT $7.50 (WITH ID)
CLASSIC DISCOVERIES
EVERY FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
TICKETS ONLY $5 EACH!
APRIL 30th & May 1st
Caddy Shack
HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [PG13] 145 415 645 915
◆ A NIGHTMARE ON ELM STREET REMAKE [R] ⓘ
105 225 345 455 625 745 905 1020 1135
◆ FURRY VENGEANCE [PG] 150 425 655 920
◆ OCEANS [G] 115 400 700 930
◆ THE BACK-UP PLAN [PG13] 125 405 720 1000
◆ THE LOSERS [PG13] 140 430 730 1010
CLASH OF THE TITANS 2D [PG13] 100 410 715 950
DATE NIGHT [PG13] 135 445 705 925
DEATH AT A FUNERAL [R] ⓘ 110 450 735 955
KICK-ASS [R] ⓘ 130 420 710 1005
CinéArts
◆ CITY ISLAND [PG13] 120 435 725 1015
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Pitching leads UM

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

The pitching staff of the Massachusetts baseball team has saved its finest performances for Atlantic 10 opponents. Now, in order to launch their team into the top half of the conference standings, the UMass pitchers must silence the high-powered offense of George Washington.

As the three-game series between the Minutemen (10-21, 7-8 A-10) and the Colonials (22-19, 10-5) gets underway this afternoon at Earl Lorden Field in Amherst, the predominant matchup will feature the UMass pitchers against the deep lineup of GWU.

The Colonials are leading the A-10 with a .337 team batting average against conference opponents, which comes as no surprise as seven batters are hitting .300 or better. Senior shortstop Tom Zebroski leads his team with a .413 average and 11 home runs, while starting in all 40 games for GWU.

The Minutemen have a 7.04 team earned run average, but improve to a respectable 4.40 mark against A-10 teams. They are second in the conference with a .258 opponents batting average versus conference teams. In their last six conference games, the Minutemen staff has allowed a total of 19 runs, an average of just over three runs per game.

"The conference is where you gear all your energy and focus," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "How you're judged at the end of the season is by how well you do in the conference, whether or not you have a chance to go to postseason play, so it's just more important games."

UMass also keeps their A-10 foes in the park as they are tied for first in with only seven home runs allowed in conference games. George Washington is second in the conference having hit 46 home runs. Junior outfielder Brendon Kelliher joins Zebroski in double-digit home runs with 10. The Colonials' top two home run hitters are also their top two hitters for average.

While GWU hits many home runs, it also strikes out often, tied for third-most strikeouts in the conference. UMass pitchers will look to add to its conference-leading 131 strikeouts and 8.86 strikeouts-per-nine innings ratio.

Appropriately, junior Nick Serino leads the Minutemen with 53 strikeouts in only 43 innings and will get the ball first in today's opener. He's had double-digit strikeouts in two of his last three starts and is coming off a complete game effort against Saint Louis.

Seniors Jared Freni and Bryan Leigh will pitch in Games 2 and 3. They are second and third on the ballclub in strikeouts, respectively.

"Certain situations call for a strikeout while other situations call for economizing pitches," Stone said.

These three hurlers have shown the ability to excel in both situations.

In each of their last two starts, only Serino failed to go at least eight innings in both, as he lasted six and one-third innings against Rhode Island. The trio has pitched the last two weekend series against Rhode Island and Saint Louis and led their team to consecutive series wins. Stone attributes the team's recent success to the emergence of his top three starting pitchers. "The [pitchers] who pitch on the weekends are our best [pitchers] and they've proven that," Stone said. "That's why we've had results. Momentum and everything else really start on the mound so you have to have good pitching to have a chance to win ballgames. Fortunately, they've stepped things up."

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

UMass squares off with GW

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts baseball team, its upcoming weekend series against George Washington represents the hardest Atlantic 10 matchup it has for the rest of the season.

UMass coach Mike Stone doesn't see any special significance in this, however, as he has seen his team play arguably its best baseball of the season against tough teams. After getting swept at the hands of conference-leading Charlotte in early April, the Minutemen (10-21, 7-8 A-10) turned it around, winning their last three conference series against Richmond, Rhode Island and most recently, La Salle.

"Everybody we've played recently has been ahead of us [in the standings]," Stone said. "So I think this is a similar situation. George Washington has done well so I expect another good test."

The Colonials (22-19, 10-5 A-10) are no ordinary test, however. With a .310 batting average and a league-high 46 home runs in 40 games, George Washington's high-powered offense is unparalleled league-wide. Stone is confident in his team, though, and doesn't want his pitching staff to be overly concerned with the statistics.

"I explained to [the pitchers] that George Washington has a ballpark with a short fence – that's why they have a lot of home runs," Stone said. "That's traditionally the way it is with their team. [My players] shouldn't be so concerned about the stats they see online because it's a bandbox they play in."

Luckily for UMass, the series is being held at Earl Lorden Field, where the Minutemen hold a 5-4 record and the dimensions are normal. On top of playing at home, UMass has received solid pitching of late, and even better hitting. The Minutemen have scored at least 10 runs in five of its last six games.

"I think [the offense] is starting to get into a groove a little bit," Stone said. "They're confident and we're seeing positive results, which only breeds more confidence."

Perhaps nobody is more confident at the dish right now than junior Eric Fredette. After transferring from Vermont, the second baseman has fit right into the second spot in the lineup, leading the team with a .415 batting average, which is also good for third-best in the conference.

"He's been great," Stone said. "He's come in and he's a great kid with a great attitude. He wants to get better and he's worked at it. He's a hustler and a scrapper who has made good adjustments – he's been a great addition to our program."

Recently, Fredette was honored as the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, hitting .636 with two home runs and 10 runs batted in the last five games. Senior Bryan Leigh was rewarded as the Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week and freshman Ryan Cusick was rewarded as the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week, marking the first time in school history when all three weekly awards were given to Minutemen.

"I think we've played pretty well," Stone said. "A lot of it depends on our effort on the mound. That's the way it is in baseball – good pitching performances and good defense gives you a chance to win. We'll need our pitchers to step up and hopefully we'll have a good series."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Gurley enters NBA Draft

Massachusetts men's basketball guard Anthony Gurley sent in paperwork to the National Basketball Association league office to put in his name for the 2010 draft. He had until April 25 to enter.

Gurley was the second leading scorer on the team, averaging 13.6 points per game and tied his career-high in points (24) during the Atlantic 10 Quarterfinals against Richmond. The redshirt junior is expected to lead the Minutemen next year, should he choose to pull out of the draft before the May 8 deadline.

He has yet to hire an agent, which allows him to return to school if he doesn't believe he will be drafted by an NBA team and withdraws his name from the draft before the May 8 deadline.

Gurley was unavailable for comment.

He transferred after his freshman year playing for Wake Forest, where he averaged 6.4 points and 1.6 rebounds.

This season, he had experience being a starter and sixth-man for UMass. He started 13 games and played the entire year. He graduated from Newton North High School in 2006, and led his team to a perfect record, averaging 22 points per game.

There are 103 players who are on the NBA Draft Early Entry list. Eighty of them are college players.

— Collegian Sports Staff

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Anthony Gurley drives against an opponent this past season. The guard has decided to enter the 2010 NBA Draft, but has not hired an agent.

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates
Monday to Thursday
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
- Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
- One Way Rentals
- Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
- Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale

Minutewomen host 2 with Dayton

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team continues Atlantic 10 conference play as it faces Dayton in a double-header Sunday afternoon.

UMass (31-7-1, 12-0 A-10) was originally scheduled to face off against Connecticut for the second time this season yesterday. However, the Huskies' Big East double-header against Seton Hall has been rescheduled to Thursday due to a rain storm, forcing the game against the Minutewomen to be cancelled. As of now, no plans have been made for rescheduling the matchup.

The Flyers (16-32-1, 4-10 A-10) come into Sunday's games after splitting two games against St. Bonaventure. The win over the Bonnies in Game 2 broke a seven-game losing streak for Dayton.

Game 1 resulted in a 7-2 loss, where St. Bonaventure scored all seven runs in the first and second innings. Pitcher Amanda Daly took the loss for the Flyers, despite striking out seven batters in both games. The freshman also threw 11 scoreless innings over the two games.

Daly brings a 4.20 ERA and is 5-9 for the season. Opposing batters average a .294 batting average against her and she leads her team with three saves for the season.

Eva Rappe and Sarah Wedel have also helped out on the mound this season, with a 4.69 and 4.77 ERA, respectively. Rappe is 6-9 for the season, followed by Wedel who is 5-14.

The two runs scored in Game 1 came off of a home run from Morgan Lee and an RBI from Anne Maci. Lee has five home runs for the season and boasts a .489 slugging percentage.

Offensively, Dayton has struggled this season. They have been shut out 12 times so far this season and have two players batting slightly over .300. Kathleen Maloof and Molly Meyer are the two players who have provided an offense spark for the Flyers, with batting averages of .317 and .301, respectively.

Maloof helped out in the win of Game 2 with a run scored in the third inning. She leads Dayton with a .514 slugging percentage and 25 RBIs for the season.

Meyer has also batted strong, with eight RBIs and 43 hits this season. The senior leads her team with an on-base percentage of .390. In the victory over the Bonnies, Meyer became the Flyer's all-time leader in hits with a career total of 185. Meyer went 3-for-4 in the game with an RBI and run scored.

Starting pitcher Sara Plourde will face the two offensive threats after moving into second place for the most strikeouts in UMass history. The sophomore's season total of 440 sits behind Danielle Henderson who set the record in 1999 with 465. Plourde's career total of 500 strike outs is shared with two other pitchers, Henderson and Brandice Balschmitter.

The Minutewomen most recently swept Rhode Island in a double-header, 9-2 and 3-1, showing their consistency and strength on offense. Katie Bettencourt and Sarah Reeves continue to prove themselves as offense threats as they went a perfect 3-for-3 and 4-for-4 in Game 1.

Power-hitters Michelle Libby and Meghan Carta, with slugging percentages of .563 and .642, respectively, also contributed to the wins. Libby hit her seventh home run of the season, along with Libby helping out with a double in Game 2.

The leftfielder looks forward to continuing A-10 play at home with the support of fans, as the Maroon and White will remain home for the remainder of the regular season.

"It's nice to be able to play the rest of these games at home and give ourselves the home-field advantage," Libby said after the URI sweep.

In conference play, Carta is fourth with nine homeruns and a .632 slugging percentage. Reeves has also played strong in the A-10, earning a fifth-best slugging percentage of .624.

UMass looks to remain undefeated in the A-10 as Dayton travels to the UMass softball complex Sunday with play beginning at 12:00 p.m.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SHAPIRO/COLLEGIAN

Katie Bettencourt takes a swing during a game earlier this season. The sophomore is a key member for UMass along with other sophomores such as Sara Plourde and Kyllie Magill.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Senior Sarah Reeves has been hot as of late, hitting in her last five plate appearances.

Reeves' power lifting UMass

Bettencourt strong at plate, bench fills in on base paths

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team's first baseman Sarah Reeves is coming close to breaking school records, as she has recorded a hit in five back-to-back appearances at the plate twice this season.

The senior, with a team-leading slugging percentage of .624, showed her consistent hitting last Saturday against St. Louis. In her last at-bat of the game, Reeves hit a double with two outs and put herself in a position to score the winning run. However, the final batter struck out to end the inning and leave the game at a 3-3 tie.

Since then, Reeves went a perfect 4-for-4 in Game 1 against Rhode Island. She started by singling to left field to get on base, but was left stranded after advancing to second. Reeves repeated her initial hit by singling up the left side again in the third inning. The senior went on to double in fourth inning and was sent home from a Katie Bettencourt home run. She ended the game with a triple to left center and tacked on an additional UMass run from a Bettencourt single.

However, Reeves has yet to break the record of a hit in seven-straight appearances at the plate. The record was set in 1980 by Jackie Gaw and tied by Chris Ciepiela in 1986. Reeves tied this record earlier in the season, however her five back-to-back hits falls short by three hits of taking first place in UMass history.

Sophomores lead UMass

Along with fellow classmate Reeves, Katie Bettencourt also played an important role in recent victories.

The sophomore went a perfect 3-for-3 in Game 1 against URI, highlighted by a two-run home run in the fourth inning. Bettencourt is batting .360 for the season along with a .588 slugging percentage, helped out by six home runs. She also contributed with a single in the third that led to a run scored, followed by an RBI single.

Bettencourt received Atlantic 10 honors on April 12 after leading the Minutewomen to a victory over Boston College and Charlotte. In the BC game, the sophomore hit a three-run home run that gave her a slugging percentage of 1.300 for the week.

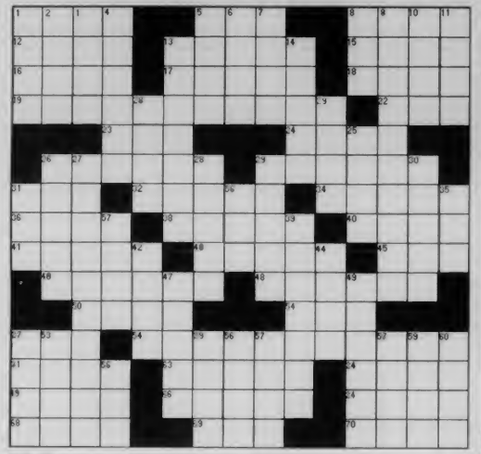
In the 3-0 win over Charlotte, Bettencourt provided all three runs for her team. A double led to her scoring the first run of the game, followed by a two-run home run in the sixth inning to ensure the victory.

The outfielder has scored 26 runs, placing her behind fellow sophomore Kyllie Magill with 30, and has also helped out with 21 RBIs.

Pinch runners help out

UMass boasts a collection of pinch runners and hitters who have helped out this season to provide an added offensive spark. Specifically, freshmen Cyndil Matthew and Christine Della Vecchia have been used for the crucial positions.

In the recent sweep of URI, the freshman pair played a big role. Della Vecchia pinch ran for Reeves after a single got her on base in the third inning. She proceeded to steal second base and advanced to third on a walk. A second walked batter brought Della Vecchia home to score the second run of Game 1 for the Minutewomen.



Matthew also showed her speed in Game 1, stealing second base after pinch running for Jessica Serio. She advanced to third on a throwing error, but was unable to score as Michelle Libby popped up to second base and left Matthew stranded.

The freshman also provided offensive spark in Game 2, as she scored on a double steal of first and third base. Despite only four hits for the season, Matthew has proved herself as a successful pinch runner with 14 runs scored and is 10-for-12 in stolen bases this season. Della Vecchia has contributed two runs, along with two stolen bases.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

comics

CROSSWORD KOMBAT: TEST YOUR MIGHT

ACROSS
1. Con game
5. Type of tree
8. Part of an archipelago
12. Doozy
13. Primitive weapon
15. Twofold
16. Fabrics made from goat hair
17. Vernacular
18. Inquires
19. View
22. P
23. Before
24. Lack of difficulty
26. Clunker
29. A short trip to do a task
31. Get-up-and-go
32. Encounters
34. Rope fiber
36. Absent without leave
38. Increase
40. Eat
41. Interior decoration
43. Christopher of "Superman"
45. Month of ___ober
46. A shallow pond near the ocean
48. Peaceful
50. Jump
51. Grandmother (British)
52. Timid
54. Evocative
61. Water carrier
63. Radioactive gas
64. Chocolate cookie
65. Backside
66. In the midst of
67. Violent disturbance
68. Anagram of "Leer"
69. Beer
70. Thrall

DOWN
1. Smack
2. Sometimes, the shape of ice
3. Winged
4. Freshwater clam
5. Very imposing or impressive
6. The period preceeding Easter
7. Wise men
8. Actress Lupino
9. Hiatus
10. Body of water
11. Consequence
13. Pajamas with feet
14. Vagabond
20. Formal school ball
21. Hearing organs
25. Expressed
26. Precious stone
27. A cosmic cataclysm
28. Desire strongly
29. S S S S
30. Move in a rhythmical way
31. Mat
33. Neckwear
35. Permit
37. Balcony section
39. The early part of night
42. Lion sound
44. Historical periods
47. Classical music theatre
49. A call for more
52. Box
53. Employ
55. Mother
56. Graven image
57. Not a single one
58. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
59. A gas found in some lights
60. Carry
62. Snake-like fish

UMass Amherst Quincy?

Take UMass Amherst home with you this Summer

Three Summer Sessions

200+ ONLINE classes

REGISTER NOW!

Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

UMASS AMHERST

Continuing & Professional Education

You are formally invited to

Beltane Ball

Saturday, May 1st

8:00PM- 12:00AM

FAC Lobby

Formal attire requested

Tickets $10/ $15 for couples available at the door.

Come enjoy delicious treats from Sweets and More!

Hosted by SPIRALS

CLASSIFIEDS

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

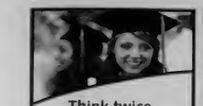
EMPLOYMET

Summer Jobs with Enviroment Massachusetts $10-15/hr. Career Opportunities & Benefits www.jobsfortheenvironment.org Call Abby 1-800-57-EARTH

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org



Low on funds? Low cost birth control and emergency contraception available at Tapesty Health. All family planning services fees based on your income. 27 Pray St. Amherst. Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. 413-548-9992 or www.tapestryhealth.org

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

WANTED

Are you ADOPTED? Mentors (males especially) needed for adopted children. Call NOW, start Fall. Academic Credit available.Jen Dolan 545-0547 jdolan@psych.umass.edu

Think twice. Borrow once.

Apply once and secure financing for your entire college career! Rest assured your local not-for-profit cooperative will be with you every step of the way.

UMassFIVE COLLEGE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION

800.852.5886

umassfive.org

Student Choice

APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

PUFFTON VILLAGE

EXCELLENT LOCATION!
1/2 MILE FROM UMASS

SPACIOUS APARTMENTS!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses

ALL RENTS INCLUDE: HEAT, HOT WATER, AND COOKING GAS!

ON SITE LAUNDRY,
OFF STREET PARKING.

BASKETBALL AND TENNIS COURTS.

OFFICE HOURS: 8AM TO 4PM MONDAY - FRIDAY
(413) 549-0145
WWW.PUFFTONVILLAGE.COM

SNYTAX ERROR

				9			3	2
7	6		8	2				4
				5
2				7
	3	5	4
		4	5	1		8
				8	7
							9
3	5	7	2

5K RACE/ 3K WALK
AUTISM SPEAKS U

AUTISM SPEAKS

ΑΕΠ ΣΔΤ

THE 2nd ANNUAL
"UWERE, UARE, USPEAK 5K RACE/ 3K WALK"

SATURDAY MAY 1ST, 2010
AMHERST, MA

11 AM: All participants MUST check-in promptly at in the Southwest Circle

12 PM: Race/Walk will begin

Refreshments and Food will be provided

Questions? Contact
Justin Weinberg @ (412) 480-0007

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
This is the song that never endddddds, yes it goes on and on my friendddddd.

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
What if Kurt Russell's character in 'Big Trouble In Little China' replaced Vin Diesel in 'The Pacifier?'

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
I'm obsessed with nachos. You should be too. Delicious, gooey, sustenance. Mmmmmmm. Nachos.

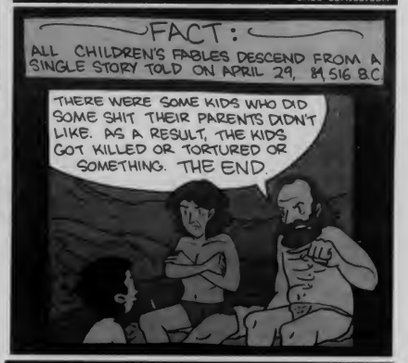
taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
Shhh. If you're quiet I'll show you a dinosaur. Just close your eyes and...

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
My life for Aiur! ... I mean, Ner'zhul!

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
Everywhere you look around, there's color! So much color! TOO MUCH COLOR. WHY ALL THE COLOR?

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Miley Cyrus read Infinite Jest, resulting in severe ramifications to lyrical content. Have faith, they might be good now.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Bad news. Looks like you'll be spending the upcoming winter in the belly of the talking bear from 'Evil Con Carne.'



libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
The Great Creator now taking offerings in the form of delicious sandwiches. Weezythanxyou.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
Don't trust that guy. Yeah that one right there. He's up to no good.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
I can literally smell you from here.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Store brands! Full of such immaculate flavor AND the prices are unbeatable! See also: Cat food.

SMBC By Zach Weiner — SMBC-COMICS.COM

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Hark! A Vagrant by Kate Beaton — harkavagrant.com

GURLEY OPTS TO ENTER NBA DRAFT

Will not hire agent
See pg. 12

MEN'S LACROSSE

With berths into the CAA tournament already in hand for UMass and Drexel, the two will meet in hopes of bettering their playoff seedings on Saturday.

SEE PAGE 10

SOFTBALL

Still undefeated in Atlantic 10 play, the Minutewomen host Dayton for a double-header on Sunday as they look to stay atop the conference standings.

SEE PAGE 13

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

MAY

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 80 LOW: 51 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, MAY 3, 2010

Students speak out against CMASS plan

Program would merge existing support and cultural centers

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

Beginning in fall 2010, University of Massachusetts cultural and support centers will unite under a newly implemented framework to alter the program's structure.

The consolidation of the programs has taken place under the close monitoring of the administration and Center for Student Development (CSD). It has sparked student and staff concerns for the individuality of each of the eight programs, which are included in the Office of Programs and Services for ALANA (African American, Latino, Asian, Native American) students.

The multicultural support programs will combine under the Center for Multicultural Advancement and Student Success, CMASS, which intends to "strengthen the services we provide," said Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Byron Bullock, who has been a key member in the planning for the CMASS program.

"There is a need for extreme resources and full-time positions," said Bullock. The new staff positions will be part of the CMASS program.

Bullock described "a gap" that CMASS will try to bridge, matching the academic retention of ALANA students and those of non-ALANA students. He said that staff shortfalls may have contributed to the statistics.

Bullock explained that these statistics were presented to members of the CMASS committee, and they have spurred the motivation for the program. However, at the time of the press release, these statistics were unable to be found.

In September, the program will "phase in additional staff support and better utilize staff already employed. Budget cuts [caused] programs to suffer, and that pulled away some of the staff that these positions haven't replaced," said Bullock.

Some University employees were uncomfortable commenting on the CMASS program, because they had few details on how it would affect them.

Bullock said the support centers are the "heart of the program," also noting that, "They are to help students navigate through the academic maze."

There are currently four cultural centers on campus: the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center, the Latin American Cultural Center (LACC), the Malcolm X Cultural Center and the Yuri Kochiyama Cultural Center.

The four support centers on campus are the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Native American Student Services (NASS) and United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC).

In order to accommodate the needs of the students and staff in the cultural centers, Bullock, interim program director for ALANA Jacqueline Pinn, and Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim, worked with an advisory board of two students from every center. They asked the advisory board for input on how the new program should be constructed.

The plans to move and renovate the inner structure of the support and cultural programs are not without opposition. Last Thursday at noon, Fighting for Unity and Student Enrichment (FUSE) and its supporters gathered on the steps of the student union to protest the impending immersion of the CMASS model.

FUSE students, many multicultural center students and supporters have made the argument that there needs to be a change in the way ALANA and multicultural students are addressed, but disagree on the proposed framework the CMASS program presents for making this happen.

FUSE students argue that two students from each group was not an adequate number to clearly voice the concerns of each center, as well as balance out the needs from a student perspective rather than the administration's viewpoint.

Emiliano Salazar, who works at the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center and is part of the student advisory board for CMASS, said during the April 29 protest, "Our goal is to ensure that student input is being listened to by the administration."

Salazar said that the administration has taken the support centers and put them distant from the center of campus and combined them into one, where the individuality of each program is overlooked.

Currently, the support centers are housed in four separate buildings. The CMASS plan would move the four support programs to Wilder Hall over the summer, said Bullock.

"By putting everyone in one building that signifies that is the only building for them," said Britni Reilly, a UMass senior with an individual concentration (BDIC).

The four cultural centers will stay in their designated buildings under the new CMASS program, said Bullock.

Isabel Espinal, who works at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and is affiliated with BCP, attended the protest in support of more input from students and staff.

"It's been forced on the directors," Espinal said. "There has been no input from the actual communities that were involved."

CMASS is being created to make UMass' multicultural environment "stronger and better in the long-run," said Bullock.

Bullock believes FUSE is opposed

See CMASS on page 2

CHELSEA WHITTON/COLLEGIAN

Students hold signs at a protest sponsored by Fighting for Unity and Student Enrichment (FUSE). The protesters stand against a proposed plan to merge existing support and cultural centers into one umbrella program, the Center for Multicultural Advancement and Student Success (CMASS).

Poor conditions of bike trail prompt renovation discussion

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Staff

The Norwottuck Rail Trail, an 11-mile stretch that winds through Belchertown, Amherst, Hadley and Northampton presents its users with preserved land, the Connecticut River, a view of the mountains and fresh New England air, but all this doesn't come with a simple peddle or strut down the shaded path. Walkers, runners and bicyclists have encountered a swamp of problems with this commuter and recreational trail, as well as those attempting to rejuvenate the aging trail.

The week of May 17 to May 21 is Bay State Bike Week, and in light of the trail's fragile state, a design submission will be reviewed by the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) regarding plans for a large-scale reconstruction.

The trail opened in 1993 and is operated by the Department of Conservation and Recreation in Northampton. What was regarded as environmentally conscious at the time turned into one of the biggest problems for the DCR — the trail is too narrow by state regulations, and its asphalt is fused and composed with recycled glass pieces. Impending reconstruction plans have been slowed because various committees on the state and local levels have run into conflicts of design interest.

In particular, the committees are discussing the plans to widen the trail and the environment that the trail would cut through. The first step towards action is a MEPA review in the upcoming weeks of May, which will examine a 25-percent plan design. With nearly 75 percent of planning still needed to be completed, it will be a while before the Norwottuck Rail Trail is restored.

A need for an updated trail was recognized in 2000 when the pieces of melted glass fused with asphalt became loose. The Norwottuck Rail Trail Advisory Committee, which meets about once a month, and the Department of Conservation and Recreation in Northampton, which owns and operates the trail, took preliminary measures to up-keep the trail and begin planning renovations. The committee, which has two representatives from each town the trail cuts through, pressured Congressman John W. Olver to take action. As a result, he secured a $4 million earmark for the trail's reconstruction, which is designed by Stantec Consulting Inc. in Boston.

Rob Kusner, the chairman of the Norwottuck Rail Trail Advisory Committee and a mathematics professor at the University of Massachusetts, addressed that a main concern for DCR maintenance of the trail is that tree roots are intruding upon the trail surface. Black locust trees provide the beauty and shade to the path but also an uncontainable growth of roots, which proves not welcoming for the recreation and transportation users of the trail, he said. The DCR implemented root barriers as a solution in 2006, but about one and a half years later, the pavement continued to buckle.

The standstill between the debating committees has existed since early 2009 because of environmental concerns. Andrew Morris-Friedman, a Hadley Norwottuck Rail Trail Advisory Committee board member said, "It's too bad we can't come together on this."

One of the leading voices in the trail update is Alexandra Dawson, chairwoman of the Hadley Conservation Commission. She is against widening the trail, due to a threat of losing trees and compromising shade for the users of the trail.

Morris-Friedman agrees that preserving the very nature of the trail is importance to its function.

"In August, this is the hottest place in the U.S., so it is important [that] there be trees," he said.

The Massachusetts Highway Department is now regulating that trails be built 12 to 14-feet wide.

See BIKE TRAIL on page 3

COURTESY PARAG SHAH, FLICKR.COM

The Norwottuck Rail Trail runs through Amherst and surrounding towns. Renovations are being discussed due to poor trail conditions.

Saving wasted energy

By Danielle Kahn
Special to the Collegian

Every morning Kassaundra Pereira, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts, wakes up to an alarm on her phone. After she gets out of bed, she flicks on her light. She then makes her way to the bathroom where she showers and blow-dries her hair. Sometimes she even puts the TV in her room on for background noise.

Pereira's daily routine is very similar to the hundreds of other students who live on campus. Living in Wheeler Residential Hall, she never really considered what her daily routine might do to the Earth's atmosphere.

"I don't really think that much about wasting energy," Pereira said. "I do think about recycling. But with energy, I think I don't really think about it, because in the dorms I'm not paying for it."

Rebecca Yessenow, a junior at UMass, also lives in Wheeler. Energy efficiency is not always on the top of her list, either.

"I always notice if someone has the water running," Yessenow said. "I'll usually turn it off if it's someone I know. But I don't typically think about it. Not usually in daily thought."

Pereira and Yessenow represent a dilemma on college campuses when it comes to energy conservation. Because there is no direct cost to students, there is no incentive for them to reduce their carbon footprint.

"Dorms are metered by themselves and it's easy to use as much electricity as you want because you never really pay," said Josh Stoffel, the UMass sustainability coordinator.

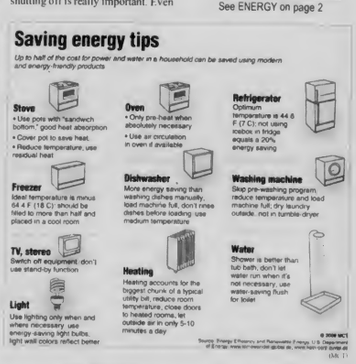
Students at UMass, like Yessenow and Pereira, don't always think about their carbon footprint, but there are a lot of little things they can do to limit them. The appliances they use, the lights and computers that are left on all day and the long showers they take, can all be changed for a quick fix.

According to a Frontline interview with George Monbiot, journalist and author of the book, "Heat: How to Stop the Planet Burning," power stations that generate electricity are the biggest source of carbon dioxide emissions, a major component in greenhouse gases that cause climate change. The energy it takes to power light bulbs, appliances and electronics use up all three of the biggest CO_2 generators: coal, natural gas and oil. All of these things account for one-third of carbon dioxide production in industrialized nations. The leading sources of emission after that are transportation, home heating and agriculture.

Many students are also unaware of what is called "vampire," or phantom, appliances. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, these are electronics, adapters and appliances with remote controls, which actually remain always on, and continue to suck in energy even when they are switched off. A TV is notorious for wasting energy when it's off, as well as DVD players, VCRs and game consoles. A simple solution to this is plugging all appliances into a power strip and turning it off whenever none of them are in use.

Stoffel also suggests unplugging appliances that you're not using. Things like cell phone chargers, TVs, microwaves and computers waste a lot of energy.

"They're all drawing energy, but it's not being utilized so it's just dissipated as heat," he said. "One of the biggest things a student can do is not leave things on. Shutting down and shutting off is really important. Even hibernate brings energy intake down to approximately three percent of what it would be if it was on."



Changing a light bulb to a more energy efficient one, like a compact florescent light bulb, can help reduce CO_2 emissions. According to BP, for every half hour a light bulb is on, it produces a party balloon-sized quantity of CO_2. The tips from TakePart recommend switching to a compact fluorescent light bulb because it can reduce this CO_2 output by 150 pounds a year. Other tips include driving less, recycling more, washing clothes in warm or cold water and using the short cycle on all appliances. Making only these alterations in everyday life can save up to 3,050 pounds of CO_2 a year.

At UMass, the showers use two and a half gallons of water per minute even with low flow shower heads, so shortening daily activities like a shower can help a lot, said Stoffel.

"When you shower, you're using drinkable water," he said. "That's in the toilet and sink too. It's a precious commodity."

Students can also use more daylight instead of dorm lighting, called "daylighting." This would be easy for some residence halls that face the sun for a majority of the day and have large windows.

See ENERGY on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

Jason Myles Goss keeps it simple

Brooklyn singer-guitarist Jason Myles Goss believes in musical simplicity. He works tirelessly to promote himself without a record label, agent or manager.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen sweep Flyers

Behind strong offensive performances from Sarah Reeves and Katie Bettencourt, UMass swept its Sunday doubleheader against Dayton.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian seniors William McGuinness, S.P. Sullivan and Mike Gillmeister share their final undergrad thoughts.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

"Check out an audio slideshow of UMass softball player and aspiring musician, Whitney Williams.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 63
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor Sara Cods
Managing Web Editor Pete Rizzo
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Joinson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Sannelli
Comics Editor Andrew Wims
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rulon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jas Aser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Gentola

Limiting CO2 emissions is key

ENERGY from page 1

TakePart also suggests cutting down the amount of meat people consume every week. Doing so can help save water and limit CO2 emissions. Cutting meat out of your diet completely can help save up to 5,000 pounds of CO2 emissions a year.

Living in Amherst, students can easily buy good food locally, which reduces emissions that come from transporting other food. The large amount of local food sources give them the opportunity to eat less beef, and the dorms give them the opportunity to recycle.

Reducing and reusing waste is the first solution for waste removal. After that, the waste is recycled, composted or incinerated with energy recovery. Once all these options are exhausted, waste is put in a landfill. The recycling program has almost reached its goal of recycling or composting 60 percent of the waste generated on campus.

Eco-Rep, another campus program, aims to become an environmental mentoring program. Each area of the campus has an Eco-Rep who works to create awareness of environmental issues as well as help students reduce their energy waste.

Other initiatives involve green buildings and technology.

"A lot of the initiatives the campus does are infrastructural," Stoffel said. "When it comes to students, they're in charge of behavior. A building is only as efficient as the people who use it."

Stoffel would like to see an initiative that would bill individual students for their own electric expenses by charging each building based on their specific energy use.

"Students could be in charge of having to pay the electricity since the residence halls' energy use is individually metered," he said. "Students could then decide collectively if they want to limit their energy use. If they all work together they can make a market difference."

Other campuses around the United States have launched programs like Eco-Reps. Ithaca College in Ithaca, New York is home to two dormitories with the Energy Star label. This label is given out by Energy Star, a joint program of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Energy for energy-efficient products and practices. The two dorms at Ithaca College have energy-efficient boilers, digitally controlled heating systems and weather-stripping.

After learning that she could reduce her impact on the environment in some fairly simple ways, Yessenow would be willing to change her routine.

"Electricity is definitely not the first thing I think of with global warming issues," she said. "Now I do what I can and I recycle, but I could do more. One person turns into many and that can definitely help."

Danielle Kahn can be reached at dkahn@student.umass.edu.

New campus arrivals

EMILY WHITE/ COLLEGIAN

Newly born ducklings enjoy the sun in their home alongside the University campus pond.

CMASS to start in fall 2010

CMASS from page 1

to the CMASS program to be in place because "there is a miscommunication and also a lack of communication."

"They've worked on the new program for six years. Why aren't the students being heard?" said Jasmin Torrejon, a student who also attended last Thursday's protest.

Bullock's response to why students would oppose CMASS if it aimed to strengthen already existing programs was, "I think that people don't always deal with change in positive ways."

Bullock has been working on the CMASS program since 2006 and said, "We were ready to move on this program years ago."

"What added fuel to the process was the economy," continued Bullock. "We had to take the best possible means to look at how to strengthen the sources and student need."

Jeff Munoz, a UMass junior in the BCP said, "As for keeping us in the loop, they [CMASS directors] haven't done so." Many other students involved with the cultural centers claimed to be unaware of the CMASS program and its proposed effects on the campus community.

FUSE member Jenifer Martinez added, "They're not too sure about details of the plans."

BCP Director Wilma Crespo declined to comment on the impending CMASS program and its effect on the BCP. But Espinal said that the BCP staff feels that the CMASS program will not entirely serve the needs of the program.

UMass student and BCP staff Chauana Nunez said, "There is a need for programs like [the BCP]. It's working."

Bullock said the student development center is planning to work with admissions to create more diversity. "I've been a student advocate all my life," said Bullock. He explained the CMASS program is, "a shift in focus," and a "hope for cross-cultural boundaries."

However, some students disagree that the CSD is following through on its goals of reaching UMass students' needs.

"This is a continuing example of the administration refusing to take needs of students into consideration," said Andy Berg, a supporter of FUSE and a UMass senior.

Bullock explained his confidence of the program succeeding in unifying students and keeping each center's individuality. "I have taken a critical four-year look at strengthening services," Bullock added. "Jean Kim thought it was time to move forward with the plan."

Supporters of FUSE hope that if the group's petition against the program available in paper and online forms – has enough signatures once handed to Kim, plans for CMASS could change and be delayed due to a strong enough voice of opposition.

"They want to see delay in the model to meet their needs," said Bullock.

The FUSE petition website says that the programs have assisted in the needs of over 3,000 students over the years. FUSE's goal is that the ongoing petition will have 1,000 online signatures. Once FUSE feels they have enough signatures, they will present the petition to Kim.

Plans are still underway for CMASS, and Bullock says that the program's anticipated launch date in September will be "highly likely."

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
Come Celebrate With Us!
Salem Cross Inn
RESTAURANT & TAVERN
Great food, great setting, great time!
Call now to book your reservations!

Groups of any size are welcome!
508 867 2345
www.salemcrossinn.com
Route 9, 260 West Main Street West Brookfield MA 01585

Get the Most
CASH FOR BOOKS
University of Massachusetts AMHERST
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
Powered by efollett.com
Buyback Hours
Textbook Annex
Monday – Friday
April 26 – 30
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Saturday, May 8
11:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Campus Center Concourse
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, April 13
9:00 a.m. - 2:00 p.m.
Southwest/Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
10:00 a.m. – 1:00 p.m.
Find us on Facebook
facebook.com/UMassUniversityStore
790 58810

Glass in trail poses problems

BIKE TRAIL from page 1

Of concern is environmental degradation, as a great portion of the trail cuts through protected swamp land and widening the trail would require trees to be removed.

"The trail is already built on wetlands, and it already has more impact now," said Kusner. "Environmental impact on wetland is the biggest concern … the process is going to take longer than expected."

"I am not okay with the speed of project," said Morris-Friedman. He hopes to see a trail that can be sustained for decades unlike the 1993 construction of the trail.

"We'd like to see our trails last 25 years," said Doug Clark of the Northampton DCR.

"I think that one of the problems is that the trail started off as 70-percent recreation and 30-percent transportation. That needs to be considered," said Morris-Friedman of the plans drafted by Stantec and the DCR's vision for the trail. "People would like to see a wide trail [as] it's one of the narrowest trails," Friedman added.

But it is not just advisory members and legislatures that are being impacted with concerns about the trail.

Karen Foster is an avid user of the Norwottuck Rail Trail – even though in the past year she has had to change her bicycle tires five times. After the fifth time, Foster bought puncture-proof tires. Her bike tires fell victim to the thousands of sharp pieces of recycled glass.

Foster isn't just a local bike rider; she is the executive director of All Out Adventures, an organization that works closely with the DCR in Northampton to provide trail access to the disabled. Her bike problems reflect those of students, locals and visitors who use the trail.

Carol Demetre, an employee of Valley Bike and Ski Werks on Route 9 in Hadley, sees the issues trail users face on a daily basis. The shop, located just off the trail, has gained great tire and tube business because of trail glass.

"We'll pull out a dozen pieces of glass chards," she said.

"It lasted about seven years before things got bad in 2000," said Kusner. But other trails built around the same time are doing fine, he explained. Kusner said the DCR was monitoring "each and every crack" in the trail's asphalt and monitored the trees uprooting the ground.

A New Path, A New Road

Those involved with the project, including Stantec Consulting Inc., currently cannot set a date for completion. There are estimates, however, that work could begin in a year.

"The advisory committee took the lead in ensuring something was done," said Kusner.

They pushed it to the forefront [on] Congressman Olver's agenda – his staff was active in concern of the advisory committee."

The trail was allocated $100,000 for small fixes, such as minor potholes. In some places where beavers undermined the trail and roots had cracked the pavement, there were huge improvements. The DCR cut sections out and paved over damaged areas with the funds throughout the summer of 2009.

"Spot repairs were extremely successful, and use of the trail has doubled since the repairs," said Kusner. "There is hope that more spot repairs will be done this summer. It will be two more years until construction."

The Norwottuck Rail Trail is accessible from various points along the 11-mile path and in Northampton near the Coolidge Bridge. The bike-connect way, beginning in the Southwest Residential Area at UMass, also provides a connection to the trail.

Morris-Friedman said he expects the trail to be closed in segments during renovation, rather than the entire trail being closed off – noting it is a major mode of transportation for locals and students. After the reconstruction, Morris-Freidman expects the trail's popularity to "double again."

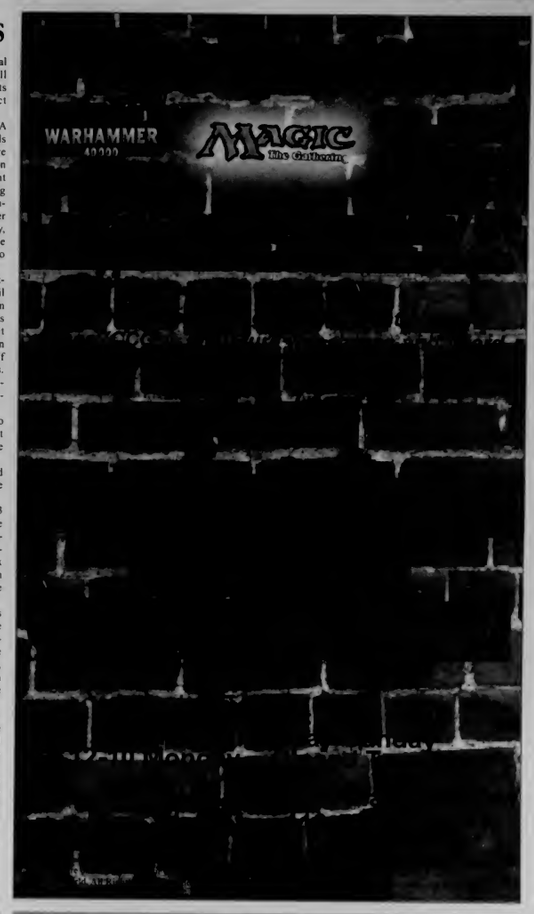
Elizabeth Murphy, press secretary and legislative assistant to Olver, said in an e-mail interview, "The trail is still under design so we cannot comment definitively on improvements that will be made. The scope of work is currently at pre-25 percent design and an Expanded Environmental Notification Form (EENF) will be submitted for Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) review shortly."

The consideration under MEPA is lengthy – much like the travails of this project. It will require assessment of existing condition and natural resource, replacement of existing plants, preventing invasive plants and trees, evaluating wildlife habits and beaver impacts to the trail, public safety, identifying erosion and drainage problems, and improvements to small bridges, said Murphy.

"There are over 100 wetlands within the Norwottuck Rail Trail Environmental Notification Form (EENF) for Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act (MEPA) review. The EENF is an extensive and detailed study of the project and its alternatives. It assesses potential environmental impacts and mitigation measures," said Murphy.

Olver is a large constitute to this project taking the forefront for local government and the DCR.

"The Congressman secured funding for this project for three main reasons," said Murphy.



"The trail was built in 1993 with what was considered at the time to be a new environmentally-friendly alternative to conventional pavement. The pavement mix included recycled glass that began to work loose from the surface and posed a safety risk to users."

"Additionally, roots from trees on either side of the trail have pushed up under the trail, causing large heaves that traverse the trail," she added. "Over the years, this became more and more of a safety concern as the trail's usage increased."

The funds for the $4.4-million earmark were secured in the "Safe, Accountable, Flexible and Efficient Transportation Equity Act: A Legacy for Users."

Despite bumps, cracks, glass and roots in both the trail and the planning of a reconstruction, the Norwottuck Rail Trail still provides thousands of users environmental recreation and transportation year-round.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

To the World's Best Customers:
Thank you for joining us.
It has been a pleasure to serve you.
To the seniors—we are going to miss you.

facebook
facebook.com/umassdining
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
Seniors on the meal plan can use their meal cards at the Bluewall on Saturday, May 15.
Worcester DC and Berkshire DC will remain open Friday, May 14.

WORCESTER / FRANKLIN
SPRING FLING BBQ
MENU:
• Grilled Chicken
• BBQ Sauce
• Grilled New York Steak
• Garden Burgers
• Hamburgers
• Hotdogs
• Grilled Vegetables
• Field Greens
• Red Bliss Potato Salad
• Fresh Fruit Salad
• Ice Cream Novelties
• Assorted Beverages

ENTERTAINMENT:
DJ Matt Peterson
Tuesday, May 4
Northeast Quad Area
4:30–8:00 pm
Rain date: Wednesday, May 5
UMASS DINING
UMass Amherst
umassdining.com
Ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MAY 3, 2010

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself" -Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Collegian Staff 2009-2010

William McGuinness

I didn't study business or science, but literature and writing instead. This curriculum has an intense focus on the pursuit of Truth. The empty spaces with which the Collegian begins each night of production demand it every day, too.

The senior column is a conflict between a graduate's learned vocabulary and a 750-word limit.

Each word is a bit or piece that fights to represent the total college experience. The columns ramble, rumble and feel less stable than rusty amusement park rides.

They are collared shirts and ties that try to neatly clothe the riots in our minds.

The last issue is annually pumped full of tired phrases that are the hallmarks of Hallmark. We strum tired chords, playing to catharsis. We only call them columns because of tradition, but they are closer to personal essays. These are on the editorial pages, but the opinions expressed don't have a sovereign section. The columns are our reactions to getting elbowed in the face by this one round as an undergrad isn't enough to experience all that we intended. None of these thoughts are newsworthy; these columns don't really belong in newspapers.

So we say to hell with it. These are truer than news.

Because of these characteristics, a senior column is that last thing I want to write. I feel like a maniac, lying on a therapist's couch, packaging my experience into simple parcels of false understanding through street-corner philosophy. I'm kidding myself. This column is the essence of every "FAIL" written on Facebook. I don't want to be the guy who works for Merriam-Webster but does a shitty job of explaining all of that a word denotes.

I'm an editor-in-chief who has written two articles for his publication since he got the job. This former news junky and fanatical wordsmith went from publishing everyday to not at all. I wrote the entire news section three times. I charged from meeting to exhibition, opening to memorial service to protest to crime scene while shaping events into stories and giving the everyday mundane a bit of the glory it's due. Then I cracked up.

After my father's sudden death this semester, it felt hypocritical to report on anything. I simply did not want to ask people to assign meaning to the events of their lives while I couldn't. This reluctance was one of those sudden blows that actually come from within. I chose a succession of personal revolutions that pulled me farther from having to interview people and having to boil events down to their most basic elements for easy and quick consumption. To read a news article requires a motivation that is sparked by curiosity. Writing one requires the same, and at an exponentially increased level. When you're actively trying not to think and not to analyze events to extrapolate meaning, the reporter's qualities – a passionate preference for order, a bias for motive and consequence over five-cent philosophies, among others – begin to abandon him.

But my favorite part about this newspaper is that it publishes daily and holds its reporters to questionable standards. For each of these reasons, my name is in the byline again. The best thing about a liberal arts curriculum at the University of Massachusetts is that above all else, it stresses awareness over knowledge. It's why writing this column has both sucked and not sucked.

People speak of the "college bubble" constantly – that it's the ramble in your brain before you begin to actually make sense. It's a wind-up, a musical prelude before something truly begins. That isn't entirely true. Sure, we've been learning about our individual fortitudes through trials-by-ordeal that are meant to mimic or prepare us for the real world through its simulation by professors.

But through my reporting over four years here – and yes, through the crack up too – my default settings have been rocked because of a greater awareness that I can choose how to think about everything, instead of simply choosing whether to think about it or not. That's the value of my education at UMass.

I didn't study business or science, but literature and writing instead. This curriculum has an intense focus on the pursuit of Truth. The empty spaces with which the Collegian begins each night of production demand it every day, too. So I won't be throwing my cap in the air with this buoyed expectation that "it all" begins at that moment and that before then, I wasn't prepared.

The goals will be the same, the tests will continue to come from everywhere, and I figure that neither the beginning nor the end of working toward a goal of sanity has anything to do with graduating at all.

William McGuinness was the Collegian's editor-in-chief. He can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Mike Gillmeister

There are obvious lines to that expression that a lot of people cross, but good for them for taking the initiative that a lot of people don't. Initiative plays a huge role in what you can accomplish in life.

I've been thinking about how I've wanted to start this column ever since I came across Brendan Hall's senior column at the end of my sophomore year, and I think that my biggest mistake was trying to be memorable.

Will I leave a legacy here? Probably not. I won't miss the institution itself, but I've learned so much from so many people – both students and faculty – that I've finished my college career a better person.

As someone born with spina bifida and being the youngest in my family, I've been taken care of for the better part of my life. However, that all changed when I came to the University of Massachusetts.

I decided to go a month during my freshman year without my attention deficit hyperactivity disorder medication – yeah, that won't happen ever again.

My half-hearted attempts to become independent included taking the initiative to come down to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. In the four years of working at this incredible place, I've seen a lot of faces and, surprisingly enough, a lot of them remember me. Many of my co-workers developed strong bonds and life-long friendships with each other. I wish I did the same.

Not to say I was a dick to all of the people I worked with, but I didn't recognize the fact that a lot of them consider me a friend and want to hang out with me.

I consider all of you friends, too.

I just didn't realize how much I stayed inside my own head for these entire four years, and I'm kicking myself for it now.

Admittedly, I take a lot of things for granted, but at least I recognize that fact.

With my birth defect, I should be in a wheelchair and actually, the doctor advised my mother and father to abort – I will never be able to thank them enough for going against those words.

Everyone around me tells me how lucky I am for having gone through so much. I hope one day that I can realize that, but for now, I have to get down from the pedestal I have perched myself on for as long as I can remember.

If there's one thing that anyone gets out of this column, I hope it's the idea that there are things in this world bigger than yourselves. This isn't a condemnation by any means, but life will sure as hell get a lot easier once you realize that.

Yeah, so I escaped death and a life confined to a wheelchair, big deal. Now I need to start overcoming the problems faced by everybody else, which may be the scariest part.

You never stop learning, you never stop growing and things will never, ever, get any easier. It really is true that life isn't about avoiding the rain but learning how to weather the storm.

It gets a lot easier when you find people to dance in the rain with, too.

I could go on with the silly weather clichés, but we'd be here all day and no one wants that.

I entered UMass as a journalism major because I knew that I could write and that I'd probably change my mind later anyways, so what the hell. Four years later, here I am on the verge of earning that journalism degree, and I've tacked on an English major as well.

With those degrees and a four-year spot at the Collegian, I guess I'm a literary masochist.

I don't regret it, though. I needed an outlet for my feelings. It's not like I had a bad home life or anything, but everybody needs to express themselves somehow.

It's okay to do that, you know. You don't have to come from a broken home to have a need for expression. There are obvious lines to that expression that a lot of people cross, but good for them for taking the initiative that a lot of people don't. Initiative plays a huge role in what you can accomplish in life. Obviously, it's easier to sit back and wait for things to happen, but I highly doubt that there's much excitement in that.

For those of you who are apprehensive about taking initiative, the fact that it crossed your mind is step one.

For those of you like myself who are far better at giving advice than putting anything into practice yourself, let's get ready for an uphill battle that's all part of one hell of a ride.

There are a lot of people who I could thank at this point in time, but that won't give any credence to the praiseworthy people who have escaped my memory at the moment.

I will say this, though – I take a profound joy in coming into contact with all of the people I meet on a daily basis and if you are one of those people, you'll be in my heart forever.

O.K., one more weather quote – last one, I promise. If you spend all your life preparing for the storm, you'll never enjoy the patches of sunshine.

Thanks for listening, folks, you light up my life.

Mike Gillmeister was an assistant sports editor. He can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

S.P. Sullivan

I worked here too long. These are the last seventeen Syllables you'll get.

S.P. Sullivan was the Collegian's managing editor. He can be reached at spsullivan@gmail.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

MONDAY, MAY 3, 2010

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Local Music Project

Jason Myles Goss keeps it simple

By Leigh Greaney
Collegian Staff

Jason Myles Goss likes to keep his music simple. However, simple doesn't mean bland by any means. It's beautifully simple and simply devastating. It's a moment. It's a scenic picture and it's a frame. He whittles the contents of that frame into harmonic vocal carvings draped in carefully woven guitar accents. His music is subtle. Goss believes that "songs with explicit messages always seem to have a chip on their shoulder, and are more apt to put you in a full nelson or steal your lunch money than make you feel something truly meaningful or hopeful or real."

No swirlies. No upside-down shaking until your change falls out of your jeans. No childish antics. Goss wants people to feel what's real without being brash or overly solemn. He wants to inspire unique feelings inside people that make them feel as alive as the tomatoes in their grandmother's garden. His listeners are what he calls "good, solid, salt-of-the-earth people" who don't fit any overlaying demographic other than his fans.

It makes sense. Goss was, and still is, an avid reader, and loved filling his mind with other people's stories. "I think doing that [reading], you start living a large part of your day internally and then, when you get older, it just comes back out in some shape or form – whether painting or short stories, playing sports. Any kind of outlet." Goss' songs themselves weave into a sort of storybook, featuring characters such as Chester Copperpot from the album "A Plea For Demand." Goss explains, "I didn't want the songs to be about me, necessarily."

His writing is a slow and steady process. "I am kind of a binary animal," Goss said, "I try to write early in the morning or late at night. I think I usually have better luck in the morning." He keeps his thoughts of inspiration between the bindings of a notebook that he originally bought for scheduling temp jobs when he moved to Brooklyn, New York. But with so many ideas sparking up, the notebook was full of threads for songs instead of appointments.

Still in Brooklyn with his notebook and ideas whirling, Goss writes songs with junky guitars he'd never use at shows. He sets up shop in his bedroom and works to match lyrics to songs his guitar already knows. "I want to try writing lyrics and then fitting them to melody," said Goss. "Most of the songwriters I really admire started writing this way, and not that is it better or worse, but I never have and I want to give it a try."

Starting with raw lyrics can be hard, especially when Goss is inspired by so many different emotions. "If something is on my mind, it will come out in song," he said. Goss knows a few songwriters who can write a whole draft in one session. "Very, very rarely have I been able to do that," he admits. It's his goal, however. "That's the hardest part for me, after the inspiration has worn off and the accomplishment of just having written something fades away. You have to go back and assess whether or not what you wrote is good or not – and how to make it better." He explains that songwriting is more like "trying to figure out a Rubik's Cube." It's a process. It's been a process ever since Goss had his first guitar lesson. "I am good enough to be able to write and compose songs, but I could definitely stand to go back and take some more lessons," Goss said. It all seems part of his simplistic approach of do-what-you-do-the-very-best-way. He considers his level to be "pretty basic." He keeps a part-time job to keep the lights on, but the main focus in his heart is getting his music out on the road. This year, Goss plans on touring the country. He's writing more songs and hopes to make a new record. With no label, manager or booking agent, he's up late and out early promoting his music and setting up gigs. "I'm almost there," Goss said. With five years under his belt, he's just waiting for his time. "I would be very grateful to find someone who believed in the music who would be able to help get me out there and get to that next level in terms of career."

In the meantime, it's a tireless effort. To help support that effort, check out his website, Jasonmylesgoss.com, and look out for his shows.

Leigh Greaney can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Brooklyn-based artist and songwriter Jason Myles Goss believes that writing music is similar to "trying to figure out a Rubik's Cube." He believes in musical simplicity, an idea conveyed through his own harmonies and skill on the guitar.

Local food movement gaining speed in Amherst, NoHo eateries and stores

By Brendan Murphy
Collegian Staff

It's no secret that Amherst – and many areas of western Massachusetts – is a farming community. Much of the local economy is driven by agriculture, and the products grown right down the street are often sold to restaurants within the town. This benefits the entire community on every level: Farmers who grow vegetables profit from it, and as a result, are able to spend more to increase the quality of their products.

The availability of local vegetables through local restaurants and retailers creates a unique experience that can only be matched within other farming towns. Additionally, the consumer gets the freshest quality of ingredients possible on his plate when he orders a calzone, gets veggies in his grinder or hits the dining commons at the University of Massachusetts. Many local eateries utilize local ingredients because they offer great flavor, an unmatched crispness, fresh texture and the highest level of nutrients available for a great value. In this sense, students from the Five College area are blessed. Anything from apples and asparagus, to tomatoes and turnips can be found on local farms. Even Big Y and Stop & Shop supermarkets recognize the demand for local fruits and veggies, and readily stock wares from the area. Smith, Mount Holyoke and Amherst Colleges, as well as UMass dining services, all utilize local foods to serve the masses, too. But they aren't the only ones playing their part in the local economy.

Local Burger in Northampton is one of a growing number of local restaurants serving locally-grown food, including potatoes from Hatfield, Massachusetts and beef from grass-fed cows in Eastbampton.

Tabellas Restaurant
Amherst

Tabellas Restaurant, located just behind Bank of America in downtown Amherst, is just one of the many restaurants that utilize local ingredients. In fact, locally grown vegetables, dairy and meats constitute 80 percent of the products they serve on the menu. They boast "farm-to-table" dining and list each area on the menu where their ingredients were obtained. Needless to say, all of the dishes they serve are fresh. This makes for a refreshing and enjoyable experience when eating at Tabellas. Their goal is family-style dining – serving food at the peak of its quality when it's freshly prepared. When eating with big groups, the food does not come out all at once. For this reason, Tabellas encourages the sharing of dishes. This method has the added benefit of avoiding the use of heat lamps, thus ensuring the highest quality of food.

Local Burger
Northampton

Local Burger in downtown Northampton (across from Fitzwilly's Restaurant) also incorporates fresh, western Massachusetts ingredients. As the name indicates, many of the ingredients found on the menu come from farms in the area. This place may just be the best burger joint in the area. It's definitely worth the drive to NoHo (or day trip on the B43 bus line) to sample one of their craveable, juicy burgers, or crispy, golden, uber-delicious beer-battered onion rings. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian got the chance to catch up with one of the loyal workers at Local Burger, Brandon Hurtado.

When asked about what kinds of veggies and meats they utilize, Hurtado explains, "The limitations for what we can include in terms of vegetables are seasonal ingredients. We try to incorporate as many local ingredients as possible year round. Szawlowski Potato Farms in Hatfield [Massachusetts] is our main spud supplier for our french fries." The fresh flavor of the fries and the veggies that top their burgers makes for a winning combination.

Local Burger takes advantage of cattle farms in the area, as well. On the subject of which farms they patronize for their top-notch burgers, Hurtado answers, "The grass-fed burgers we get from Chicoine Family Farm in Easthampton [Massachusetts] and the dry-aged beef we get from River Rock Farm in Brimfield [Massachusetts] are very popular."

Dry aging is an expensive and rare process nowadays, reserved for only the highest quality meat with evenly distributed fat content. For this reason, this burger is a bit more expensive than the rest. The grass-fed beef is free of antibiotics, hormones, steroids, pesticides and herbicides. Burgers like this simply can't be found anywhere else, so stop in today and try one.

Alpha Pizza
Amherst

Another restaurant that incorporates homegrown veggies is Alpha Pizza. Whether it's their remarkably fresh, crisp veggies or their soft, fluffy grinder rolls, Alpha knows what they're doing with local ingredients. When we interviewed co-owner Mark Avgoustakis back in February, he told us, "We use local grinders that we buy once or twice a day, and we restock when we need to. Additionally, we'll go down to the farmer's markets when they're around and get vegetables grown locally. The Squash Company here in Belchertown [Massachusetts] is one of our big suppliers."

Their hard work pays off in the form of their insanely delicious calzones. Vegetarians and omnivores alike can rejoice when they sink their teeth into a calzone stuffed with spinach, onions, tomatoes, peppers, broccoli and garlic – all from different farms within the western Massachusetts area. Try one and see what the buzz is about.

Other suppliers in the immediate area that peddle fresh local goods are Atkins Farms and Portabella Fine Foods and Catering in Amherst, and Maple Farm Foods and Whole Foods in Hadley, Massachusetts. Other eateries in Amherst that deserve to be mentioned for using farm-fresh goods on their menu include Black Sheep Deli, Chez Albert, and Earthfoods Café in UMass' student union.

It's safe to say that the local food movement in Amherst is going strong. Look for the green "buy local" stickers at the markets next time, or even ask an employee if in doubt. Buying local helps the entire community, and ensures the highest nutritional value and quality of ingredients.

Brendan Murphy can be reached at brendanm@student.umass.edu.

Katie Bettencourt records one of her five hits in Sunday's doubleheader. The sophomore drove in four runs including a bases-clearing, three-run double in the fourth inning of Game 2.

UMass stays unbeaten

SOFTBALL from page 8

The Minutewomen opened the game up in the bottom of the fourth inning with five runs, all of which came with two outs, as they sent 10 batters to the plate.

"It's very good to pass our offensive energy from at bat. to at bat, to at bat," Sortino said. "That is really important for a game to do to keep their team hanging around for as long as they can, and I think our players did that."

Jordan Storro, who got her first career start at shortstop in the game, singled over the out-reached glove of the Flyer's second basemen, Carlyn Harlow, with one out to begin the inning. Normandin then drew a four-pitch walk and both base runners moved up a base on Magill's weak ground out to the pitcher.

With two outs, Reeves lined a 3-1 pitch over the right fielders head for a two-run double. Bettencourt then hit another 3-1 pitch in the next at bat to the center field wall for another double, driving in Reeves.

With UMass up 5-2, catcher Meghan Carta then hit her team-leading 10th home run of the season to put the Minutewomen up 7-2.

Michelle Libby lined a single to center field and was pinch run for by senior Jill Andrews, forcing Dayton to replace pitcher Amanda Daly (three and two-thirds innings pitched, seven runs, six earned on 10 hits and three walks) with Eva Rappe. Rappe struggled to get the final out of the inning but did so before UMass could score again.

UMass would add another run in the fifth inning, and Bailey Sanders would pitch a scoreless seventh inning to close out the 8-2 victory for the Minutewomen.

UMass returns to action on Wednesday as they host Boston College at 5 p.m. in the second matchup of the in-state rivals this season.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

UM takes fourth series in a row

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

It's safe to say the Massachusetts baseball team is playing their best baseball of the season.

The Minutemen (12-22, 9-9 Atlantic 10) won yesterday's 14-13 rubber match against George Washington at Earl Lorden Field in Amherst. The upset moved the Colonials (23-21, 11-7 A 10) into a three-way tie for second place in the conference with Rhode Island and Saint Joseph's. With the win, the Minutemen have won four straight conference series and are 6-3 in their last nine games.

"It's great because we're playing our best baseball and we're doing it at the end of the season which is always what you want," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We're really impressed with our starting pitching throughout the weekend and we had good relief all three games and we hit the ball so it was very impressive."

The series began on Friday, when the Minutemen dropped a 6-5 decision at the hands of the Colonials. UMass starter Nick Serino received the loss in the game, giving up five earned runs over six and two-thirds innings pitched while walking five and striking out a career-high 13 batters.

"[Serino] has good stuff and he's working through some mechanical things," Stone said. "Usually, when your pitcher strikes out 13 players, you should win the ballgame. But we feel comfortable with him out there because he gives us a chance to win every ballgame."

The Minutemen couldn't muster much against George Washington's Ryan LaPointe, who threw a complete game and allowed three earned runs. UMass senior Mike Donato's lone hit, a double, drove in two runs in the second inning. Senior Mike Gedman and junior Kyle Multner both went 2-for-3 and combined for four runs.

UMass avenged the loss on Saturday, defeating its rival, 4-1 on a brilliant pitching performance from senior Jared Freni, who delivered eight innings, allowing one unearned run on two hits and five strikeouts. Freni's performance was backed by junior Peter Copa's big day at the plate, who drove in three runs on two hits. The relatively easy win set the stage for a memorable rubber match on Sunday.

Senior Brian Baudinet went 5-for-5 in the series finale and set a school record with four home runs and seven runs batted in. His effort led his team to a 14-13 victory and the series win.

"He was dominant at the plate," Stone said. "You could tell he was feeling very comfortable within the zone and he was seeing the ball very well. I can't remember a performance like that from any one of my players since I've been here."

Adding to the win was sophomore Tom Conley, who added two home runs of his own. However, after getting two quick outs in the ninth, the Minutemen faltered and gave up three runs to make it a nail biter.

"You get a guy who hits four home runs and another who hits two and for it to come down to that it's unfortunate," Stone said. "It was a fun game up and down, though. Fortunately, we came out on top and had a heck of a day at the plate."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Student Parking Notice ***
Exam Week Parking 5/6 – 5/13

During exam week Thursday, May 6th through Thursday, May 13th, students with a valid year long permit may park in Green lots (25, 26, or 33), or Yellow lots (11, 12, or 13) DURING EXAM TIME ONLY.

Please remember that Red lots are for employees only. Green lots 27 and 34 are not available to park in unless you have a valid permit for that lot.

For more information visit Parking's website at http://parking.umass.edu. The University community appreciates your cooperation during exam week.

Congratulations to all graduating seniors!!

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Amherst Music House
Cinco de Mayo Sale
Wednesday, May 5th, 2010
11am to 11pm
20% off all store merchandise!
Hagstrom, Eastwood and Cort guitars
Vox amplifiers
Huge selection of sheet music
...and much more!
*excludes items on consignment
Amherst Music House
233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 549-1728

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
for $0
On-Campus Local Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

SUMMER at Southern
Students from other colleges welcome – earn transfer credits!
600+ classes • undergraduate and graduate • affordable and convenient
Pick up some credits before you head to the beach... Lighten your course load or get a jump on graduation. Students from other colleges and universities are welcome! Summer study that's affordable... Make it convenient – live on campus for Summer Session. A great time for graduate study, too.
REGISTER ONLINE www.SouthernCT.edu/summer
Summer Session A June 1 – July 2, 2010
Summer Session B July 6 – August 6, 2010
Summer Session C August 9 – 20, 2010
Southern Connecticut State University
888-500-SCSU • 203-392-SCSU

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
www.kaminsrealestate.com
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS.
■ PERRY APTS.
■ 177 N. PLEASANT STREET
■ LANTERN COURT APTS.
■ MILL HOLLOW
■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS.
400 AMITY STREET 253-2515 AMHERST

COMICS

Max is Ice Cube

		2		8
		8			6	1
			4		1	9	7
		1	6		8	3
	3
5		9	2	4
					9	7
4		6		3
				6			5

PUFFTON VILLAGE
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry,
off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.puffonvillage.com

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal By Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Your bubble gum was once chewed by Mickey Rourke before he got his third face removed.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Case and point: Sylvestor Stallone's biceps can split atoms. The world as we know it constantly hangs in the balance.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
WARNING! Disco balls attract foull–mouthed Amherst Police captains who will always invite themselves in to break up a water–pong game.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Having trouble falling asleep? Low on funds? Try the new Tylenol PM! Now with 50 percent more emergency contraception!

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Pack a bowl of intolerance and smoke it into an intoxicating hit of worldwide prosperity.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Want to know who can cure all of your problems? The Goddamn Batman.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
It's like, a law in the UMass professor handbook that if a student jumps out of a cake in their classroom, they cancel their final.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Seems like you are willing to do anything for money if the price is right, including living in Sylvan Residential Area!

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Always monitor the amount of cashflow when evaluating future roommates.

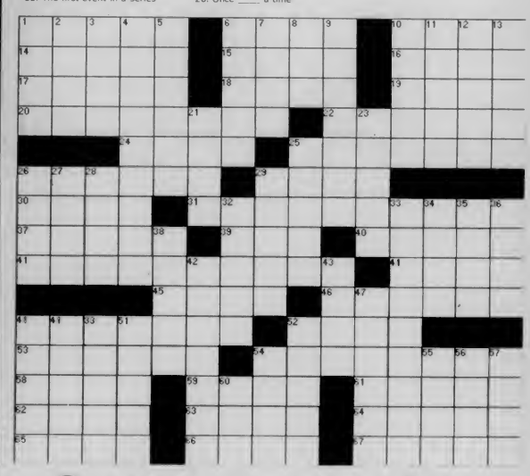
scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
You are pretty good at fabricating things. Maybe you should be an NBA referee?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Ten bucks says that the heat is still turned on in Bartlett Hall.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
This late into the semester, meal swipes become the equivalent of gold. Consider yourself a pimp from here on out.

Graduating?
Order a Commencement DVD
Brought to you by:
UVC TV 19
visit www.umass.edu/uvctv19 for more details
or call 413-545-1283

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"



WHAT IS CROSSWORD?

The Daily Collegian is Hiring
We are looking for someone to deliver papers in the early morning hours off- campus.
You must own car.
This is a paid position.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

Take UMass Amherst home with you this summer
THREE Summer Sessions
200+ online classes
REGISTER NOW!
Go to SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net
UMASS AMHERST
Continuing & Professional Education

ACROSS
1. Amusements
6. Leave in a hurry
10. Region
14. Make amends
15. A friendly nation
16. Not tame
17. Paramour
18. Move in large numbers
19. Keen
20. Alcoholic beverage
22. Buccaneer
24. Acquire
25. Managed
26. Ailing
29. Albacore or bluefin
30. Partially carbonized vegetable matter
31. Temporary
37. German iris
39. Spy agency
40. Mistake
41. Unconcerned
44. Wise men
45. Elliptical
48. Pictures
48. A young hare
52. In the center of
53. The first event in a series
54. Uneatable
58. Harbor
59. As well
61. Gather
62. Border
63. Richly adorn
64. African antelope
65. Elk or caribou
66. Sword
67. Notes

DOWN
1. Celebration
2. At the peak of
3. Relocate
4. Not lethargic
5. Consecutive
6. Lustrous fabric
7. Musical staff symbol
8. Beer
9. Kettledrum
10. Prize
11. Competitor
12. A-list
13. Supplemented 21. Slant
23. Silly
25. "To err is _____."
26. Once _____ a time
27. A Roman emperor
28. Sound the alarm
29. Courtroom event
32. Acclaim
33. A burrowing animal with bony armor
34. Boast
35. Balcony section
36. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
38. Beach 42. Mean value
43. An indefinite period
47. Dwarf
48. Ran
49. Part of a lyric poem
50. Brink
51. Go in
52. An electrode
54. Part of an archipelago
55. A leguminous plant
56. Alley
57. Concludes
60. Back talk

Quote of the Day

"Smoking kills. If you're killed, you've lost a very important part of your life."

—Brooke Shields

CLASSIFIEDS

FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES

Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Low on Funds? Low Cost Birth Control and emergency contraception available at Tapestry Health. All family planning services based on your income. 27 Pray St., Amherst. Tues, Thurs, Sat.

EMPLOYMET

Summer Jobs with Enviroment Massachusetts $10-15/hr. Career Opportunities & Benefits www.jobsfortheenviroment.org Call Abby 1-800-57-EARTH

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

COUNSELING

Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

WANTED

Are you ADOPTED? Mentors (males especially) needed for adopted children. Call NOW, start Fall. Academic Credit available.Jen Dolan 545-0547 jdolan@psych.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 3, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Drexel overcomes early lead, topples Maroon and White

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

After scoring the first three goals of the game, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team couldn't overcome a seven-goal run by Drexel, losing 12-6 on Saturday.

The No.9 Minutemen (8-5, 2-3 Colonial Athletic Association) lost the 3-0 lead late in the first quarter and the UMass defense never seemed to recover.

Another problem for the Minutemen was penalties. UMass committed five penalties, three of which led to scores by the No.13 Dragons (10-4, 3-2 CAA).

UMass coach Greg Cannella couldn't say much more about the fouls other than the fact that they are part of the game.

Drexel	12
UMass	6

"We're trying to be physical and that's the way the game is and should be played," Cannella said. "Sometimes guys foul. It's not something that they're necessarily trying to do but when you play physical, you're going to foul some and you have to live with that."

Attackman Will Manny scored the first goal of the contest just over three minutes in and things looked to be in the Minutemen's favor as Manny assisted on the next two goals of the game. Manny led midfielders Anthony Biscardi and Ryan Liebel for scores.

Defenseman Travis Tripucka (one ground ball, one caused-turnover) drew an unnecessary roughness penalty and Drexel subsequently scored its first man-up goal of the game.

The goal sparked a run started by Scott Perri scoring his first of four goals on the day, at least one in every period but the third.

One of the few bright spots for Minutemen was holding the Dragon's top two scorers in Robert Church and Colin Ambler to one goal, two assists – all by Church.

Sophomore Tom Celentani led the UMass defense with three ground balls and two caused-turnovers.

Short of Celentani and junior Casey Rahn's two caused-turnovers, the Minutemen defense couldn't overpower a Drexel offense that saw nine different players put points on the stat sheet.

"We couldn't defend and on the other side of the ball, we turned it over and you can't do that," Cannella said. "You have to score, you have to answer back and we didn't do that. They put a lot of pressure on our defense."

After the Dragon's scoring flux, midfielder Will Jeffery took a pass from Biscardi and cut the deficit to three, the closest UMass would get for the rest of the game.

After two more scores by Drexel, Ryan Hantverk scored on an assist from fellow midfielder Christian Hain to close out the third quarter.

The Dragons started the final quarter with an unassisted score by Perri, his third of the game.

Church opened up the game for Drexel with a goal with just under 12 minutes remaining.

Liebel scored the only UMass goal of the period on an assist from midfielder Bobby Hayes, before Perri put the game away for the Dragons.

The Minutemen out-shot Drexel 38-35 in part because of a 16-shot fourth quarter that landed UMass just one goal to the Dragons' three.

The Minutemen also held the advantage in ground balls, grabbing 30 to Drexel's 24.

UMass goalie Tim McCormack took the loss in the cage while making 12 saves with a ground ball to his credit as well.

Mark Manos made 11 saves in the cage for Drexel and came out of the game in favor of Andy Blahut and Andy Lamb, respectively. Each of Manos' replacements recorded a save.

UMass resumes play when it travels to Maryland on Wednesday to take on top-seeded Towson in the semi-finals of the CAA conference tournament. Game time is set for 7:30 p.m.

The Tigers beat UMass during the regular season, 10-9 on Senior Day for the Minutemen.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Goaltender Tim McCormack making a save against Hofstra earlier this year. McCormack made 12 saves in Saturday's loss to Drexel.

Minutewomen soar past DU

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

As the Massachusetts softball team has learned, Atlantic 10 opponents always come prepared to play to defending conference champions.

Dayton (17-35, 5-13 A-10) was no different, as it gave UMass trouble in its doubleheader on Sunday despite having more losses in the conference than the Minutewomen have had on the season.

UMass	5
Dayton	4
UMass	8
Dayton	2

"I thought [Dayton] took some good hacks on the ball," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "Obviously, Sara [Plourde] didn't have her best stuff, but our defense was behind her and our offense did what they needed to do to get the win."

The No. 21 Minutewomen (33-7-1, 13-0-1 A-10) came out on top in both games (8-2 in Game 1 and 5-4 in Game 2), but they found themselves in an unusual position heading into the bottom of the sixth inning of Game 2.

Trailing 4-3, Carly Normandin started the inning by grounding out to the second basemen on the first pitch she saw.

Kylie Magill and Sarah Reeves followed by drawing walks, and Katie Bettencourt singled to load the bases. Meghan Carta then took four straight balls for the third walk of the inning given up by Dayton's Sarah Wedel (five and one-third innings pitched, seven hits, five runs, six walks) bringing in the tying run.

Amanda Daly replaced Wedel, striking out Michelle Libby for the second out of the inning before issuing a walk to Jessica Serio to bring in the winning run.

"We needed to be patient, we really needed to keep our at bats," Sortino said. "We were down to five outs at that point and you really want to work your patience, swing at good pitches, and I thought we did a great job."

Dayton would threaten in the top of the seventh, but two strong defensive plays by UMass' outfield would end the game. Michelle Libby registered an outfield assist when she threw out a base runner trying to reach third for the second out of the inning. Then with the tying run at second, the Flyer's Megan Lee hit a sinking line drive to center field that was caught by a diving Normandin to end the game.

"Everybody has to remember we're not very used to coming from behind, we're not very comfortable in that role, and I thought we did a good job."

Dayton jumped out on top of UMass in the second inning of Game 2 on the second home run given up by Sara Plourde on the day. With one out in the inning and a base runner at second base, the Flyer's Courtney Kutulis hit a two-run home run.

Plourde finished Game 2 with 12 strikeouts and 23 on the day, placing her three strikeouts away from breaking the UMass single season strikeout record (465) set by Danielle Henderson in 1999.

After leaving seven runners on base through the first three innings, the Minutewomen didn't waste their opportunities in the fourth as they took a 3-2 lead on a bases-clearing three-run double by Katie Bettencourt with two outs.

Bettencourt finished the day going 5-for-7 and driving in four runs between the two games.

After the first two batters of the inning grounded out, Normandin reached on a single through the right side of the infield. Normandin later stole second and Magill was then hit by a pitch. Reeves loaded the bases with a single to left field, setting up Bettencourt's double.

Dayton would tie the game up again at three in the next half inning on an RBI single by freshman Kathleen Maloof, and then take the lead back on a double in the next at bat. Lauren Nacke lined a one-out, 2-2 pitch down the left field line and after Libby misplayed the carom, Maloof – who advanced to second base on a wild pitch – scored to take the 4-3 lead.

In Game 1 of Sunday's doubleheader, UMass took a 1-0 lead early on a leadoff home run by Normandin. The senior took the second pitch she saw over the left center field wall, giving the Minutewomen a lead they would not surrender.

UMass would tack on an unearned run in the second inning, before the Flyers would tie the game up in the third inning.

Dayton's Molly Meyer got the inning started with a one-out bunt single down the third base line. The next batter, Anne Maci, hit the first pitch she saw over the wall in right center field to tie the game at two.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

JEFF BURSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Sarah Reeves rounds the bases after a Katie Bettencourt double in Game 1. Reeves finished the day 3-for-5 with three walks and three runs scored.

UMass gives strong showing at A-10s

By Michael Counos
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts' track and field teams fared well this weekend at the Atlantic 10 championships held at the UMass Track and Field Complex. The men finished fourth overall while the women took sixth of 12 teams.

Brian Miller was the first of many success stories on Day 1 with a first-place high jump finish and claimed the UMass school record with a height of seven feet and one quarter inch. The mark was also the best in the A-10 Conference this season and Miller was later named the Most Outstanding Field Competitor of the meet. Sean Busch took first in the pole vault with a UMass second all-time mark of 15 feet, three inches. Other Day 1 notables were Jonathan Pierce finishing second in the 10K run and Daniel Wu with a third-place leap in the long jump.

The Minutemen began the second day of competition second in points, and ended the competition with 104. UMass was led by some impressive athletes who had excellent performances.

Senior Tyler Cotto finished fourth in the 110-meter hurdles with a time of 14.45 seconds and is ranked third all-time in UMass school history. Daniel Barry took fourth overall in the 1500-meter run with a time of 3 minutes 51.06 seconds. The 4x100 relay team qualified for New England Championships with a time of 43.24, taking ninth place. The 4x400 relay team, consisting of Michael McDonough, Nick Otis, Paul Grafov and Evan Donadt also took ninth with a time of 3:22.98 and qualified for New England Championships.

A trio of decathletes fared well, led by Daniel Schwartz coming in second overall, as well as Christopher Dzidek coming in sixth and Mark Hewitt finishing seventh. Matt Gulino had a strong performance in the 200-meter run with a second-place time of 23.08. Also, Scott VanderMolen qualified for New England Championships in the 800-meter event.

"I was very pleased with all of the athletes and their attitudes, and it looks to be a successful championship season for us," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said.

The Minutewomen continued their success in the conference championships as well. Karen Roa set a new school record in the 3,000 meter steeple-chase as did Rachelle Bourque in the javelin. Shiyi Zan set the fourth fastest UMass all-time mark in the 10,000-meter run with a time of 37:20.21. Lisa Wilson continued her dominance in the throwing events with a second-place finish in the discus and fourth place in the shot put.

Nicole Pompei took third place in the pole vault with a mark of 11-07.75 and the 4x800 meter relay team grabbed fifth with a time of 9:08.28. Courtney Baldwin and Elizabeth Fisk finished fifth and sixth, respectively, in the 1,500-meter run while Gina Perno grabbed fifth place in the 800-meter run.

UMass returns to action next weekend in Dedham, Massachusetts for the New England Championships. Action kicks off at 10 a.m. for the two-day event.

Michael Counos can be reached at mcounos@student.umass.edu.

No. 1 Terps rout UM

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Prior to playing in next weekend's NCAA Play-In Game, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team closed out its regular season on Saturday against Maryland at Ludwig Field.

The contest was a homecoming for Minutewomen head coach Alexis Venechanos and associate head coach Acacia Walker, who were two of the top Terrapins in program history.

Maryland	14
UMass	4

Atlantic Coast Conference Champion Maryland (17-1) was the second No. 1-ranked team the Minutewomen faced this season, with the first being against Northwestern in an 18-6 loss back on Feb. 6 to begin the spring.

Coming off of their Atlantic 10 tournament title, UMass (10-9) couldn't sustain its momentum and fell 14-4 to the Terps.

Senior Merritt Cosgrove played in her 73rd career game for the Minutewomen to set the program's games played record. She scored half of UMass' goals for the game, while earning one ground ball and draw control.

Maryland came out of the gates firing on all cylinders, taking a quick 7-0 lead by the 12 minute, eight second mark. All seven goals were scored by different players as the Terps production was spread out throughout the contest.

Facing a large deficit, the Minutewomen could only manage one goal for the half on a free-position score. Sophomore Jesse O'Donnell finally put UMass on the board with 8:52 remaining on her 37th goal of the season, placing her second on the team in goals scored behind junior Jackie Lyons (46).

Maryland continued its hot play to start the second half, scoring four more goals before the Minutewomen could answer with their second score. Sophomore Danielle Pelletier scored an unassisted goal to make it an 11-2 game with 17:06 remaining.

The Terps kept the pressure on UMass and ended any chance of a comeback with three more goals over the next three minutes. Cosgrove scored both of her goals in the final 11 minutes of play, giving the Minutewomen only four scores on the day. The goals marked a season low for UMass, as well as the 13 shots taken.

Maryland, meanwhile, took 29 shots and forced the Minutewomen into 17 turnovers.

UMass goalkeeper Katie Florence made seven saves in nearly 53 minutes of play before being replaced by freshman Christina Fey.

Nine different players scored goals for Maryland, including Sarah Mollison, who led all players with four points (two goals, two assists). Four Terps also had multi-goal games to round out the offensive attack.

On Saturday, UMass will play the winner of the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Championship game between Stanford and Denver in the NCAA Play-In Game. The game will be hosted by the winner of the MPSF championship.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen give fans glimpse of what's to come at Spring Fling

By Dan Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team gave students and fans a preview of its fall talent, hosting its annual Spring Fling Friday night at McGuirk Stadium.

The event was split into two competitions: a combined intersquad scrimmage and an offense vs. defense session. The Maroon team won both portions 33-12 and 27-2, respectively.

"I thought it was a great night, a lot of great energy out there," UMass coach Kevin Morris said. "I have been very pleased [with the game]. There are a lot of guys who need a lot of good reps and I think we got that done."

The scrimmages were highlighted by the running back and quarterback play. Junior Octavious Hawkins led the way in the air, throwing for 156 yards on 8-of-15 passing with one touchdown and one interception. On the ground, senior John Griffin scampered in for two touchdowns and freshman Jamar Smith led the game with 59 rushing yards.

Three quarterbacks rotated under center, each taking a substantial number of snaps. Senior Kyle Havens went 8-of-14 for 98 yards, throwing three touchdowns and one interception. The senior connected with running back Jonathon Hernandez for a 25-yard score and again with wide receiver Tom Gilson from 19 yards out.

Wide receiver Woody Carter IV looked sharp in catching two balls for 80 yards. On one drive, the junior ran a hook route, finding space to gain 26 yards and a first down. Two plays later, he evaded defenders sprinting down the sideline for 54 yards and a touchdown.

Freshman quarterback Jesse Hunt delivered both passes to Carter IV. He threw nine times, completing six for 140 yards and a score.

First-year running back Jamar Smith played patiently for the Maroon team, following his blockers and finding the edge for a touchdown.

The senior Griffin will look to lead a deep running core this season.

"There's definitely a lot of good competition at running back, but I think I can add a different edge," Griffin said. "Everyone's got something different to bring to the table. I think we have a really good running back core."

Junior Jonathan Hernandez ran five times on the night, scoring one touchdown and gaining 35 yards. Jesse Julmiste ran once for 11 yards, also catching two passes for 83 yards and one score.

The evening's action began with a bang, as a flea-flicker play from the White team led to a Maroon touchdown on the first snap of the game. Wide receiver Julian Talley completed a pass to Hawkins when All-American candidate Tyler Holmes laid a hard hit which forced a fumble and 68 yard return by Ke'Mon Bailey.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

PM T-STORMS HIGH: 79 LOW: 47 — Best of 2009-2010 — TUESDAY, MAY 4, 2010

For Class of 2010, it's time

Commencement ceremonies to take place next weekend

By Nick Bush and Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

After your name is read, you embark on a brief walk up to a podium and exchange a few handshakes followed by applause, it's all over. Four years of memories, experiences and preparation go into the books, the next name is read and the next journey begins. Donning their caps and gowns, more than 4,000 University of Massachusetts graduating seniors and their 20,000 guests will fill McGuirk Alumni Stadium on the morning of Saturday, May 15, at 10 a.m., as they prepare to leave their days as students behind and launch newly-minted lives as alumni.

This year's Commencement will feature speakers from a variety of walks of life, with numerous students receiving recognition for outstanding achievements in varying fields and former Isenberg School of Management professor Sheila Bair, now the Chairwoman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), slated to deliver the Commencement address.

Bair, the former Dean's Professor of Financial Regulatory Policy at Isenberg, was also Assistant Secretary for Financial Institutions at the U.S. Department of the Treasury from 2001 to 2002 and also served as Vice President for Government Relations for the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) from 1995 to 2000.

In her time at the FDIC, Bair has overseen numerous significant economic moves by the government throughout the recession still affecting the nation. She presided over one of the largest bank mergers in history, as JP Morgan Chase took over the failed bank Washington Mutual, and at one point froze foreclosures on bank-owned loans managed by the lender IndyMac Bank, which was experiencing widespread foreclosures as consumers defaulted on subprime loans. In 2008, she was named the second-most powerful woman in the world behind German chancellor Angela Merkel by Forbes magazine. Bair's term at the FDIC runs through 2011.

JON KELLY/UMASS.EDU

Students flip their tassels during Commencement Ceremony at McGuirk Stadium. This year's festivities take place next weekend.

In addition to Bair, two graduating UMass students will be given the opportunity to ruminate on their experiences as student speakers for the Class of 2010. The two graduating seniors were chosen as part of a rigorously competitive process run by Dr. Karin Moyano Carnihort, Chairwoman of the University's Student Speaker Selection Committee. The first student speaker, University Without Walls student Mark Cerasuolo of Redmond, Wash., will

See COMMENCEMENT on page 4

Law school becomes part of UM system

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on February 3, 2010).

We may be late to the party, but at least we are getting there.

The Massachusetts Board of Higher Education voted unanimously Tuesday to approve the creation of a public law school in the Commonwealth, to be located at the former Southern New England School of Law and overseen by the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth. The school puts Massachusetts in company with 44 other states which already offer public law programs. The vote is the final step in approving the law school proposal, and clears the way for students to enroll at the state's first public law school this fall.

The Board of Higher Education met Feb. 2 before a packed house in a public forum at Bridgewater State College and voted 10-0, with one member not present, to approve the proposal.

According to the UMass system spokesman Robert Connolly, the moment was one of excitement and euphoria, as students, alumni of Southern New England School of Law, four of the five chancellors from across the UMass system, various state legislators, and other citizens burst out in cheer as the vote was announced.

"There were people high-fiving, people bursting into tears, it was just an explosion of cheers when the board took its final vote," he said.

John Hoey, assistant to the chancellor at UMass Dartmouth, said the Dartmouth campus is elated at the news and looking forward to

See LAW SCHOOL on page 2

Wilson to step down in 2011

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on March 2, 2010).

University of Massachusetts President Jack M. Wilson announced yesterday he will step down after eight years as head of the five-campus system when his current term ends in June 2011.

It has been an honor and privilege to serve as a steward of this University," said President Wilson in a University press release on Monday. "It has been a joy to work on behalf of the students, faculty and staff of the University through the good times and through the challenges. But now it is time for me to prepare to hand the baton to the next President."

Wilson's contract required that he declare his future plans by the end of this coming June, so that the University would have adequate time to arrange for his successor, if necessary, before his term ends June 30, 2011.

Because Wilson said Monday he will not return after June 2011, the University subsequently announced that a search committee, which will include students, faculty and staff, will be formed and a consultant hired to take part in a national search for a replacement.

JUSTIN KNIGHT/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Current UMass system President Jack Wilson will step down in 2011.

A 64-year-old physicist and career educator, Wilson has been University president since September 2003. During his tenure, the release said, he has emphasized access and affordability for students, has focused on research and innovation, and

See WILSON on page 4

Vanin, Kim respond to alleged UMass rape case mishandling

By Matt Rocheleau, Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on March 5, 2010).

There is no "magic bullet" to earn back the trust lost from the administration's "unacceptable" mishandling of an alleged rape case, the University of Massachusetts' dean of students told the campus community last night.

At an emotional, one-hour discussion, campus administrators were challenged Thursday with questions on how and why a student who reportedly confessed to raping a UMass alum last fall received "too light" of a punishment.

Though little new information regarding the case was announced, Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin revealed that the accused student is no longer living on campus, but is still enrolled in classes. She declined to disclose when the student moved off campus and if he did so on his own or if it was the University's decision.

Amanda Molina, a UMass graduate student pursuing a master's in history, was one of three female students who spoke about their own experiences with sexual assault. Two of the students said they felt their respective cases were mishandled after reporting the incidents to the UMass Police Department (UMPD) and the Dean of Administrators Jo-Anne T. Vanin and Joan Kim respond to students' questions in a special forum.

JUSTIN KNIGHT/DAILY COLLEGIAN

See RAPE MEETING on page 3

Brown among five at Senate seat debate

MATTHEW HASKINS/COLLEGIAN

Candidates answer questions during a forum last November. Scott Brown, left, was one of five senator candidates who attended the event.

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on November 9, 2009).

With a varied field of candidates currently hoping to fill the Commonwealth's vacant U.S. Senate seat in the Dec. 8 primary, hundreds of students and locals turned out for Sunday night's panel discussion at the University of Massachusetts Bowker Auditorium to get a better understanding of those in the race.

Five of the six candidates now campaigning for the late Ted Kennedy's seat in the U.S. Senate took part in the forum sponsored by the League of Women Voters, including Democrats U.S. representative Michael Capuano, Celtics co-owner Stephen Pagliuca and City Year founder Alan Khazei, as well as Republicans Jack E. Robinson and State Senator Scott Brown.

The absence of the apparent front-runner of the race, Massachusetts Attorney General Martha Coakley, seemed to upset many in the forum's audience.

"I think the election is still up in the air, and [Coakley] should not feel so comfortable," said Amanda Dickenson, a political science

See SENATE on page 3

Levasseur lecture encounters obstacles

By Sam Butterfield and Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on November 11, 2009).

After a dizzying back-and-forth of controversy, one thing appears to have finally been decided in the heated debate surrounding Ray Luc Levasseur's expected speech at the University of Massachusetts Thursday.

Levasseur, a convicted bomber hailed by some as a hero and derided by others as a terrorist, will not be speaking at the event, "The Great Western Massachusetts Sedition Trial: Twenty Years Later."

The U.S. Parole Commission, which supervises the parole of people convicted of federal offenses, denied Levasseur the right to travel from his home state of Maine to Massachusetts to deliver the address. Levasseur can only cross state lines with permission from the Commission, and though he has been allowed to speak before at universities such as Columbia, Temple and the University of Southern Maine, the Commission denied him the right to travel to Amherst.

Levasseur would not speculate on why the Commission rejected this request.

"I don't have any inside knowledge of what they based their decision on," said Levasseur, reached by the Daily Collegian Wednesday night from his home in Portland, Maine. "I leave it up to others to see how things unfolded and what they think led to it. I didn't get a written notification," he said.

Calls requesting comment from the Parole Commission, based in Chevy Chase, Md., on why the board refused Levasseur's request were not returned before press time.

Levasseur, the former leader of the now infamous United Freedom Front, said of the event that he "will be there in spirit," but that he would not be participating in any capacity.

He said he was frustrated with the Commission's decision because he feels he will not be able to exercise his right to free speech.

"Obviously I'm disappointed, I'm not able to exercise my first amendment rights," he said. "I feel like I have a right to speak, I feel like other people have a right to listen, discuss, and debate, and I think there's an infringement on that," he added.

Levasseur said he hoped people would still attend the speech and that their presence would send a message of support for the first amendment.

"What I'm hoping for is that the student body and the public will really turn out and fill every seat there, and by their presence and their participation and interaction in this event, that that itself will be an affirmation that the first amendment is not easily trampled on," he said.

Levasseur became embroiled in this controversy after he was invited as part of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library's fifth annual Colloquium on Social Change.

The original event, also planned for Thursday, was cancelled after the family of a New Jersey State Police officer murdered by a member of the Freedom Front protested Levasseur's invitation to UMass. Levasseur was never charged in connection with the shooting, but critics saw his invitation to speak as an endorsement of the UFF's violence against police officers.

From there, right-wing talk shows around the Northeast picked up the story and criticized the university for offering Levasseur the chance to speak.

Word eventually reached Governor Deval Patrick, who asked Chancellor Robert Holub to call off the event.

The event was initially cancelled last week, but harsh responses from around the academic community forced UMass to grudgingly allow the speech to proceed, citing academic freedom, despite what the University said were strong reservations on its behalf.

See LEVASSEUR on page 4

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA.COM

Ray Luc Levasseur talks to a crowd. Levasseur was scheduled to speak at UMass last fall but was unable to come.

ARTS & LIVING

Top Arts Stories 2009-2010

The best stories in music, movies and fashion from Spring 2010 can be found inside.

SEE PAGE 7

SPORTS

The Best Stories of 2009-2010

The Collegian's top stories from 2009-10 include UMass hockey's home opener victory against Boston University

SEE PAGE 14

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian seniors weigh in for the final time in the form of Senior Columns.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out an audio slideshow of UMass softball player and aspiring musician Whitney Williams.

Congratulations Graduates!

from your UMass Amherst Alumni Association UMassAlumni.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXX
ISSUE 64

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor Matt Rocheleau
Managing Web Editor Sara Cody
Managing Web Editor Pete Rizzo
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Amanda Johnson
Arts & Living Editor Cal Scannell
Copies Editor Andrew Witts
Editorial Editor Alyssa Creamer
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Ellie Rukon-Miller
Assistant Editorial Benjamin Moriarty
Assistant Editorial Leigh Greaney
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant News Chris Shores
Assistant Sports Jay Auser
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Rocheleau, Alyssa Creamer

COPY EDITOR
Hannah McGoldrick

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shaina Jackson

Law school hopes to boost diversity in legal field

LAW SCHOOL from page 1

opening its law program.

"Obviously we feel great," he said. "I think what people saw in this vote was two things," he added, "one, the University was filling an obvious gap in its overall curriculum, and two, what happened really over the last two weeks, something that's really never happened before in public higher education in Mass., support for this one academic program at UMass was crystallized throughout all of our public higher education; every chancellor of the UMass campuses supported it, all nine presidents of the state colleges, and all 15 presidents of the community colleges supported it because they saw this as a step forward for public higher ed in Mass.," said Hoey. "No longer will private institutions have veto power over the ambitions of students in public higher education in Mass., and I think people really got behind that."

Hoey said the transition from Southern New England School of Law to the UMass Dartmouth law program should be a smooth one.

"We're beginning this program with a state-of-the-art, 75,000 square foot facility, 8.5 acres of land, a full library, a faculty," he said. "We start with nearly 200 students; we start with a staff, people who have a lot of experience in running a law school, so now what we're doing is working on a transition plan."

Hoey also added that any student in good standing at SNESL will be offered admission to the Dartmouth program, and that UMass Dartmouth expects to enroll more students for next fall soon.

"We have to put in place the operational details necessary to accept students, any student in good standing at the school now will be invited to transfer into the UMass Dartmouth school of law, and we are starting a student enrollment effort right now," he said.

In a statement released Tuesday by UMass President Jack Wilson's office, Wilson is quoted as praising the Board of Higher Education and expressing his optimism at the law school's prospectus.

"The creation of a public law school means that Mass. residents will now have access to an affordable, high-quality legal education. Our citizens will have the same public law school opportunity that exists in 44 other states."

Wilson noted that in tough economic times, the benefit of a public law school will be significant for students seeking a legal education but lacking the financial resources needed to pursue a private one.

"A public law school means that law students will graduate with less debt and have more flexibility in making their career choices," the president said.

UMass Dartmouth Chancellor Jean F. MacCormack called the decision an expansion of educational opportunities for the people of the Commonwealth.

"With the creation of the state's first public law school, we have made history by once again expanding higher education opportunity for the citizens of the Commonwealth," she said.

MacCormack also emphasized the importance of providing a public alternative for students who wish to enter law.

"From this day forward, students who couldn't even consider aspiring to a law school education due to cost or geography will be able to pursue their dreams," she said.

Last fall, the trustees of Dartmouth's Southern New England School of Law made a proposal to donate their school and all of its facilities, estimated at a total value of $23 million, to the University of Massachusetts. The assets include the law school building, nearby real estate, $11.5 million in library assets, $2.5 million in furnishings, technology and infrastructure and $1 million in cash reserves. The law school will be the largest ever donation to UMass Dartmouth.

The proposal hinged on several key points. MacCormack has promised that it will gain American Bar Association provisional accreditation by 2013, and proponents of the plan have stated that it will net the Commonwealth $673,576 next year and more than $1 million annually within five years.

The new law school will open to 235 students for 2010-2011, and is expected to expand to 559 students by 2017-2018. With the enrollment expansion, the amount of revenue generated is also expected to grow, with those backing the plan estimating the school will generate $81 million in student revenue between 2010-2011 and 2017-2018.

The school will be entirely self-sufficient, operating on tuition revenue, and will also hire new faculty over time.

The UMass Dartmouth law program is set to open in September. Tuition and fees for in-state students will be $23,565. Out-of-state tuition is slated to be $31,000.

UMass Dartmouth also plans to offer students an accelerated law degree where they will condense their undergraduate studies into three years and begin law school in what would be their senior year.

The law school also hopes to be an avenue for bolstering diversity in the legal field in the Bay State. According to a report by the Board of Higher Education, just 3.5 percent of attorneys in Massachusetts are black and Hispanic, though they are 12.6 percent of the state's population. The school also hopes to produce more public attorneys, as the state presently has just 272 public service attorneys, according to the Boston Bar Association Task Force on Expanding the Civil Rights to Counsel. That means there is just one public service lawyer for every 3,350 low-income Massachusetts residents.

MacCormack said Tuesday was a time of coalescence for members of the UMass Dartmouth and Southern New England School of Law Communities.

"The faculty, students and staff of UMass Dartmouth and Southern New England School of Law are now part of the same family," she said. "Teams from each institution are already working to assure a smooth transition for students and prospective students from Southern New England to the UMass Dartmouth law program."

Several of the state's private law schools ardently opposed the plan, notably Suffolk University, New England School of Law and Western New England School of Law.

New Hampshire is currently planning the creation of a public law school, meaning only Rhode Island, Vermont, Delaware and Alaska will be without public law programs.

More information on the law program will be posted as it is made available. Board of Higher Education Commissioner Richard M. Freeland could not be reached immediately Tuesday. Dean Robert V. Ward, Jr. of Southern New England School of Law also could not be immediately reached.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY DAVID BRASS/UMASS DEPT.

Governor Deval Patrick meets with students during a ceremony at UMass Dartmouth for the new law school.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

The Southern New England School of Law has been donated to the UMass system and will become the state's first public law school.

ALANA SGA seats voted out

By Alyssa Creamer and Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on March 29, 2010).

The results are in. The ALANA Caucus appointed seats are out.

At the Student Government Association (SGA) Election held earlier this month, SGA representatives were elected through the contentious new online voting system.

But this semester, many SGA officials believe the most controversial ballot item was referendum number two, which discussed the removal of the African, Latino/a, Asian and Native American (ALANA) Caucus appointed SGA seats, which dictated that 13 percent of the Senate be appointed by the ALANA Caucus.

On the spring 2010 ballot referendum, University of Massachusetts students voted 1707 to 626 in favor of removing the ALANA Caucus appointed seats.

The referendum results will alter the SGA's Constitution and a legal review by the General Counsel of the University had previously determined that the ALANA Caucus seats are unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment because they "discriminate on the basis of race specifically noting 'that the approval of the ALANA representation provision by the Board of Trustees would be unconstitutional.'"

The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment states that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The final bill that passed declared that the seats reserved positions in the student senate "on the basis of race or ethnicity."

The approved bill further stated that Student Legal Services, the SGA's legal counsel, had informed the SGA in a memo entitled "ALANA appointed Senate seats" that the seats violated the SGA Constitution and its by-laws.

"Appointed seats are also quite literally unconstitutional as our SGA constitution does not recognize senators except through election, yet our by-laws do," said Yevin Roh of the Center for Educational Policy Advocacy (CEPA). "This lack of congruency makes appointed seats unconstitutional."

According to a document titled "Summary of CEPA Research on ALANA Caucus Appointed Seats," based on research done throughout 2009 by CEPA, all appointed seats, particularly the ALANA Caucus and Area Government appointed seats, are deemed unconstitutional. The Area Government appointed seats were not removed in this referendum; those particular appointed seats were not up for referendum on this year's ballot.

During the March 3 SGA meeting, several members of the SGA were upset at the way in which the discussion of the ALANA seats' legalities occurred.

One of the reasons the removal of the seats is controversial, according to several SGA members, is that the ALANA Caucus has, for many minority students, been a gateway into student politics by introducing the existence of the SGA and providing a guaranteed opportunity to join its body.

According to these same SGA members, who wish to remain anonymous due to of the sensitive nature of this issue, many minority students on this campus may not have been aware of the opportunity to participate in the SGA because of international backgrounds or disadvantaged socio-economic and educational opportunities.

See ALANA on page 4

Career Services
NEWS OF THE WEEK

CHECK LIST FOR AFTER YOU LEAVE CAMPUS

✔ Keep checking erecruiting www.umass.edu/careers

✔ Remember that if you did not get a great summer job that employers are VERY eagerly seeking fall and spring interns and co-op students.

✔ Take advantage of the Post Graduate Internship Program which UMass Career Services offers. Information at www.umass.edu/careers

✔ Remember that the staff of Career Services is here to serve you all summer long.

✔ Have a great summer, see some of you in the fall.

WWW.UMASS.EDU/CAREERS
STOP BY GOODELL 512 NOON TO 4 PM
MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY
413-545-2224
UMassAmherst
CAREER SERVICES
STUDENT AFFAIRS & CAMPUS LIFE

Take the next step.
Start your graduate degree now.
Antioch University New England's Master's and Doctoral programs will expand your professional options.
• Green MBA, weekend and accelerated programs
• Environmental Studies
• Psychology
• Leadership and Management
• Teacher Certification
ANTIOCH UNIVERSITY NEW ENGLAND
Because the world needs you now.
Antioch University New England
www.antiochne.edu
800.429.1670

Students speak on rape case

Hannah McGoldrick/Collegian

Students respond during a forum held in response to an alleged rape mishandling by UMass administration.

RAPE MEETING from page 1

Students office.

"My junior year I was drugged and raped in a dorm," said Molina. "The case in my opinion was completely mishandled. I don't know about the University disciplinary part of it, but as far as the UMass Police Department, I felt harassed and victimized."

"We not only train our department on how to handle [sexual assault cases], I'm sorry if you had a bad experience," responded UMPD Chief Johnny Whitehead.

Erika Tabur, a kinesiology major said, "I have three friends on this campus that have been victims of sexual assault. Two of them went to both the police and the dean, and nothing came of it. I myself had a sexually abusive boyfriend, who also victimized more women on this campus. I befriended one of the girls and at different times we both went to the police."

"I had a terrible experience with them," she continued. "I was told verbatim by a detective 'the guy's a jerk, and unfortunately being a jerk isn't against the law.' After that, I continued to go and file a dean complaint but I didn't follow through with it, but the other girl did and dealt with the same man I did. She was basically given the same treatment. There was a third girl victimized by the same man who was too afraid to go forward."

Many of the speakers at the event said they were dumbfounded the University could allow what is normally a difficult offense to prosecute to receive such a light punishment, when the accused student had allegedly confessed to the accusations.

"I understand that it was a grey area, and it pretty much was our word against his," said Tabur. "To hear about this incident in which it was confirmed that this man on campus was a rapist and nothing, nothing that really justified it came about from it … I just have to say that I hate that it took The Boston Globe to get a hold of this story to bring it forward and be acknowledged. … People want to come to a safe school, and I just don't want UMass to be one of those schools [that covers up sexual assault cases]."

In the case in question, a UMass student confessed to raping a friend and former student in the fall and was mistakenly given a deferred suspension, according to an article by the New England Center for Investigative Reporting (NECIR) at Boston University published last week. University officials allowed him to stay on campus, a move that now has administrators reexamining UMass' sanctioning policies and procedures.

Further details on the formation of a special commission, which will review the entire Code of Student Conduct (CSC) – something that has not been done since the mid-1990s – were announced by interim Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim. She said the commission will begin reviewing the conduct code shortly after spring break and will make recommendations back to her by November. It is expected to be a 12-person committee which will include five students, Kim said. Any recommended changes to the student conduct code would ultimately have to gain the Board of Trustees' approval before their implementation.

Kim told the Collegian last week that the Dean of Students office has also instituted a written, formal policy to clarify that any cases classified among the most serious offenses, including sexual assault, are to be sent to the Dean of Students for review and a final decision.

There was no one individual to blame for what Kim said last week was too lenient of a punishment and a regrettable situation. She said the blame instead goes to the set up of the administrative process.

"Personally, I do not believe the sanction matched the misconduct," Kim said.

"I can't explain why it happened. I don't know," added Kim referring to the failure to have the case follow proper protocol.

Vanin said the dean who handled the case told the accused student what the sanction would be during a judicial hearing and the student signed a form agreeing to his punishment before Vanin was given the case to review.

"I think it's a very big deal, and I wish, I wish, it was possible to go back and change it," said Vanin of the deferred suspension.

However, the University cannot change or add to the sanctions already handed down through the student judicial system because, as Kim explained last week, there is no appeal process allowed to any person other than the accused.

"It's hard to earn trust. And I know right now, my office has lost a lot of trust, and it is going to take the work that we do going forward and how we handle our cases to earn that trust back," said Vanin. "There is not a magic bullet I can do or my staff can do to regain that."

Following the alleged rape, the University reviewed past cases and said there has been no other case in which proper procedure was not followed, said Kim in.

The University has withheld some details about the case due to federal privacy laws. However, the University has repeatedly refused to confirm NECIR's reports that the case was handled by Assistant Dean of Students Christina Willenbrock and has also declined to disclose any disciplinary action that might have or could be taken against administrators who mishandled the case.

UMass is not legally required to withhold that information, but rather it is UMass' choice to do so and is consistent with how UMass handles what it considers personnel matters, said Director of News and Media Relations Ed Blaguszewski Tuesday.

Willenbrock reluctantly declined to comment to Collegian reporters who visited her South Hadley home Tuesday.

"The University won't let me speak about it," she said. "I would love to tell you all my opinions and thoughts on the matter, but I really can't."

University officials have thus far declined to comment on Willenbrock's statement.

The victim in the case also reported the incident to UMPD, said Kim last week. She decided against pressing charges at the time, but she may still do so.

Student judicial records can be subpoenaed by the District Attorney's office for criminal prosecution, however, moving such cases forward is often dependent on the victim's desire to do so, as well as whether the victim agrees to testify, said Rebecca Lockwood, associate director of the Everywoman's Center.

The District Attorney's office could not immediately be reached for comment on whether criminal charges will be pursued and whether the office will attempt to acquire the accused student's testimony from his hearing with the University.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com. Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu. Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu.

Amanda Johnson/Collegian

A student living in North Apartments was allowed to stay on campus after allegedly raping a fellow student.

Candidates debate at Bowker

SENATE from page 1

major and former Coakley supporter. "Not attending the forum out here seems really arrogant on her part, especially since she's from North Adams. She shouldn't just automatically assume that people in Western Massachusetts will vote for her."

"If Coakley thinks western Massachusetts is important, then why isn't she here?" said Nick Barton, a political science major at UMass. "The same could be said about Capuano getting up and leaving halfway through."

Capuano did in fact exit the panel early, departing after the third debate topic. His campaign cited fatigue from travelling to Washington to vote for health care legislation this weekend, which passed the House by a vote of 220-215 late Saturday night.

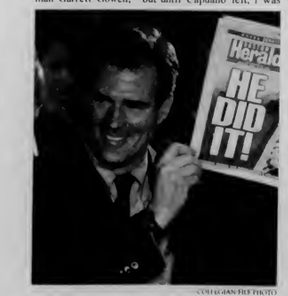
"I walked in supporting Brown," said UMass freshman Garrett Gowen, "but until Capuano left, I was really starting to like him and what he was saying."

"Ted Kennedy was my senator here in Massachusetts for all of my life thus far," said Richard Purtle, a Capuano supporter and former UMass student who now lives in Buckland, Mass. "While it's impossible to fill his shoes, [Capuano] comes the closest, and has the integrity and vision that we need right now… He was one of only 15 U.S. Congressmen to oppose the Patriot Act back when it passed."

"I'd describe myself as a [Blue Dog] Democrat," said Tony Frentakis, an undecided Watertown, Mass. resident who drove out to Amherst to see the panel. "I have some dislike for Coakley, however, and am starting to feel inclined to vote for Capuano since I've started to hear his opinions on matters."

The evening offered another opportunity for UMass to showcase its ability to draw sometimes Boston-centric politicians out to Western Massachusetts to interact with the area population.

"It was wonderful that we almost filled [Bowker]," said UMass spokesperson Ed Blaguszewski. "There was great turn out, and I hope students here continue to take an active interest in politics."



"It was definitely thought provoking," said Rob Carney, a history major at the University. "That was only when the candidates actually answered the questions asked of them, though. Most of the answers seemed to be trying to change the subject."

"I came in here looking for a Republican to support," said Brian Ruckie, a freshman economics major. "What I heard from Robinson tonight was far and away better than Scott Brown, especially his comments on foreign policy."

"I would have liked to have seen Brown offer more of his own ideas when he was criticizing [the health care bill currently going through Congress]," said Nate Hoffman, a freshman at UMass. "It seemed like he was trying to intimidate people about health care, and what the bill will actually do."

"It seemed like Scott Brown was running for governor, rather than senator," said Nate Richardson, a UMass economics major. "Khazei seems like a great organizer, but he will probably be better out of office as an organizer, rather than in it as a senator."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Against many Massachusetts residents' assumptions, Scott Brown won the senate special election.

To the World's Best Customers:
Thank you for joining us.
It has been a pleasure to serve you.
To the seniors—we are going to miss you.

facebook
facebook.com/umassdining
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
Seniors on the meal plan can use their meal cards at the Bluewall on Saturday, May 15.
Worcester DC and Berkshire DC will remain open Friday, May 14.

WORCESTER / FRANKLIN
SPRING FLING BBQ
MENU:
• Grilled Hamburgers
• Cheeseburgers
• Hot Dogs
• Mozzarella Sticks
• Grilled Vegetables
• Field Greens Salad
• Red Bliss Potato Salad
• Fresh Fruit Salad
• Ice Cream Novelties
• Assorted Beverages

ENTERTAINMENT:
DJ Matt Peterson
Tuesday, May 4
Northeast Quad Area
4:30–8:00 pm
Rain date: Wednesday, May 5
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards

Two students to speak at Commencement ceremonies

COMMENCEMENT from page 1

receive a bachelor's degree in marketing anthropology, which he completed nearly 40 years after he first began attending UMass. Cerasuolo has more than 30 years experience in the consumer electronics industry, including management experience in marketing, product-line development, business development, and training.

Cerasuolo described his often windy journey to a degree in marketing anthropology through the University Without Walls program.

Cerasuolo enrolled at UMass in 1971 after graduating from Saugus High School and said while "I wasn't goofing around or anything," that he became very involved in politics, ultimately "neglecting some of my studies because of it."

In 1974 before his senior year, Cerasuolo got a job at a local electronics store, and after several employees were laid off, he found himself promoted to manager, and a job in consumer electronics was born. Since then he has worked for numerous firms such as the now defunct Tweeter and California-based JBL. While working for these electronics companies, Cerasuolo became a marketing specialist, writing advertisements.

He said that as he ascended the corporate ranks and became a father stressing the importance of continuing education to his children, he looked at his lack of a degree as something of a void in his resume.

"As my own kids got older and went to college, I thought, gee, they're going to graduate before I do," he joked, adding that "I started feeling the lack of a degree was something I wanted to overcome."

By then living in suburban Seattle, Cerasuolo enrolled in business classes at a local branch of the University of Washington in 2006. He said that while the classes were solid, they took a long time to complete and that, on a chance visit to Amherst in 2007 traveling between Boston and New York, he stopped in at UMass and asked around about what he could do with his nearly-complete transcript.

"I asked around some professors about what I could do with all these credits and all this prior work, and they referred me to the University Without Walls. I met with them, they were great, they said, 'We can take everything you've done and custom build you a major to finish and here's how we'd set up a program,' so I withdrew from UW and transferred to UMass."

Joking about the long and winding road he's faced before finally earning his degree this year, Cerasuolo said "I could not possibly have ever written this script for myself."

Though he would not discuss specifics of what he plans to include in his speech, Cerasuolo explained that he hopes to inspire students by describing how a degree, even in dire economic times, is worth invaluably more than no degree, and that students should take stock in what their educational experience has lent them.

The second speaker will be Commonwealth Honors College student Emily Grund of Rockport, Mass., a journalism major with a minor in psychology. Grund's travel writing has appeared in a number of publications, and she has been nominated to teach English in Asia as a Peace Corps volunteer after graduation. The selection of Grund marks the third-straight year that a UMass journalism major has been named student speaker for the graduating class.

Grund said she was flattered and honored to be giving the address.

"I'm very honored to be chosen as a commencement speaker, it was something that I put a lot of effort into so I was really excited when I was chosen because I was up against some other pretty good speakers," she said.

Grund said the main emphasis of her speech is on the relationships students build throughout their time at UMass.

"The theme of it all is about the relationships and the different connections you make here while you're at UMass, whether it's friends or faculty, I tried to make it relatable so everyone will be able to take a piece of it with them," she said.

From here, Grund will teach English somewhere in Asia through the Peace Corps. She will find out where she will be traveling at the end of May and will likely depart in late August.

As for advice for future students, Grund encouraged students not to map out their life's ambitions during college but to sit back and enjoy the college experience while it lasts.

"A lot of people try to plan out their life and rush through this experience and it's a lot better to just try to take it all in and enjoy it," she said.

The Undergraduate Commencement ceremonies will also recognize the 12 students who are receiving 21st Century Leader Awards, which is bestowed upon graduating seniors who have demonstrated exemplary standards of achievement, initiative and social awareness during their time on campus.

This year's group includes Timothy Alden, a double major in accounting and economics from Charlton, Mass., Danielle Dean, a psychology and Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration major from Westford, Mass., Olga Deshchenko, a double major in journalism and legal studies from Brooklyn, N.Y., Peter M. Krafft, a mathematics and statistics major from Canton, Mass., Meghan Krupka, a civil and environmental engineering major from Medfield, Mass., Nicholas R. Morrison, a psychology major from Woburn, Mass., Martin Nolet, a psychology major from Quebec, Canada, Taryn O'Hearn, a psychology major from Sagamore Beach, Mass., David R. Paquette, a biochemistry and molecular biology major from Westfield, Mass., Abigail A. Reardon, a double major in English and legal studies, from Ashley Falls, Mass., Jeffrey A. Rothschild, a political science major and Judaic and Near Eastern studies minor, from Worcester, Mass. and Sahil Shanghavi, an electrical engineering major from Kolkata, India.

In addition to the 12 students receiving 21st Century Leader Awards, two graduating seniors will be honored for their leadership and executive ability as Jack Welch Scholars. Those two students this year are Stephan Adams, an electrical engineering major from Watsontown, Penn., and 21st Century Leader Timothy Alden.

The university will continue a long-standing tradition at this year's Commencement: the Parade of International Flags, which offers graduating seniors in the Class of 2010 the chance to wave their country's colors as part of a procession entering the stadium at the start of the ceremony, before joining their classmates for graduation. International students interested in the parade should contact Flag Ceremony Coordinator Terry Sall at tsall@admin.umass.edu by May 14.

The University is also seeking volunteers to be marshals, aides, ushers and golf cart drivers for Commencement. For their time, volunteers stand to receive a commemorative glass, snacks and a chance to win prizes. Aides, ushers, marshals, and golf cart drivers will have to report to McGuirk at 8 a.m. on May 15, with two pre-Commencement meetings – a volunteer orientation tomorrow, May 5 at 10 a.m. in Flavin Auditorium (SOM 137), and a rehearsal on Thursday, May 13 at 10 a.m. at McGuirk.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu. Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Students celebrate during a Commencement ceremony. The undergraduate ceremony will take place on Saturday, May 15.

HANNAH MCGOLDRICK/COLLEGIAN

Yevin Roh discusses the illegality of the ALANA caucus appointed seats. The seats have now been removed.

Legality of ALANA seats questioned

ALANA from page 2

In 2000, the legality of the ALANA Caucus appointed seats came before the student judiciary. Members of the student judiciary at the time ruled the seats to be constitutional. However, due to the sensitivity of the conflict, they decided to bring the vote to a referendum. The spring 2001 ballot referendum ruled in favor, 1678 to 797, of preserving the ALANA Caucus appointed seats.

According to Senator Derek Khanna, the Office of Civil Rights has been investigating the legality of the ALANA Caucus' appointed seats for over seven months. Khanna explained that he had been in direct contact with Michael Joyce of the Office of Civil Rights, who, according to Khanna, found the seats to be illegal and "did not understand why the seats were up for referendum."

Any changes to the SGA bylaws and Constitution must initially be passed in referendum and then approved by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Jean Kim.

Attempts to contact Michael Joyce from the Office of Civil Rights were unsuccessful because comments about the ALANA Caucus seats were instead directed to the Office of Civil Rights' press office.

Khanna also stated that he sought guidance about the legality of the ALANA appointed seats from the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), and that the ACLU supported the proposition that the seats were illegal.

However, according to Christopher Ott of the ACLU of Massachusetts, the ACLU "took no further action" deciding that the union "did not take a position" about the ALANA seats.

Kim had set in place a plan to remove the appointed ALANA Caucus seats by March 1. Although the seats are vacant, several senators say the ALANA appointed seats were vacant mainly because of concerns surrounding the legality of the seats and knowledge about their pending removal.

When asked if he believed the SGA would remain as diverse should the ALANA seats be removed, Roh said, "Diversity has always depended on the students, the ALANA Caucus was not the sole arbiter of ensuring diversity. Each senator as an individual brings a great amount of diversity, each having their own unique life experiences."

"It is not up to CEPA or the SGA to try to get the seats back," added Roh. "If the need arises for the seats in the future, and students fight for them, anything is possible."

Of the campus' 18,263 undergraduates, 2,662 of them voted in the University's trial-run online Student Government Association elections, meaning the voter turnout, according to results released by the SGA's Chancellor of Elections Jitesh Khushalani, was 14.58 percent.

Election results were approved at the SGA meeting held last Wednesday.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu. Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Levasseur not allowed to speak

LEVASSEUR from page 1

The event was renamed "The Great Western Massachusetts Sedition Trial: Twenty Years Later," and will still take place at 7:15 p.m. in the Isenberg School of Management's room 137, but without Levasseur himself on the bill.

The headlining speaker will now be Mr. Levasseur's ex-wife, Pat, who was also charged with sedition, members of the defense team who represented the Levasseurs in their sedition trial, and a juror from the case.

The Levasseurs and co-defendant Richard Williams stood trial in Springfield in 1989 for sedition, the act of attempting to overthrow the government or civic order. After a 10-month trial which became the costliest in Massachusetts history, all three were acquitted.

While Levasseur, as it turns out, will not speak Thursday, officials were not pleased that he would have spoke had the Parole Commission not allowed him to travel.

UMass system president Jack Wilson said in a statement Tuesday that "Chancellor Holub and I have instructed that no state funds be used to support this activity."

Rumors circulated Tuesday that the Massachusetts chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, which had spoken out against the cancellation, was either sponsoring or funding the event. Christopher Ott, communications director for the Massachusetts ACLU, said Tuesday that it was "not true."

He did say, however, that the event has their support.

"We applaud the efforts of students and faculty leaders that have been working to see that the scheduling of the talk is forwarded despite the calls for censorship," he said.

It remains unclear how the event is being funded.

Levasseur was sent to prison in 1986 for bombing buildings across the East Coast, including eight bombings in the Boston area along with a string of bank robberies. The stated intent of the United Freedom Front was to protest the supposed U.S. backing of the South African apartheid government and Central American death squads.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Rav Luc Levasseur was not allowed to travel to UMass for his scheduled talk due to a parole order.

Members of the United Freedom Front were convicted of the murder of New Jersey State Police officer Phil Lamonaco and the attempted murder of two Massachusetts State Police officers. Levasseur, however, was never charged with these crimes, nor was he at the scene of either incident.

The event will be sponsored by the departments of communication, economics, history, languages, literature, and culture and sociology, as well as the social thought and political economy and women, gender and sexuality programs, the Sociology Graduate Student Association and executive members of the Student Government Association.

Co-sponsoring the event are several non-profit community groups, foundations, and businesses including the Rosenberg Fund for Children, Food for Thought Books, Vermont Action for Political Prisoners and the Massachusetts Foundation for the Humanities.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com. Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

Wilson to begin 'new chapter'

WILSON from page 1

has supported a capital program aimed at providing new facilities and renovations on all five campuses.

He said he is particularly proud of the University's increased enrollment and financial aid availability. This academic year the University has met 93 percent of students' demonstrated financial need – a new record for UMass and "a number far higher than any of the other public universities in the region," he said.

However, Wilson has also faced criticism, including recent revelations that his overall compensation level increased by 15 percent last year – the same year in which the University faced major budget cuts and enacted both a student fee increase and a salary freeze for UMass faculty and employees.

"Leaving at this time is a bit easier knowing that there is a uniquely qualified leadership team of chancellors guiding the five campuses. I have complete confidence in their ability to continue the progress that we have seen on the campuses, and I know that the Board of Trustees shares my confidence in their superb leadership and in the prospects for the future," Wilson said.

"I assure you that I gave this very serious consideration but have concluded that this is the time for a change. I am very proud of what we have accomplished together," Wilson added.

He will continue to serve as president until his current term expires. Over the course of the next year, Wilson will consider future opportunities both at and beyond the University, according to the release.

Gov. Deval Patrick and Board of Trustees Chairman Robert J. Manning applauded Wilson's achievements during his time as president, according to yesterday's release.

"By any measure – enrollment, endowment, test scores or capital improvements – Jack Wilson's tenure has moved the University of Massachusetts forward," said Patrick. "He has been a terrific partner in our shared commitment to making the public higher education system in Massachusetts a national model for excellence while keeping it affordable and accessible for our students."

Wilson joined the University in 2001 to become the founding CEO of UMassOnline, the University's distance-education program.

He said he is looking forward to working with students and working on the technology, innovation and economic development issues that have interested him throughout his career.

"At my core, I am an educator, and I look forward to being able to focus on teaching and to advancing research," said Wilson in the release. "I feel that it will soon be time to open a new chapter in my career."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, May 4, 2010

Nothing in the world can take the place of Persistence ... The slogan 'Press On' has solved and always will solve the problems of the human race. - Calvin Coolidge

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Collegian Executive Board '10

Leigh Greaney

> I don't think once I get my little diploma and handshake that my learning and my education are over.

I don't like writing about myself. It makes me admit things that I know are true, and they stare up at me – black and white – screaming. Right now, it's screaming: hey, you're graduating. I've been avoiding that caustic reality for months. Especially during the barrage of comments from friends and family begging to know what's next.

I don't know what's next. I used to know. It was always California or Africa. I've had the privilege of getting to know a slice of Cape Town, South Africa and visited California with dreams of San Francisco, but I don't know anymore.

I feel like the world is waiting for me. My options are oceans. It's devastatingly scary and beautifully sublime.

I do know one thing. I want to write. I have to write. I've known that since I was hip-high. I have an addiction to word purging. It sounds graphic and it is. This University has taught me that this word bulimia can pay. Coming to UMass as an English and Journalism double degree major, I always got squints and eye rolls when I said I wanted to be a writer. "How are you going to pay the bills?" and "Is that a career all by itself?" were common knives thrown at me.

But, it is a career, and it does pay the bills. You just have to know what you're doing. You have to practice. You have to meet people. You have to talk to people. Most importantly, you have to write until you have carpal tunnel. I feel like I've done that.

I've been working at the Collegian for three years, writing editorials, editing editorials, interviewing bands and writing about music. I've inhaled some inspiration and exhaled some journalism. It's been more than refreshing.

It's become more than a job or an internship or mandatory practice, though it's become a haven. This creaky, cluttered newsroom has been the best class I've taken at UMass.

My credit count hasn't been upped and my GPA hasn't either, but I've easily learned more in this dusty dungeon than over in Bartlett or Herter.

I could list out all the little, quirky things I've learned and look back in a hue of nostalgia and bore you to death, but I hate when people are that lofty.

What you learn in college is something unique to you. Everyone has blanks to fill in their own experience. The only way to fill them is to find them first.

For anyone reading who still has a good chunk of time under their belt at UMass, I think that there are a few priorities that I wish I kept in mind at all times. What you take from them is your own, but I feel that college priorities can be somewhat universal.

The first is obvious: have the absolute time of your life. Go out and party. Meet everyone you can – even if you're sure you're going to hate them after four minutes of talk time. You learn about yourself through learning about others. So, get out there. Don't let homework rule your entire life. Just get it done, and do it well. Hell, even if that means pulling a few all-nighters. You'll live.

Second priority: fill up your resume with internships, accomplishments, awards, clubs and anything else that you like to do. This University has hundreds of organizations to join. Join a few that catch your eye. You won't regret it.

Third priority: get good grades. This basically means going to office hours. If you haven't figured this out yet, you're welcome.

Stress, although part of life, doesn't need to be all of it. You can't make yourself better when you're worried that you suck. Just realize: you're here to learn.

I don't think once I get my little diploma and handshake that my learning and my education are over. That doesn't mean grad school is next, although I might. That doesn't mean I'll take a French class in some stuffy, overpriced and trendy classroom in New York City from some private organization, although I might. That doesn't mean anything more than the fact that I'm keeping my eyes open.

UMass is something that grows inside you. It's a mind state. It's looking at the world and soaking it into your sponge. It's becoming part of a collective. It doesn't leave you once you leave it. For that, I'm comforted that on May 15, it's not over. Cap and gown or not – I'm still a peace in this place's over-soul, and it is part of me.

Leigh Greaney is a rapidly aging woman, who will more than likely end up selling her body for money and writing about it. But more seriously, Leigh was the Collegian's assistant ed/op editor. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Pete Rizzo

> The Collegian is perhaps best described as the nicotine-addled, brain trust of the UMass campus.

I find myself here at this end of days thinking more and more about the start of my UMass experience. I'm thinking back to my days as a confused and excited freshman, long before every street and brick-built campus building seemed to hold a story, and with that, all the tiny moments of the random people and events that made each day here so different. And I find myself thinking if this was bound to happen? Was this the inexorable result of living in a confined space for four of the formative years of my life, or was it perhaps a result of something I did?

In truth I've done a lot of things on this campus. I've become what college enrollment officers would like to refer to as "involved" per se. But even that took a full year of living as a 'sweste' that was close enough in Cance to walk to Berkshire in my pajamas to fully shake.

But I guess all the good stuff started when I founded a radio show on WMUA with my good friend Charles Felder. It's called "Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk." Some of you may have heard it, played on it with your band, listened to it while your friend in a band was on it or followed our website. And for that I can't thank you enough.

Around the same time I started writing for the Collegian. My first article was about country music. Since then, the Collegian has taken me everywhere from backstage at the 2009 Spring Concert, to the Bonnaroo Music & Arts Festival in Tennessee, and the Conservative Political Action Campaign in Washington D.C. And I have written a lot of other random places in between.

Toward the end of 2008, I campaigned for Barack Obama and ended up in the University Democrats. The night before the 2008 Election, I spent 45 minutes on the phone with a doctor from Missoula, Montana who had every reason to vote for John McCain and most likely did. I even spent a semester on the streets of Manhattan interning for MTV. I could go on and on, but the point, I suppose, is that I owe these unique experiences to this campus, and the people I've met here without which I would not have been able to do all the things that I did.

But looking around these days and traveling the rounds of the Student Union, I notice hundreds of little nooks and rooms that I have ignored these past four years. Each of them looks lived in, like they could be anyone's home away from home. You've seen them: the random doors that open up places where people get involved, make friends and kill time. I've never been to the Craft Center. But I imagine other people haven't been to the Collegian, either. This is the real UMass to me, and one that I can't sing the praises of enough. Yeah we've got the stupid Minuteman mascot, and we have to deal with those ad campaigns that try to paint us as responsible tectotalers. But I couldn't think of a better place to spend one's time than in one of these places. I imagine that everyone has one, and there are thousands to stumble upon. I found mine, and it was the Collegian.

The Collegian is perhaps best described as the nicotine-addled, brain-trust of the UMass campus. And yeah, we report the news, and put out a paper. But we do a whole lot of other things, too. And I don't think you could find a more interesting, diverse group of eccentrics on campus. I mean this as an utmost compliment. But that's just what it was for me. A place to put my things, kill time, shoot the shit or whatever between classes, all while learning the valuable skills of journalism and mostly just putting off whatever else wasn't more contingent upon present action.

And now what? What of this great present that stretches before us graduates? I'm not sure. But I'm pretty sure that's the point, a sort of blessing and curse that comes from being on the precipice of realizing one's dreams. I will now leave you with a quote that will be much more worthwhile than reading this column: "The Road goes ever on and on, down from the door where it began. Now far ahead the Road has gone, and I must follow, if I can, pursuing it with eager feet, until it joins some larger way, where many paths and errands meet. And whither then? I cannot say."

Pete Rizzo was the managing editor of DailyCollegian.com. He can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Michael Phillis

> I like to think that journalism is really an excuse to hunt down the most interesting peopie you can find and to selfishly ask that they spend their time explaining things to you.

I started out at UMass in the Isenberg School of Business. I thought that upon graduating, I would be able to find a well-paying job in the city of my choosing with ease.

Then, a month and a half after arriving at school, I went down to the Collegian offices. Now I've added journalism as a second major. Instead of looking forward to a comfortable salary and an easy path toward employment, I'm about to enter the field of print journalism – an industry going through an astonishingly fast decline.

My change in direction is all due to the Collegian, and I couldn't be happier for it. New England's Largest College Daily has been my home for almost my entire college career. I have served in a number of different positions and through it all I have gained a real passion for journalism. I count myself as one of the lucky few who really know what they want to pursue after I graduate. (Something that is going to happen in only a couple of weeks!)

For those that don't know, the Collegian is made up of an odd group of people. Editors rarely have high GPAs, largely due to the amount of time they spend working on the paper. The office is dingy and depressing, and most editors don't leave the office until around one in the morning when they've "put the paper to bed." The dedication of this group of people is unparalleled.

It is because of the paper's staff and our mutual interest in producing something special that I have spent such a large portion of my time buried in the depths of the campus center.

And it's been great.

That's not to say that the journalism staff doesn't deserve a lot of credit for my graduation this month they do. The guidance they have given me has allowed me to gain the opportunities that have made my college experience a valuable one.

The list of those who have helped me in my four years at UMass is a long one. Then again, when I came here, this college wasn't my first choice. I was seriously considering the University of Delaware and Boston University. Why do I say this now? Because it is rare to graduate having believed you made the wrong decision entering school, only to discover that UMass really was the right place to be.

It is because of the Collegian that I am now fully content with my college decision. Without a college newspaper that threw me straight into the deep end – my first assignment was to cover a UMass football game – I never would have understood what journalism could offer and just how much fun it could be.

Because of that first experience, I have interviewed a U.S. Senate candidate, veterans, ROTC members, athletes, politicians, school board committee members and musicians. I like to think that journalism is really an excuse to hunt down the most interesting people you can find and to selfishly ask that they spend their time explaining things to you.

A couple of years ago, when I was reading other peoples' senior columns, I had always thought about what I, myself, would write. I wanted to be funny. I was going to insert a small number of inside jokes to make myself feel like I had really been a part of something. Now, I'm writing your basic senior column, full of sentimentality and the kind of selfish writing that I'll keep forever in my clips folder.

When I look back at this clip, however, I'm probably not going to read my article. I'm going to look at the bylines of those around me who have been my friends and colleagues over the course of an amazing four years. To everyone who has helped me (or had to deal with me) along the way, thank you. To my family, friends and fellow members of the Collegian, you have filled my time at UMass with positive memories.

I'm looking forward to graduation; I'm definitely ready to make the proverbial next step. But for now, it is time to reminisce about my time spent at a great organization.

I know the paper will be great next year. Nick and Alyssa will do a fantastic job. I hope to come back to visit a few months into the fall semester (hopefully I'll be employed by then) to hear about what everyone's up to.

Have a great summer. I'll miss this place.

Michael Phillis was the Collegian's assistant ed/op editor. He can be reached at miphillis@gmail.com.

Charlie Felder

Four years ago, I received a strange letter in the mail. The envelope looked like it had taken a beating under the care of the U.S. Postal Service. The material was withered and the stamp in the upper right hand corner had been worn away by time. The letter was addressed quite plainly, though there was no return address. Most curious about this envelope was not its rugged form, nor the absence of the sender's identification. What was most puzzling about this envelope was the date on the post-mark. Though the ink was nearly worn away, the characters clearly read "May 15, 2010."

I sat alone at my dining room table for 20 minutes, contemplating whether or not to open the letter. I didn't. Instead, I placed the envelope on my bed, threw on my sneakers and rushed out the door to see friends for the evening, promptly forgetting about what had been, for a brief 20 minutes, one of the more confounding and absorbing dilemmas of an otherwise worry-free week.

When I returned home later that night, I came across the letter, still sitting exactly where I had left it. I lay down and held the envelope before me. I laughed to myself and wondered whether or not I had simply misread the post-mark earlier. I gazed on the faded ink. Nope. There it was, as clear as day – "May 15, 2010."

Still confused and not quite certain as to what it meant, I lay in my bed for a long time, trying to determine what I should do with this mystery letter. Eventually, I came to what I believed was a fitting conclusion. Whatever lay inside this envelope was special. Its contents were intended to hold some value – that much was clear. Yet, I could not open it. Though the envelope filled me with a sense of intrigue and wonder, something stopped me, and I set for myself a different course of action. I would not open this letter until the date on the post mark. I would not open this letter until May 15, 2010.

I hid the envelope in some safe place, and forgot about it. High school was over, and the break before college would prove to be the best of my life. I had no cares, no worries and was as excited as any 18-year-old could be for the long-awaited exodus out of familial bondage and into the sweet embrace of college freedom. The world was my oyster; what did I care of worn-out envelopes with post-marks from some future date?

Last week, after four life-changing years, I found the envelope. I had just returned home from picking up my cap and gown for graduation, and in my discomfort and consternation, I threw these commencement necessities into my closet with considerable force. They struck a plastic box in the corner of the closet and knocked the lid loose. Looking for something to distract myself with, I decided to peruse its contents. After flipping through several papers which I had seen fit to save over the course of my college experience, I stumbled across the phantom envelope, now only slightly more battered than it had been four years earlier.

As I felt the paper in my hands anssd re-read the post-mark, I was struck by two things. First, the handwriting on the envelope looked instantly familiar. It was mine. Four years ago, I would not have recognized it at all, but the script was in my own hand. Of this I was certain. Secondly, the date on the post-mark had immediate resonance. May 15, 2010. That is the day that I will don the cap and gown resting on my closet floor and march solemnly into McGuirk Stadium with all of my friends and classmates beside me. I recalled the decision I had come to four years earlier, and an all-but-impossible realization occurred to me. Had I overcome the laws of physics, nature and all that I know and have learned to be true and mailed my younger self a letter on the day of my college graduation? What magic was this?

Overwhelmed by the magnitude of such impossibility, I resolved to open the envelope. What was so important that my future self had felt so compelled to reach out and contact me? Here were, perhaps, all the pieces of advice which might have lightened my college load. Perhaps this was the recipe for success, sent by a knowing future self to a confused younger kid. I tore the envelope apart and removed its contents. There was one page of plain white paper. Again in my handwriting, the sheet was largely blank, save for the date in the corner and a few words written across the center.

"Learn what you must. Love who you can."

Below were my initials. I sat for a moment and thought. Then I smiled and filled out an envelope to match the original. I carefully folded the letter, placed it inside the envelope. I'll drop it into the mail as I depart for the football stadium on May 15. Maybe it will reach a younger me. Maybe it won't. I have not learned any magic in college, so who knows what will happen? It doesn't matter. The fact is that after four years of college, my future self couldn't tell me anything I haven't learned on my own. I like that.

Charlie Felder was a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at charlie.felder@gmail.com.

Kirsten Swenson

I learned very quickly that drowning in self-pity was a surefire way to land you absolutely nowhere. Because of this, I grew thicker skin. I trained myself to roll with the punches. And I got realistic.

I used to think college would be a lot like an episode of "Felicity."

The late-night soul searches. The 3-a.m., post-party diner runs – and subsequent morning recaps over coffee. Switching your major from pre-med to art after a lot of thought and an unexpected epiphany. Falling in love, then falling out. Reading Kant, Aristotle, Rilke. "Finding" yourself.

When I graduated from high school in 2006, everything I idealized about going away to school, what I dreamed college would be like, was totally and completely reaffirmed during my first semester at UMass. I established the incredible, life-affirming friendships I had always hoped for, I joined a sorority and managed to earn a solid GPA, all the while honing a very healthy social life. Things were beyond great – they were perfect. One day, it stopped.

The generally sheltered, naïve state I lived in through the age of 18 ended abruptly after my mother was diagnosed with breast cancer in December of 2006 – this incident, however, was merely the beginning of what would be a long series of lessons in growing up. The idyllic notions I had about how my college years might pan out were indeed reaffirmed, but I completely overlooked a very real, very important, very necessary and very obvious part of the maturation process: pain.

Without notice or really any conscious movement, I found myself stuck in the middle of some very complicated situations – learning the true faults of family members that were never evident during youth, heated arguments with friends I swore I'd never, ever, cut off ties with, and painstaking heartbreak. I faced my fate: It's much easier watching Felicity Porter tell Ben off with such a sense of clarity, chop her hair off and deliver a beautiful, lyric statement about the facts of life, than actually emulating it myself. Pain, inexperience and my ever-present optimism sent me right through life's wringer; there were far too many moments of defeat that left me disheartened and discouraged with the direction of things.

I learned very quickly that drowning in self-pity was a surefire way to land you absolutely nowhere. Because of this, I grew a thicker skin. I trained myself to roll with the punches. And I got realistic. Within a very short period of time, I said farewell to the old me and threw myself headfirst into a pool of opportunity that I full-well knew could bring more defeat, more pain and more discouragement. To that, I said "fuck it" – if it was my life's personal agenda to force me to learn things the hard way, there was no way I was going to be an idle passerby. To achieve desired results and build character, always practice manipulating destiny.

"Remember that great love and great achievements involve great risk." The anonymous mind behind this statement could not have been more insightful. If I take away a single sentiment from my time at UMass, it would be this. You don't just have your four-year stint here for risk-taking; you have a lifetime.

Kirsten Swenson was the Collegian's night supervisor. She can be reached at kswenson14@gmail.com.

Andrew Witts

Alas, I marched into the den of the great beast. I marched for UMass, for the Collegian, for old yeller, for Sloth from the Goonies, for Sandra Bullock and for the kingdom of Rohan; I marched.

Whew, what a long journey it has been. By journey I mean the epic sequential actions that have resulted in the composition of this fine gesture presenting gratitude, success and exasperation. Though I have only worked at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian for the equivalent of a mudskipper's time spent digging breeding holes for its young, I feel accomplished in the work I have done.

Comics Editor is a tough gig to nail on a daily basis, especially when you are constantly trying to slay the evil monster that hoards all of the crossword solutions.

I must admit that I was bested in a particular bout where the ghastly crossword chimera countered my super ultra combo and parried with an intense flurry that resulted in the kidnapping of the Collegian's dear crossword clues.

The public outcry over this awful outcome was of severe resentment and criticism. I then looked to the stars for some sort of guidance as to how I could surprise the beast with a new attack that it had not seen before. It was on that same night that both Jedi masters Qui-Gon Jinn and Obi-Kenobi appeared before me.

I became encompassed in gratitude to these wise specters, and they acknowledged my grave predicament. Over the next few hours they had trained me in the solemn Jedi consular arts which were mutually difficult and insanely stimulating. As the sun rose, the Jedi masters left me with a piece of advice that I swore to take with me to the grave. If I were to ever tell anyone else that the key to besting this mindboggling fiend was a healthy diet of Taco Bell and KFC's new double down sandwich, then I would be surely denied access into their super cool and awesome depiction of the afterlife.

Alas, I marched into the den of the great beast. I marched for UMass, for the Collegian, for old yeller, for Sloth from the Goonies, for Sandra Bullock and for the kingdom of Rohan; I marched.

The battle was short-lived and I emerged victorious. The crossword clues returned to their page safe and sound with no scratches or blemishes. Since the awful and just battle, the world has not seen the kidnapping evil.

However, I feel as though something still stirs in the darkness beyond the mouth of the dark cave. Fear not fellow Collegian reader, like the priests in the film "The Fifth Element," I have passed on the knowledge of the Jedi Masters to ensure that future calamities will never occur again. It has been an honor serving the UMass public, but it is time for this elder comic editor to venture with the Doc back to the future. I only ask one thing as I depart from this land, that you remember every masturbatory comic that was I ever gave you. Here's looking at you kids. TO INFINITY AND BEYOND!

Andrew Witts was the Collegian's comics editor. He can be reached at awitts@student.umass.edu.

Sara Cody

I cannot emphasize how important it is to involve yourself, and how much I have grown as a person because I did it. It's amazing how attached I've grown to everyone working at this paper in such a short time.

There was a point in my academic career at the University of Massachusetts where I failed out of school, or was "suspended for academic deficiency" as SPIRE so eloquently put it. I was the college cliché who behaved herself during high school and let loose in college. I had no idea how to control myself and how to discipline myself in order to strike a balance. I didn't know my limits. Throughout my career at UMass, I have constantly been making mistakes and learning the hard way. So, in my senior column, I want to share all the advice I wish I received upon arriving to the University.

It's important to know your limits and find your balance. This applies both to your social and academic lives. If you're going out and partying with friends, it's important to know how many drinks it takes before you lose control of yourself. Have a set number in mind that gets you to that good place. Partying is a part of the college experience, but it's important to know your limits. It really sucks waking up in Cooley Dickinson Hospital covered in electrodes with IVs coming out of either arm because you let Mr. Jack Daniels get the better of you. It's completely necessary to blow off steam, but don't let it negatively affect your schoolwork.

Knowing your limits is important when it comes to school work and extracurriculars as well. Overwhelming yourself with too much to do is a recipe for disaster. I learned this the hard way. As a biology major my first couple years here, I was behind on the major requirements, so I tried to compensate by taking calculus and chemistry in the same semester, as well as three other classes. As a person who struggles with math, this proved to be too much for me. I ended up failing the calculus and chemistry classes and getting C's in the other three classes I could have easily had A's in. Make sure you balance your schedule with a workload that is doable for you. Don't overwhelm yourself.

My own academic suspension was the direct result of not knowing my limits. I was put on academic probation twice; the first time for not knowing my limit with the amount of times I drank and partied, and the second time not knowing my limits with overloading and overwhelming myself with classes. I should have reached out for help as soon as I realized I was dangerously struggling, but I let it escalate to expulsion.

I was not ready to give up. With the help of my mentor, Peg Riley from the biology department, I petitioned for my reinstatement and was allowed back the following semester. If you don't have someone like this in your life, reach out to your teachers and their teaching assistants, your RAs, your advisors – anyone who can help get you back on track. College is a learning experience. You should never be ashamed or embarrassed to ask for help. While I was lucky enough to get the chance to rectify my mistakes and graduate on time with the help and support of my mentor and family, I realize that a lot of people in similar predicaments aren't so lucky. Don't put yourself in that situation. Ask for help the moment you need it.

I don't want you to think my entire experience at UMass was spent screwing up and trying to fix my mistakes. I was lucky enough to have the guidance to push me in the right direction. I can honestly say that I owe so much of my turnaround to the people I met once I involved myself in different activities. I learned that while having people to get wasted with is all well and good, the unfortunate truth of the matter is that a lot of the time that is all they're good for. By getting involved with different activities, you meet people who share common interests with you, thus enabling you to have a deeper and more meaningful connection with them.

I began to get involved with the things that interested me, which initially kept me out of trouble and grew to inspire me to succeed. I'm interested in science, and I worked in Peg's lab in Morrill for three years while on campus. I had the opportunity to work with some of the most intelligent and hard-working people, who in turn inspired me to get my life in order. I would not be graduating on time this semester if it were not for the support of them and my best friend, Gabrielle Bouton.

My senior year was the year I chose to get involved at the Collegian. My one regret is that I didn't do this sooner. Again, I got the opportunity to work with some of the most inspiring people I have ever met, and I know I will continue to be friends with many of them for the rest of my life. I even met the love of my life, Jeff Larnard, working for the Collegian. I cannot emphasize how important it is to involve yourself, and how much I have grown as a person because I did it. It's amazing how attached I've grown to everyone working at this paper in such a short time. I'd list their names, but you can just check out the glory box on page two of this paper to see the complete list of people who have lit up my life this year.

I suppose the take home message of my column is that you are not defined by the mistakes that you make. Failure doesn't make success impossible. Giving up does. When you think about it, some of the greatest stories ever told have come from people persevering after failure. Bill Gates dropped out of Harvard, Thomas Edison made thousands of prototypes before he perfected the light bulb. I like to think of my experience as an academic Cinderella story. As for you, I hope you enjoy the rest of your experience at UMass. Have fun. Work hard. Get involved. Make memories. We're not kidding when we say the next however many years you have until graduation will fly by.

Sara Cody was the Collegian's managing editor of DailyCollegian.com. She can be reached at scody110@gmail.com.

Jeffrey R. Larnard

Beyond learning what it means to work for free and sharpening up about every skill one might need in the real world, the biggest contribution the Collegian has given me is the bonds with people...

It's hard to believe how fast the past four years have gone and more importantly the last two and a half, which have mostly been spent down in the Collegian's newsroom.

As a sport management major in my sophomore year, I decided it would be a good idea to give myself as many options for when I graduated. Despite my hatred for writing, I thought that being a sports writer could be fun, so I came down to the Collegian, began writing men's basketball Top 25 notebooks, and then added journalism as my second major.

Fast forward to now, and I'm writing the final of god-knows-how-many articles I've written for this paper. As much as I've complained about this place and the people I've worked with here, this place has without a doubt been one of the most important parts of my college career.

Beyond learning what it means to work for free and sharpening up about every skill one might need in the real world, the biggest contribution the Collegian has given me is the bonds with people I have met here and the things they have taught me.

There are phrases such as "BOOM!" and "no one cares" now engrained into my daily vocabulary thanks to the like of Joe Meloni, Eli Rosenswaike, Ryan Fleming and Melissa Turtinen aka Title IX. Beyond the ridiculous things last year's groups of editors taught me (or did not because of Joe's inability to explain why he didn't like things), these are the people who taught me to be a journalist. Without them, I would not feel comfortable calling myself one.

Then there is this year's Collegian staff that has given me even more. There is of course the girlfriend, Sara Cody – whose column coincidentally happens to be next to mine, per her request – which I would not have today if I were not a part of the Collegian. Then there are the managerial skills I've acquired from being the head editor of what I consider the strongest sports section, from top to bottom, that I've been a part of.

Lastly, there are the intangibles that can't be seen in the hundreds of clips I have written and the countless number of unpaid hours I have worked. I could try to explain it just as many past Collegian seniors have tried to do in their senior columns, but I won't bother. It's something that one needs to experience for themselves.

Words cannot describe the pride one gets from working at this paper and the sense of responsibility that one establishes from being in charge of an entire section of a paper day in and day out. And doing something with the east we have here makes it that much more special.

I hope that all of those I have met at the Collegian – former, present and those who will be here in the future – keep in touch. What we've done over the past few years is something to be proud of, and the memories are ones I hope to relive with all of you in the future.

Jeff Larnard was the Collegian's sports editor. He can be reached at jrlarnard@gmail.com.

DAVID MURRAY/ SMUA

Last night's Collegian production staff produces the final paper of the year and poses for a quick photo before sending out the paper's 'Best of' Edition.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 2010 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Boxers or briefs: What would Jesus do?

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on January 17, 2010)

These days, symbols of faith seem to be in high fashion. From religious pendants and "What Would Jesus Do?" bracelets, to crucifix tattoos and Buddhist symbols, style is very important for those who believe. But while just about anyone can sport a Star of David around their neck, not every man has the cojones to rock their faith where it really counts – in their pants.

"I Love Jesus" boxer briefs are the latest incarnation of fashion's holiest trend. The briefs were created by New York designer Jason Sutherland, the founder of the underwear company Piss & Vinegar. In their company tagline, Piss & Vinegar asks, "Do you think you have enough?" For the consummate consumer of religious iconography, the answer is a resounding "no." Piss & Vinegar's newest line is called "I Love…" and for the first time, it allows men to really show where their loyalties lie. While the "I Love Girls" and "I Love Boys" shorts make a statement that should be apparent by the time the pants come off, Sutherland anchors the line with the "Jesus" and "Buddha" models, intended for those who want to hide their shame but not their religious beliefs.

"Piss & Vinegar is about living from the heart, making sure you personally push yourself to do everything you can to find the energy needed to be something and more," said Sutherland in a recent interview. Sutherland is a pioneer in the industry, doing to boxers and briefs what Hot Topic has done for T-shirts.

While he does see the humor in his over-the-top designs, Sutherland uses iconic figures for a purpose and wants his customers to be able to express themselves genuinely.

Right away, I was intrigued by the idea of expressing myself through religious underwear. I couldn't help but wonder, would it serve as a reminder, sort of a "WWJD" meets Fruit of the Loom, or would it simply keep my equipment warm? I decided to do an experiment: I would wear the Jesus briefs twice, with one day spent as piously as possible, and the other spent being evil. What would having the Lamb of God strapped to my groin do to my luck, and to my conscience? I aimed to find out.

The first morning of the experiment was a Sunday, and I put on the sacred shorts right under my Sunday best. The first thing that struck me was that they were, in fact, quite nice briefs. I have always been a boxers man, and the tighty-whities got me a bit closer to the Host than I would have liked, but the material – 95 percent Pima cotton – was very high caliber. Emblazoned brightly with "I heart Jesus," the flaming Sacred Heart replaced the standard Western love emblem and made quite a bold fashion statement.

Upon arriving at my church, I was informed that the children's message I had been roped into participating in had been called off. Someone lost the script, so I didn't have to do a thing. I chalked that up to a win for the man with God in his pants, and sat back and listened to the day's sermon.

From there, the day went well, rounded out with a visit to my grandmother's house and other chores of a family man. I wasn't sure if I felt good because of my lucky charm or because I was playing Mr. Nice Guy, but seeing the tortured face of Jesus every time I unzipped was certainly startling. The Bethlehem briefs had been supportive so far, but the test was far from over.

S.P. SULLIVAN/COLLEGIAN

Andrew Sheridan sought to find out how having the Lamb of God hugging his groin might guide him to spirituality, while sporting the latest "I Love Jesus" boxer briefs. In the end, his omnipotent undergarments brought him a little closer to his maker.

The next day, with underpants freshly folded, I suited up and headed out first thing in the morning for a full day of shameless debauchery. First thing on the agenda was to get some liquor in me, so I headed into town with a couple of friends to hit up a bar. My luck was sour right off the bat, as the bar we picked gouged me on mediocre beer and put a serious dent in my deviance budget.

Next, I hopped on the subway in Boston, trying to cheat the system by using an illegally acquired discount T pass. Once again I was foiled, as a pair of undercover Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority officers grabbed me on my way in and cited me for fare evasion. Did the underpants know? Were they working against me somehow?

Undeterred, I continued my trek and headed to Chinatown to meet up with a girl who staunchly claimed that her middle name was, in fact, "danger." My omnipotent shorts must have known my intentions with this young lady were impious, because my luck stayed bad. Lunch was a series of lousy dishes and hot oil burns, but I wasn't about to lose faith just yet.

Just as I was getting the feeling that God's judgment had me by the balls, my underpants gambit finally paid dividends. Back at "Ms. Danger's" apartment I was finally able to see the light: The briefs' most important feature is that they're hilarious. I wouldn't usually be happy if a woman laughed when I took off my pants, but in this case I made an exception. The holy yet comical shorts ended up on the floor for a good long while.

By the time I got home, the verdict was in: Jesus wanted me to be good. Sporting an image of the Son of God while trying to get laid falls into the category of desecration of the Host, and I seem to have paid for my transgression. However, there is something to be said for making a statement, expressing how you feel no matter who sees it. And to those who are offended, remember: God gave us the free will to choose. Don't get your undies in a bundle.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher1@student.umass.edu.

Musical group Mallory knows how to do it all themselves

By Leigh Greaney
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on April 17, 2010)

Mallory and its Do-It-Yourself subculture rips the screws out of the capitalist machine. Since the 1970s, DIY culture has pitted itself against the materialist dogma. In a world where music is all about advertising and big labels, Niko Para, Justin Fallon and Andre Ricard of Mallory say 'no thanks – we can handle this ourselves.'

Swimming against the current of mainstream music may be difficult at times, but for Mallory, it's nothing short of fulfilling. Because of their modern incarnation to DIY musical approach, it's also difficult to whittle their sound down to a specific genre. It's a moral dilemma to narrow their sound down, however, the band agrees that they fit into certain genres, including blue grass, folk, DIY and punk. Older people have told the band that they sound like "really aggressive folk." However, Ricard explains that although they fit into these "genres," it doesn't really describe what they sound like.

What they do sound like may not fit a recipe, but it sure tastes good.

With all members playing all instruments – ranging from banjo, guitar, bass, drums and recordings (with the exception of Para who is the only one who plays accordion), you can hear the oneness within their music.

That same oneness heard in the final product is put into the creation of every song. The band describes their song writing process as a type of synthesis.

"Whenever we get together to write songs, we end up bringing different songs we've written on our own to the table. Although each song as a primary song writer, it gets changed by the other people's opinions. They're all collective efforts."

Having just written a song before their appearance on WMUA's Sweet Baby Lou and the Reverends of Funk from midnight to 2 a.m., Fallon explains that his song "Someone Else's Eden" wasn't very good until he brought it to his band mates. "They just feel incomplete until we sit down together and figure them out," he said. Played live for the first time on air in WMUA's studio, "Someone Else's Eden" is a song about displacement. However, the song itself seems to know exactly where it belongs with its escalating spirit and harmonic chanting.

For Mallory, dealing with issues of displacement seems to take a backseat to issues of dislocation. With Ricard living in Providence, RI, the band's biggest obstacle is being in the same place at the same time. No matter what though, they figure it out – keeping their DIY vibe strong. "Mostly I just come back through various means. Niko has had to come to pick me up before or I've had to hitchhike. We just make it happen," Ricard said.

Now on a break from school,

See MALLORY on page 8

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Do-It-Yourself band Mallory is the epitome of what the culture implies as the members took their act from Boston to New York for their first tour, lugging their guitars on bikes.

(MCT)

Beer commercials seemed the most prevalent of those shown during the 2010 Super Bowl, such as this house made out of Budweiser cans. Very few of this year's ads delivered in humor or originality.

The Super Bowl commercial rundown: good, bad and ugly

By Garth Brody
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on February 8, 2010)

The Super Bowl has come and gone, but we can still remember our favorite moments. If you're looking for play-by-play highlights, go check out the sports section. Instead, let's take a look at the real highlights of Sunday night – those thirty-second filmic masterpieces, the pinnacles of consumer culture, the few, the proud, the Super Bowl ads.

GoDaddy.com continued its proud tradition of putting Danica Patrick – and maybe one or two other full-breasted women – in a tank-top, and then suggesting that she might not have the tank-top if you went to their website. Oh, and they sell domain names, by the way.

FloTV's Will.i.am remix of "My Generation" was almost as depressing as The Who's the half-time show performance. Why oh why did his vocals have to replace Daltrey's after the first line?

E*Trade's baby-financier-on-a-webcam campaign stopped being funny a while ago. It officially became infuriating Sunday night when the baby's girlfriend asked if "that milk-a-holic Lindsay" was over, as the aforementioned "milk-a-holic" floated into frame, somehow several feet closer to the webcam than the finance baby at the keyboard and exclaimed "MILK-A-WHAT?" And then America cringed.

Michelob Ultra, we are to understand, is a beer for Lance Armstrong and other hyper-determined übermensch world-beaters whose life's soundtrack is "Song 2" by Blur. We would have been more psyched about this, but then we remembered that it is a beer, and Lance Armstrong probably doesn't drink beer.

Coca-Cola tried to go with a guaranteed connection with the viewer by using "The Simpsons." A word of advice, Coke – don't use Mr. Burns and Milhouse as your main Springfieldites if you want to warm our hearts.

Intel capitalized on Pixar's popularization of sad robots, stuffing Wall-E's adorable pathos into Eve's rounded white chassis. The result was Jeffrey. We might remember him for about a week and a half.

Dr. Pepper rented KISS (and their diminutive doppelgangers) for a particularly uninspired joke, extended to its utmost: "a little kiss of cherry flavor!" One wonders how much money was spent on the realization of that pun.

Teleflora.com's marketing team decided that the most effective way to sell us flowers was to show us a wilted bouquet yelling in a grimy Brooklyn accent about cigarettes and dead people. Firings are in order.

Motorola gave us Megan Fox in a bathtub. The rest was an advertisement for either the Internet or the destructive power of the libido. Anyways, Megan Fox in a bathtub – thanks Motorola.

HomeAway.com had Chevy Chase reviving his Clark Griswold character for a shoddy imitation of the Vacation series, or at least a trailer for the

See SUPERBOWL on page 9

Animated films get Oscar nod

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on February 25, 2010.)

Every year, the Oscars come and go. You root for the one or two films with artistic integrity that have been nominated, and you laugh as "Thank You" speeches are abruptly cut short. And yet, one category always seems to pass by unnoticed: the short films.

Fortunately, Amherst Cinema is screening both the Live-Action and Animated short films nominated for Oscars before the ceremony airs on March 7. For your benefit, here is a guide to the Animated Short Film Oscar nominees for 2010.

1. "French Roast" (Dir: Fabrice O. Joubert): This quirky and warm morality tale is told predominately without dialogue. It begins with the story of an upper-class cafe patron overly concerned with saving face when he misplaces his wallet.

2. "Granny O' Grimm's Sleeping Beauty" (Dir: Nicky Phelan and Darragh O'Connell): Bringing to mind such stories as "The Stinky Cheese Man," this all-too-brief cartoon features a cantankerous grandmother and her take on the classic story of Sleeping Beauty. Although slim, the laughs this film inspire are something to contend with. And with an effective combination of hand-drawn animation and CGI, this may in fact end up being the dark horse of the category.

3. "The Lady and the Reaper" (Dir: Javier Recio Gracia): This Spanish parable of mortality feels more slight than it probably should. "Reaper" is the story of an elderly woman ready to pass into the next life; it comes to a head when the specter of death finds himself at odds with a doctor with a Matthew Shepard-esque degree of obligation to patients. Although it solicits a chuckle or two from the audience, "The Lady and the Reaper" feels like little more than a Saturday morning cartoon when it reaches its close.

4. "A Matter of Loaf and Death" (Dir: Nick Park): It's not surprising that the new Wallace & Gromit is the most deserving of these nominees for the Oscar. What is surprising is that, with his latest effort, Nick Park has surpassed himself artistically on almost every level. He has gone past simply paying homage to Alfred Hitchcock with his dog and inventor main characters. Instead, he has created something almost on the same level of quality. It is difficult not to be won over by this world of high-flying action and joy.

5. "Logorama" (Dir: Nicolas Schmerkin): Although it's easy to see what's laudable about this film, it is nothing that this reviewer would like to stand behind. What we have here is an empty satire, which populates Los Angeles entirely with logos and mascots from recognizable companies. From there, director Nicolas Schmerkin proceeds to manipulate these images into a typical Los Angeles-based action film, complete with an earthquake at the close which knocks the city into the ocean. The conclusion of the film seems to be about consumerism and its contributions to the recession. But as a whole, it does little but leave a sour taste in one's mouth.

Rounding out the program were three shorts which were described as "highly commendable" by the Cinema's staff. The most recognizable of these was Pixar's "Partly Cloudy," which you may remember as the introduction to last year's "Up," which is currently nominated for best picture. The other two, "Runaway" and "The Kinematograph," were divergent, covering the realms of energetic slapstick-based British comedy and powerful, would-be naturalistic drama, respectively.

It is surprising that none of these films were nominated, especially with the clout that Pixar has been holding around Oscar-time every year. One would think that, with their at least partial manipulation of form for their own purposes — which is something that much of the nominees for this year lack — they would practically be shoo-ins for the Academy.

But that is neither here nor there. If you feel like an incredibly entertaining night of animation, this is a program you shouldn't miss. You will laugh, be moved and maybe even be won over by the bitter satire of "Logorama." But be forewarned: If you are planning on bringing your children to this program, be sure to leave before the last short ("Logorama") begins. It contains vulgar language and graphic comic violence. You will probably be better off, as it is without question the weakest of the nominees.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

The latest installment of the short film series Wallace and Gromit, "A Matter of Loaf and Death," was just one of several Oscar-nominated animated film shorts screened at Amherst Cinema this past April.

D-I-Y band rocks

MALLORY from page 7

Ricard has united with the rest of the band to record their new album, "Strange Homes." They consider this album to be the best in terms of representing the culture they hail from. They also consider it to be their most cohesive, in terms of exemplifying the values they strive to live out.

Those values — the values of DIY culture — are vital to the band's composition. Without throwing around a lofty list of adjectives to describe exactly what that means, they explained it as "common values."

"It's all about doing it yourself and everything that applies to that. It's about not participating in capitalism and consumerism," Ricard said.

One of the ways the band likes to practice what they preach is embodied in their touring process. The first tour they ever went on was a bike tour. This is not to be confused with a motorcycle tour. "We're talking two wheels and two pedals," said Ricard. "We're also talking from Boston to New York City." Touring with Grex, a fellow DYI inspired band, Mallory biked 340 some-odd miles from city to city, averaging 60 to 70 miles a day with their instruments strapped on tight.

The very thought of that kind of hardcore do-it-yourselfing is enough to make the typical load-up-the-van-type musicians cringe. The sheer thought of playing a show after that kind of marathon seems ludicrous, but Mallory disagrees.

"You have the most energy for shows after biking. You're so amped. It's not draining at all," Ricard said. However, they agree that mornings can be draining when there's another 60 miles of road staring them in the face.

They love it, though. So much so that they're planning on another bike tour this summer. "We're going to give ourselves a break this time," they admitted. "We're going to average 30 to 40 miles a day instead of 60-70 and space out our shows to every couple of days." This one will be even longer — taking them all the way to Washington, D.C.

Mallory also plans on embarking on two other tours this summer, along with the bike tour. One will be a northern tour and the other will be a cross country tour that will span from Texas, California, Arizona, through Louisiana and then up the East Coast.

This is all made possible because of the same culture that the music is part of. Because Mallory doesn't advertise or use any form of capitalistic endorsement, their culture makes their touring possible. Fallon explains that there's a "cool little circuit of musicians that's developed that all get each other shows and help each other out and go on tours."

"The kind of music we play is specific enough and often backed by a lifestyle. I'd even go so far as to call it a culture. It's small enough of a community, yet still international. Basically, if you're within the culture and within this community and act as an active participant, then we can basically just go to the West Coast and be like: We do this," said Ricard.

With pipe dreams of a European tour, Mallory goes to where the culture takes them. Most importantly, it's taken them to a new level within the realm of music. It's becomes more about community and networking then about only music. It's a collective — it transcends sound.

"We don't want it to just be music and just be albums. It's important to us that it's about what we're doing and when we go play somewhere. It's about what the people are doing there. We want to help out and be part of that community. We want to include as much art and as much poetry and all the other things we do as well. It's more of a project and portfolio," they said.

To be part of this movement, community and experience, do it yourself and contact the band. They'll play basically anywhere — an aspect they consider to be one of their most important. To get in contact with them, check out their web site malloryband.org.

Leigh Greaney can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Get the Most
CASH FOR BOOKS

Buyback Hours

Textbook Annex
Monday – Friday
April 26 – 30
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Saturday, May 8
11:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.

Campus Center Concourse
Monday – Wednesday
May 3 – 5
9:00 a.m. – 4:00 p.m.
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, April 13
9:00 a.m. – 2:00 p.m.

Southwest/Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday
May 6 – 7
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Monday – Wednesday
May 10 – 12
10:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.
Thursday, May 13
10:00 a.m. – 1:00 p.m.

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
Powered by efollett.com

Find us on Facebook
facebook.com/UMassUniversityStore

A Scotch-lovers' guide to drinking whisky

By Matthew Harrison
Collegian Staff

(Editors Note: This story was originally published on April 4, 2010)

Scotch is defined as any whisky made in Scotland. By law, it must be made from barley, distilled in Scotland, contain less than 94.8 percent alcohol, aged in oak barrels in Scotland for a minimum of three years and bottled at no less than 40 percent alcohol by volume.

It should be noted that Scotch is spelled "whisky" and not "whiskey." The "e" was added in the 1800s when American distillers felt that their whiskey was superior to all of the Scotch whiskies flooding the market, so they wanted a way to differentiate their product from the rest.

Scotch comes in a variety of styles: Single malt, which is made from a single distillery; single grain, which is made from grain other than barley at a single distillery; blended or vatted malt, which is a blend of single malts from multiple distilleries, blended together to create a uniform taste that doesn't change from bottle to bottle; and blended Scotch, which contains a mix of single malts and single grain whiskies. Scotch is also often "peated," which results in a smoky taste since the barley is tried over fires containing peat. This is different than American whiskey, which gets its smoky taste from the charred oak barrels used in aging.

There are several Scotch-producing regions of Scotland, and each area manufactures a very different style of whisky: The Lowlands, which only has three distilleries in operation; the Speyside, which is Scotland's largest whisky-producing region and is famous for such big names as Glenfiddich and Glenlivet; the Highlands, which includes the subregion of the Islands; and Islay, which is an island region known for producing peaty, salty Scotches.

While most people are introduced to whisky (or whiskey) through blends (think Jack Daniels or Johnnie Walker), I'm primarily interested in single-malt whiskies since they share a lot of similarities to wine: Each bottle can have a very different taste, and bottles made at the same distillery but in different years can be completely different from one another. Be warned, however, since the taste of single malt can be much more intense than a blend.

In today's review, I'll be tasting the Balvenie DoubleWood single malt from the Speyside region of Scotland. The DoubleWood is unique because it is aged in two stages, and in two different casks. It is first aged in American oak bourbon barrels (barrels previously containing bourbon or other whiskey from the United States) for 11 years, which gives the whisky a very vanilla-like flavor, and then in Sherry barrels (casks previously containing Sherry) for just a few months, giving the whisky a very sweet, fruity characteristic.

I love the bottle and package design of this Scotch. It looks like something that could be found in a gin joint in the Old West. The whisky is a gorgeous honey color, and it looks to be medium-bodied. The nose of the whisky is ripe with vanilla, which comes from the American bourbon barrels. I also detect sweet honey or molasses, and some raisins spiced with cinnamon and allspice. This is not a peated Scotch, so there's no smokiness to it, and the alcohol isn't harsh whatsoever. Vanilla is the dominating flavor, and it's followed by beautifully sweet honey. The spiced raisins really come through in the taste, and the finish lasts a long time.

The DoubleWood is by far the smoothest and sweetest Scotch I've ever tasted; I give it a letter rating of A+ easily. At $45 a bottle, it's not something a college student like myself can afford often, but liquor stores often sell half bottles of Scotch at half the price of a full bottle. I encourage everyone to get out there and explore the flavorful world of whiskies whenever they can. Good whisky should not be mixed with soda or even ice, although certain Scotches benefit from a little bit of filtered water to bring out the flavor.

When you're finished tasting your whisky, always put it back in the box or cardboard tube it came in to protect it against light. Also, at 40 percent or more alcohol, always drink Scotch responsibly, and never drink and drive.

Until next time, cheers!

To see a video review of the Scotch talked about in this article, visit Dailycollegian.com or TheBottleReview.com.

Matthew Harrison can be reached at mharriso@student.umass.edu.

The Balvenie DoubleWood single-malt Scotch is rich with flavors of raisin, cinnamon, vanilla and honey, with a sweet and long-lasting taste, despite its almost 40 percent alcohol content.

Who needed the Superbowl with advertisements this dull?

SUPERBOWL from page 7

imitation. The clip in its entirety is apparently on the site, but the trailer is quite enough, thanks.

Snickers continued its campaign to make candy into a meal, using Betty White as a human metaphor for how bad at football you will be if you do not eat Snickers.

Vizio's representation of Internet on your TV — a bunch of robot arms dropping things like Tay Zonday and that "dramatic chipmunk" into a black pit — made the product a great deal more frightening than appealing.

Bridgestone's Mad Max (sort of) spoof assured us that in the future, we will value our tires over our supermodel wives. Prepare yourselves.

Taco Bell furthered Charles Barkley's tragic descent into cultural garbage by having him read a Seussian ode to their new value meal, inexplicably accompanied by a hip-hop beat and cherub cheerleaders.

Denny's gave us scary-looking chickens and a lot of blood-curdling screams. Breakfast, anyone?

The Census Bureau needs to be advertised apparently, so they threw together a bunch of comedic improvisers and had them act awkwardly, because kids think that awkward is funny these days. Do you trust the government yet?

Doritos seemed to go with the first three ideas that got tossed out at the marketing meeting: "Doritos in a Coffin!" "Dorito Samurai!" "Angry kid likes Doritos!" "Let's go home!" OK, the little kid slapping his mother's date was pretty funny, but still.

Dockers presented us with a simple choice – be a man and stand in front of dirty bricks in their beige slacks and a white T-shirt or march around an idyllic field with a bunch of other dudes in sweaters and sing heartily about your lack of pants. You can keep your khakis, Dockers.

Dodge wins the award for most insidiously effective in the nightlong trend of attacking your masculinity and suggesting their product as a means to defend it. In their ad for the Charger, we cut from one sad-looking man to the next, and the voiceover lists the compromises that he will make for his spouse ("I will carry your lip balm"). Finally, a slow zoom on the last man's eyes cuts to a zooming Dodge Charger, and he tells us "because I do this, I will drive the car I want to drive." This car, Dodge tells us, is "man's last stand."

Dove's William Tell Overture ad for their line of men's care products, following the life's journey of one man, put an interesting spin on the nightlong struggle to emasculate us. The message was ultimately the same, but given the traditionally feminine image of skin care products, the ad challenges men to be so comfortable in their masculinity that they can abide such a feminized brand.

However, not every advertisement was physically sickening. Here's a rundown of the ones that gave us a chance to brush the vomit from our teeth:

Emerald Nuts and Pop Secret teamed up for the most entertaining visual hilarity – a crowd of very excited people watch a very excited dolphin tamer throw nuts and popcorn at very excited human dolphins – albeit with the biggest let-down of a punch-line ("Awesome + Awesome = Awesomer"). The shot with the dolphin man flipping through the fire ring made it all worthwhile.

Audi's eco-fascist "Green Police" ad made pretty clever use of a pretty Cheap Trick, but was perhaps a bit overenamored of its premise. Thirty seconds too long, Audi.

Google gave us a Parisian love story in search keys, from "did you mean: cafés near the Louvre" to "how to assemble a crib." It served more as a reminder of the Internet's usefulness than anything else, but it was still pretty neat.

CareerBuilder.com's underwear-only "casual Fridays" ad may have gone a little overboard with the pudgy office worker skin, but it definitely got the point across.

truTV's "Punxsutawney Polamalu" struck a pleasantly absurd chord with its tiny Pittsburgh Steeler and its jowly old town crier announcing "six more weeks of football." Here the ad's message was skillfully unscathed by its silly premise.

Cars.com's Timothy Richman was a more tasteful and better thought-out version of that Dos Equis "Most Interesting Man in the World" guy, who is basically a reworked series of Chuck Norris jokes. Still, the advertisement works mostly because he births a Bengal tiger.

Volkswagen tried to convince us that the "punch buggy" game should be played with every one of their cars. It shouldn't, but Stevie Wonder punching Tracy Morgan was a real treat.

Boost Mobile's parody of the "Super Bowl Shuffle" may have been based entirely on a pretty tired premise, but the main dude riding up on a power chair before advising the viewer to spend their savings on "a decent spray tan" was enough to elicit an honest laugh.

Doritos gave us three duds, but the one with the anti-bark collar switcheroo (mean man, clever dog, Doritos as fulcrum) provided some deliciously selfish comedy.

Coca-Cola's sleepwalking safari ad was undeniably fun to watch. It was a classy commercial fantasy with all the magic and earnestness (but secretly disingenuousness) we love about Coke's ads.

Budweiser went about four for six this year, providing their usual high caliber of big-budget, bite-size hilarity. One ad constructed a house out of Bud Light cans. The rock music and the laughter made the product fun, but the resultant chaos and destruction as the house was quickly disassembled by partygoers revealed the ad's real humor. Another one for Bud Light basically took the old "wazzaaaaaaa" formula and revamped it with auto-tune. The sense of bewilderment from the characters without the vocal effect completely sold the thin-but-goofy premise. Also there was T-Pain. A Bud Light parody of "Lost" may have been a bit out of place on CBS, but it felt just right for us. Fake Kate finds the downed plane's radio equipment, but some guy finds the plane's Bud Light. The guy wins, and raucous partying ensues. Bud Light's raucous partying theme continued with a group of astronomers celebrating the end of the world. When the asteroid turns out to be a space pebble, the partying intensifies. Life goes on, more beer, more partying! Yay!

Likely the night's best ad involved a Budweiser truck and the concerted effort of a town populated by (we can only assume) alcoholics. The image of a fully loaded beer truck rolling slowly over a human bridge was only topped by the choice of the appropriately rousing "Stripes" theme music.

But the real winner Sunday night wasn't Budweiser, or even that other team – the one that didn't have Peyton Manning. The crown, or trophy, or whatever, goes to those scrappy local advertisers lucky enough to snag a spot on the biggest ad night of the year.

Car dealers, law offices, pest control – you are the reason television is worth watching, and we salute you.

The rest of you mega-corporations need to find a shallower well to drop your millions into. We hear the Internet is pretty popular with the kids these days.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

You stay artsy, UMass Amherst
- Collegian Arts Desk

Correction

On May 3, 2010, the Arts Section of The Daily Collegian printed an article about Jason Myles Goss. In the article, his new album was incorrectly referred to as "A Plea for Demand" while the correct name of the album is "A Plea for Dreamland." We apologize for this error.

- Daily Collegian Arts Staff

WANNA HOOK-UP?
FREE High Speed Internet and Expanded Cable
1, 2, 3, and 4 bedroom apartment homes
RESERVE YOUR APARTMENT TODAY!!!
SUGARLOAF ESTATES APARTMENT HOMES
28 River Road Sunderland
866-301-1445
www.sugarloafestates.com
ASPEN CHASE & ALPINE COMMONS
133 Belchertown Road Rt 9 Amherst
866-301-1445
www.aspenchaseapartments.com
www.alpinecommons.com
Heat, Water, Hot Water, Cable, Internet
Electricity in Select Units
On the Bus Route Salt Water Swimming Pool Fitness Center Pet Friendly
FLEXIBLE LEASE TERMS
$$ MENTION THIS AD AND SAVE ON YOUR MOVE IN COSTS $$

IMPORTANT NOTICE
REGARDING YOUR STUDENT REFUND

THE STUDENT REFUND PROCESS IS CHANGING!

The Bursar's Office is Going Green Again! Beginning in MAY 2010, student refunds will ONLY be automatically distributed to students who are enrolled in the University's Excess Express (direct deposit) service. This is the final phase of our office's paper-less processing initiative to provide faster service, sustainable business practices, and elimination of long lines at the office!

Students who are eligible for a refund (i.e., have a credit balance on their student account that is refundable) will automatically receive a student refund ONLY if they have signed up for Excess Express (direct deposit). Students who do not have an active Excess Express enrollment will have their balances remain as a credit toward subsequent charges.

Students who need a paper check will need to complete a request form for each refund available on their account. This form and accompanying instructions will be available on the Bursar's website.

Sign up today for Excess Express through your SPIRE access to expedite your future student refunds. More information on Excess Express can be found on the Bursar's website at www.umass.edu/bursar/.

High goals helped QB reach goals at UMass

HAVENS from page 14

Don Brown, who had posted a 43-19 record in his five years with the Minutemen, had accepted the defensive coordinator's job at the University of Maryland. Replacing him was former offensive coordinator Kevin Morris, who was now in search of another candidate for the starting quarterback job.

The candidate in Morris's search not only had to show the proper physical attributes, but also academic prowess as well in order for the coach to take a longer look at a player. Even though the prospects were junior college players, Morris knew that many players have just as much, if not more, talent than those in FCS.

While in California, Morris has been recruiting in the junior college system and had found some potential suitors.

Throughout his search, Morris had come across a handful of players who had fit model of his quarterback. One that had really caught his eye, though, was a 6-foot-4 junior from Diablo Valley College: Kyle Havens.

From passed-up to prospect

After graduating high school with no major football scholarship offers, Havens turned to Diablo Valley to continue his football career.

"I always felt that I was good enough and that I could keep playing. I loved the game of football and just wanted to continue playing," Havens said.

By getting a chance at the junior college level, Havens had set his goals high, trying to get himself into the best level of play possible. Such thinking, though, is how Havens thinks one should act when approaching the game.

"You shouldn't play the game if you don't aim for the best," Havens said.

Once he got on the field for the Vikings, Havens quickly emerged as a star, averaging over 300 yards per game, making the NorCal All-Conference team and was named the 18th best junior college quarterback by Scout.com. In addition to his on-the-field accolades, Havens was also named a Gridwire Academic All-American for his work in the classroom.

Now Havens, once the unwanted quarterback, was a prized prospect. He now had the choice of several Division 1 schools, including Middle Tennessee State University, Towson University, Hofstra University, FBS school Marshall University and UMass.

While looking at his potential schools, Havens saw a good situation at UMass. The starting quarterback had just graduated and there was a wide-open position battle heading into the season.

"It was just a good situation here with Liam leaving," Havens said. "It obviously opened a huge void in the offense, and it was somewhere where I thought I could come in and compete for the starting job. I wanted to come and play at the highest level of football.

"I knew that I was going to have to compete for a job. There were already a lot of good quarterbacks here already," he added. "I thought it was somewhere I could come in, the competition would make me better as a quarterback, and I also thought I could come over and take over this offense."

Havens visited the Amherst campus during winter break at UMass, coming from sunny California to the cold, largely empty campus. Despite the temperatures, he still received a warm welcome by the team with redshirt wideout Julian Talley hosting him and several other seniors greeting him during his visit.

Shortly after, Havens chose to transfer to UMass, a decision that turned to be a solid fit for Havens.

"I liked the college atmosphere the town. Everything just seemed like a place that I would enjoy," Havens said. "When I came out here in the spring, it turned out to be exactly what I thought it would be."

More importantly, though, Havens had gone all the way from no scholarships to a Division I-AA school, no small jump for the quarterback.

"I'm where I wanted to be. UMass has met all my expectations and more ... I'm playing at the highest level of football right now."

Upon joining the team, Havens had decided to keep the same number he wore while playing at Diablo Valley: No. 12, the same number worn by Coen.

"A lot of people have been asking about that, but I don't really think about it," Havens said about the attention drawn by his jersey number. "Liam's a great kid, but it's not that big of a deal.

"It's just a number."

But that didn't stop his teammates from ragging on the new transfer.

"Sometimes, some of the guys would come over and say 'you better not wear that number if you're not going to do what he did,'" Haven said. "But they were never serious about it."

Although Havens wouldn't be expected to replicate what Coen had done during his career at UMass, he would have to impress the coaching staff if he was to break the starting lineup. To do so, Haven's had to quickly adapt to a new level of play.

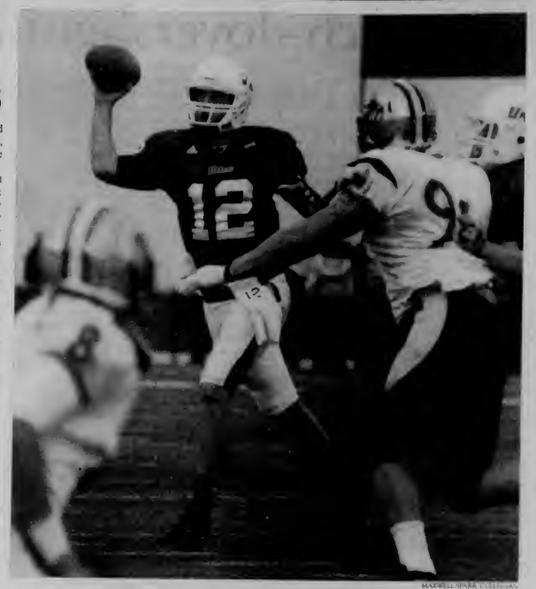
"It's faster, all-around faster," Haven's said about the transition to FCS. "There were definitely some guys at the junior college level who could play some big time football and were there for some reason or another. But it's definitely faster, more complex, but it's nothing that I didn't think I couldn't handle and nothing that I can't handle."

"Football's football"

It was not until the week before the Minutemen were to take the field against a member of the vaunted Big 12 conference that Morris named his starter for the season.

Speculation had been building for all of spring and fall practice. Woodward had been consistent and never disappointed. Meanwhile, Hawkins had emerged as the dark horse candidate for the spot. However, all signs pointed to Havens, who had improved dramatically in practice, growing leaps and bounds within the offense.

Earlier in camp, Havens had not yet learned to trust his teammates. Fresh from junior college, Havens was now surrounded by scholarship athletes in a strong program. But now, Havens had stopped trying to make plays alone and had learned to manage the offense.



Before the news had broken over the starter, Morris had called all of his quarterbacks into his office for individual meetings and informed them of the decision. And then, nothing.

"It was never really announced," Havens said of Morris' decision. "It wasn't really a big deal. The team's going to rally around whoever was named the starter."

While the starting position will place the spotlight squarely on Havens from here on out, he now blends in with the rest of the team more than ever before. Long before he took the opening snap of the season, Havens had become part of the team.

So rather than revel in his new position, Havens is taking it all in stride – the new school, the new position, even the Big 12. Because on the field, there's just the game. "The game itself isn't much different," Havens says. "It's kind of like I expected it to be. Football is football no matter where you're playing it."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Maxwell Sparr Collegian

Quarterback Kyle Havens attempts to make a throw during the homecoming game against New Hampshire. Havens transferred from junior college and replaced Liam Coen as this year's starter.

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Sowry's practice speech pays off, lift Minutewomen to win

F HOCKEY from page 14

of McGraw and Bourazeris sent in the rebound to take a 3-2 lead that the Minutewomen never relinquished.

Heineman looks to be a consistent starter for Sowry and her advanced perspective on the game can only help her.

"We need to control the tempo of the game better," Heineman said. "There were times where we sped the game up when we shouldn't have and we need to control the game more."

When UMass tries too hard to rush the goal, it gives the opposition opportunities to take the game over – like the Terriers' Nikki Lloyd did on Friday. The Minutewomen had to rely on scores from Bourazeris and defender Makaela Potts and with the UMass defense acting primarily on offense, Lloyd found multiple holes in the scoring circle and registered a hat trick on the day.

The loss was particularly devastating because when the two teams played in 7-on-7 overtime rules, Potts tried to chase down Lloyd on a breakaway and inadvertently tripped her, sending Lloyd hard to the turf. Potts subsequently received a yellow card and exited the game. While UMass played shorthanded, Lloyd regrouped from the fall and returned to the game to score the golden goal.

After the loss, Sowry told her players in practice that preparation meets opportunity. The Minutewomen put her words into action and capitalized on the few opportunities given to them by the Hawkeyes to earn the win, and will continue to use these words when UMass goes on the road to take on Albany and James Madison next weekend.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Summer @ Emmanuel College
Take courses on campus or online, and discover all that Boston has to offer.
Learn more about summer undergraduate and graduate courses at www.emmanuel.edu/summer.
Emmanuel College | 400 The Fenway | Boston, Massachusetts 02115
www.emmanuel.edu

SUMMER at Southern
Students from other colleges welcome – earn transfer credits!
600+ classes • undergraduate and graduate • affordable and convenient
Pick up some credits before you head to the beach...
Lighten your course load or get a jump on graduation.
Students from other colleges and universities are welcome!
Summer study that's affordable...
Make it convenient - live on campus for Summer Session.
A great time for graduate study, too.
REGISTER ONLINE www.SouthernCT.edu/summer
Summer Session A June 1 – July 2, 2010
Summer Session B July 6 – August 6, 2010
Summer Session C August 9 – 20, 2010
Southern Connecticut State University
888-500-SCSU • 203-392-SCSU

Ortiz 3rd period goal puts UMass over BU

HOCKEY from page 14

power play but had shot after shot deflected by Millan.

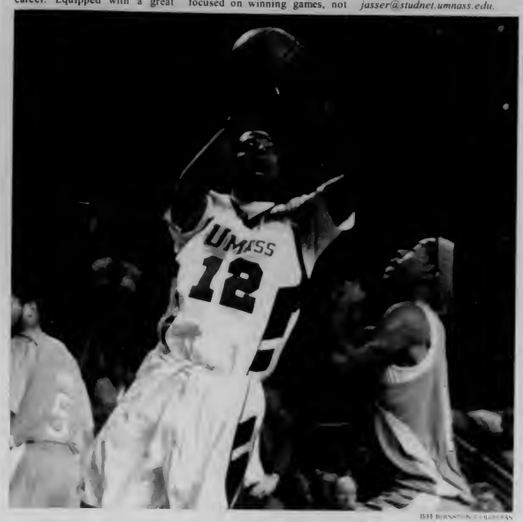
The Minutemen tallied a goal by Ortiz off a pass from Danny Hobbs in the first two minutes of the third period to take a 3-2 lead. Unwilling to give up, the Terriers outshot UMass 16-4 for the frame, but were unable to send the game to overtime. Dainton recorded 39 saves in goal, tying a career-high from a win over Boston College in November of last season.

Along with Dainton, Ortiz had one of his better games for his career. Equipped with a great deal of skill, Ortiz hasn't reached the high expectations that were placed on him as a freshman. However, as a senior, Ortiz has received more playing time in key situations from Cahoon and has shed the assumed role of being a one dimensional player.

"We've been coaching him for three years so he knows exactly what to do, when to do it. It's just a question of executing it and he's really determined to do that," Cahoon said. "He's earned the right to get that type of ice time."

As far as defeating the defending national champions, Cahoon was adamant in saying that it's a new season and the team is focused on winning games, not who they're beating.

"It's a nice start, but the game was all about the two points. It's not about the defending national champs and it's not about where we finished last year," he said. "It's October 2009, and we need to start our season and those points are valuable. We're going to have to cross swords with that team again in Boston in their rink and I'm sure that will change how that game will be played a little bit."



The Minutemen return to action on Friday when they host Maine in search of their second Hockey East win of the season.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@studnet.umass.edu.

Maxwell Sparr Collegian

Forward Casey Wellman takes a shot against Boston University during the Minutemen's upset over Boston University. Senior Will Ortiz scored the deciding goal in the win.

Bill Burnett Collegian

Guard Anthony Gurley looks for a shot against Rhode Island during UMass' buzzer-beater win on March 8. The Minutemen eventually advanced to the A-10 Quarterfinals, where they lost to Richmond.

Minutemen overcome 9-point hole vs. URI have clinched a spot in the tournament if La Salle beat Saint Joseph's – they certainly entered the game with that mentality.

M. HOOP from page 14

"This game was do-or-die, we could either win or go home," Harris said.

During the contest, the out-of-town scores were never announced so UMass could focus on the only game they could control that would help them reach the playoffs: its own.

The plan worked, as the Minutemen overcame a nine-point deficit with 11 minutes, 38 seconds left in the game. Over the next 5:40, it would be all UMass as it would go on a 12-1 run to take its first lead, 52-50, since the second minute of the game.

The Rams would go back on top by three a minute later, but Harris would score 10 of his 17 second-half points in the final five minutes of the game – including the Minutemen's final six points of the game – to give his team the lift it needed.

With UMass trailing 57-55, Harris stood at the line for two free throws. The guard missed them both, but instead of giving the Rams an opportunity to make it a two-possession game, Harris fought through the paint to grab the offensive rebound and lay it in to tie the game.

The senior finished the night with a game-high 28 points on 10-of-21 shooting and also grabbed seven rebounds.

"I'm ecstatic that the team played the way they did for Ricky and that Ricky was able to play the way he did for the team and for the fans," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "I don't think you could ask for a better ending for the way Ricky has been as a player, a person and an ambassador for the program."

The Minutemen were also led by freshman Javorn Farrell who added 12 points in 33 minutes, and Sean Carter who had seven points and seven rebounds of his own.

UMass struck first in the contest with a jumper by Farrell from the free-throw line and led 4-2 a minute later, but the Rams took over quickly. Five minutes into the game they held a six-point lead and extended it to nine just over halfway through the half, but never extended the lead to double digits – always keeping UMass within striking distance.

Marquis Jones led URI's scoring with 15 points and six assists, and Lamonte Ulmer added a double-double (11 points, 10 rebounds) as five Rams players finished in double-figure scoring.

The win gave UMass the No. 11 seed in the upcoming A-10 tournament, and with Dayton's loss to Saint Louis Saturday evening, the Minutemen will face sixth-seeded Charlotte this Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the opening round. The Rams took the No 5 seed and will host No. 12 St. Joe's.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Ducasse projected to be 2nd round pick during NFL Draft

DUCASSE from page 14

Minutemen currently in the NFL (Jeremy Cain, Matt Lawrence and James Ihedigbo), but none had the buzz around them that Ducasse has now.

The last UMass player drafted by an NFL team was Khari Samuel, who was taken in the fifth round by the Chicago Bears in 1999, and it's been over 40 years since a Minuteman was a first round selection.

If Ducasse made the impression he was hoping to have, he could be the one to break that streak.

He received solid reviews from NFL scouts and is expected to go as high as the late first round or early second round of this year's draft.

"When I was in the Senior Bowl, I felt good, I felt strong and I felt in shape," Ducasse said. "I just did pretty much what I was supposed to do , go to practice, be physical and just doing what I had to do every game."

In the past several weeks, he has been listening to some of the criticism he received during the Senior Bowl and working on those skills while preparing for the NFL Combine at the TEST Sports Club in New Jersey. The combine will begin tomorrow at Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis, Ind. and will go until March 2.

As much as Ducasse has done to impress scouts, he said he still faces doubts about how effective he can be in the NFL when he didn't go to a Bowl Championship Series school. Another obstacle he faces is English not being his first language.

While he understands enough to be in the huddle without a translator, he still speaks with a heavy accent, which will be a challenge during the Combine interviews.

Despite the scrutiny that comes with being a draft prospect, Ducasse feels that he will put many of the questions he faces to rest.

"I don't think I'm at a disadvantage," Ducasse said about being from a Division I-AA school. "It doesn't matter if you're from a small school or big school, you still have to earn your respect, because everyone's looking down on you."

Other NFL draft prospects have not taken him lightly.

"Coming from a small school, I feel like everyone shows that much more respect because there's not many small school players who get drafted," Ducasse said.

While Ducasse continues to work on his skills, he hasn't forgotten about what happened recent back home.

After he finished his week at the Senior Bowl, Ducasse put up his signed jerseys used during practice and the game as well as autographed cards, with The proceedsogoing towards relief efforts in Haiti. Although he knows that the wealth that is part of being an NFL player and will be his soon, he said he sees football as much of a philanthropic tool as it is a profession.

Ducasse's agent, Joe Linta, has been helping him with coordinating the charity and putting his status as one of the nation's top collegiate offensive linemen to use.

"[Football] is just my ability, but [Haiti] is the place I was born and raised, so I just feel like if I wasn't playing football and didn't have those skills, I still would want to do stuff like that, but I think it's easier to get more people involved," Ducasse said.

Rather than using his first paycheck to buy a big house or a fancy car, Ducasse wants to donate some of the money that he'll earn as an NFL player to Haiti and help his family.

He also wants to use his influence to encourage others to follow his generosity, because as much as he is a football player, he is someone who cares about the well-being of others first.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Courtesy UMass Sports Publications

Offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse readies himself for a snap during practice. He trained for the NFL Draft at the TEST Sports Club in New Jersey while preparing for the Combine.

TaLK
TEACH ENGLISH & LEARN KOREA
Korean Government invites qualified undergraduate students to apply for the Korean government scholarship to teach and learn in Korea. Selected scholars will receive Korean government scholarships and teach English in after-school classes of Korean elementary schools while enjoying cultural experience programs during their leisure time.
■ ELIGIBILITY
• Be a citizen of a country where the national language is English
• Have completed two or more years of education at a university or graduated from a community college in the aforementioned countries
■ CONTRACT TERM: 6 months or 1 year (Starting in August 2010)
■ BENEFITS
• Salary : approx. 1,365 USD per month
• Round-trip airfare, Free furnished housing, etc
* More information on benefits & application documents on www.talk.go.kr
■ APPLICATION DEADLINE: June 10, 2010
■ CONTACT INFORMATION : Korean Consulate General in Boston
Tel: 617-641-2830, E-Mail: kcaboston@mofat.go.kr
(http://usa-boston.mofat.go.kr)

EPIK
English Program In Korea
Korean Government invites responsible, enthusiastic native English speakers to teach while sharing their knowledge and culture with students and teachers in Korea.
■ ELIGIBILITY
• Be a citizen of a country where English is the primary language.
• Hold a minimum of a Bachelor's degree from an accredited university
■ CONTRACT TERM : 1 year (Aug.26.2010 – Aug.25.2011)
■ BENEFITS
• Salary : approx. 1,640~2,450 USD per month
• Entrance/Exit Allowance(approx. 1,181 USD each),Free furnished housing, etc.
* More information on benefits and application documents on www.epik.go.kr
■ APPLICATION DEADLINE : June 15, 2010
■ CONTACT INFORMATION : Korean Consulate General in Boston
Tel: 617-641-2830, E-Mail: kcaboston@mofat.go.kr
(http://usa-boston.mofat.go.kr)

4th quarter rally leads UMass over UNH

Hernandez lifts Minutemen with TD, 166 yards rushing

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on October 19, 2009).

For most of the first half, the Massachusetts football team was simply hanging around against fourth-ranked New Hampshire. But with a 13-play, 87-yard scoring drive to take the lead in the closing minutes of the second quarter, the Minutemen proved that they were for real.

Down 17-13 midway through the fourth quarter, the No. 18 Minutemen proved that they were a match for the heavily-favored Wildcats. When Jonathan Hernandez dove from the four-yard line and struck the pylon at the end of a 42-yard run, the Minutemen showed that they could go the distance, completing the upset of UNH by a score of 23-17.

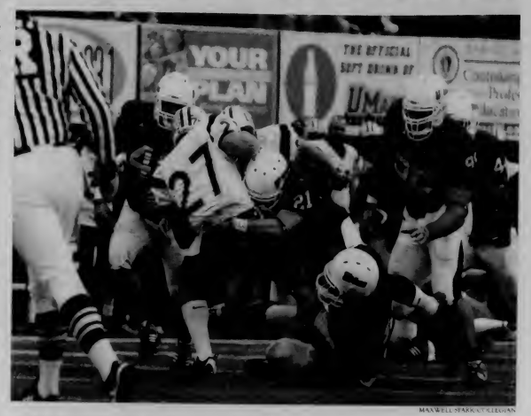
Hernandez rushed for 166 yards and a touchdown, winning the Bill Knight trophy for UMass-UNH game MVP in the process. Starting in place of Tony Nelson (two carries for four yards), who is still hampered by a hamstring problem, Hernandez put up another stellar performance in a spot start.

UMass	23
UNH	17

"Really impressed by Hernandez," UNH coach Sean McDonnell said after Saturday's game. "I saw him run earlier in the Stony Brook game. A low pad-level guy that's a good football player, played well out in the end."

The biggest surprise of the game, though, was the play of the UMass defense. After being shredded for 43 points a week ago against Delaware, the Minutemen (4-2, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Association) held the top ranked offense in the CAA to 17 points.

"It all started at practice this week. We had our best week of practice. We played as one," said defensive end Michael Hanson of the defense's performance.



After a lackluster first half, the offense for UNH (5-1, 2-1 CAA) woke up in the third quarter and began to look like the team that leads the CAA in scoring offense. The UMass defense, only a week after the drumming it received from Delaware, looked like the unit that shut down opponents during the first three games of the season.

Late in the third quarter, following a Kyle Havens interception at the UMass 40-yard line, the Minutemen held off a UNH attack that was finally starting to click and show aggressiveness. No play was more aggressive, though, than a double-reverse flea flicker trick play that was well-defended by UMass, almost intercepting the pass. The Minutemen eventually held the Wildcats to a field goal.

Following a Havens interception on the next drive, though, UNH would not be denied again. Toman took the Wildcat offense straight down the field on an eight-play, 56-yard drive, and capped it off with a six-yard pass to Scott Sicko, making it 17-10 with 12 minutes, 48 seconds remaining in the game. The completion marked the second connection in the endzone between Toman and Sicko.

UMass responded with a strong drive of its own. Havens bounced back from his prior errors and engineered a 13-play, 57-yard drive that ended in an Armando Cuko 36-yard field goal to make it 17-13.

The Minutemen still needed the ball back, though, and that's exactly what they got on the ensuing drive as UNH went three-and-out with a chance to put away the game. Pressure from the UMass front four kept Toman off-balance on the drive, preventing the UNH passer from breaking out of the pocket.

MAXWELL STARGUST/COLLEGIAN

UMass' defense played an important role in its homecoming win over New Hampshire on Oct. 18. The Minutewomen scored 10 points in the fourth quarter in their win over the Wildcats.

It didn't take long for UMass to respond. On the third play of the drive, Hernandez busted through the left side of the line and down the sideline for what would turn out to be the winning score.

"The hole was huge. I could've fit a car through that hole," Hernandez said of the decisive play.

UMass added another 41-yard field goal to make it 23-17, but with 1:26 on the clock, the Wildcats still had a chance.

The UNH offense drove down the field, converting on a fourth-and-nine in the process to get into the UMass redzone. Aided by a roughing the passer call on defensive end Anthony Monette, Toman took the Wildcats down to the UMass 13-yard line before spiking the ball to stop the clock with three seconds remaining in the game.

On the game's final play, Toman dropped back and fired into the endzone. The only receiver he found, though, was UMass defensive back Kumar Davis, who intercepted the pass, kneeled down and ended the game.

"Honestly, I was just thinking about my fundamentals. All week, they had just been telling us, 'fundamentals, fundamentals will get you through.'" Davis said of the thoughts running through his mind on the play. "So, I just went up and tried to play the ball, tried to make a play on it. It happened to come right into my hands."

The Wildcats drew first blood in the game when Toman hit tight end Scott Sicko over the middle and, with a defensive breakdown by the Minutemen, scampered 58 yards for the score. The UMass defense went for the pick on the play and paid the price as Sicko went almost untouched as he knifed through the center of the defense.

The early touchdown was the only score of the first quarter as both offenses failed to advance much further than midfield. The Minutemen had success in the battle for field position early on in the game, especially with the help of punter Caleb Violette, whose first three punts pinned UNH within its own 10-yard line.

Field position would play a big factor in UMass' first score. Kicking from the UNH 9-yard line, Wildcats punter Ryan Glasgow shanked a 26-yard punt. The Minutemen took advantage of the excellent field position as Armando Cuko kicked a 31-yard field goal to bring it to 7-3 with 11:42 left in the second quarter.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
Come Celebrate With Us!
Salem Cross Inn
Restaurant & Tavern
Great food, great setting, great time!
Call now to book your reservations!

Groups of any size are welcome!
508 867 2345
www.salemcrossinn.com
Route 9, 260 West Main Street West Brookfield MA 01585

UM wins A-10 tournament

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on April 25, 2010).

It was close and it was dramatic, but at the end of the day, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team can call itself the Atlantic 10 Women's Lacrosse champion for the second-straight year.

The victory came from a back-and-forth showdown between top-seeded Richmond and third-seeded UMass, culminating in a last-second effort by the Minutewomen to secure a 12-10 victory over the Spiders.

With the win, UMass has secured itself a spot in the upcoming NCAA tournament play-in game against the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation Champion. The date and opponent of the game will be determined at a later date.

UMass	12
UR	10

As much as Richmond (10-8, 6-1 A-10) tried to down the Minutewomen, UMass continued to fight back in the opening half of the A-10 championship game.

The defending A-10 champion Minutewomen (9-8, 5-2 A-10) started off the game strong with a goal by midfielder Jackie Lyons. Despite a goal nearly three minutes later by Richmond's high-scorer Mary Flowers, Lyons fought right back and scored her second goal of the contest after six minutes of play to secure a 2-1 lead for UMass.

The Minutewomen suffered following the goal, as the Spiders scored four-straight goals on the Maroon and White. Flowers scored her second, while attackers Gabi Wiegand, Danielle Schaevitz and midfielder Anne Ryan nabbed their first goals of the contest.

While the chances of an A-10 championship repeat might have seemed bleak for the Minutewomen, down 5-2 after 13 minutes of play, UMass kicked up its offense after the game was delayed 50 minutes because of lightning. Following the delay, the Minutewomen went on a three-goal run of its own to knot the game up at five goals apiece.

Lyons earned a hat trick during the run, scoring her third goal of the contest, followed by goals from midfielders Jesse O'Donnell and Danielle Pelletier.

The lead switched again with each team trading a score within the final 10 minutes of the first half. Ryan and O'Donnell both scored their second goals of the contest to push the score to 6-6 going into the halftime.

Both teams played a similar game in the first half, with both sides earning four saves and eight groundballs. The Minutewomen had the advantage in clears (8-9) and shots (18-11).

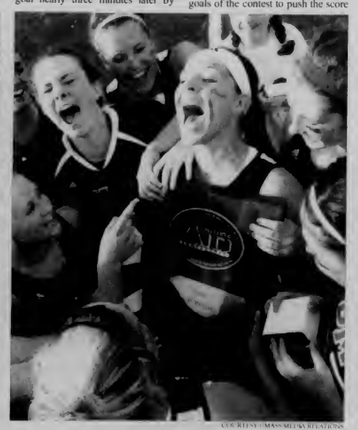
UMass shocked the Spiders' 30 seconds into the second half, as goalkeeper Katie Florence tossed a pass to midfielder Merritt Cosgrove who netted the tiebreaking goal. The Minutewomen lead was cut short, as Wiegand nabbed her 48th goal of the season to lock up the game.

As hard as UMass tried to catch a break, Richmond kept the game a battle. After Lyons showed why she won A-10 Lacrosse Player of the Year with a goal to give the Minutewomen the 8-7 lead, Richmond's Kara Moschetti erased the lead off a free position goal of her own.

Less than two minutes later, the two squads swapped goals again to bring the score to 9-9. Lyons earned her fifth goal of the contest off a free position to bring the lead back to the Maroon and White, but Ryan drowned that out off an unassisted goal.

UMass found a way to break the lead again after Lyons added another contribution to the affair with a solid assist to midfielder Dayna Defliese, who changed the lead to 10-9 with 13 minutes to go.

Just over five minutes passed before the next goal was scored, only this time it was not by Richmond as the pattern would suggest. Rather, Cosgrove fired back for the Minutewomen with an unassisted goal to give UMass its first lead of more than a single goal.



Lyons proved to be the helpful aid for UMass as the clock continued to dwindle, as she tossed a pass to attacker Nina Sarcona who nabbed a score for the Minutewomen to give them the 12-9 lead with seven minutes remaining.

Even though Wiegand scored a goal to bring the UMass lead down to two goals, it was not enough to spark the Richmond side, as UMass held on to secure the victory.

Despite the Minutewomen's ability to push the lead forward and earn the win, both teams played a similar second half. Richmond outshot UMass (12-10), but the Minutewomen had the edge in saves (4-3), groundballs (10-7) and clears (8-5). Throughout the entire game, both teams swapped the lead between them on eight occasions.

This is also the second-straight A-10 tournament title for the Minutewomen, and their second in three straight final appearances.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

The Minutewomen celebrate after defeating Richmond for the Atlantic 10 Championship, earning a berth in the NCAA tournament.

Register now
for summer courses at HCC
• Convenient Summer I, Summer II, and Full Summer Sessions
• Day, evening, and online classes
• Training for business & industry
• GED and Adult Basic Education
• Fun, informative personal enrichment courses
• Youth programs & sports clinics
Credit classes start June 7 & July 12
Holyoke Community College
Futures Inspired
Call today (413) 552-2000
303 Homestead Avenue, Holyoke, MA 01040 • www.hcc.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Have an event coming up?
Need to spread the word?
Ads for $70 inch
On-Campus & Local Business Ads for
You could see your ad here!
Best way to get to the campus community!
ON-CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS & RSO'S CONTACT PAMELA:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

COMICS

Shyalamalamadingdong!

	2					5
		8		1	7
7			5		8
		6	8	2				4
				6	9
5								3
		9		7	4			2
2	6			5			1

PUFFTON VILLAGE
Excellent location!
1/2 Mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments!
1, 2, & 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include: heat, hot water, and cooking gas!
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com
APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

Hark! A Vagrant By Kate Beaton harkavagrant.com

Quote of the Day

"When I was a little kid,
I was just like anybody else."

—Jeffery Dahmer

Searching for Summer Employment?
Drive a Bus!
UMASS Transit
Great Pay Room For Advancement Flexible Hours
JOIN THE TEAM TODAY

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You know that scene in Aliens where the facehugger attacks Ripley? Man... I wish I had a girlfriend to make out with.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Just tickle my thigh, Michael. Tickle my thigh.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Remember that episode of Lost a couple weeks ago where you weren't sure if it was that C-list comedian from around 2005? Yeah, it was him.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Hey, read your hate mail. LOVED it.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
I'm not saying you look fat, but to be fair it looks like you gained A LOT of weight.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Hey are you going to that barcrawl? Oh really? Wow cool, sound like it'll be an awesome time! Wear a condom.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
This is an example of cliche yet avant-garde comedy.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
I love how The Cheetah Girls I grew up with on Disney Channel have matured into classy, sophisticated women. Face down.....

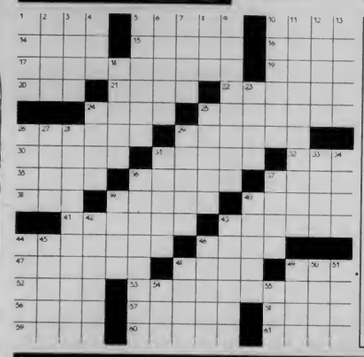
libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
If your name is Brian you will have an awful day. ~@:o)

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Lets play "gulf." I'll be BP, and you be a certain southeastern body of water. Mind if I lather your back with sensual oils?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
It's the easiest thing in the world. It's fantastic for you. And all you need is to be alone.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Am I funny yet?

Graduating?
Order a Commencement DVD
Brought to you by:
UVC TV 19
visit www.umass.edu/uvctv19 for more details
or call 413-545-1283



WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

THE LAST CROSSWORD BENDER

The Daily Collegian is Hiring
We are looking for someone to deliver papers in the early morning hours off- campus.
You must own car.
This is a paid position.
If you think this job is right for you stop by 113 Campus Center Basement, Call 413.545.3500 or E-Mail thecollegian@gmail.com

ACROSS
1. Protuberance
5. Colorado resort
10. Small mountain
14. Chocolate cookie
15. French for "Queen"
16. Margarine
17. Woodland
19. "Oh, my!"
20. Young boy
21. A young lady
22. Flourish
24. Used a loom
25. Vesicle
26. A martial art
29. An evening out
30. Nimble
31. 1000 kilograms
32. Liquor from molasses
35. A rounded projection
36. Remove errors from
37. Container weight
38. Bigheadedness
39. Whites and reds
40. What a book is called
41. Savor
43. Truthful
44. Someone who fights for a cause (archaic)
46. Confined
47. Jubilant
48. Scarce
49. Rapid transit vehicle
52. Rend
53. Tending to vanish like vapor
56. Nile bird
57. 9 9 9 9
58. Mélange
59. Fluff from a dryer
60. 7 times per week
61. With a short hollow thud

DOWN
1. Wolf's sound
2. Murres
3. Blend
4. Pea container
5. Reach a destination
6. Detect
7. American ones are apple
8. N N N N
9. Baby bird
10. Raspy
11. Unable to read
12. Depart
13. Not a winner
18. Overact
23. Employ
24. Corduroy feature
25. Incentive
26. Curly cabbage
27. All excited
28. Vitamin B2
29. Not drunk
31. Part of a joint
33. Website addresses
34. Encounter
36. Shareholder's earnings
37. Hue
39. Walk through water
40. Notes
42. Most recent
43. Doctrines that are opposed to orthodox ones
44. Danger
45. Exculpation
46. A jury or board
48. Hindu princess
49. It rings every hour
50. Pearly-shelled mussel
51. Cease
54. By way of
55. Policeman

SNOWZEES
Bar & Guitar
Formerly Seven O's
5/4:
Join us tonight for Drink specials!
—Free WiFi—
[[7 Minutes from UMass]]
1PM - 1AM · 7 Days a week
330 Amherst Rd.
SUNDERLAND, MA. 01237
413-665-8788

Saturday Morning Breakfast Cereal By Zach Weiner smbc-comics.com

I began to regret sending mom to a discount mortician.

CLASSIFIEDS

CARSON TOWERS
SOUTH BOSTON APTS FOR RENT: 1,2,3 bdrm apts w/ ALL utilities incl. fully renovated w/new appliances, cabinets, bathroom, fixtures, & flooring. On Carson Beach, steps to MBTA Bus 11 & redline. SecDep. $500, cat OK, background & credit chk req. Call 617-268-4821 www.carsontower-apts.com

FOR RENT
Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 Bedroom Apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug, or Sept. First Come, First Serve. Get Them While They Last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop By Or Call 549-0600

SERVICES
Pregnant? Want to talk? Call birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 Hour hotline 1-800-550-4900 www.birthright.org

Low on Funds? Low Cost Birth Control and emergency contraception available at Tapestry Health. All family planning services based on your income. 27 Pray St., Amherst. Tues, Thurs, Sat Summer Jobs with

EMPLOYMET
Enviroment Massachusetts $10-15/hr. Career Opportunities & Benefits www.jobsfortheenviroment.org Call Abby 1-800-57-EARTH

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necessary. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

COUNSELING
Alternative off-campus Holistic Counseling Synthesis Center. 274 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, 413-256-0772

WANTED
Are you ADOPTED? Mentors (males especially) needed for adopted children. Call NOW, start Fall. Academic Credit available. Jen Dolan 545-0547 jdolan@psych.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 2010

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mass Attack upset No. 2 Boston University

Quick start in 1st half gives offense advantage in opener

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on October 19, 2009).

On Friday night at the Mullins Center, 8,123 fans witnessed a down to the wire thriller which ultimately resulted in the home team coming out on top.

Paul Dainton provided strong play in goal while Will Ortiz put in the deciding score in a 3-2 upset by the Massachusetts hockey team over defending national champions and No. 2 Boston University.

"It was pretty entertaining hockey for a game played in the middle of October," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "Everyone walked away thinking they just saw two teams going to battle."

Despite being outshot 41-26 and failing to capitalize on any of their four power play opportunities, the Minutemen (2-0-0, 1-0-0 Hockey East) were able to keep the Terriers (0-1-0, 0-1-0 HEA) from leading throughout the game.

UMass came out of the gate firing on all cylinders, taking a quick 1-0 lead five minutes, 21 seconds into the first period. The goal was by freshman Rocco Carzo, his second in as many games, off a dish from Ortiz.

UMass	3
BU	2

Only three minutes later, sophomore Matt Irwin zipped a shot past BU goalkeeper Kieran Millan to give the Minutemen a two-score advantage.

The fast start by UMass in the first 10 minutes of the game proved to be monumental in the end, with the Terriers outscoring the Minutemen the rest of the way.

"We wanted to play hard from the get go, that's something we hadn't done in the two previous games," Cahoon said. "It was important not to come out and give up those two or three goals and let that team get rolling. You don't want to be rolling the dice like that every time out."

BU's attack came to life towards the end of the first period when freshman Alex Chiasson stuck back a rebound past Dainton on a power play for one of his two goals on the game.

In the second period, Chiasson received a pass from Corey Trivino and poured it in goal to tie the game at two. With less than two minutes left until intermission, UMass had ample opportunities to pick up the go-ahead goal on a

See HOCKEY on page 11

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Michael Marcou tries to take the puck away from a Boston University defender during the Minutemen's 3–2 win over Boston University on Oct. 16.

Ducasse preps for NFL camps through crisis

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on February 23, 2010).

For Massachusetts offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse, football and service go well together.

Ducasse, who was born in Haiti, had to deal with the news that an earthquake struck his home country on Jan. 12 while he was preparing for the Under Armour Senior Bowl.

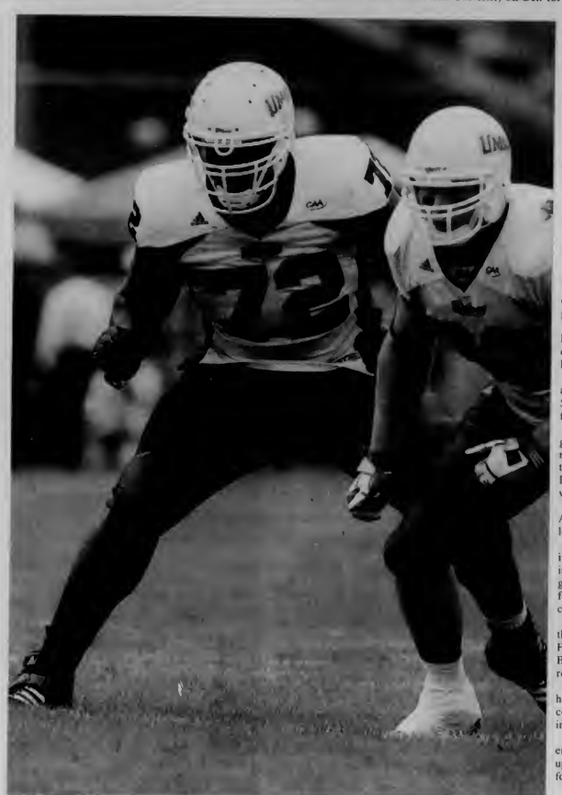
Ducasse was born in Port-au-Prince before moving to Connecticut at the age of 14, where he played football at Stamford High School. At some point, he said he hopes to visit Haiti once again when it's safer, but for now, the closest tie he has to home is communicating with relatives.

When the earthquake hit, he said he didn't find out details about anyone in his home country until two days later. He learned that all of his family was safe and his home received no more than some minor damages. However, he was still concerned about his cousins and people who weren't as fortunate as he was.

Although Haiti was still on his mind, Ducasse knew there was nothing else he could do besides play football, so he stuck with his plan of participating in the Senior Bowl on Jan. 30 in Mobile, Ala.

"What happened [in Haiti] is a terrible thing, but I have to move on now… and I just have to keep moving forward," Ducasse said of his decision to stay in the Senior Bowl.

Despite being one of the few players from a Division I-AA school there, he said he felt comfortable playing with some of the top seniors in college football.



Ducasse will likely make the move from offensive tackle, which he played for as a member of the UMass football tear, to offensive guard. In his senior year as a Minuteman, he made all-conference as the top offensive lineman in the Colonial Athletic Association and was also an All-American.

It will now be up to National Football league scouts and general managers to decide if he is good enough to make a roster.

So far, the answer is a yes.

The list of players who stepped foot in McGuirk Stadium and eventually stuck with an NFL team for a long period of time is small. There are three

See DUCASSE on page 11

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Offensive lineman Vladimir Ducasse takes his stance during a practice earlier this year. While Ducasse prepared for the Senior Bowl, an Earthquake struck Haiti, his native country.

Havens shows value for UM in starting job

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on September 15, 2009).

Kyle Havens always knew he had the skills to play quarterback in college. He just had to wait a little longer to prove it.

Havens, the quarterback for Ygnacio Valley High School, had the size and ability to play at the college level. The only problem was that he never got a chance to show anyone.

"We ran the double wing-T," Havens said of his run-heavy high school offense. "So 99 percent of the time, I was pitching the ball and acting as a lead blocker."

Three years later, there was nothing hiding him as he took the field in Manhattan, Ka., in front of 50,750 fans starting his first game at quarterback for the Massachusetts football team.

From high school afterthought to starting a game against a Football Bowl Subdivision opponent, Havens has come a long way. But in order to get there, someone had to find the quarterback. Luckily for Havens, UMass coach Kevin Morris was looking for one.

Replacing Coen

At the end of last season, the Minutemen were looking for a quarterback.

Liam Coen, one of the most decorated passers in the program's history, had just graduated, leaving a gaping hole in the UMass offense. With Coen gone, the Minutemen had three talented candidates for the quarterback position with no clear-cut choice for the job.

Redshirt sophomore Octavious Hawkins had the upside. Hawkins, a highly-touted recruit from Florida had the raw talent as an athlete and passer. But so far, he had only gotten playing time at wide receiver.

Spencer Whipple, another redshirt sophomore, had the pedigree. The son of former UMass head coach Mark Whipple was a longshot but remained in the competition.

Finally, senior Scott Woodward had the experience. After spending the past four years as a backup to Coen, Woodward was now the frontrunner for the starting job but had yet to establish himself.

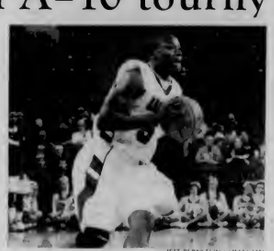
Only weeks after the Minutemen lost their quarterback, they lost their head coach as well.

See HAVENS on page 10

Harris hits tear-dropper to put UMass in A-10 tourny

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on March 8, 2010).



On his night, Ricky Harris hit the shot he's dreamed of his entire life.

UMass	69
URI	67

With his team tied at 67 with Rhode Island and a berth into the Atlantic 10 tournament on the line, Harris drove into the paint before hitting a tear-drop with three seconds remaining on the clock, sealing the 69-67 victory.

"Somewhere in my 22 years of living I definitely dreamt of this, playing in my backyard or playing against my little cousins," Harris said. "Now it's like a dream come true."

While the shot on senior night sent the Massachusetts men's basketball team into the A-10 tournament, it had far more implications than just that. The team it defeated, URI (21-8, 9-7 A-10), also could have knocked them out of the NCAA tournament picture. For La Salle, who beat the Minutemen (11-19, 5-11 A-10) on Wednesday, the

JEFF BERNSTEIN/COLLEGIAN

Ricky Harris put UMass into the Atlantic 10 tournament by hitting a last-second shot against URI.

shot knocked it out of the A-10 tournament

While the contest at the Mullins Center wasn't a must-win game for the Minutemen – they could

See M. HOOPS on page 11

Minutewomen rebound from OT loss to top No. 9 Hawkeyes

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story was originally published on September 7, 2009).

Members of the Massachusetts field hockey team hugged at midfield, relishing in the team's 4-3 upset of No. 9 Iowa on Friday, and forgetting about its 3-2 overtime loss to Boston University in Game 1 of the UMass Invitational just a day earlier.

The No. 17 Minutewomen (2-1) used a suffocating offensive press to overwhelm Hawkeye goalie Kathleen McGraw from all sides of the cage with freshman Kara Charochak scoring her first career goal and defender Jaime Bouzazeris scoring her team-leading second goal of the season.

"With that many freshmen on the field, I think it was a quality game," UMass coach Justine Sowry said of her rookies. "Certainly those freshmen who are starting right now have earned that spot. As long as they continue to bring that effort on a day-to-day basis, they'll continue to play."

Sowry's younger players played an integral role in the win, starting with Charochak, who struck first for the Minutewomen with a rebound off of the Minutewomen's first penalty corner of the game.

The goal against such a quality opponent energized UMass and allowed midfielder Kim Young to feed off that energy to disrupt Iowa's first penalty corner and push the ball out of the Minutewomen's striking circle. The Hawkeyes (0-3) utilized 11 penalty corners and 18 shots to pepper goalkeeper Alesha Widdall, who made a season-high eight saves on the day.

UMass	4
Iowa	3

Iowa notched 38 scores in the second half of its games in 2008, and Saturday was no different. Widdall made seven saves off 12 Hawkeye shots in the second half alone. She noted that Iowa used many different strategies on its penalty corners and that she directed her defense to hold the middle of the net and push the opposition to the outside of the field.

"They were a very aggressive team," Widdall said of the Hawkeyes. "They were hard-pressing and in their backfield, they didn't give our forwards room to do much of anything."

Senior midfielder Cher King aided the encumbered forward line late in the first half with a breakaway at midfield deep into the Iowa scoring circle. She then banked it off the left side of the backboard for her first goal of the season, tying the game at two going into halftime.

Bouzazeris padded the lead on UMass' first penalty corner of the half when freshman midfielder Kate Heineman bounced a shot off the pad

See F. HOCKEY on page 10